THE INDIAN EVIDENCE ACT, 1872

[15*th March*, 1872]

Preamble—WHEREAS it is expedient to consolidate, define and amend the law of Evidence; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

PART I

RELEVANCY OF FACTS

CHAPTER I

PRELIMINARY

1. Short title.—This Act may be called THE INDIAN EVIDENCE ACT, 1872*.

---

*For Statement of Objects and Reasons see Gazette of India, 1868, p. 1574; for the draft or preliminary Report of the Select Committee, dated 31st March, 1871, see Gazette of India, 1871, Pt.V, p. 273 and for the second Report of the Select Committee, dated 30th January, 1872, see Gazette of India, 1872, Pt.V, p. 34; for discussion in Council, see Gazette of India, 1868, supplement, pp. 1060 and 1209, Gazette of India, 1871, extra supplement, p. 42, and supplement, p. 1641 and Gazette of India, 1872, pp. 136 and 230.

Preamble—Notes.

The Evidence Act is, as it was intended to be, a complete Code of the law of evidence: I.L.R. 14 Cal. 721 (F.B.); A.I.R. 1920 Cal. 500: 21 Cr.L.J. 849 (F.B.); A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 177: 39 Cr.L.J. 581 (F.B.). But see A.I.R. 1916 Mad. 851; 12 Cr.L.J. 505 (Cal.) (S.B.).

The Evidence Act is little more than an attempt to reduce the English law to the form of express propositions arranged in their natural order, with some modifications: A.I.R. 1941 All. 402: 43 Cr.L.J. 177 (F.B.).

The Divorce Act was already in force when the Evidence Act came into force. Consequently Ss. 7, 12, 13 and 14 of the Divorce Act as to the requisites for a decree for divorce cannot be overridden by such section as S. 58 of the Evidence Act: A.I.R. 1925 Bom. 231 (S.B.).

Section 1—Synopsis.

1. Law of Evidence—Scope and objects of.
2. Construction of Act.
3. Guidance from English Law.
4. Application of section.
5. Affidavits—Act not applicable.
6. Arbitration proceedings.

---

1. Law of Evidence—Scope and objects of.—Rules in this Act are rules of logic: 1914 M.W.N. 931. The mode of taking evidence is usually regarded as a purely procedural matter: 1943 Nag.L.J. 16: A.I.R. 1943 Nag. 36. Act is not exhaustive: I.L.R. 39 Cal. 164: 15 Cal.W.N. 1053; I.L.R. 14 Cal. 721.

The provisions of the Act are independent of the rules of procedure contained in the Criminal Procedure Code and must have full scope, unless clearly repealed or altered by another statute: I.L.R. 7 Lah. 84: A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 88.

Law of Evidence is an adjective law and, as such, has retrospective effect: 1967 Cr.L.J. 52: A.I.R. 1967 Goa 4 (F.B.).

The law of evidence is a part of procedural law; it deals with the facts that may or may not be proved and the sort of evidence which may or may not be given: (1990-1) 38 B.L.J.R. 51 (F.B.).

The law of evidence does not affect the partners' substantive rights; it only lays down the law to facilitate the course of justice; it embodies the rules of evidence for the Court's guidance; it is procedural law providing, inter alia, how a fact is to be proved: A.I.R. 1980 All. 385 (F.B.).

2. Construction of Act.—In construing a statute like the Evidence Act which is exhaustive where any fact intended to be established has to be in accordance with the scheme of the Act, found to be relevant under a provision contained in the Act before it Extent.—It extends[1] to [2][the whole of India [3][except the State of Jammu and Kashmir]] and applies to all judicial proceedings in or before any Court, including Courts-martial, [4][other than Courts-martial convened under the Army Act,] (44 & 45 Vict., c. 58) [5][the Naval Discipline Act (29 and 30 Vict., c. 109) of [6][] the Indian Navy (Discipline) Act, 1934 (34 of 1934)][7] [8][or the Air Force Act] (7 Geo. 5, c. 51) but not to affidavits presented to any Court or Officer, nor to proceedings before an arbitrator.

Commencement of Act.—And it shall come into force on the first day of September, 1872.

1. The Act has been extended to the new provinces and merged States by the Merged States (Laws) Act, 1949 and to the States of Manipur, Tripura and Vindhya Pradesh by the Union Territories (Laws) Act, 1950.

2. Substituted for "all the Provinces of India", by A.O. 1950.

3. Substituted for "except Part B States", by Act 3 of 1951.

4. Inserted by Act 18 of 1919.

But see the Army Act (44 & 45, Vict., C. 58) S. 127, which is as follows:— "A Court-martial under this Act shall not as respects the conduct of its proceedings, or the reception or rejection of evidence or as respects any other matter or thing whatsoever be subject to the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, or to any Act, law or ordinance of any Legislature whatsoever, other than Parliament of the United Kingdom." Act I of 1872 is (subject to such modifications as the Governor-General in Council may direct) applicable to all proceedings before the Indian Marine Courts. See the Indian Marine Act (14 of 1887), S. 68.

5. Inserted by Act 35 of 1934.

6. The words "that Act as modified by", omitted by A.O. 1950.

7. See now the Navy Act, 1957 (64 of 1957).

8. Inserted by Act 10 of 1927.

can be allowed to be proved, any argument based on plausibility can have no effect. The Court must, therefore, ignore any other consideration and confine itself strictly to the provisions of the Act and come to a conclusion as to the relevancy of a fact on the interpretation of the provisions of the Act regardless of the fact whether the conclusion ultimately arrived at, is in accordance with commonsense view of things or not: A.I.R. 1945 Lah. 23: 46 Cr.L.J. 296 (F.B.). Act to be construed literally—Reference to English rules of evidence not permissible if thereby meaning of statute be varied or denied effect: A.I.R. 1916 P.C. 242.

3. Guidance from English Law.—In questions relating to matters expressly provided for in the Act, it must not be dealt with as a mere modification of the law of evidence prevailing in England. The Act is no doubt mainly based upon the English Law; but it is by no means an exact reproduction of it. The English Law of Evidence also has never been codified, and judicial decisions may well have developed or expanded some of its principles since 1872. Caution is, therefore, necessary in the application of English authorities on the subject in an Indian Court: I.L.R. (1942) Kar. (F.C.) 56: 46 Cal.W.N. (F.R.) 9: 5 F.L.J. 47: A.I.R. 1942 F.C. 22.

When the law relating to a topic has been codified into statute as in the Evidence Act, the duty of the Court is merely to interpret the statute. Recourse to decisions in other jurisdictions (Privy Council and House of Lords in England) laying down principles applicable there though they might be of the highest tribunals is not very profitable. Of course, if there had been legislation in those jurisdictions using the same or similar expressions as in the Indian enactment, the guidance afforded by such decisions would indeed be valuable: (1954) 2 M.L.J. 236: A.I.R. 1954 Mad. 926. See also A.I.R. 1954 Cal. 258 (D.B.).

Our law of evidence which is a complete Code does not permit the importation of any principle of English Common Law relating to evidence in criminal cases to the contrary. Therefore, the maxim of the English Common Law, "nemo tenetur se pusum accusare", can have no application here: A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 44.

It has been acknowledged generally with some exceptions, that the Indian Evidence Act was intended to and did in fact consolidate the English Law of Evidence. In case of doubt or ambiguity over the interpretation of any of the sections of the Evidence Act the Court can with profit look to the relevant English Common Law for ascertaining their true meaning: (1962) 2 S.C.J. 691: (1961) 2 M.L.J. (S.C.) 203: (1961) 2 S.C.R. 371: A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 493 [Overruled on another point in A.I.R. 1982 S.C. 149]. See also A.I.R. 1970 All. 51: 1969 All.L.J. 657: I.L.R. (1969) 1 All. 362 (F.B.); A.I.R. 1941 All. 402 (F.B.); A.I.R. 1935 Mad. 528 (F.B.).

Act not exhaustive of the rules of evidence and the Courts can invoke the aid of the principles of jurisprudence of English law as supplementing and explaining the rules given in the Act: I.L.R. 39 Mad. 449: 28 M.L.J. 329.

4. Application of section.—S. 1 lays down that the Act applies to judicial proceedings in or before any 'Court' which according to definition in S. 3, includes all persons legally authorised to take evidence: A.I.R. 1958 Cal. 226: (1957-58) 62 Cal.W.N. 867: (1958) 2 L.L.J. 580.

Scope and principle of—Power to compel accused person to be witness against himself—Cl. (3) of Art. 20 embodies an exception—Testimonial compulsion is the general rule: A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 520.

Execution proceeding is a judicial proceeding: 11 Cr.L.J. 407 (Cal.) (F.B.).

The Act deals with the law of evidence applicable to both civil and criminal proceedings; it is comprehensive in its nature; the Codes of Civil and Criminal Procedure are separate and distinct by nature; the definition of 'Court' under the Act cannot be invoked in the proceedings under S. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure nor can S. 148-A of the Code of Civil Procedure be invoked in criminal proceedings: (1990) 3 An.L.T. 491.

Proceedings under S. 145, Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973, being judicial, held, the Evidence Act is applicable to it: 1976 Assam L.R. 106 (D.B.).

Evidence Act does not apply to an enquiry under S. 15(1) of the A.P. (Andhra Area) Estates (Abolition and Conversion into Ryotwari) Act, 1948: (1972) 2 An.L.T. 30 (D.B.).

Applicability to proceedings under Foreign Exchange Regulations Act: (1963) 2 S.C.R. 297: A.I.R. 1962 S.C. 1764. See also 1986 Cr.L.J. 677 (Andh. Pra.).

As the proceedings under the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act, 1973 are governed by the Evidence Act, 1872, it cannot be said that the statements made in the proceedings are not expressly authorised to be admitted by the statutory provisions: 1989 Cr.L.J. 2138 (Mad.).

The parties might be excused, if they adjusted the evidence to the principles which they found in vogue in the tribunal where they were leading their evidence. Yet, findings arrived at on irrelevant evidence ought not to be allowed to stand: A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 660.

Applicability to contempt proceedings.—Law of evidence is a part of the law of procedure; contempt proceedings are not governed by any particular law of evidence. Contempt proceedings are usually decided on the basis of affidavits and it is not illegal to find a person guilty on the strength of affidavits alone. It is, therefore, not true to say that contempt must be proved in the manner laid down in the Evidence Act; the Court is competent to adopt its own procedure for deriving satisfaction; there cannot be any law as to the onus of proof, or the method of proof in contempt proceedings. In cases of criminal contempt the facts can be proved by affidavit. R. 12 of Chapter IX of the Rules of Court, 1952, allows contempt to be proved through an affidavit. Since the practice in this country, in England and in America has always been that contempt can be proved through an affidavit, that is the procedure established by law and holding a person guilty of contempt on the basis of an affidavit only does not infringe his constitutional right under Art. 21 of the Constitution: A.I.R. 1955 All. 638: 1955 Cr.L.J. 1451.

Applicability of Act to proceedings under Contempt of Courts Act: 1960 Cr.L.J. 1254: A.I.R. 1960 Pat. 430 (F.B.). See also 1983 Cr.L.J. 1153 (All.).

Applicability to income-tax proceedings.—Income-tax authorities not strictly bound by rules of evidence: A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 768. See also (1976) 1 Cut.W.R. 28 (D.B.); 1981 Tax.L.R. 1239 (Raj.) (D.B.).

The Evidence Act does not apply to proceedings under the Income-tax Act. Proceedings under the Indian Income-tax Act are not 'judicial proceedings' within the meaning of S. 1 of the Evidence Act or in the sense in which the expression 'judicial proceedings' is ordinarily used. That being so, it is within competency of the Appellate Tribunal to rest the decision inter alia on information gathered by the Tribunal from judgments of criminal Courts which are before them, in determining questions of fact: (1951) 20 I.T.R. 562: A.I.R. 1952 Punj. 46.

Reference to High Court—When open—Enquiries by taxing officers—Standards set by Evidence Act not applicable—Appreciation of evidence: 1960 Ker.L.T. 1171.

Applicability to proceedings before Industrial Tribunal.—The Industrial Disputes Act authorises the Tribunal to take evidence. Under S. 11(3) of the Act every Board, Court and Tribunal has been granted the same powers as are vested in the Civil Courts under the C.P. Code when trying a suit in respect of enforcing the attendance of any person and examining him on oath. Hence, a Tribunal is a Court within the definition of S. 3, Evidence Act, and is bound by its provisions: A.I.R. 1958 Cal. 226: (1957-58) 62 Cal.W.N. 867: (1958) 2 L.L.J. 580. See also A.I.R. 1959 Cal. 650; 1980 Lab.I.C. 669 (Pat.) (D.B.); A.I.R. 1966 Cal. 504. But see A.I.R. 1962 Cal. 375: (1960-61) 65 Cal.W.N. 1029 [Proceedings before Industrial Tribunal — Nature of — Provisions of Evidence Act not applicable — Tribunal can consider evidence not strictly admissible under Evidence Act].

Technical rules of evidence as contained in the Evidence Act, 1872 are not applicable to the proceedings under the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947: (1995-2) 110 Punj.L.R. 128 (D.B.).

Applicability to industrial adjudication—Strict rules of evidence do not apply in industrial adjudication, but rules of natural justice are to be observed—Document raising an inference against employer, put in evidence by workmen—Employer not adducing evidence to rebut such inference—Held that Tribunal was justified in basing its findings on such document: (1967) 1 L.L.J. 108: 31 F.J.R. 186: 1967 B.L.J.R. 461: A.I.R. 1967 Pat. 12.

Proceeding regarding industrial dispute before Labour Court—Nature of—It is not strictly judicial but is quasi-judicial—Evidence Act does not apply: (1963) 6 F.L.R. 161 (Cal.).

Though it is true that merely because a figure is found in the audited balance sheet of a company an Industrial Tribunal is not bound to accept the said figure if challenged but where such figure for an expense is also deposed to by a witness without being cross-examined, held, the Tribunal should not have discarded his evidence on this point: A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 2521.

In an industrial adjudication it is not as if an arbitrator is restricted to the pleadings of the parties and the evidence that may be led. He is not hampered by any strict rules of evidence or pleadings or for the matter of that, technicalities of procedure. An arbitrator is in a better position to collect information which has any bearing and relevance in determining the issues raised before the arbitrators, and these powers are required to be exercised in order that the matter raised in an industrial dispute may be satisfactorily adjudged. If after a detailed investigation it is found that a change is or is not necessary, the party against whom the award may be pronounced, may find considerable difficulty in challenging the adjudication before any other tribunal: 1966 Mah.L.J. 1060: (1966) 68 Bom.L.R. 731: (1967) 1 L.L.J. 168: A.I.R. 1967 Bom. 174.

An Industrial Tribunal, finding that the oral evidence of the management as well as of the workman is interested, held, is justified in disregarding the same: 1972 L.L.J. 1151.

Strict principles and rules under the Act do not apply in toto to the proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Act; the degree of proof therein is not as high as in other ordinary civil disputes: (1991-1) 11 Guj.L.H. 310.

The Evidence Act has no application to enquiries conducted by tribunals, even though they may be judicial in character. The law requires that such tribunals should observe rules of natural justice in the conduct of the enquiry and if they do so, their decision is not liable to be impeached on the ground that the procedure followed was not in accordance with that which obtains in a Court of law. Stating it broadly and without intending it to be exhaustive it may be observed that rules of natural justice require that a party should have opportunity of adducing all relevant evidence on which he relies, that the evidence of the opponent should be taken in his presence and that he should be given the opportunity of cross-examining the witnesses examined by that party, and that no materials should be relied on against him without his being given an opportunity of explaining them. If these rules are satisfied, the enquiry is not open to attack on the ground that the procedure laid down in the Evidence Act for taking evidence was not strictly followed: A.I.R. 1966 Manipur 18; A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 882

The Courts and Tribunals have to judge the evidence before them by applying the test of human probabilities: A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 2439.

Applicability to departmental proceedings.— In departmental proceedings the strict laws of evidence according to the Evidence Act are not applicable: (1953-54) 58 Cal.W.N. 952: A.I.R. 1955 Cal. 183; I.L.R. (1957) Andh. Pra. 80: (1957) 1 An.W.R. 370: A.I.R. 1957 Andh. Pra. 794. Nevertheless, the ordinary principles of proof and also the rules of natural justice must be applied: (1958-59) 63 Cal. W.N. 702. See also (1974) 1 L.L.J. 422 (Mad.); (1980) 50 Cut.L.T. 450 (D.B.).

Enquiries before Officers—Strict rules of Evidence Act are not applicable to such enquiries—Even then officers are bound to decide cases on basis of well settled legal principles of appreciating evidence: (1966) 68 Bom.L.R. 375.

It is well settled that strict and sophisticated rules of evidence under the Act do not apply in a domestic enquiry; all materials logically probative to a prudent mind may be relied upon; there is no allergy to hearsay evidence either if it has reasonable nexus and credibility; but care must be taken in evaluating such materials and they should not be glibly swallowed because they are, strictly speaking, not relevant under the Act. Sufficiency of evidence cannot be scrutinised but absence of evidence can certainly be. That would amount to an error apparent: A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 1512: 1977 U.J. (S.C.) 298: (1977) 2 S.C.C. 491.

It is well settled that strict rules of evidence and standards of proof envisaged in the Act do not apply to departmental proceedings or domestic tribunals; it is open to the authorities to receive and place on record all necessary, relevant, cogent and acceptable material facts though not proved strictly; but they must be germane and relevant to the facts in issue. In grave cases like forgery, fraud, conspiracy, misappropriation, etc., direct evidence is seldom available; only circumstantial evidence can furnish the proof. Inferences from evidence and circumstances must, however, be carefully distinguished from conjectures or speculation; there must be evidence, direct or circumstantial, to deduce necessary inferences in proof of the facts in issue; there can be no inferences unless there are objective facts: The standard of proof required is not proof beyond reasonable doubt "but" the preponderance of probabilities tending the inference that the fact must be more probable; it cannot be put in a strait-jacket formula; the probative value could be gauged from facts and circumstances of each case though the standard of proof is the same both in civil cases and domestic enquiries: (1991) 2 S.C.C. 716: (1991) 2 Serv.L.R. 682.

The domestic tribunals are not bound by the technical rules of procedure contained in the Evidence Act; but whenever any fact is sought to be proved even before a domestic tribunal, the same must be supported by statements made in the presence of the persons against whom an enquiry is held: 1973 Lab.I.C. 771 (Del.) (D.B.).

Departmental proceedings are decided on the basis of the materials on record, not upon evidence as understood under the Act; if the allegations of fact are accepted, whatever their implications, no evidence, oral or documentary, need be adduced; it is absolutely proper to base a finding safely upon the delinquent's admission: A.I.R. 1976 Pat. 158 (D.B.). See also 1975 Lab.I.C. 170 (Andh. Pra.) (D.B.); 1974 Lab.I.C. 1447 (Madh. Pra.) (D.B.).

It is well settled that in departmental enquiries the principles of the 'law of evidence' do not apply; as held in A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 1512, even hearsay evidence may be accepted in a departmental enquiry: (1978) 91 Mad.L.W. 390.

Domestic tribunals, in the absence of statutory guidance, have the right to regulate their own procedure consistent with the principles of natural justice; they are also not bound by the strict rules of evidence. The rules of procedure and the rules of evidence followed in Courts are inappropriate to domestic enquiries; the domestic Tribunals are free to receive evidence from whatever source, if it is 'logically probative', including hearsay, evidence, though its probative, value would depend on the facts and circumstances of each case. Thus, where several passengers stated, in the conductor's presence that though they had paid the fare, but tickets were not issued to them, the checker's statement to this effect is sufficient even without examining the passengers in the enquiry, the finding of guilt in such a case would be based on (i) the checker's statement that he had found the passengers travelling without tickets, (ii) the statements made by the passengers to the checker at the time of checking. The second part alone would be hearsay but of a high probative value. [1975 Lab.I.C. 986 (P.&H.), Overruled]: A.I.R. 1976 P.&H. 381: (1976) 78 Punj.L.R. 842: (1976) 2 Serv.L.R. 690 (F.B.).

Where a conductor was terminated on the charge of not issuing tickets after receiving fare from some passengers, held, merely because the statements of the ticketless passengers were not recorded in the enquiry, the order of termination would not be invalid when there was sufficient evidence of the Inspector of the Flying Squad discovering the ticketless passengers: A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 1512: (1977) 2 S.C.C. 491.

Quasi-judicial Tribunals are not bound by technical rules of evidence; the shutting out of hearsay evidence is not a technical rule coined by the Act but a rule of natural justice binding even a quasi-judicial authority. For oral evidence to be of any value, it must ordinarily be of a witness who can be held responsible for its truth (to be sifted through cross-examination); but when there is no prima facie assurance of its credibility, it would be dangerous to act upon such evidence and hearsay evidence is of such a type; it has to be excluded whether or not the case is governed by the Act: (1977) 2 M.L.J. 47.

Departmental proceedings—Rule of evidence that accomplice is unworthy of credit has no application—If delinquent public servant is made aware that accomplice's report would be used against him and is given opportunity to cross-examine the accomplice, authorities can act upon report of accomplice: 1966 B.L.J.R. 825.

A fact sought to be proved, even before a domestic Tribunal, must be supported by statements made in the presence of persons being enquired against; statements made behind their back ought not to be treated as substantive evidence; being one of the basic principles, it cannot be ignored merely because the domestic Tribunals are not bound by the technical and procedural rules of evidence: (1972) 42 F.J.R. 401.

The sufficiency of evidence to justify dismissal from service is not for the Supreme Court to determine; departmental proceedings do not require a high degree of proof required in criminal prosecutions; they are not governed by the strict rules of evidence; thus, merely because certain witnesses, whose statements were relied upon by the Department in support of the charges and who had also been cross-examined by them, had resiled from those statements would not vitiate either the enquiry or the dismissal: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 1080: (1976) 3 S.C.R. 913: (1976) 3 S.C.C. 76.

Government servant—Dismissal—Powers of Court—High Court cannot examine evidence as Court of appeal—Evidence Act does not strictly apply to departmental enquiry—High Court when can interfere with order passed in departmental enquiry: 1968 Lab.I.C. 1145 (Manipur).

Departmental inquiry against delinquent public servant—Rules of natural justice to be followed—Requirements of the rule: I.L.R. (1962) Cut. 125: A.I.R. 1963 Ori. 73.

Domestic enquiry — Leading questions put to delinquent — Propriety — Too much legalism cannot be expected from a domestic enquiry: 1968 Lab.I.C. 212: A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 236.

Proceedings before Commission of enquiry.—Proceedings before Commission under J.&K. Commission of Enquiry Act (32 of 1962) are not judicial proceedings: 1965 Kash.L.J. 160: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 212: A.I.R. 1965 J.&K. 75.

An enquiry under the Commissions of Enquiry Act is only a fact finding enquiry. It is "inquisitorial" and not accusitorial. The findings are not enforceable. After a report of fact finding is submitted to the Government, it takes a decision on the report. The provisions of the Evidence Act do not apply to these proceedings, hence, the law relating to burden of proof does not apply: A.I.R. 1993 All. 343. See also A.I.R. 1960 Punj. 86.

Proceedings before Election Tribunal.—Election Tribunals under the U.P. Municipalities Act are 'Courts' and the Act is applicable—

Hearsay evidence, therefore, not admissible—Two out of fifty petitioners speaking to the facts that they were all misled by a mistake in the spelling of the name of a candidate—Statement of two on behalf of others is hearsay evidence not admissible—U.P. Municipalities Act (2 of 1916), S. 19(2)(b): 1967 All.L.J. 5.

A Sub-Divisional Officer hearing an election petition under R. 25 of the U.P. Panchayat Raj Rules, 1947, is not a Court, but is merely a Tribunal. So provisions of the Indian Evidence Act are not applicable to the hearing of an election petition under R. 25: 1958 All.L.J. 274: A.I.R. 1959 All. 43.

Proceedings before rehabilitation authorities.—Displaced Persons (Claims) Act, 1950, Ss. 6, 7 and 16 and Rules framed under—Displaced Persons (Claims) Supplementary Act, 1954, Ss. 4, 5, 6 and 12—Nature of functions discharged by officers—Applicability of Evidence Act (1872) to enquiries before officers—Officers are not Courts: (1966) 68 Bom.L.R. 375.

Displaced Persons (Compensation and Rehabilitation) Act, 1954, Ss. 7, 8, 22, 23, 24 and 25—Proceedings before Rehabilitation Authorities—Even if strict rules of evidence may be deemed to apply to proceedings, Authorities have no jurisdiction to ask for any other mode of proof for providing public document of a foreign country than one prescribed by S. 78(6) of Evidence Act, 1872: 1967 Cur.L.J. 836 (Punj.).

Proceedings before custodian.—Undoubtedly, proceedings before the Custodian are not proceedings before a Civil Court, the Custodian, being a quasi-judicial authority, has to follow the principles of natural justice, in a proceeding under the Evacuees (Administration of Property) Act, pending before them. Whenever the principles of natural justice demand, the provisions of the Evidence Act or any other enactment can and should be made applicable to the proceedings before the quasi-judicial tribunals: 1978 Kash.L.J. 314.

Land acquistion proceedings.—In land acquisition proceedings it is for the appellant to satisfy the Court that there has been a colourable exercise of power and in that sense the onus of proof is on the appellant. Though, however, the Evidence Act does not, in terms, apply to affidavits, the principle underlying the illustration to S. 114(g), that is, the presumption that evidence which could be and is not produced would, if produced be unfavourable to the person who withholds it, is of general application.

Therefore, where a proposed acquisition is impugned as acquisition in colourable exercise of power and there is a specific allegation of the real purpose of the acquisition, it is for the respondents to disclose except for good reasons, the relevant material or information, to enable the Court to pronounce on the matter and not to maintain a meaningful silence or indulge in equivocations and rely on the doctrine of onus of proof and deflect the course of justice: (1966-67) 71 Cal.W.N. 499. See also I.L.R. 32 Cal. 605 (P.C.).

Proceedings before revenue authorities.—The Revenue Officer and the appellate and revisional authorities under the Orissa Land Reforms Act, 1965 are Courts in strict sense; the proceedings thereunder are judicial and S. 1 of the Act is applicable to them; all oral evidence adduced therein is subject to cross-examination. The Revenue Officer cannot collect any materials confidentially and without disclosing them to the opposite parties, and he cannot use such material to arrive at his conclusions affecting the lis: A.I.R. 1974 Ori. 127: (1973) 1 Cut.W.R. 697 (D.B.). See also (1990) 69 Cut.L.T. 164 (D.B.).

A Revenue Court has no jurisdiction to declare a woman to be a daughter of a particular person; the revenue records are much more akin to fiscal enquiries made in the interest of the State; their purpose is to ascertain as to which of several claimants may with greater confidence be put in occupation of lands so that revenue will be paid; a mutation order is not evidence of the successful applicant in possession as the sole legal owner in the proprietary sense, to the exclusion of all others; the revenue authorities have no jurisdiction to pronounce upon the validity of such claims or even about the jointness or separation of the parties: (1975) 2 Cut.W.R. 624.

Others.—Error apparent on face of record—Quasi-judicial proceedings—Proceedings under S. 32 of Rajasthan Act (6 of 1952), for determination of compensation payable to expropriated Jagirdar — Jagir Commissioner in deciding compensation claims has to act in quasi-judicial manner—

Neither Evidence Act nor C.P. Code applies—Board of Revenue disallowing claim by erroneously holding that it was not proved according to S. 34 of Evidence Act which was attracted—Certiorari can issue: 1964 Raj.L.W. 83: I.L.R. (1964) 14 Raj. 90.

Collector of Central Excise is not Court — Discharges quasi-judicial function — Principles of natural justice apply — Order under S. 167(8), Sea Customs Act — Interference by High Court: (1963) 2 Cr.L.J. 467 (Mys.).

Applicability to release proceedings under S. 21 of the U.P. Urban building (Regulation of Letting, Rent and Eviction) Act, 1972. See (1991) 18 All.L.R. 389.

S. 1 and definition of the term 'Court' read together make it amply clear that the Act applies to all judicial proceedings before the authorities legally authorised to take evidence, barring arbitrators and Courts martial convened under the Acts mentioned in S. 1. Since the Haryana Urban (Control of Rent and Eviction) Act, 1973, as well as the rules thereunder clearly lay down that the Rent Controller and the appellate authority are under an obligation to record evidence and examine the parties' witnesses, held, they are certainly governed by the Act. [(1969) 71 Punj.L.R. 68 and (1981) 83 Punj.L.R. 59, Overruled]: (1986-1) 89 Punj.L.R. 417 (D.B.).

5. Affidavits—Act not applicable.—Affidavits do not fall within the term 'evidence' in S. 1 and S. 3; S. 1 rather excludes them expressly from the definition: A.I.R. 1968 Cal. 532. Affidavits as such cannot be taken in evidence under any provision of the Evidence Act and, thus, copies thereof cannot also be allowed to be produced in evidence: A.I.R. 1977 Del. 73; 1983 All.L.J. 1273.

Affidavits that are admissible under provisions of other Acts are not excluded by the Evidence Act but affidavits not admissible otherwise cannot be admitted or used as evidence under S. 32 or S. 33, Evidence Act, for the Act does not apply to affidavits and an affidavit is not evidence within the meaning of S. 3 of the Act: (1910) 4 S.L.R. 88.

Affidavits do not fall within the definition of "evidence" in S. 3; they can be used as evidence only when the Court, for sufficient reasons, passes an order under O. 19, R. 1 or R. 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure: A.I.R. 1988 S.C. 1381; 1979 All.Cr.C. 238; (1972) 1 Cut.W.R. 318; A.I.R. 1964 Bom. 38: I.L.R. (1963) Bom. 436.

Affidavit evidence is not permitted except (a) when there is an agreement between parties that evidence may be taken by affidavit or (b) under O. 19, R. 1 of the Code there is an order of Court that particular facts may be proved by an affidavit or that the affidavit of any witness may be read at the hearing. Such evidence can be acted upon as admissible evidence only if it is relevant. Though there may be waiver of an objection as to admissibility, the relevancy of the evidence would still be matter for the consideration of the Courts: A.I.R. 1949 Mad. 680: (1948) 1 M.L.J. 434.

Affidavit not properly drawn up or verified should not be received in evidence: I.L.R. (1963) Bom. 436: A.I.R. 1964 Bom. 38; (1989) 1 Bom.C.R. 112.

An affidavit verified in contravention of O. 19, R. 3(1) of the Code of Civil Procedure, held, cannot be used as evidence. [A.I.R. 1944 Nag. 161, Foll.]: 1986 M.P.L.J. 280.

Affidavit filed with an application under S. 17 of the W.B. Premises Tenancy Act but not tendered in evidence in the suit for eviction, held, could not be admitted in evidence in appeal against decree for eviction: A.I.R. 1968 Cal. 532.

The provisions contained in S. 3, Evidence Act and O. 19, R. 1, C.P. Code lay down an exception to the general rule that an affidavit shall not be evidence of the fact stated therein. Both of those provisions require an order of the Court permitting a party to prove any particular fact or facts by affidavit. Whether an endorsement on the reverse of a document filed in Court is an interpolation is a matter of vital importance to the case and the Court should not permit such a fact to be proved by affidavit.

Whether the defendant filed an affidavit in Court suo motu stating that the endorsement on the reverse of a document filed in Court was interpolation;

Held, that the affidavit could not be treated as evidence: 1962 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 151: 1962 Jab.L.J. 197.

Where a tenant had only filed affidavits for claiming restoration of possession taken from him in disobedience of an injunction but without an order of the Court under O. 19, R. 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the affidavits filed without an opportunity of cross-examining the deponents, held, constitute no evidence; the trial Court had no material before it to conclude that the landlord had dispossessed the tenant: A.I.R. 1990 Raj. 127.

Question regarding age of girl—Certified copies from school register and affidavit by father stating date of her birth and statement by girl to police with regard to her age amount to evidence under Evidence Act: I.L.R. (1964) 2 All. 423: (1964) 5 S.C.R. 86: (1964) 2 Cr.L.J. 590: A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 1625.

Where an affidavit sworn by a complainant disclosing contempt of Court by the Deputy Superintendent of Police by interfering with the trial of the complaint was sought to be impugned as not legal evidence of contempt on the ground that the Act does not apply to affidavits presented to any Court and serves only the purpose of initiating the proceedings and material facts can only be proved by viva voce evidence, held, as the Act also provides that it applies to all judicial proceedings before Courts, it only means that in case of viva voce evidence recorded before it, the Court can control evidence by disallowing inadmissible evidence or leading questions in examination-in-chief; it is only in that sense that affidavits do not attract the Act; that does not render affidavits as not a proper mode of proof; however, if the other party so desires, it has the right to cross-examine the deponent: A.I.R. 1955 All. 638: 1955 Cr.L.J. 1451 (D.B.).

As clearly suggested in A.I.R. 1956 S.C. 554, if an authority desires to challenge the correctness of the contents of an affidavit, he should normally call its deponent for cross-examination or test its correctness by other means open to it; it cannot reject it as incorrect in an arbitrary manner: 1979 E.L.T. 212 (Bom.).

Appreciation of affidavit evidence: A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 1303.

Affidavit filed—Person filing affidavit in certain proceeding—Evidence of such affidavit sought to be given in other suit—Person alive and could be examined—Court not directing proof of facts by affidavit—Opposite party having no opportunity to cross examine such person—Held, this was no evidence on which the Court could act: (1963) 3 S.C.R. 22: A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 1.

Affidavit of a person not produced for examination in Court is no evidence: I.L.R. (1964) 16 Assam 395: A.I.R. 1967 Assam 74.

Affidavits produced before the Court cannot be read as evidence to prove facts; a decree based solely and wholly on such affidavits filed cannot be treated as a decree based on evidence; it would be a nullity: A.I.R. 1990 Raj. 87.

S. 3 contemplates both oral as well as documentary evidence; a living witness must be called to the witness stand and examined; his evidence cannot be substituted by an affidavit unless the law so permits as under Ss. 295 and 407(3) of the Code of Criminal Procedure or the Court expressly allows it: A.I.R. 1989 S.C. 705.

Affidavits filed in proceedings under S. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, held, are not admissible; they are not evidence under S. 80. Evidence in criminal cases has to be recorded as laid down in Chap. 25 of the Code: (1972) 1 Cut.W.R. 318.

Where affidavits filed in an enquiry under S. 145(1) of the Code of Criminal Procedure were not sworn before a Magistrate, held, they were validly not taken into consideration: 1979 All.Cr.C. 238.

Matters arising under S. 24 of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955 are, by and large, to be decided on affidavits; it is only in exceptional cases that the Court may call upon the party to adduce evidence otherwise than by affidavits: (1990) 2 Hindu L.R. 149; A.I.R. 1973 Raj. 32.

Where against an application for litigation expenses and alimony pendente lite by the wife, an Advocate, alleging no source of income, the husband filed affidavits of three Advocates attested by an Oath Commissioner and deposing that the wife had admitted before them that her monthly earnings were about Rs. 7,000, but without indicating either the date of the admission or the period to which it related, held, the affidavits could not be relied on: (1991) 1 Hindu L.R. 357 (P.&H.).

Just because a Central Government Officer files an affidavit deposing to certain facts, not known to him personally, held, his affidavit cannot be presumed to be true: A.I.R. 1990 Mad. 312.

Affidavit sworn in foreign country—Admissibility—Affidavit is not admissible in evidence before Custodian of Evacuee Property when no evidence is adduced to prove identity or signature of persons swearing it or that it was sworn in presence of witnesses produced before the Custodian: A.I.R. 1970 J.&K. 159.

It is always open to the Court to take into consideration all the facts alleged in the complaint as well as in the affidavit if they have not been controverted by any counter-affidavit: 1957 All.W.R. (H.C.) 79: 1957 All.L.J. 228.

Where in a creditor's winding up petition, the Company had not been filing for several years its balance sheets as required by law and it merely filed affidavits in the Court without annexing thereto the pro forma balance sheets or other documents to corroborate its claim about the Company's financial liability, held, the affidavits alone were not acceptable evidence: 1984 Tax.L.R. (N.O.C.) 69 (Cal.).

Affidavit evidence in support of a contention that the order of appointment of an official liquidator was in substance a consent order, is not admissible: A.I.R. 1953 Nag. 288: I.L.R. (1953) Nag. 787.

Companies Act, 1956 (as amended in 1963), Ss. 397, 398, 388-B to 388-E, 10-A to 10-D and 643—Supreme Court Rules framed under — Companies (Courts) Rules, 1959, Rr. 21, 8 and 9—Oppression and mismanagement—Affidavit sworn on information received and believed true by deponent—Validity—Subsequent tendering of oral evidence and affidavits by other persons—Admissibility — Requirements of verification: (1966) 68 Bom.L.R. 431.

Where after the accused had been charged for offences in the Court under Ss. 120-B, 417, 511, 462, 468 and 471 read with S. 34 of the Indian Penal Code, the complainant by his affidavit filed in the Court averred that he had falsely implicated the accused at some official's instance and the trial Court characterising the entire prosecution evidence as unbelievable discarded it and thereby condemned all the witnesses even before they could enter the witness-box and even before the affidavit was formally proved and tested by cross-examination, held, assuming that the affidavit was filed bona fide, it could not be considered at that stage; it could go on record only when the complainant was, if at all, to be examined; apparently, the prosecution is entitled to test the truthfulness of the affidavit as also of the complainant's evidence; it is only after the prosecution evidence that the Court could assess the evidence and the impact of the affidavit thereon; the totality of all features would ultimately mould the Court's final conclusion: (1985) 1 Bom.C.R. 609.

Application under S. 94, Cr.P.Code for search of house—Magistrate dealing with a serious matter—Evidence required not of a formal character—Special rule of reading affidavit in evidence under S. 296, Cr.P.Code not attracted : 1985 Cr.L.J. 1517: 1985 Ker.L.J. 718.

O. 39, R. 1 permits the Court to decide applications for interim injunction on affidavits. If the Court grants injunction on the basis of affidavit no party can claim the right to cross-examine the deponent: A.I.R. 1968 Guj. 198.

6. Arbitration proceedings.—Strict rules of the Evidence Act and of procedure which is followed in Court are not applicable to arbitration proceedings. Arbitrators are free to decide relevancy of questions and decide the matter on other material. Arbitrator can direct questions which he considers irrelevant to be impugned from record: A.I.R. 1955 N.U.C. 2914 (Cal.); (1993) 1 Cal.L.T. (H.C.) 148.

The Evidence Act does not apply to arbitration proceedings, thus, question of legal or admissible evidence does not arise in arbitration proceedings: (1989) 1 Cal.L.T. (H.C.) 176; (1987) 1 Cal.L.J. 342; A.I.R. 1951 Cal. 220; (1966) 2 An.W.R. 284 (D.B.); I.L.R. (1960) 2 Cal. 538 (D.B.); 1988 All.C.J. 66 (S.C.).

Even though the arbitrators are not bound to meticulously copy the procedure of a Court, yet they are not free to depart from the rule that no enquiry into the case should be undertaken behind the back of a party, and if they do so, the award is vitiated: I.L.R. (1955) Nag. 224: A.I.R. 1955 Nag. 116.

Where an arbitrator has examined witnesses and recorded evidence with due formality, it is open to the parties by consent to treat such statements of evidence and proceed with the case before the Court from the stage it had reached before the arbitrator. The consent in such a case relates to the manner in which the evidence has to be proved and not to the relevancy of the evidence itself: A.I.R. 1934 Mad. 610: 67 M.L.J. 358.

Duties of Arbitrators to conduct arbitration proceedings according to fundamental rules, procedure and canons of justice—Failure of such duties — Award liable to be set aside — Arbitrators guilty of misconduct: (1966) 2 An.W.R. 284 (D.B.).

3. Interpretation clause.—In this Act the following words and expressions are used in the following senses, unless a contrary intention appears from the context:—

"Court"—"Court" includes all Judges[1] and Magistrates[2], and all persons, except arbitrators, legally authorized to take evidence.

"Fact"—"Fact" means and includes—

(1) any thing, state of things, or relation of things, capable of being perceived by the senses;

(2) any mental condition of which any person is conscious.

Illustrations

(a) That there are certain objects arranged in a certain order in a certain place, is a fact.

(b) That a man heard or saw something, is a fact.

(c) That a man said certain words, is a fact.

(d) That a man holds a certain opinion, has a certain intention, acts in good faith or fraudulently, or uses a particular word in a particular sense, or is or was at a specified time conscious of a particular sensation, is a fact.

(e) That a man has a certain reputation, is a fact.

"Relevant"—One fact is said to be relevant to another when the one is connected with the other in any of the ways referred to in the provisions of this Act relating to the relevancy of facts.

"Facts in issue"—The expression "facts in issue" means and includes—any fact from which, either by itself or in connection with other facts, the existence, non-existence, nature or extent of any right, liability, or disability asserted or denied in any suit or proceeding, necessarily follows.

Explanation—Whenever, under the provisions of the law for the time being in force relating to Civil Procedure, any Court records an issue of fact, the fact to be asserted or denied in the answer to such issue is a fact in issue.

A is accused of the murder of B.

At his trial the following facts may be in issue:—

That A caused B's death;

That A intended to cause B's death;

That A had received grave and sudden provocation from B;

That A, at the time of doing the act which caused B's death, was, by reason of unsoundness of mind, incapable of knowing its nature.

"Document"—"Document" means any matter expressed or described upon any substance by means of letters, figures or marks, or by more than one of those means, intended to be used, or which may be used, for the purpose of recording that matter.

1. Court.—Broadly speaking, a Court is a place where justice is administered; the term "Court", as defined in the Act, which includes all Judges and Magistrates and all persons, except arbitrators legally authorised "Evidence"—"Evidence" means and includes—

(1) all statements which the Court permits or requires to be made before it by witnesses, in relation to matters of fact under inquiry; such statements are called oral evidence;

(2) all documents produced for the inspection of the Court; such documents are called documentary evidence.

"Proved"—A fact is said to be proved when, after considering the matters before it, the Court either believes it to exist, or considers its existence so probable that a prudent man ought, under the circumstances of the particular case, to act upon the supposition that it exists.

"Disproved"—A fact is said to be disproved when, after considering the matters before it, the Court either believes that it does not exist, or considers its non-existence so probable that a prudent man ought, under the circumstances of the particular case, to act upon the supposition that it does not exist.

"Not proved"—A fact is said not to be proved when it is neither proved nor disproved.

"India"—[2]["India" means the territory of India excluding the State of Jammu and Kashmir.]

to take evidence, is by no means exhaustive but inclusive, and the definition is only for the Act's purpose: (1975) 1 An.W.R. 133: 1974 An.L.T. 372: 1975 M.L.J. (Cr.) 155: 1975 Cr.L.J. 144. See also A.I.R. 1956 S.C. 66; I.L.R. 4 Cal. 483 (F.B.); I.L.R. 12 Bom. 36 [The definition of 'Court' in this Act is framed only for purposes of this Act and should not be extended beyond its legitimate scope.]

The principles deduced from decided case law about a Court are as follows:—(1) where a statute referred a matter to the determination of a Court with no further provision, by necessary implication the Court will determine the matter as a Court; and its jurisdiction stand enlarged with all its incidents; (2) where a person is indicated not by name but by his official designation, the question always arises whether such a person is a persona designata or not and its effect depends upon the real intention to be gathered from the words used, nature of the functions to be performed and the object and purpose to be achieved; (3) when a reference is made to an officer presiding over a Court and not the Court itself, it does not necessarily follow that he is intended to act as a persona designata and not as a Court; it is quite an ordinary practice to refer the matter to the officer presiding over the Court even when the intention is to refer it to the Court; (4) when a statute confers authority on a judicial officer, it does not necessarily mean that the Legislature conferred such authority on him as a persona designata; (5) where a judicial officer who presides over a Court is appointed to perform a function under any statute intending him to act not otherwise than in a judicial capacity, in the absence of any indication to the contrary, he acts not as a persona designata but as a Court only; (6) when a presiding officer of a Court is appointed to judge and decide in accordance with law and nothing is mentioned about the finality or otherwise of his decisions, it is an indication that he is to act as a Court, and all incidents of exercising jurisdiction as a Court would necessarily follow; and (7) whether the authority functions as a persona designata or a Court does not necessarily depend on the question whether it is acting against the decisions of designated person or Tribunals or not; statutes provide for appeals or revisions to Courts even as against the decisions of designated persons and Tribunal: (1975) 1 An.W.R. 133: 1974 An.L.T. 372: 1975 M.L.J. (Cr.) 155: 1975 Cr.L.J. 144.

The Act deals with the law of evidence applicable to both civil and criminal proceedings; it is comprehensive in its nature; the Codes of Civil and Criminal Procedure are separate and distinct by nature; the definition of 'Court' under the Act cannot be invoked in the proceedings under S. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure nor can S. 148-A of the Code of Civil Procedure be invoked in criminal proceedings: (1990) 3 An.L.T. 491.

'Court' includes both Judge and jury: I.L.R. 4 Cal. 483 (F.B.). Registrar or Sub-Registrar are not Court under C.P. Code [C.P. Code, S. 105(2)]; so also a Magistrate holding preliminary enquiry in police investigation: I.L.R. 11 Bom. 702. 'Court' includes all Magistrates: 36 I.C. 171: 34 Punj.Re. (Cr.) 1916.

S. 1 and definition of the term 'Court' read together make it amply clear that the Act applies to all judicial proceedings before the authorities legally authorised to take evidence, barring arbitrators and Courts-martial convened under the Acts mentioned in S. 1. Since the Haryana Urban (Control of Rent and Eviction) Act, 1973 as well as the Rules thereunder clearly lay down that the Rent Controller and the appellate authority are under an obligation to record evidence and examine the parties' witnesses, held, they are certainly governed by the Act. [(1969) 71 Punj.L.R. 68 and (1981) 83 Punj.L.R. 59, Overruled]: (1986-1) 89 Punj.L.R. 417 (D.B.).

The definition of 'Court' in S. 3 is only inclusive, and is framed only for the purposes of the Act; it should not be extended beyond its legitimate scope; thus, though the Payment of Wages Act, 1936, and the Rules framed thereunder direct the Authority to follow the procedure of a Court of civil jurisdiction as nearly as possible, but that alone is not sufficient to conclude that the Authority has been conferred the status of a Court: 1980 Lab.I.C. 835: A.I.R. 1980 N.O.C. 166 (J.&K.) (F.B.).

Registration Officer in the proceedings for registration of a Will is not a Court: (1912) 13 Cr.L.J. 508 (Mad.) (F.B.); A.I.R. 1969 S.C. 724.

A Revenue Officer is not a Court; it is not necessary for him while conducting mutation proceedings to follow the procedure laid down under the Act: A.I.R. 1988 N.O.C. 9 (Pat.).

Contra.—The Revenue Officer and the appellate and revisional authorities under the Orissa Land Reforms Act, 1965, are Courts in strict sense; the proceedings thereunder are judicial and S. 1 of the Act is applicable to them; all oral evidence adduced therein is subject to cross-examination. The Revenue Officer cannot collect any materials confidentialiy and without disclosing them to the opposite parties, and he cannot use such materials to arrive at his conclusions affecting the lis: A.I.R. 1974 Ori. 127: (1973) 1 Cut.W.R. 697 (D.B.).

The authorised officer under the T.N. Land Reforms (Fixation of Ceiling on Land) Act, 1961, is a Court under S. 3; he can require evidence to prove a will before it is acted upon: (1979) 2 M.L.J. 209: (1980) 93 Mad.L.W. 35.

'Court' — Jagir Commissioner under Rajasthan Act (6 of 1952) is not a Court—Provisions of Evidence Act and C.P. Code are not attracted—C.P. Code (1908), S. 141—Tenancy Laws—Rajasthan Land Reforms and Resumption of Jagirs Act (6 of 1952), Ss. 2(f), 32: 1964 Raj.L.W. 83: I.L.R. (1964) 14 Raj. 90.

The Consolidation Authorities under the Bihar Consolidation of Holdings and Prevention of Fragmentation Act, 1956, are 'deemed Courts'; by a fiction of law, they have to be treated as Courts of law: (1990-1) 38 B.L.J.R. 51 (F.B.); A.I.R. 1989 Pat. 39: 1988 B.L.J.R. 682: 1988 B.L.J. 912: 1989 B.B.C.J. (H.C.) 48; (1994) 1 B.L.J. 326 (D.B.); 1986 Pat.L.J.R. 442.

Commissioner under Public Servants (Inquiries), Act, 1950, is not a 'Court' [A.I.R. 1954 Pat. 289, Reversed]. A.I.R. 1956 S.C. 66. Commissioner appointed merely to record evidence and submit a report—Whether Court for purposes of Oaths Act. See A.I.R. 1957 Nag. 47.

The Industrial Disputes Act authorises the Tribunal to take evidence. Under S. 11(3) of the Act every Board, Court and Tribunal has been granted the same powers as are vested in the Civil Courts under the C.P. Code when trying a suit in respect of enforcing the attendance of any person and examining him on oath. Hence, a Tribunal is a Court within the definition of S. 3, Evidence Act, and is bound by its provisions: A.I.R. 1958 Cal. 226. But see A.I.R. 1962 Cal. 375.

The Commissioner for Workmen's Compensation is not a Court. The Evidence Act does not apply to the proceedings before the Commissioner: 1979 Lab.I.C. 415: 1979 Ker.L.T. 513 (D.B.).

Accident Claims Tribunal—Claims Tribunal is 'Court' within S. 3, Evidence Act: A.I.R. 1970 Punj. 137; A.I.R. 1975 Cal. 239 (D.B.).

The Railway Claims Tribunal is not a Civil Court: A.I.R. 1995 S.C. 1111.

A Family Court constituted under the Family Courts Act, 1984, is a 'Court': A.I.R. 1991 All. 189.

A Rent Controller, acting under the A.P. Buildings (Lease, Rent and Eviction) Control Act, and authorised to record evidence by virtue of R. 8(2) of the Rules framed under the Act, held, is a 'Court' under S. 3. [A.I.R. 1964 Andh. Pra. 132, Disting.; A.I.R. 1975 Andh. Pra. 13, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1976 Andh. Pra. 270: (1976) 1 An.W.R. 169: 1976 Ren.C.R. 329: 1976 Ren.C.J. 344. The Rent Controller and Eviction Officer under U.P. (Temporary) Control of Rent and Eviction Act, 1947 is not a Court: 1966 All.W.R. 753.

Neither the Collector nor the appellate authority functioning under the Essential Commodities Act, 1955, are Courts under the Evidence Act; the Act therefore, in stricto sensu, does not apply to the proceedings conducted by them: (1992) 2 An.L.T. 33.

Magistrate functioning under S. 37 of Rajasthan Co-operative Societies Act (13 of 1965), is not 'Court': 1969 Cr.L.J. 1193 (Raj.).

A Forest Officer under S. 59 of Madras Forest Act, 1882, is a Court: I.L.R. 15 Mad. 138 (F.B.).

A District Judge exercising powers under S. 13 of the A.P. Forest Act, 1967, for disposing of appeals filed against orders passed under Ss. 10 and 11 of the 1967 Act, acts as a Civil Court and not as a persona designata: (1980) 1 A.P.L.J. 53.

District Magistrate hearing an appeal under S. 160, U.P. Municipalities Act is not legally authorised to take evidence. The words 'legally authorised' contemplate a positive authorisation. The right to receive evidence is not an incident of an appellate Court; wherever an appellate Court possesses the right to receive evidence it is by virtue of an express enactment such as those contained in S. 428, Cr.P. Code and O. 41, R. 27, C.P. Code: 1956 Cr.L.J. 679: A.I.R. 1956 All. 258. See also S. 1, Note 4, supra.

2. Fact.—Meaning of 'fact' is not restricted to something which can be exhibited as material object: A.I.R. 1935 Mad. 528 (F.B.). 'Fact' does not mean merely event but also a continuing fact such as possession: A.I.R. 1915 Mad. 249 (D.B.).

Fact in issue cannot be proved by one not called as a witness: 13 I.C. 220: 13 Cr.L.J. 28. Misrepresentation of fact—'fact', meaning of: 36 I.C. 850: 16 Punj. Re. (Cr.) 1916. State of a man's mind as a fact: 29 Ch.D. 483. Possession is a fact: 25 I.C. 510. On this section, see also (1936) 38 Bom.L.R. 1122: A.I.R. 1937 Bom. 31; 1946 All.L.J. 441. The evidence of a group of witnesses was of the effect that when they were seated in the common room of the Lewis Jubilee Sanitorium before dinner chatting, a man came with the news that K was just dead, and he made a request for men to help to carry the body for cremation. One of such witnesses had a distinct recollection of this request as the news broke in upon the talk they were having and the thing had stuck in his memory. The man who so came into the common room had not been identified and was not a witness. On a question whether the evidence of this group of witnesses was admissible evidence where the crucial question at issue was the time of death of K, held, that the statement and request made by the man was a fact within the meaning of Ss. 3 and 59 of the Indian Evidence Act and that it was proved by the direct evidence of witnesses who heard it, within the meaning of S. 60; but it was not a relevant fact unless the learned Judge was entitled to make it a relevant fact by a presumption under the terms of S. 114 of the Act. As regards the statement that K had just died, such a statement by itself would not justify any such presumption, as it might rest on mere rumour, but it can be held in relation to the fact of the request for help to carry the body for cremation that it was likely that the request was authorised by those in charge at the residence of K, having regard to "the common custom of natural events, human conduct and public and private business" and therefore, to presume the existence of such authority. When such presumption is made, the fact of such an authorised request became a relevant fact, and evidence of that group of witnesses became admissible: (1946) 2 M.L.J. 442 (P.C.): 73 I.A. 246: (1945-46) 51 Cal.W.N. 98: A.I.R. 1947 P.C. 19.

Mental condition is a 'fact'—Inference arrived at by a person by a process of ratiocination is not a mental condition of that person and hence not a fact—Guess or calculation a person may indulge in is not a fact: (1966) 68 Bom.L.R. 187: I.L.R. (1966) Bom. 803: A.I.R. 1967 Bom. 109.

Where assessment of income-tax was made on the basis of valuation report, held, subsequent report of official of valuation offices is 'information as to fact' for reopening of assessment under S. 147(b) of the Income-tax Act, 1961: 1984 Tax.L.R. 667 (Karn.).

Where a claim based on death and succession is admitted, the date of death cannot become either a distinct or different claim or a new question of fact: 1982 All.W.C. (Rev.) 12.

3. Evidence.—This is only a definition of the word as used in the Act: I.L.R. 4 Cal. 483 (F.B.). The word 'evidence' in the Act signifies only the instruments by means of which relevant facts are brought before the Court, viz., witnesses and documents, and by means of which the Court is convinced of these facts: 26 Nag.L.R. 229: A.I.R. 1930 Nag. 242 (F.B.).

'Evidence' includes statement of witnesses recorded by police under S. 161, Cr.P. Code and evidence recorded by Magistrate under S. 202(2), proviso, of Cr.P. Code: 1978 Raj.L.W. 9.

Statements recorded under S. 161(3), Cr.P. Code — Identical statements — Evidentiary value: (S) A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 623: 1957 Cr.L.J. 1009.

The evidence of complainant already recorded is 'evidence' within the meaning of S. 245(3) of the Cr.P.Code though she has not yet been subjected to cross-examination. [A.I.R. 1992 S.C.W. 1872, Rel. on]: 1995 Cr.L.J. 2640 (S.C.).

The writing obtained by the Court from the accused under S. 73 does not come within the expression evidence as it is not a document produced for the inspection of the Court: 1958 Cr.L.J. 134: A.I.R. 1958 All. 119.

Evidence excluded by statute cannot be admitted merely because it is necessary for ascertainment of truth: (1941) 1 M.L.J. 746: A.I.R. 1941 P.C. 16: I.L.R. (1941) 1 Cal. 468.

Memorandum of identification—Not a record of evidence of a witness—Presumption under S. 80 not available—Statement in identification memo recorded by Magistrate under S. 164, Cr.P. Code — Not evidence within S. 3: 1963 All.L.J. 61: (1963) 2 Cr.L.J.1: A.I.R. 1963 All. 308.

Any evidence of the commission of that 'offence'—Expression refers not to evidence in extensive sense, but to evidence in its primary sense as meaning anything that is likely to make crime evident such as existence of wounded corpse or bloodstains, etc.: I.L.R. (1963) Andh. Pra. 454.

What 'evidence' means and includes has been described in S. 3. An affidavit is not within that description. On the contrary the affidavits have been expressly excluded by S. 1, para. 2 from the applicability of the Evidence Act: I.L.R. (1944) Nag. 436: A.I.R. 1944 Nag. 161. Affidavits do not fall within the term 'evidence' in S. 1 and S. 3; S. 1 rather excludes them expressly from the definition: A.I.R. 1968 Cal. 532. See also S. 1, Note 5, supra.

Criminal trial — Confession — Voluntary confession by accused and circumstantial evidence proving guilt of accused—Court can reject that part of confession proved to be false by prosecution evidence and accept rest of confession: 31 Cut.L.T. 401: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 385: A.I.R. 1965 Ori. 170.

Confession—Recording of: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 520: A.I.R. 1965 Ori. 175.

Admissibility—Essentials—Accused kept in Police custody before making his confession—This by itself is no ground to reject the confession: 1967 Cr.L.J. 628: A.I.R. 1967 Del. 14.

Conviction based on admissible portion of confession by accused—Conviction of accused not based merely on his statement under S. 342, Cr.P.Code, but also other evidence including admissible portion of confession, as a whole—Procedure adopted by Court is not open to legal objection: (1963) 76 Mad.L.W. 722.

Confessional statement—Acceptance of inculpatory portion alone—Permissibility—Inculpatory portion can be accepted if the exculpatory portion is found to be inherently improbable—Charge for murder—Confessional statement to Mukhiya of village—Exculpatory portion found to be not only inherently improbable but contradicted by the statement of accused under S. 342, Cr.P. Code—Acceptance of inculpatory portion and conviction based thereon, held, was valid: A.I.R. 1969 S.C. 422.

Confession—Extra-judicial confessions—Two accused, husband and wife—Each implicating himself or herself—Husband telling before villagers that he had killed the deceased — Wife also making statement before Police and Magistrate that she shot the deceased when he was trying to abduct her — No corroborating evidence — If statements of accused are not believed they should be rejected as a whole: 1969 Jab.L.J. 525: 1969 M.P.L.J. 524: 1969 Cr.L.J. 1291.

Accused charged under Ss. 302, 364 and 386, Indian Penal Code—Confession not relied in respect of offence under S. 302—Value in regard to other offences: (S) A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 381: 1957 Cr.L.J. 559.

In dealing with a case against an accused person, the Court cannot start with the confession of a co-accused person; it must begin with other evidence adduced by the prosecution and after it has formed its opinion with regard to the quality and effect of the said evidence, then it is permissible to turn to the confession in order to receive assurance to the conclusion of guilt which the judicial mind is about to reach on the said other evidence. Thus, the confession of a co-accused person cannot be treated as substantive evidence and can be pressed into service only when the Court is inclined to accept other evidence and feels the necessity of seeking for an assurance in support of its conclusion deducible from the said evidence: 31 Cut.L.T. 401: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 385: A.I.R. 1965 Ori. 170.

The confession of co-accused cannot be treated as a substantive evidence as defined in S. 3 and can be pressed into service only when the Court is inclined to accept other evidence and feel the necessity of seeking for an assurance in support of its conclusion deducible from the said evidence. As a result of provisions of S. 30 it has to be treated as amounting to an evidence in a general way: 1970 Cr.L.J. 1206 (Raj.).

Confession of co-accused — Cannot be treated as evidence against another accused: 1967 Cr.L.J. 1179: A.I.R. 1967 Pat. 283.

Judicial confession of co-accused though evidence in generic sense is not evidence as defined in S. 3: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 566 (Mad.).

Confession of co-accused—Relevancy of: (1965) 1 Cr.L.J. 458: A.I.R. 1965 Ori. 66.

Confession of co-accused is not evidence in S. 3—Can be considered under S. 30 only after other evidence has been considered and found to be satisfactory—Confessional statement is material of very weak type: (1964) 66 Punj.L.R. 1230: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 127: A.I.R. 1965 Punj. 291.

Confession of co-accused—Its probative value—Its use how to be made in joint trial: (1964) 2 Cr.L.J. 344: A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 1184.

Confession by accused implicating co-accused—Maker not implicating himself in offence and also retracting confession—Confession cannot be used as substantive evidence for convicting co-accused: (1964) 66 Punj.L.R. 530: (1964) 2 Cr.L.J. 335: A.I.R. 1964 Punj. 397.

It is well settled that the confession of a co-accused is very weak evidence; it does not fall within the meaning of 'evidence' as defined in S. 3: (1992-2) 40 B.L.J.R. 978: (1993) 1 D.M.C. 200 (D.B.); (1992-1) 40 B.L.J.R. 293 (D.B.).

Confessions of co-accused are not evidence as defined in S. 3 and no conviction can be founded thereon, but if there was other evidence on which a conviction can be based, they can be referred to as lending assurance to that conclusion and for fortifying it: A.I.R. 1956 S.C. 56: 1956 Cr.L.J. 152 (S.C.); A.I.R. 1955 Trav.-Co. 87: 1955 Ker.L.T. 801. See also (1936) 38 Bom.L.R. 1122: A.I.R. 1937 Bom. 31; I.L.R. (1958) Bom. 1092: A.I.R. 1957 Bom. 226: 1957 Cr.L.J. 1107; A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 1184; 1987 Mah.L.J. 683: (1988) 1 Bom.C.R. 428; 1981 Cr.L.J. 1424: 1981 M.L.J. (Cr.) 448 (Ker.); I.L.R. (1977) 1 Cal. 267 (D.B.). See also S. 30, Note 6, infra.

Where a confessional statement is retracted by the accused, the evidence adduced in the case has to be considered at the first instance before seeking the aid of the confessional statement: 1955 Ker.L.T. 801: A.I.R. 1955 Trav.-Co. 87. See also 1977 Cr.L.J. 1309 (Gau.) (D.B.); 1981 Cr.L.J. 430 (Gau.) (D.B.).

Where the confessional statement of a Customs Officer made before three other Customs Officer carrying an endorsement in his own handwriting of having read and understood its contents was later on retracted by him, held, in view of the consistent, cogent and convincing evidence of the three Customs Officers that the smuggled goods were found in the accused's possession, it was highly improbable for them to falsely involve a fellow Customs Officer; they were competent, not interested witnesses; conviction under S. 135(1)(a)(ii) and 135(1)(b)(ii) upheld: (1991) 53 E.L.T. 178 (Bom.). Non-production of seized gold bars in the Court as evidence—Effect of—See 1972 Ker.L.R. 457. See also 1980 Cr.L.R. 330 (Guj.).

The evidence of witnesses of extra-judicial confession must not lack plausibility; it must inspire the Court's confidence: 1982 Cr.L.J. 2342 (Ori.). See 1988 Cr.L.J. 573 (Gau.) (Extra-judicial confession is a weak piece of evidence). See also S. 24, infra.

Evidence—Answers given by accused under S. 342, Cr.P. Code. See A.I.R. 1958 Cal. 616; 1958 Cr.L.J. 1390. See also A.I.R. 1952 Him. Pra. 81. But see A.I.R. 1955 N.U.C. 4481 Bom. (D.B.). A statement in an inquest report is not evidence by itself and it certainly cannot be pitted against the evidence of medical witness given in Court A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 425; 1956 Cr.L.J. 815. It is the statement of the Medical Officer on oath which is evidence and not his mere report: 1975 Hindu L.R. 22 (Punj.). Partial evidence is no evidence: A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 360.

The post-mortem report is normally used by the Doctor who had conducted the post-mortem examination to referesh his memory; but in the absence of any evidence to show that the report was being tendered in evidence under any relevant provision of Chapter II of the Act, held, the report cannot be treated as substantive evidence: (1982-83) 87 Cal.W.N. 565 (D.B.).

A first information report is not substantive evidence; it can be used to corroborate or contradict its maker only: 1984 Cr.L.J. 1215: 57 Cut.L.T. 505; I.L.R. (1975) 54 Pat. 302 (D.B.). Police report is not evidence within the meaning of S. 3: 1986 All.L.J. 1236 (D.B.).

Presumption under S. 80 arises only in case of evidence; a memorandum of identification is not evidence under S. 3; the identification memo would be inadmissible in evidence unless proved by the Magistrate. [A.I.R. 1961 All. 153, Dissent. from]: A.I.R. 1971 Raj. 184: I.L.R. (1970) 20 Raj. 439: 1971 Cr.L.J. 974.

Statements of witness recorded during investigation cannot be used as substantive evidence: A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 873.

Statement made by accused is not evidence: A.I.R. 1956 All. 341; A.I.R. 1969 Ori. 228.

Self-serving statements filed by a litigant cannot, by itself, be evidence unless it has been proved: (1979) 92 Mad.L.W. 209.

Too much importance need not be attached to statements which might have been made from ulterior motives and were more or less in one's own interest: 1958 M.P.L.J. 198: 1958 Jab.L.J. 289: A.I.R. 1958 Madh. Pra. 246.

The result of an inspection made by the Judge is not 'evidence', under S. 3; only statements permitted or required to be made by witnesses and documents produced in the Court alone are to be treated as evidence. But the terms 'Proved' and 'Disproved' defined in the same section make it clear that in deciding whether a fact in issue has been proved or disproved, the Court is to consider all 'the matters before it'; such matters are not confined to 'evidence' stricto sensu; otherwise, a Court would not, for example, take into consideration the witnesses demeanour or compare disputed signatures or writings: (1983) 2 Ren.C.J. 105. See also I.L.R. (1974) Him. Pra. 509 (D.B.).

In a motor accident claim case the rough sketch of the scene, prepared by the Investigating Officer, on the basis of statements recorded by him under S. 161 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, held, is admissible in evidence: A.I.R. 1990 Mad. 14. See however (1976) 1 Raj.Cr.C. 50.

Deposition of a witness that the accident could have been averted if the drivers had moved the vehicles to left, held, is not evidence but just an expression of opinion: (1972) 1 An.L.T. 205.

Recitals in the sale deed about existence of the necessity are admissible in evidence; but they are not evidence by themselves of its existence; there must be some evidence aliunde. [(1970) 3 S.C.C. 722: A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 1028, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1972 Gau. 107 (D.B.).

In proceedings for computation of ceiling area under S. 6 of the Gujarat Agricultural Lands Ceiling Act, 1960, held, the statement of accounts, assessment proceeding, the audited accounts, balance-sheet, etc., were not admissible in evidence in establishing the status of HUF unless the status is established in terms from the revenue records; a person cannot succeed in establishing his status de hors the said records: (1982-1) 23 Guj.L.R. 317: (1982) 2 Guj.L.H. 77.

Suggestions made but denied in cross-examination whether by prosecution or defence are no evidence. If the accused wishes to establish a fact, he has to lead evidence: 1982 Cr.L.R. 381 (Guj.).

A mere suggestion, made and denied, is no evidence: A.I.R. 1981 Karn. 40: I.L.R. (1981) Karn. 78.

The opinion of the Legal Remembrancer given to the Government would be inadmissible in evidence. Nor can it constitute proof of the facts stated therein: A.I.R. 1958 Manipur 7. Heading of deposition—Entry in—Proof of religion—Not much importance to be attached: 176 I.C. 242: A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 81.

Where one 'P' was shot dead at the farm of 'A' by the accused 'D' in conspiracy with some others and P's dead body was taken in A's car and thrown in a lonely well, but there was no allegation that 'A' was in any manner concerned as an abettor or accomplice in the murder or participated or abetted the removal and disposal of the dead body, the mere fact that 5 days after P's murder 'A' got his car washed could not by any stretch of imagination be prima facie evidence of the factual ingredients of an offence under S. 201, I.P.Code: A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 1560: 1980 Cr.L.J. 1098.

Prosecution leading two sets of evidence—One set condemning other set—Evidence is unreliable—No conviction can be based upon it: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 344: 1974 Cr.L.J. 366.

4. Oral evidence.—(See also S. 60). A Magistrate has no jurisdiction to refuse to examine a witness who is deaf but who is able to speak and write and such refusal, if materially prejudicial, vitiates the trial: 24 Cr.L.J. 688: A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 541. No statement by any person is evidence unless given on oath in the witness-box: A.I.R. 1935 Nag. 60. See also I.L.R. 24 Pat. 379: A.I.R. 1945 Pat. 453.

Appreciation of oral evidence and circumstances inspiring confidence or compelling disbelief. See 1957 Cr.L.J. 263 (All.).

Oral evidence—Question is one of fact and not of law—Discretion of Court—Discretion of inferior Courts in the matters cannot be taken away by High Court by laying down rules to be followed by them regardless of circumstances. See I.L.R. (1963) 1 All. 585: 1962 All.L.J. 1119: 1963 Cr.L.J. 404: A.I.R. 1963 All. 161 (F.B.).

Civil proceedings — Oral evidence — In assessing the value of the evidence Judges are bound to call in aid their experience of life and test the evidence on basis of probabilities—Evidence of only one party even when no evidence of rebuttal is led by opposite party need not necessarily be accepted: A.I.R. 1969 S.C. 255.

The Court must consider both oral and documentary evidence judicially; it should not summarily brush aside oral evidence: 1977 All.W.C. 23 (Rev.).

The appreciation of oral evidence by a Court cannot conform to certain set formulae or be measured by the yard-stick common to all cases. Ordinarily, a Court should not convict an accused on the basis of evidence not accepted by it in connection with the other accused, unless the evidence is corroborated otherwise; but this is not an inflexible rule of law but a rule of prudence for the appreciation of evidence and is not intended to prevent a Judge of fact from appreciating the evidence that is placed before him, having regard to the circumstances of each case: 1956 An.L.T. 664: A.I.R. 1956 Andhra 247.

Oral evidence about a happening which occurred some generations ago, has to be assessed with great care: A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 733: (1975) 1 S.C.C. 212.

Testimony of A relating to what M told N and the latter passed on to A, is hearsay and is, therefore, inadmissible in evidence: A.I.R. 1956 Raj. 58 (S.B.).

Evidence of person injured in the same occurrence—His ocular version of incident is of great value: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 2027: 1976 Cr.L.J. 1563.

Statements made at the local inspection are inadmissible and a Judge should not bring such statements into the case as evidence.

Although evidence cannot be given that an accused person has been suspected by persons other than the witness of having committed a certain offence, there is no authority for the proposition that a witness cannot be allowed to state that he personally suspected the accused of having committed a certain offence: I.L.R. 51 All. 275: A.I.R. 1929 All. 650. See also 192 I.C. 246: 42 Cr.L.J. 259 (admissibility of evidence of police dog). Conjecture should not be the basis of a judgment: A.I.R. 1924 Nag. 363.

5. Cross-examination of witness—Tests of truth.—(See also Ss. 137 to 139). The testimony of a witness is not legal evidence unless it is subjected to cross-examination. Where no opportunity has been given to the counsel for the accused to test the veracity of the principal prosecution witness or where owing to the refractory attitude of the witness the Court is constrained to terminate all of a sudden and prematurely the cross-examination of the witness, the evidence of such a witness is not legal testimony and cannot be the basis of judicial pronouncement: I.L.R. 12 Luck. 553: 37 Cr.L.J. 1144.

Harrington, J.—The evidence of a man who can remember no details and cannot submit to the test of thorough cross-examination is of very little value. The Court should look at the broad outlines of the case and try to visualise what in all probability took place and how far the witnesses support the main story put forward by the prosecution: 32 Cr.L.J. 522: A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 38.

If witnesses are not cross-examined on a point, their evidence thereon has to be accepted unless there are any inherent improbabilities. [A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 683 (D.B.), Foll.]: 1973 Pat.L.J.R. 309 (D.B.).

Wherever the opponent has declined to avail himself of the opportunity to put his essential and material case in cross-examination, it must follow that he believed that the testimony given could not be disputed at all. This is not merely a technical rule of evidence. It is a rule of essential justice. It serves to prevent surprise at trial and miscarriage of justice, because it gives notice to the other side of the actual case that is going to be made when the turn of the party on whose behalf the cross-examination is being made comes to give and lead evidence by producing witnesses. This much a counsel is bound to do when cross-examining: A.I.R. 1961 Cal. 359; (1984) 1 Cal.L.J. 161: (1983-84) 88 Cal.W.N. 485.

Where a witness is not cross-examined on a particular point deposed in the examination-in-chief, held, the other party should be deemed to have accepted it: (1986) 2 Hindu L.R. 75 (P.&H.); 1977 Cur.L.J. 259: (1977) 2 Ren.L.R. 465 (Punj.). This rule applies only where the statement is such that it can be reasonably acted upon by the Court and not where the statement falls short of such probative value: (1979) 2 Ren.L.R. 273 (Punj.).

There is no particular cross-examination to judge the credibility of a witness; it is to be weighed and examined in the light of normal human conduct, the probabilities of the incident deposed to by the witness and, in certain cases, by the witness's subsequent conduct; as a rule, the Court would normally seek corroboration to the testimony of a witness, especially when there is something improbable therein. However, in law, undoubtedly, the testimony of a single witness can be made the sole basis of conviction. However, as a rule of prudence, Courts have always insisted on corroboration, especially in criminal cases: (1988) 1 Bom.C.R. 92 (D.B.).

Cross-examination is not the only method of discrediting a witness; if his oral testimony is contrary to proved facts or on the face of it is unacceptable, it may well be discarded: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 373: 1980 (Supp.) S.C.C. 417.

Impeaching credit of witness—Omission by opponent to put material and essential case in cross-examination — Veracity of opponent's version of the case ought to be taken into account—Omission to do so vitiates appreciation of evidence: 1968 Ker.L.J. 123. See also S. 155.

The fact that the accused did not cross-examine the witnesses is really of no value in a case where he was unrepresented and was ignorant and could not be expected to know the legal presumption that not cross-examined evidence is probably reliable: 38 Cr.L.J. 889: (1936-37) 41 Cal.W.N. 816.

Permission to cross-examine witness by itself is not enough to discredit him: A.I.R. 1969 Pat. 415.

The trial Court has the discretion to direct that evidence of any witness, who fails to appear in the Court for cross-examination or further examination or cross-examination should be ignored; the discretion is not to be exercised mechanically or without due application of mind. If his absence is for reasons wholly unavoidable or temporary in nature or he is kept back deliberately by one party or the other for different purposes, the Court is to consider various matters like relevance or necessity of his testimony and the cause of his absence; the Court has ample power to procure the presence of witnesses; to get at the truth, the Court should not hesitate to exercise its power; it should not readily expunge the evidence of a witness examined or cross-examined in part: (1985) 60 Cut.L.T. 247.

Suggestion in cross-examination can only be indicative of case put forward or stand taken by party on whose behalf cross-examination is being conducted—But to no extent whatsoever can it be a substitute for evidence if it is repudiated by witness to whom it is made: 1969 All.Cr.R. 240: 1969 All.W.R. (H.C.) 369.

Where in a matrimonial proceeding, the cross-examination of the husband's uncle appearing as the wife's witness was under way when the proceedings were adjourned for reconciliation but on resumption of proceedings, she could not again produce the witness, held, the statement of the witness already recorded was admissible: 1984 Hindu L.R. 12 (All.).

Where a witness was examined before the committing Magistrate and was simply tendered for cross-examination in the Sessions Court and the evidence before the committing Magistrate was marked as exhibit in the Sessions Court, such procedure is illegal: 30 I.C. 439: 1915 M.W.N. 544. See also 39 Mys.H.C.R. 581: 12 Mys.L.J. 1.

Appreciation—Witness not cross-examined—Court is not precluded from assessing veracity of witness even in absence of his cross-examination: 1960 All.L.J. 782: (1961) 1 Cr.L.J. 15: A.I.R. 1961 All. 38.

6. Cross-examination of one defendant by another.—(See also Ss. 137 and 138). Co-defendants—Right of one to cross-examine other defendants—Evidence produced by partner defendant found admissible against other co-defendant partners — Co-defendants have right of cross-examining the deposing defendant: 1965 Raj.L.W. 346: I.L.R. (1965) 15 Raj. 1035: A.I.R. 1966 Raj. 229.

7. Party's own examination.—(See also Ss. 135 to 138). No law requires that the petitioner must appear as a witness in a Civil or Revenue Court; where the petitioner, an old lady in her nineties hesitant to appear in public, did not examine herself as a witness, held, no adverse inference could be drawn against her: (1985-2) 88 Punj.L.R. 66.

It is true that if a party examines itself as a witness, the other party is entitled to prove its case by cross-examining the party; but that does not mean that the party is bound to examine itself for establishing the opponent's case; it is for the party itself to decide whether to examine itself as a witness; though not examining itself in a given case may lead to adverse inference with regard to certain facts but at the same time, it is permissible for a party to prove its case by examining other witnesses: (1987) 100 Mad.L.W. 612.

Witnesses do not carry conviction with a Court or Tribunal when the party himself is not ready to stand the test of cross-examination and keeps away: A.I.R. 1980 Del. 110: 1980 Rajdhani L.R. 423.

8. Examination of party—Defendant as plaintiff's witness.—(See also Ss. 137 and 138). Where the plaintiff refrained from giving evidence on his own behalf and adopted instead the tactics of calling the defendant as a witness for the plaintiff, with the usual result that important features of his case were denied by his own witness their Lordships condemned this practice and approved of the course taken by the High Court in treating the plaintiff as a person who put the defendant forward as a witness of truth: 172 I.C. 633: 47 Mad.L.W. 124: A.I.R. 1938 P.C. 59 (P.C.).

If a party appears as a witness on behalf of the opposing party, the Court should before proceeding to record his statement question him or his counsel as to whether he does not propose to appear as his own witness. If that party then declares that he does not propose to appear as his own witness, the Court should point out to the party producing him that ordinarily speaking the matter should be left as it is and the Court be left to draw any adverse inference which may justifiably be drawn from the refusal of the party to appear in the witness-box and subject himself to cross-examination. If the party, however, insists on examining the opposite party as his own witness the Court should be careful not to allow him to cross-examine his own witness because unless the evidence is declared hostile, the party producing the witness has no right to cross-examine his own witness: (1933) 35 Punj.L.R. 28: A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 126.

The fact that a witness was cited on behalf of the defendants and his evidence went entirely to support the plaintiff's case does not entitle a Court to reject his evidence as that of a witness who had been 'won over' by the plaintiff: 147 I.C. 591: A.I.R. 1934 All. 226. See also 1975 J.&K.L.R. 413.

9. Documentary evidence.—(See also S. 61 et seq). The definition of the word 'document' in S. 3 of the Evidence Act and S. 29 of the I.P.Code, applies to the word as used in S. 2(6) of the Press (Emergency Powers) Act, 1931: A.I.R. 1934 All. 1031: 153 I.C. 411.

Where a party having once denied on a reconsideration subsequently admits the genuineness of a document, a Court could not be precluded from taking such document into consideration: A.I.R. 1941 Oudh 189: 1940 O.W.N. 1344.

No Court has a right to look at any document or any papers other than those on the record unless the Judge gives to the parties to the suit an opportunity of being heard and making their submission with regard to what is contained in such documents: A.I.R. 1923 Cal. 194.

When there is documentary evidence and also a mass of conflicting oral testimony, it is always desirable and indeed safe to let the documents speak for themselves: (1959) 61 Bom.L.R. 1549: I.L.R. (1960) Bom. 365: A.I.R. 1960 Bom. 418.

The mere summoning of a record does not constitute it a part of the evidence in the case in which it is summoned. The contents in those documents, if sought to be relied upon must be formally proved: 1940 All.W.R. (B.R.) 153: 1940 R.D. 242.

It is only after a document has been proved that its authenticity can be determined: (1980) 6 All.L.R. 595. Mere attestation does not mean that the attesting witness accepts correctness of recitals contained in the document; it only shows that the document was prepared by its author in his presence: 1978 Raj.L.W. 480.

It is an elementary principle that documents inducted by way of proof have to be proved; mere marking of documents by consent does not oblige the Court to look into their contents; the Act contemplates only the enumerated ones and there is no other document of which the Court can take judicial notice; thus, a profession-tax certificate issued by a Panchayat President or an income-tax certificate issued by a Panchayat Union Commissioner, even if exhibited, cannot be taken as proved unless testified by a witness; they are exhibited subject to their admissibility and relevance: (1982) 2 M.L.J. 301: (1982) 95 Mad.L.W. 297.

Unless the documents are proved in accordance with the Act, their contents should not be used as evidence; thus, where neither side had examined any witness to prove documents, the Courts cannot accept their contents as acceptable evidence. [(1982) 2 M.L.J. 301: (1982) 95 Mad.L.W. 297, Foll.]: (1986) 99 Mad.L.W. 73: (1986) 1 M.L.J. 207; A.I.R. 1989 N.O.C. 42 (Mad.).

The principles of law laid down in (1982) 2 M.L.J. 301 are not wholly erroneous but require modification in the light of the earlier Division Bench judgments in (1974) 2 M.L.J. 535 and (1974) 2 M.L.J. 260; the correct position being that "permitting a document to be marked by consent only means that the party consenting is willing to waive his right to have the document in question proved"; the single Judge in (1982) 2 M.L.J. 301, however, took the erroneous view that formal proof is still required even if the document was marked by consent; marking by consent, however, certainly does not mean that every statement made therein is correct: 1986 T.L.N.J. 1: (1986) 1 M.L.J. 283 (D.B.).

While a document is marked on its formal proof being waived, the party relying upon it need not examine any witness to prove it formally; that, however, does not amount to an admission of the document's contents: (1991) 2 Hindu L.R. 428 (Cal.).

An objection with regard to the mode of proof of a document cannot be raised after it has been exhibited: (1994-1) 106 Punj.L.R. 347.

The proof of the executant's signatures on a sale deed does not by itself prove the truth of its contents. [Similar view was taken in A.I.R. 1954 Bom. 305: (1954) 56 Bom.L.R. 147 and (1966) 68 Bom.L.R. 228 (D.B.); but in (1968) 70 Bom.L.R. 683, the Single Judge disagreed with the Division Bench; his views being personal do not bind the Bombay High Court or any Judge of a subordinate Court]: A.I.R. 1982 Bom. 387: (1982) 1 Bom.C.R. 819: 1982 Mah.L.J. 840.

A mere proof of the handwriting of a document does not tantamount to proof of its contents or facts stated therein; if the truth of the facts is in issue, the proof of its writing and execution would not establish the truth of the facts or contents stated therein; their truth or otherwise has to be proved by evidence of the persons who can vouchsafe for the truth of the facts in issue. [(1965-66) 70 Cal.W.N. 199, Reversed]: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 2085: (1981) 1 S.C.C. 80: (1981) 1 S.C.R. 899.

No provision of law debars the defendant from examining a Document Writer as his own witness to prove some documents if he has been examined by the plaintiff to prove another document: (1987-1) 91 Punj.L.R. 555.

The principles of natural justice do not imply that what is not justice can be acted upon; it only means that if a document is produced to establish its contents, its author must testify thereabout as a witness or by affidavit and the opportunity should be afforded to the contesting party to challenge him; it is in accord with O. 19 of the Code of Civil Procedure as also of the Act; both of them incorporate the principles: (1971) 2 S.C.C. 617: (1971) 2 S.C.W.R. 733: A.I.R. 1972 S.C. 330.

Only documents produced and proved by a witness in the Court can be regarded as evidence: 1984 Cr.L.J. 733.

A document's admissibility is one thing, its probative value quite another and the two cannot be combined. A document may be admissible and yet, carrying no conviction, its probative value may be nil: A.I.R. 1983 S.C. 684: (1983) 3 S.C.C. 118.

Statements in a document, held, cannot bind a person who is not a party to the document: (1990) 1 Bom.C.R. 661: (1991) 1 Hindu L.R. 97.

Where to prove residence at the suit premises, letters addressed at such premises, were produced without examining the senders thereof, held, it could not be said that the letters held no evidentiary value; their contents having no bearing upon the question under consideration, their contents need not be proved by producing their writer as a witness: (1984) 2 Bom.C.R. 671.

Proof of execution of a document is no proof of the truth of its contents; the truth of the facts stated in the document, if denied, has to be proved by admissible evidence; under S. 61, the contents of documents are to be proved either by primary or secondary evidence and under S. 62 "primary evidence means the document itself produced for the inspection of the Court". Even on such proof the Court is not bound to accept the contents, unless it is satisfied about their truth: A.I.R. 1983 Ker. 81 (D.B.). See also Notes under S: 67.

Where a document was produced after the oral evidence of the witness had concluded and the witness could not be cross-examined with reference to it, held, it could not be relied upon: 1979 Bom.C.R. 110: (1980) 2 Mah.L.R. 242.

Proof of document—Document produced from proper custody and drawn upon stamped paper purchased in name of alleged executor—Held, document was properly proved: (1967) 69 Punj.L.R. 578.

A Court is not bound to treat the registration endorsement as conclusive proof of the fact of execution; but it can treat it as sufficient proof thereof: 1940 Nag.L.J. 437: A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 382.

Proof — Execution of document: 31 Cut.L.T. 659: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 107: A.I.R. 1965 Ori. 126.

Person admitting certain documents as "Bills of lading"—Signature on documents not proved nor new question asked about signatures—Execution of documents held not proved. Carriage of Goods by Sea Act, 1925, S. 4: (1968-69) 73 Cal.W.N. 279.

An unregistered sale deed can be admitted in evidence and marked in the suit; but the defendant is still entitled to question its genuineness or raise any other objections; he is not precluded from doing so: 1977 An.L.T. 107.

Where title is conveyed together with absolute rights to alienate, etc., under an agreement, unstamped and unregistered, held, the document cannot be received in evidence: (1984) 2 An.W.R. 105.

A document, effecting partition of immovable properties worth more than Rs. 100, not registered, held, cannot be received as evidence of partition; but if it contains several other matters not requiring registration like the list of the joint family's properties, the document is admissible to prove that they were on the date of its execution such joint family properties: (1988) 2 Hindu L.R. 376 (Karn.) (D.B.). See also Notes under S. 65.

S. 12 of the Indian Stamp Act enjoins cancellation at the time the stamp is affixed if the instrument has already been executed or at the time of its execution; if the adhesive stamp is not cancelled, the instrument is deemed to be unstamped; in case a promissory note bears several adhesive stamps, all of them must be cancelled; if any stamp is not cancelled, the instrument is deemed to be not duly stamped; it is inadmissible in evidence: (1979) 92 Mad.L.W. 381.

When no additional stamp duty as required by S. 3-A of the Stamp Act, 1899, is payable on a promissory note, held, it is admissible in evidence if it bore proper and requisite stamp duty: A.I.R. 1984 Madh. Pra. 58: 1984 Jab.L.J. 239.

A duly stamped receipt showing payment of advance rent by the tenant need not be registered for being admissible in evidence if it does not purport to create a lease: 1983 All.L.J. 1334.

Document legally admissible cannot be excluded on the ground of public policy: A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 768: I.L.R. (1940) Mad. 969: (1940) 2 M.L.J. 257. Evidence cannot be admitted on the intention of the parties when that intention is clearly expressed in the deed: A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 825.

Whenever objection is raised to a document's admissibility or on any other ground, the Court must decide the same before admitting it in evidence and proceeding further with the trial: (1988) 2 Hindu L.R. 376 (Karn.) (D.B.).

The duly signed statements of parties, recorded by the trial Court and containing the terms of the compromise, held, the signed statements are documents under S. 3: A.I.R. 1987 P.&H. 60: (1986) 90 Punj.L.R. 504: 1986 Punj.L.J. 639: I.L.R. (1987) 1 P.&H. 394 (D.B.).

Both prosecution and accused can rely or refer to documents mentioned in S. 174 in support of their contention in exercising right of being heard under S. 251-A (2) and (3): 1968 Cr.L.J. 493: A.I.R. 1968 Mad. 117.

The tape recordings are 'documents', as defined by S. 3; they stand on no different footing than photographs; they are admissible on satisfying the following conditions: (a) the voice of the purported speaker must be duly identified by the maker of the record or any others who know it; (b) the maker has to prove the accuracy of the recording by satisfactory evidence, direct or circumstantial, so as to rule out possibilities of tampering; (c) the contents should be shown to be relevant under the Act. The tape records are the primary evidence of what was recorded. Shorthand transcript of the recording is corroborative as it confirms what the tape records contained; the transcript shows what the transcriber had found recorded therein; it operates as a check against tampering; held, the transcripts had been rightly used only as corroborative evidence: A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 1788; 1980 Mad.L.W. (Cr.) 61 (Andh. Pra.).

Merely because the relevant entries in the registers of the stamp vendor and the deed writer were the last on their respective pages, they would not become suspicious and render the documents forged if there was no overwriting or interpolation; non-mention of the details of the document in these entries, held, would not render the document doubtful; there is no legal requirement for giving very many details in such entries of the documents intended to be executed: (1994-1) 106 Punj.L.R. 321.

A photostat copy of a document cannot be readily accepted as reliable secondary evidence without the clinching proof that (i) the photostat copy truly represented the original or its counterfoil; (ii) the photostat copy was prepared by mechanical process by someone at some particular place on a particular date and time; and (iii) the original of the photostat copy was produced at the relevant time by any person in custody thereof: (1986) 1 Hindu L.R. 387 (Madh. Pra.).

The objection that the copy of a mortgage deed is not legal secondary evidence within the meaning of S. 63 is merely to the mode of proof of a document and should be raised at the very time the document is sought to be tendered in evidence and proved: 1958 Raj.L.W. 275: A.I.R. 1958 Raj. 110.

Document includes foreign currency: (1962) 2 Cr.L.J. 794: A.I.R. 1962 Tripura 50.

Where a letter written by the Superintendent of Police to his administrative superior was produced but its writer was not examined as a witness and the defence had no opportunity to cross-examine him, held, the letter could not be used to corroborate the oral evidence. [(1983) 1 Crimes 675 (Madh. Pra.), Reversed]: A.I.R. 1984 S.C. 911: 1984 Cr.L.J. 814: (1984) 2 S.C.C. 350.

Where the plaintiffs' only evidence comprised of entries in their account books, held, it was not sufficient to charge the defendants with liability. [A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 1058, Foll.]: (1990) 2 Bom.C.R. 692.

Account books which are not maintained in regular course of business, held, are not of much evidential value: 1974 W.L.N. (U.C.) 17 (Raj.). Account books not to be rejected for want of counter signatures of tax authority: (1976) 2 U.C.R. 386 (Bom.).

Where during the search of its premises under the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act, account slips carried into the firm's account books were recovered, held, they are admissible evidence and can be looked into for convicting the firm under that Act: A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 28: 1971 Cr.L.J. 1: 1971 M.L.J. (Cr.) 387.

As pointed out in A.I.R. 1978 Mad. 56: (1977) 90 Mad.L.W. 686, the account books are not by themselves sufficient to charge any person with liability; the plaintiff has to show by some independent evidence that the entries represented real and honest transactions and that the moneys were paid or the transactions took place in accordance with those entries; the proper person to prove such entries is the accountant who had written the books: (1987) 100 Mad.L.W. 702.

Entries in the seller's books of accounts are perfectly reliable evidence in proving the existence of the contract of sale: A.I.R. 1985 Ker. 262.

Reliance upon an entry in account books—Original account books must be produced before the Court: 1964 All.L.J. 738: A.I.R. 1965 All. 189.

Where in a suit for damages against an insurance company, the firm's account books were produced and one of its partners deposed that they were written in his presence, held, the non-examination of the writer of the books was of no consequence: (1994-2) 107 Punj.L.R. 293 (D.B.). See also A.I.R. 1979 Cal. 56 (D.B.).

In a suit for recovery of an encroached property, held, the report and map submitted by the survey knowing Commissioner appointed by the Court is evidence: (1983) 56 Cut.L.T.152: A.I.R. 1983 Ori. 259.

Where X was shown as daughter of Y in the school record, more than 30 years old, prepared and maintained when X was minor and there was no circumstance to create any doubt about it, held, X was to be treated as daughter of Y: (1988) 1 Bom.C.R. 421.

The respondent, a bill clerk, was acquitted of the charge of having committed criminal breach of trust in respect of a sum entrusted with him by office. The defence of the accused was that he handed over the money to the Drawing Officer of the bill in question. In evidence he produced a receipt for the amount, which was on a torn piece of paper. The contents portion of the receipt was written by the accused and the initial was in brief without showing the year. Further, the accused did not call any witness in support of his story nor did he choose to get himself examined under S. 342-A, Cr.P.Code, to give evidence on oath in disproof of the charges against him which could have been used as a substantive evidence in support of his case. The receipt was also introduced by the accused two months after the F.I.R. in a representation made by the accused.

Held, the order of acquittal passed by the Magistrate was wrong and hence should be set aside. The question whether the circumstances brought out showed that the defence case was probable was one of intention and not a matter of direct proof but if the accused gave a false account of what he had done with the money received by him, it may be treated a strong circumstance against the accused. The element of criminal offence of misappropriation will be established if the prosecution proves that the accused received the money, that he was under a duty to account and had not done so. It is enough to establish facts which give rise to a suspicion and then to throw the onus on the accused to prove his innocence. In a case like this depending on the conclusions drawn from circumstances, it is well settled that the cumulative effect of the circumstances must be such as to negative the innocence of the accused and to bring the offence home to him beyond any reasonable doubt: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 107: 31 Cut.L.T. 659: A.I.R. 1965 Ori. 126.

Appreciation of evidence — Criminal breach of trust — Vital document seized from custody of accused, not produced — Conviction cannot be sustained: A.I.R. 1987 S.C. 856: 1987 Cr.L.J. 773.

Both prosecution and accused can rely or refer to documents mentioned in S. 174 in support of their contention in exercising right of being heard under S. 251-A(2) and (3): A.I.R. 1968 Mad. 117: 1968 Cr.L.J. 493.

Time of occurrence mentioned in injury certificate issued by Assistant Surgeon—Disparity between that time and time in First Information Report and dying declaration—No evidence to show who gave statement to Surgeon—Injury certificate not admissible to prove time of occurrence—By itself, not sufficient to put prosecution out of Court: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 2588: 1976 Cr.L.J. 1998.

The execution or authorship of a document is a question of fact and can be proved like any other fact by direct as well as circumstantial evidence, although it must be further premised that the circumstantial evidence must be of sufficient strength to carry conviction. S. 67 does not lay down any specific mode of proof, and, therefore, circumstantial evidence as a mode of proof of authorship or execution of documents is not excluded as a legitimate method of proving a document and such evidence may consist of the internal evidence contained in the document itself about the execution of which there is a dispute and the oral evidence of the witnesses to prove other surrounding circumstances.

Held on facts, that the certificate of registration required no further proof. The evidence of Registrar was not necessary. Its genuineness must be presumed under S. 79 of Evidence Act. Held, further that the plaintiff had succeeded in proving the sale of the suit house in his favour by G by the sale deed. Thus, the plaintiff had the right to bring the suit: 1963 Raj.L.W. 453: I.L.R. (1963) 13 Raj. 954: A.I.R. 1963 Raj. 234.

S. 139 of the Railways Act, 1890 undoubtedly authorises the Railway authorities to tender certified copies of their records in evidence; but it nowhere provides that their contents would be presumed by the Court to be correct unless there is evidence to the contrary: A.I.R. 1973 Cal. 74.

In a proceedings under S. 145 of Code of Criminal Procedure, the documents filed are not required to be formally or strictly proved: 1975 Ker.L.T. 623.

Where the defendant's declarations in his income-tax returns were sought to be used as evidence about the existence of the joint Hindu family properties but it was contended that the declarations were privileged documents and having been made for gain, they could not prove or disprove the existence of the joint Hindu family or its property, held, having been made on behalf of the joint Hindu family, each of the plaintiffs was entitled to rely upon them and as the privilege stood withdrawn with effect from 1-4-1964, they were no longer protected; and though not conclusive of the status of the family and its property, they are certainly good pieces of admission and conduct to support the plaintiff's case: A.I.R. 1982 Del. 520 (D.B.).

The endorsement of the Sub-Registrar on applications made to him, held, is admissible without examining him: (1987-2) 92 Punj.L.R. 239.

Service of driver terminated—Employer leading evidence before Labour Court to show that employee was not suitable to perform duties of driver as he mishandled the vehicle—Certificate is relevant—Labour Court rejecting evidence of driver without giving reasons—Award liable to be quashed. See U.P. Industrial Disputes Act (28 of 1947), S. 4: 1982 Lab.I.C. (N.O.C.) 131 (All.).

A receipt produced by the plaintiff's witness, a tenant of the defendant, held, can be exhibited even though it was not relied upon by the plaintiff; for the defendant would have a chance to rebut it when he steps into the witness-box or by any other evidence: (1994-2) 107 Punj.L.R. 83. A rent receipt produced but neither admitted by the landlord nor proved, held, cannot be treated as legal evidence: 1975 W.L.N. (U.C.) 290 (Raj.).

10. Evidence adduced in prior litigation—Use in subsequent proceedings.—(See also S. 33). The original records of a Court proceeding are not required to be independently proved if they are on the Court's record: (1979) 2 Mah.L.R. 132 (Bom.).

An admission made in a prior litigation without its evidence being filed in the subsequent litigation, held, is no evidence in the subsequent case: A.I.R. 1983 Andh. Pra. 219: (1983) 1 A.P.L.J. 29: (1983) 1 An.L.T. 47: (1983) 2 An.W.R. 1.

Where in a suit for declaration that the defendant was a benamidar of plaintiff's predecessor and for possession of the house, the defendant's plea that the evidence by the plaintiff's predecessor and the tenant to an earlier title suit by the defendant against the tenant for arrears of rent to the effect that the house belonged to the defendant amounted to an admission on their part binding on the plaintiff in this case, held, as the said earlier suit had ended in compromise, admission made therein could only be a piece of evidence which had to be considered along with other evidence in the case: 1979 B.L.J.R. 296.

Paradanashin lady—Proof of—Use of statement by husband in another case—Permissibility: A.I.R. 1958 Madh. Pra. 25.

Where in proceedings under the U.P. Consolidation of Holdings Act, 1954, the objector disputing the claimant's claim of being a co-sharer for the first time in his appeal before the Supreme Court relied on the claimant's statement in another litigation whose genuineness was, because of certain infirmities, doubtful, held, the objector could not do so: A.I.R. 1984 S.C. 1413: 1984 U.J. (S.C.) 553: (1984) 3 S.C.C. 568.

Legal practitioners should confine themselves to such documents as were produced by them and exhibited in the case. If the record of another case happens to be in Court for a specific purpose it cannot be treated as evidence in the case for any purpose other than the one for which it was summoned: 131 I.C. 513: A.I.R. 1931 All. 600.

11. Relevancy and admissibility of evidence.—There is a distinction between the relevancy and admissibility of a document. Evidence which is not relevant under provisions of the Act cannot be made relevant because it is let without objection; if a document is inadmissible on account of a defect which could be cured by the person relying on it if an objection had been taken at the proper time no objection as to its admissibility can be allowed at later stage. But the omission to object to the admission of irrelevant evidence cannot possibly make it relevant: A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 114.

When at a trial, admissibility of evidence is objected to, it is the duty of the trial Judge to decide at once whether it is admissible. If he holds it inadmissible the document should not find a place on the record and assessors or jurors should be warned not to rely on it: 50 I.C. 481.

Where the Court passed an interlocutory order that the evidence was admissible, such an order can legally be varied by the Court, though in practice it is not often done. Court, therefore, can hold the evidence as inadmissible which was formerly held admissible: (1937) 39 Punj.L.R. 262: A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 176.

The relevant point of time in the proceedings at which the condition of admissibility must be fulfilled is the time when it has to be admitted by the Court before which the evidence is produced and relied on and not the moment when the case is decided: 1940 Nag.L.J. 459: A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 340.

Use of statement recorded during investigation of crime in civil litigation. See 1964 All.L.J. 950: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 452: A.I.R. 1965 All. 494.

If the author of the report is found to be false, repetition of that report to others would not add to its weight: 1958 Jab.L.J. 674: 1958 M.P.L.J. 833: A.I.R. 1959 Madh. Pra. 84.

Fresh evidence: 1965 B.L.J.R. 102.

Revision on ground of error in regard to admissibility in evidence of document—Competency—Evidence—Admissibility—Errors—Effect: A.I.R. 1963 Guj. 147.

There is no rule of law which requires the evidence of one party to be accepted unless it is rebutted by evidence led by other parties: (1958) 1 L.L.J. 79: A.I.R. 1958 Mys. 26.

Evidence produced by accused—Admissibility against co-accused — There is no provision of law which renders the statements of witnesses produced by one accused inadmissible against the co-accused, but there are obvious reasons for receiving such evidence with great caution: 1961 All.L.J. 967: I.L.R. (1962) 1 All. 179: (1962) 2 Cr.L.J. 520. See also S. 30.

The Court shall have first to consider the evidence of the approver de hors the corroborated pieces of evidence and reject if it comes to the conclusion that his evidence is unreliable; but if it comes to the conclusion that it is reliable then it will have to consider whether that evidence is corroborated by any other evidence: (1962) 1 S.C.J. 231: (1962) 2 S.C.R. 195: A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 1762. See also S. 30.

S.P. instructing Investigating Officer to enquire about likelihood of a certain person setting up the complainant and witnesses to create trouble—Investigating Officer gathering information—His report to the S.P. that such person had collected persons to take forcible possession is admissible in evidence: (1963) 3 Orissa J.D. 26: 27 Cut.L.T. 367.

Admissibility—See A.I.R. 1966 All. 222.

In a trial for murder, the case against the accused should be determined on evidence which is relevant and admissible under the Act: 62 I.C. 545: (1920) 22 Bom.L.R. 1274.

No statement of Counsel concerning relevant facts in the case can be accepted otherwise than in the witness-box: A.I.R. 1935 Nag. 69: 17 Nag.L.J. 189.

The evidence of statements of a person, who is neither an accused nor a witness is inadmissible: 175 I.C. 523: 39 Cr.L.J. 601: A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 399.

A Court is not bound to accept statements by persons who were not called as witnesses merely because the case is a criminal one and certain facts were admitted: A.I.R. 1941 Sind 33: I.L.R. (1941) Kar. 316.

Effect of signature on statement—Evidence of witnesses who has signed the statement given in open Court at the trial does not on that account only become inadmissible: 1968 Cr.L.J. 493: A.I.R. 1968 Mad. 117.

When considering the question of admissibility, the Court should lean always in favour of the accused, and exclude all evidence tendered by the prosecution which is of doubtful or remote relevancy: 37 Cr.L.J. 394: (1935-36) 40 Cal.W.N. 432: A.I.R. 1936 Cal. 73.

Statements made under S. 108 of the Customs Act, 1962, held, are admissible in evidence: (1993) 1 An.L.T. 567 (D.B.).

In a prosecution under S. 135(i)(b) of the Customs Act, 1962, the statements of accused recorded under its S. 108, held, do not constitute corroborative evidence to support the testimony of a co-accused turned prosecution witness: A.I.R. 1992 S.C. 1583.

The records of the German Court authenticated in the manner prescribed by Ss. 14 and 15 of the English Extradition Act are admissible in evidence: I.L.R. 39 Cal. 164: (1910-11) 15 Cal.W.N. 1053: 12 I.C. 273.

Evidence properly admitted for one purpose must be admissible for all purposes in the cause: I.L.R. 37 Bom. 122: 40 I.A. 1: 24 M.L.J. 176 (P.C.) [On appeal from (1910) 12 Bom.L.R. 316: 5 I.C. 457]. See also (1909) 11 Bom.L.R. 926: 4 I.C. 652.

Secret reports of the Tahsildar and Naib-Tahsildar under the orders of the Sub-Divisional Officer are not admissible as substantive evidence in a criminal trial: 28 Cr.L.J. 91: A.I.R. 1937 All. 127.

Record requisitioned—When becomes evidence in the case.—A record which has been requisitioned does not become part of the evidence in a pending case merely from the fact that it has been requisitioned. If any document or statement contained in the record are relied upon by a party then they must be duly proved and brought on the record as evidence in the pending case: 1941 R.D. 868: 1941 All.W.R. (Rev.) 914.

Where a witness produces a document which does not tally with its description in the summons but is the document required in the case, held, he should be allowed to prove it so that it can be admitted in evidence: 22 Pat.L.T. 656: A.I.R. 1941 Pat. 202.

Reception of inadmissible evidence—Effect of.—Misreception of a piece of evidence which is inadmissible but which has very little weight and admission of which causes no substantial injustice, does not vitiate the trial: I.L.R. 9 Pat. 474: A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 247. See S. 167.

Tape recorded statement.—Mechanical process of obtaining statements recorded on tape-recorder is fraught with possibilities of such tampering as to render a statement or conversation something quite contrary to what might have been stated by the speaker originally or in the first instance. After a statement or a conversation has been recorded, the tape can be replayed and in most tape-recorders by reverse playing the recording is cleaned or wipped off. This means that words or sentences can be tampered with. After tampering, the tampered tape can be replayed on another tape-recorder and the second tape will produce recorded statement or conversation which will appear to be natural in continuity but which has in fact been so tampered with that it has lost its value as a correct representation of statement or conversation. If reliance is placed upon no more than record of a statement or conversation on the tape, it cannot be said to be basically reliable evidence. The only way to ensure the veracity of such statement or conversation is to examine the person whose statement or conversation has been tape-recorded, to put the recording to him, and then to let him say what he has to say about the same. Without this, to proceed or rely upon such piece of evidence is to tread on extremely unreliable ground. The recordings without examination of the person whose statements or conversations have been recorded, cannot be taken as reliable piece of evidence which can be depended upon: I.L.R. (1962) 2 Punj. 642: A.I.R. 1963 Punj. 298.

The conditions for admissibility of a tape recorded statement are as follows: (1) the speaker's voice must be duly identified by the person who tape recorded or by others who recognise his voice; if the voice is denied by the purported speaker, very strict proof is required to determine whether or not it was really his voice; (2) the accuracy of the tape recorded statement has to be proved by the maker of the record by satisfactory evidence, direct or circumstantial; (3) every possibility of tampering with or erasure must be ruled out; (4) the statement must be relevant according to the rules of evidence; (5) the recorded cassette must be carefully sealed and kept in safe or official custody; (6) the speaker's voice should be clearly audible, and not lost or distorted by other sounds or disturbances: A.I.R. 1986 S.C. 3: 1985 (Supp.) S.C.C. 611; A.I.R. 1974 Raj. 79: 1973 Raj.L.W. 409. See also A.I.R. 1965 Bom. 4: I.L.R. (1964) Bom. 240.

Tape-recordings — Not inadmissible merely on ground of possibility of their being tampered with.

Per Majority.—If in any particular case there is a well-grounded suspicion, not even say proof, that a tape-recording has been tampered with that would be a good ground for the Court to discount wholly its evidentiary value.

The tape-recordings were referred to by the petitioner in his writ petition as part of the evidence on which he proposed to rely in support of his assertion as regards the substance of what passed between him and the Chief Minister of Punjab and the members of the latter's family the several matters which were the subject of allegations in the petition. The written statement of the respondent—State was filed only after they had their own copies of the tape-records, so that they were in a position to verify (a) whether the voice it recorded was that of the person whose voice it professed to be; (b) whether there had been any interpolations or omissions; and (c) whether there had been any other tampering with the records. In the counter-affidavit filed by the State there was no denial of the genuineness of the tape-records, no assertion that the voices of the persons which were recorded in the tape-records were not those which they purported to be or that any portion of the conversation which would have given a different colour to it had been cut off.

Held, that the evidence afforded by the tape-recorded talk had to be considered in appreciating the genuineness of the talks recorded and in deciding whether the allegations made by the petitioner were substantiated or not.

Per Raghubar Dayal and Mudholkar, JJ.—Tape-recordings can be legal evidence by way of corroborating the statements of a person who deposes that the other speaker and he carried on that conversation or even of the statement of a person who may depose that he overheard the conversation between the two persons and what they actually stated had been tape-recorded. Weight to be given to such evidence will depend on the other factors which may be established in a particular case. It cannot be held that the record of the conversation on a tape-record is not admissible in evidence for any purpose: (1965) 1 S.C.A. 259: A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 72.

Where (1) the voices on the tape at a number of places were not very clear and were intermingled with tremendous noises; (2) a good part of the statement on the tape had been denied and no other witness had identified the voice; (3) there were erasures here and there in the tape; (4) the possibility of tampering with the tape, a fatal defect, could not be ruled out; (5) the transcript was prepared without excluding the possibility of the tape being tampered; (6) the purported speakers had denied the identity of their voices; and (7) the statements had been recorded in a most haphazard and unsystematic manner and without following any logical or scientific method, held, the tape-recorded statements were wholly inadmissible; at any rate, they had no probative value; it is extremely unsafe to rely on such tape-recorded statements: A.I.R. 1986 S.C. 3: 1985 (Supp.) S.C.C. 611.

Where the time, place and accuracy of a tape recorded telephonic conversation, was not proved by a competent witness, held, the trial Court had rightly concluded that the tape-recording was not proved according to law: A.I.R. 1983 Cal. 343: (1981-82) 86 Cal.W.N. 759: (1982) 2 Cal.L.J. 74: (1982) 2 Ren. C.R. 164 (D.B.).

Where the transcript of conversations recorded on a tape or the tape itself is not produced in the trial Court or before the lower appellate Court, held, such conversations cannot be allowed to be adduced as additional evidence in the second appellate Court: A.I.R. 1974 Raj. 79: 1973 Raj.L.W. 409.

A tape-recorded conversion produced in a writ petition pertaining to an election matter, recorded after filing of the petition, held, cannot be read in evidence in the absence of any proof that the voices recorded were of the professed persons, particularly when the persons whose voices were recorded were not parties to the petition: (1989) 2 Bom.C.R. 619 (D.B.).

12. Objection as to relevancy/admissibility of evidence.—Statements which are not admissible in evidence cannot be rendered admissible by consent of parties: A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 630. See also A.I.R. 1924 Pat. 284: 36 I.C. 96.

Unless a party can be found to have been estopped from objecting to the admissibility of a particular piece of evidence, it cannot be said that evidence otherwise inadmissible may be perfectly good evidence if admitted by the consent of parties: A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 528: (1942) 1 M.L.J. 485.

Omission to object to the reception of evidence does not make irrelevant evidence relevant and the objection can be taken on second appeal: I.L.R. 44 Bom. 192: (1920) 22 Bom.L.R. 57. See also 47 M.L.J. 640; A.I.R. 1924 Nag. 358: 79 I.C. 1029; A.I.R. 1924 All. 918: 40 I.C. 553; 135 I.C. 572: A.I.R. 1931 Mad. 601.

No doubt the proper time to take an objection as to the admissibility of a document is when the document is tendered in evidence, but the omission to object to a document which is not in itself admissible will not constitute such document evidence. It is the duty of the Court to exclude all irrelevant evidence, even if no objection is taken, to its admissibility by the parties. The question of relevancy of a document is a question of law and can be raised at any stage: (1944-45) 49 Cal.W.N. 791: A.I.R. 1945 Cal. 492: I.L.R. (1946) 1 Cal. 149; 1952 Nag.L.J. 49: I.L.R. (1950) Nag. 834. The mode of proof, however, is a different matter: A.I.R. 1959 Pat. 515.

Where a piece of evidence not proved in the proper manner has been admitted without objections, the opposite party cannot challenge it at a later stage. But this principle, does not apply where evidence has been received without objection in direct contravention of an imperative provision of law: (1922-23) 27 Cal.W.N. 134: A.I.R. 1922 Cal. 160. See also A.I.R. 1939 All. 61: 1939 All.L.J. 128.

A party who did not object to the admissibility of secondary evidence of a registered will even in his appeal memo cannot be allowed to urge it: 31 I.C. 600.

There can be no conditional admissibility of a document. There cannot be an order that while a document is inadmissible as lease, it is admissible as a receipt: 1941 All.W.R. (Rev.) 979: 1941 R.D. 932.

An objection as to the mode of proof not taken in the Courts below cannot be taken for the first time in second appeal: 64 I.C. 266: 36 Cal.L.J. 186.

The objection that the copy of a mortgage deed is not legal secondary evidence within the meaning of S. 63 is merely to the mode of proof of a document and should be raised at the very time the document is sought to be tendered in evidence and proved. [A.I.R. 1943 P.C. 83; (1943) 2 M.L.J. 51, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1958 Raj. 110.

An erroneous omission to object to evidence being irrelevant and consequently inadmissible under any circumstances, does not make it admissible. But the Court will not entertain for first time in appeal an objection that a document not admissible has been improperly admitted in evidence: I.L.R. 45 Cal. 159: (1916-17) 21 Cal.W.N. 996; I.L.R. 3 Lah. 59: A.I.R. 1922 Lah. 281; I.L.R. (1937) Nag. 68: A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 13.

Where no objection was taken to the admissibility of a document either before the arbitrator or before the High Court in the proceedings taken to set aside the award, held, no objection to the admissibility could be allowed to be raised in the appeal before the Supreme Court: A.I.R. 1959 S.C. 488: 1959 S.C.J. 443.

If a party to a suit consents to the recitals in prior judgement being taken as proof of a will, he cannot object in appeal: 43 M.L.J. 448.

A Court refusing to admit a piece of evidence in the first instance has no jurisdiction to take the same into consideration at a subsequent stage, unless some good explanation or reason is shown by the party producing the same. Once a document is admitted at a late stage by a dodge or trick, there is an end of the matter: 182 I.C. 407: A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 530.

Documentary evidence relevant to the case and admitted without objection in the first Court cannot be objected to in appeal on the ground that it is not admissible for the purposes for which it has been used: 40 I.C. 553; (1930) 32 Punj.L.R. 470: 134 I.C. 700. See also 167 I.C. 190: I.L.R. (1937) Nag. 68: A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 13; (1943) 45 Punj.L.R. 325: A.I.R. 1944 Lah. 1.

C.P. Code (1908), S. 107, O. 13, R. 3 and O. 18, R. 11—No opportunity in lower Courts for taking objection to admissibility of evidence—Objection can be raised in appeal: (1966-67) 30 F.J.R. 134: A.I.R. 1966 Cal. 504.

Evidence which is relevant under any circumstance whatsoever must be distinguished from evidence which is admissible if certain conditions were fulfilled. In the latter case objection should be taken at the earliest possible stage and if such objection is not taken the appellate Court will not entertain it: 9 I.C. 211: 13 Cal.L.J. 18.

An objection relating to the mode of proof of a document must be raised when the document is sought to be put in evidence and not at a later stage: I.L.R. 63 Cal. 1053: A.I.R. 1936 Cal. 316.

13. Consent/waiver/irregularity—Reception of evidence.—Parties, if so minded, may ordinarily agree that evidence shall be taken in a particular way. That is not a matter which can be said to affect the jurisdiction of the Court. It is merely that parties allow certain materials to be used as evidence which apart from their consent cannot be so used. [I.L.R. 43 Mad. 609; I.L.R. 38 Mad. 160, Foll.]: 43 M.L.J. 448: A.I.R. 1922 Mad. 394.

The omission by a party to prevent irrelevant evidence from being admitted will not, in the absence of a deliberate consent to waive objections, cure the defect: 36 I.C. 906.

When the lower Court has given a finding that the document is legally proved, the appellate Court should sparingly interfere with the findings when no objection was taken at the hearing: 32 I.C. 760; I.L.R. 8 Luck. 315: A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 128. See also 62 Mad.L.W. 256: (1949) 1 M.L.J. 434.

Where a document is admitted without proof but without objection in the trial Court, no objection to its admissibility on the ground of want of formal proof can be taken in appeal: 44 I.C. 422: 3 Pat.L.J. 306.

If a document is once admitted in the lower Court without objection, no party can take objection to its being referred to by the Court: 36 I.C. 96: 10 Sind L.R. 4. See also Note 9, supra.

Where the only reason given for admitting a document in appeal is that it is a public document but it relates to facts which the defendant is entitled to meet, the admission is illegal: 150 I.C. 306: A.I.R. 1934 Nag. 124.

Certificates or Report of Expert—If party does not object to its admission, party must be said to have waived proof of it and not its relevance: A.I.R. 1967 Andh. Pra. 338.

14. Illegally obtained evidence.—The fact that a document was procured by improper or even illegal means is not a bar to its admissibility if it is relevant and its genuineness is proved; but while examining its genuineness, the Court has to consider the circumstances under which it came to be produced in the Court: A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 1295: (1971) 2 S.C.R. 118.

Illegally obtained evidence is admissible; but the Court has to satisfy that (1) such evidence is genuine and untampered and unmutilated; (2) the Police Officer in obtaining the evidence had observed scrupulous conduct and behaviour: A.I.R. 1973 S.C. 157: (1972) 2 S.C.W.R. 776: (1973) 1 S.C.C. 471.

It is well settled that evidence illegally procured by threat, inducement and promises is not per se inadmissible; admissibility or otherwise of evidence is regulated by the Act; but there is a difference between admissibility which depends upon relevancy and acceptability which depends upon credibility: (1988) 3 Bom.C.R. 462.

Even in a criminal trial, if relevant evidence procured otherwise than by proper means is tendered, held, it is open to the Court to consider such evidence; it cannot be said that the Court could not look into it: (1991) 4 Bom.C.R. 156.

The only test to be applied in considering whether evidence is admissible is whether it is relevant to the matters in issue. The Court is not concerned with where and how evidence was gathered. Evidence adduced cannot be rejected on the ground merely that it is the outcome of an unauthorised investigation: (1969) 2 An.W.R. 449.

If evidence is relevant, the Court is not concerned with the method by which it was obtained: (1988) 1 Bom.C.R. 480 (S.C.).

The detaining authority under the Conservation of Foreign Exchange and Prevention of Smuggling Activities Act, 1974, is entitled to rely upon the statements recorded by an officer of the Enforcement Directorate under S. 40(1) of the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act, 1973, even if that officer was not competent to record such statements under S. 40(1) of the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act, 1973: (1988) 1 Bom.C.R. 480 (S.C.). Statement recorded in breach of S. 275 of Criminal Procedure Code, 1973 does not constitute evidence: 1977 J.&K.L.R. 346.

Assessment based on documents or accounts seized illegally—Such documents can legally be used as evidence: (1965) 16 S.T.C. 687: (1965) 2 M.L.J. 406: (1965) 78 Mad.L.W. 702: 1966 Mad.W.N. 46.

Non-recording of reasons makes search illegal—But evidence of such search is not inadmissible: 31 Cut.L.T. 172: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 112: A.I.R. 1965 Ori. 136.

15. Written statement.—Averments in a written statement do not by themselves take the place of proof unless the same is adduced by the defendant: A.I.R. 1982 All. 385 (D.B.).

One of the defendants filing written statement in support of case of plaintiff—Defendant not examined in Court—Held, that such statement, in the absence of the statement of the defendant on oath, is of no use to the plaintiff: A.I.R. 1962 Pat. 168.

Where the defendant in the original written statement had averred that the property was entrusted to him by his father to effect improvement and later on the father, considering his affection towards his daughter in law and in consideration of the debt he owed to her, had orally gifted the properties to her for her livelihood which was accepted by her but neither the date nor the names of the witnesses to the gift were given which particulars were given only in the additional written statement thereafter without any explanation therefor, held, the particulars were undoubtedly an afterthought; oral gift not believed: A.I.R. 1989 Ker. 148.

It would no doubt add more credibility and acceptance of evidence if apart from bald allegation of cruelty and misbehaviour, the written statement also gives specific instances of misbehaviour and cruelty; but a mere absence of such details does not mean that evidence relating to cruelty and misbehaviour is to be shut out. As to what value such evidence should have is a different matter, and is certainly for the Court to examine: 1980 Hindu L.R. 70 (Del.).

Where in a suit for declaration of title and injunction, the defendants' oral testimony was at variance with their written statement and there was also no independent corroboration, held, their evidence was unacceptable and could not be relied on: A.I.R. 1976 Cal. 238.

16. Commissioner's report.—(See also O. 26, R. 10, C.P.Code). The report of survey made by the Local Commissioner deputed by the Court becomes a part of the Court's record as well as evidence as soon as it is submitted by the Commissioner: A.I.R. 1983 Ori. 259: (1983) 56 Cut.L.T. 152.

The Commissioner's report, even though not challenged by any of the parties, is not binding on the Court. When parties file no objection to the Commissioner's report, the Court rightly accepts the report; but such acceptance by itself does not preclude the parties from challenging the report by cross-examining the Commissioner at the trial or by examining witnesses and proving documents to nullify the report's effect or to place materials from the report itself to prove that it cannot be relied upon: A.I.R. 1983 Ori. 259: (1983) 56 Cut.L.T. 152.

It is possible that scandalous, and indecent matter might be expunged by the trial Court from the evidence recorded on commission. If it proves to be irrelevant then the matter should be noted in the judgment in the case. But once evidence has been recorded on commission it must remain as such on the record. If it is irrelevant or inadmissible, it will not aid in the determination of the case and should be neglected: 1940 A.M.L.J. 4.

17. Newspaper report.—News items published in newspapers have not yet been accepted as proof of their contents: (1990) 2 Bom.C.R. 702.

A mere publication of a report in a local newspaper is not sufficient to corroborate the testimony of the witnesses deposing that the impugned statement was made at the meeting: (1974) 3 S.C.C. 719: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 405.

Evidence—News item by itself does not constitute evidence: I.L.R. (1964) 16 Assam 395: A.I.R. 1967 Assam 74.

Newspaper report—Value of—It cannot be treated as substantive evidence—It is no evidence of facts stated therein unless the correspondent who made the report is examined: I.L.R. (1960) Mys. 1307: A.I.R. 1961 Mys. 106.

Where in an election petition, the returned candidate also admitted that the newspaper reporter's version of his speech did more or less tally with the view expressed by him in the meeting, held, the report of the speech, though not a full text, could be relied on: A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 354: 1980 U.J. (S.C.) 1: (1980) 1 S.C.C. 398: (1980) 1 S.C.R. 1148.

18. Circumstantial evidence.—Rule that facts are provable by circumstances as well as by direct testimony has a considerable effect in preventing guilty or dishonest parties from tampering or making away with witnesses, and other instruments of evidence; such parties would be more prone to so act if they knew that law would receive only such evidence which is contained in a few easily ascertainable depositories: A.I.R. 1955 All. 638: 1955 Cr.L.J. 1451.

There is no rule of evidence that if direct evidence on a fact is rejected, then the circumstantial evidence bearing upon that fact must be ignored; and indeed there could not be if one remembers that the circumstantial evidence is merely a direct evidence indirectly applied, and direct evidence when closely analysed is found to possess inferential quality. A fact has to be determined on the basis of such direct and circumstantial evidence as may be on record. When the direct evidence led by a party to prove a fact is found to be unreliable, the circumstantial evidence bearing upon that fact may be looked into: 1959 M.P.C. 143: A.I.R. 1959 Madh. Pra. 151 (F.B.).

Circumstantial evidence in order to justify a conviction must be exhaustive and must exclude the possibility of guilt of any other person or must point conclusively to the complicity of the accused: 38 I.C. 759: 32 Punj. Re. (Cr.) 1916.

In the case of direct evidence, where the prosecution depends on the testimony of a single witness, he should be above board. In the case of circumstantial evidence, there must be witnesses reliable to prove particular circumstances: 1968 Jab.L.J. 737: 1968 M.P.L.J. 745.

'Circumstantial evidence' ordinarily means a fact from which some other fact is inferred while 'direct evidence' means testimony of a person about what he had himself perceived by his own senses. Circumstantial evidence is the testimony of a witness to other relevant facts from which the fact in issue may be inferred, admissibility of the two forms of evidence stand on the same footing; the testimony whether about the 'factum probandum' or the 'facta probantia' is original and direct: 1981 Cr.L.J. 1661 (Gau.) (D.B.); 10 I.C. 929: 12 Cr.L.J. 329.

Circumstantial evidence is the testimony of a witness to other relevant facts but other than those in issue, from which the fact in issue may be inferred; the facts constituting the circumstantial evidence themselves must be clearly knitted with each other and form a strong body which must carry conviction to the Court's mind; the circumstantial evidence is that which proves or tends to prove the 'factum probandum' indirectly, by means of certain inferences or deductions to be drawn from its existence and their connection with 'facta probantia': 1982 Cr.L.J. 572 (Gau.).

Circumstantial evidence must like any other evidence be tested and weighed and must prevail or not by its own inherent proving force: 1 Mad.L.W. 1007: 16 Cr.L.J. 38. To justify an inference of guilt from circumstantial evidence the inculpatory facts must be incompatible with the innocence of the accused and must be incapable of explanation upon any reasonable hypothesis other than that of his guilt: 59 I.C. 858: 22 Cr.L.J. 154. See also (1963) 65 Punj.L.R. 1917: 42 I.C. 129; 8 Cal.W.N. 278: 39 I.C. 322; I.L.R. (1954) Patiala 316: A.I.R. 1955 Pepsu 33; I.L.R. (1953) Mys. 152: A.I.R. 1953 Mys. 22; 1941 All.L.J. 416, followed in A.I.R. 1949 All. 222; A.I.R. 1952 All. 776: 1952 Cr.L.J. 1585; 1953 All.L.J. 166: A.I.R. 1953 All. 211; 1953 Raj.L.W. 338: 1956 Cr.L.J. 1240; A.I.R. 1956 Sau. 83; I.L.R. 36 Pat. 141; 1957 S.C.J. 359: 1957 M.L.J. (Cr.) 254: A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 425; (1957) 2 An.W.R. 156: 1957 M.L.J. (Cr.) 421: A.I.R. 1957 Andh. Pra. 758; A.I.R. 1966 Raj. 83; A.I.R. 1966 All. 142; 1967 Cr.L.J. 125: A.I.R. 1967 Tripura 1; 1969 Pat.L.J.R. 532; 1972 Cr.L.J. 177 (Pat.) (D.B.).

Circumstantial evidence in order to furnish a basis for conviction in a criminal case, requires a high degree of probability, that is, so sufficiently high that a prudent man, considering all the facts and realizing that the life and liberty of the accused depends upon the decision, feels justified in holding that the accused committed the crime. It must be consistent, and, consistent only, with the guilt of the accused. If any rational explanation is possible, then there is an element of doubt of which the accused must be given the benefit: 1957 M.P.C. 668: 1957 M.P.L.J. 885; 1974 Chand.L.R. (Cr.) 26 (Punj.).

The Court has to consider whether the circumstantial evidence is proximate to the principal fact, viz., the factum of the guilt of the accused persons. The circumstances from which the conclusion of guilt is to be drawn should in the first instance be fully established. All the facts so established should be consistent only with the hypothesis of the guilt of the accused. Incriminating facts must necessarily be incompatible with the innocence of the accused. Furthermore, there must be a chain of evidence so far complete as not to leave any ground for a conclusion therefrom consistent with the innocence of the accused: 1966 Cr.L.J. 323 (2) (Cal.); 1970 Cr.L.J. 403 (Cal.); 1955 An.W.R. 426; 1958 An. L.T. 633; 1969 Cr.L.J. 471: A.I.R. 1969 Guj. 100; A.I.R. 1955 Him. Pra. 15: 1955 Cr.L.J. 679; 1956 An.W.R. 788: 1956 An.L.T. 833; A.I.R. 1957 All. 459: 1957 Cr.L.J. 803; (1957) 2 An.W.R. 63: 1957 M.L.J. (Cr.) 368; A.I.R. 1958 Andh. Pra. 37: I.L.R. (1956) Andh. Pra. 173; A.I.R. 1957 Andh. Pra. 611: 1957 M.L.J. (Cr.) 496: (1957) 2 An.W.R. 222; 1959 Ker.L.T. 167: I.L.R. (1959) Ker. 319: 1959 Ker.L.T. 920: A.I.R. 1960 Ker. 115; I.L.R. (1969) 2 Punj. 173: 1969 Cr.L.J. 932: A.I.R. 1969 Punj. 225; 1995 Cr.L.J. 248 (P.&H.) (D.B.); 1995 Cr.L.J. 792 (Bom.) (D.B.); A.I.R. 1995 S.C. 1387: 1995 Cr.L.J. 2692; (1995) 1 S.C.J. 525.

The principle that the inculpatory fact must be inconsistent with the innocence of the accused and incapable of explanation on any other hypothesis than that of guilt does not mean that any extravagant hypothesis would be sufficient to sustain the principle, but that the hypothesis suggested must be reasonable: 1960 Cr.L.J. 137: A.I.R. 1960 S.C. 29; (1969) 17 Law Rep. 486 (Mys.). Per Agarwala, J.—The rule as to circumstantial evidence is that it must be consistent, and consistent only with the guilt of the accused, and if the evidence is consistent with any other rational explanation, then there is an element of doubt of which the accused must be given the benefit. Any hypothesis or explanation tending to show his innocence must be rational because an irrational or unnatural or a highly improbable explanation would not suffice. The test is of probabilities upon which a prudent man may base his opinion: A.I.R. 1955 All. 443: 1955 All.L.J. 468: I.L.R. (1956) All. 538.

A reasonable hypothesis clearly includes an explanation suggested by the counsel or one which occurs to Court. It will not be wrong or opposed to any rule of law to find the accused guilty of the offence charged against him merely on the strength of the circumstantial evidence provided that such evidence is so conclusive as to lead only to one conclusion, viz., that it establishes beyond doubt the guilt of the accused when the circumstantial evidence is so thorough and convincing, it can be accepted and acted upon as good as direct evidence: 1952 Ker.L.T. 728: A.I.R. 1952 Trav.-Co. 305.

Whenever circumstantial evidence is relied on to prove a fact, the circumstances must be proved and not by themselves presumed. No single item of evidence can be singled out and given prominence nor accused's theory of the case be withdrawn from consideration: I.L.R. (1952) Cut. 364: A.I.R. 1952 Ori. 267. The credibility of circumstantial evidence depends to a large extent upon the impression created in the mind of a Court by the methods adopted by the investigating agency, where these methods are fair and much criticism cannot be levelled against them, the investigation inspires confidence, but where there is a total disregard and a flagrant breach of the rule of the law, very little value can be attached to such evidence. Such an investigation is not only capable but likely to fabricate links and build up its chain of evidence: 1958 Cr.L.J. 462: A.I.R. 1958 All. 293. Per Raman Nayar, J. in considering a case of circumstantial evidence based on the conduct of the accused, it is very important to remember that different people react differently to the same circumstances and that often an innocent person does behave in a strange manner. Particularly so, when he is charged with the crime or knows that he is suspected of it. In such circumstances he often falsely denies circumstances which he regards as suspicious, and false alibis by innocent persons are within the experience of every criminal Judge: 1959 Ker.L.T. 167: I.L.R. (1959) Ker. 319.

In a case depending on the conclusion drawn from circumstances, it is well settled that the cumulative effect of the circumstances must be such as to negative the innocence of the accused and to bring the offences home to him beyond any reasonable doubt. Suspicion, however strong, cannot take the place of proof: (1965) 1 Cr.L.J. 565: A.I.R. 1965 Mys. 128; 1971 Raj.L.W. 311 (D.B.); I.L.R. (1958) Punj. 775: A.I.R. 1958 Punj. 356. See also 1957 M.L.J. (Cr.) 672: 1957 S.C.J. 699: A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 637; A.I.R. 1960 Mad. 370: 1960 Cr.L.J. 1102; A.I.R. 1956 Andhra 65: 1955 An.W.R. 933.

The mind is apt to take a pleasure in adapting circumstances to one another, and even in straining them a little if need be, to force them to form parts of one connected whole; and the more ingenious the mind of the individual, the more likely is it, considering such matters, to over-reach and mislead itself, to supply some little link that is wanting, to take for granted some fact consistent with its previous theories and necessary to render them complete. What has to be seen is not the effect of each isolated item of circumstantial evidence separately but their cumulative effect: 1970 Cr.L.J. 603 (All.).

Circumstantial evidence in its very context means a combination of facts creating a network from which there is no escape for the accused, because the facts taken as a whole do not admit of any inference but the guilt of the accused. In other words, the circumstances as a whole must be thoroughly inconsistent with the hypothesis of the innocence of the accused: 29 Cut.L.T. 557.

In a case of circumstantial evidence the chain must be so complete to rule out any reasonable likelihood of innocence, if there be a reasonable hypothesis consistent with the innocence of the accused then the accused is entitled to an acquittal even if his own explanation be something else; and it is only when there is apparently no hypothesis reasonably consistent with his innocence that the question of the acceptability or otherwise of the particular explanation he might give arises. The accepted principle is that the circumstances must be consistent only with the guilt of the accused and must be inconsistent with any reasonable hypothesis consistent with innocence: 1960 Ker.L.T. 1276: I.L.R. (1961) 1 Ker. 107: A.I.R. 1961 Ker. 250. See also 1988 Cr.L.J. 1275 (Cal.).

In assessing evidence, imaginary possibilities have no role to play; ordinary human probabilities have. It is necessary to distinguish between primary or basic facts on one hand and inferences of facts to be drawn from them, on the other. For the proof of basic or primary facts, the Court has to judge evidence in the ordinary way; there is no scope for applying the doctrine of benefit of doubt; the Court has to decide whether the evidence proves a particular fact or not. Whether that fact leads to the inference of the accused's guilt or not is another aspect and the doctrine of benefit would apply; an inference of guilt can be drawn only if the proved facts are inconsistent with the innocence of the accused and are consistent only with his guilt: A.I.R. 1990 S.C. 2140: (1991) 1 S.C.C. 286. See also A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 34; A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 1063: 1977 Cr.L.J. 639.

There is a long distance between what may be true and must be true; the prosecution has to travel all the way to fully establish the entire chain of events which should be consistent only with the hypothesis of the accused's guilt; the circumstances should be of conclusive nature and tendency and should exclude all other hypothesis but the one to be proved by the prosecution; the chain of evidence must be so consistent and complete as not to leave any reasonable ground for a conclusion consistent with the innocence of the accused; it must be such as to show that within all probability the act must have been done by the accused and the accused alone: A.I.R. 1990 S.C. 2140: (1991) 1 S.C.C. 286. See also A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 34; A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 1063: 1977 Cr.L.J. 639; 1976 Cr.L.J. 1471 (Punj.) (D.B.); (1965) 1 Cr.L.J. 194: A.I.R. 1965 Pat. 76; I.L.R. (1960) Cut. 659; 1979 All.Cr.R. 166; (1995-2) 43 B.L.J.R. 463 (D.B.).

While appreciating circumstantial evidence, the Court must adopt a very cautious approach; it should record conviction only if all the links in the chain are complete and point to the accused's guilt; and negative every hypothesis of his innocence. But this is not to say that the prosecution must meet any and every hypothesis put forward by the accused, however far-fetched and fanciful; nor does it mean that prosecution evidence must be rejected on the slightest doubt creeping in; the law permits rejection only if the doubt is reasonable, not otherwise: A.I.R. 1992 S.C. 840. See also A.I.R. 1994 S.C. 468: 1994 Cr.L.J. 140.

In case of circumstantial evidence, all circumstances leading to the conclusion of guilt should be fully and cogently established; all the facts so established should be consistent only with the hypothesis of the accused's guilt; they should be of a conclusive nature and definite tendency, unerringly pointing towards the accused's guilt and should exclude every other hypothesis. Satisfactorily established, the circumstances must bring home the offences to the accused beyond all reasonable doubt. Each circumstance by itself may not be conclusive but cumulatively they must form an unbroken chain of events leading to the proof of guilt; if such or some circumstances can be explained by a reasonable hypothesis, the accused must have the benefit of that hypothesis and of doubt: A.I.R. 1990 S.C. 2140: (1991) 1 S.C.C. 286. See also A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 34; A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 1063: 1977 Cr.L.J. 639.

It is well settled that the circumstantial evidence to sustain conviction must satisfy three conditions: (i) the circumstances indicating guilt must be cogently and firmly established; (ii) such circumstances must be of a definite tendency unerringly pointing towards the accused's guilt; and (iii) taken cumulatively, the circumstances should form a chain so complete that there is no escape from the conclusion that within all human probability the crime was committed by the accused and none else; in cases depending largely upon circumstantial evidence there is always a danger that conjecture or suspicion may take the place of proof; the Court has to be watchful and ensure that it does not happen, and the completed chain of circumstances must rule out a reasonable likelihood of the accused's innocence: A.I.R. 1991 S.C. 1388. See also 1988 Cr.L.J. 1783: A.I.R. 1988 S.C. 1274.

Before the absence or falsity of the accused's explanation for the circumstances is used as additional link against him, the Court should first satisfy itself that (1) various links in the chain of prosecution evidence have been satisfactorily proved; (2) the circumstances point to his guilt with reasonable definiteness; and (3) the circumstances are in proximity to the time and situation. It is only on all these conditions being fulfilled that a Court can use the falsity of his explanation or defence as an additional link to lend assurance to the Court. [A.I.R. 1984 S.C. 1622, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1991 S.C. 1842.

Circumstantial evidence has peculiar excellencies and defects; some of the golden principles governing admissibility and use of circumstantial evidence are: (1) the facts alleged as the basis of any legal inference must be clearly proved and connected with the 'factum probandum'; (2) the burden of proof is always on the party who asserts the existence of any fact which infers legal accountability; (3) in all cases, whether direct or circumstantial, the best evidence must be adduced which the nature of the case admits; (4) to justify the inference of guilt, the inculpatory facts must be incompatible with the accused's innocence and incapable of explanation upon any reasonable hypothesis other than that of his guilt; and (5) in case of a reasonable doubt about the accused's guilt, he is, as of right, to be acquitted: 1982 Cr.L.J. 572 (Gau.); 1981 Cr.L.J. 1661 (Gau.).

The conditions to be fulfilled in a case based on circumstantial evidence are: (1) the circumstances proving guilt should be fully established; (2) the facts so established should be consistent only with the hypothesis of the accused's guilt and should not be explainable on any other hypothesis except that of the accused's guilt; (3) the circumstances should be of a conclusive nature and tendency; (4) they should exclude every possible hypothesis except the one to be proved; and (5) there must be a chain of evidence so complete as not to leave any reasonable ground for the conclusion consistent with the innocence of the accused and must show that in all human probability the act must have been done by the accused; a case is proved only when there is certain and explicit evidence; no person can be convicted on pure moral conviction: A.I.R. 1984 S.C. 1622: (1984) 4 S.C.C. 116: 1984 Cr.L.J. 1738. See also A.I.R. 1994 S.C. 468; (1994) 1 S.C.J. 256; (1993) 1 D.M.C. 215 (Cal.) S. 364, Penal Code: 1969 Cr.L.J. 1549: A.I.R. 1969 Tripura 57.

The doubt must be real and reasonable which the Court after full and fair consideration of the evidence, really entertains; if the evidence leaves the Court's mind in ill equilibrium, the decision must go against the party on which the burden of proof lay; if the Court's mind is evenly balanced about the accused being guilty or not, it should acquit him; and if the prosecution evidence is discredited or manifestly unreliable, the prosecution must fail: 1982 Cr.L.J. 2123 (Del.).

"A reasonable doubt ... is that quality or kind of doubt which when you are dealing with matters of importance in your own affairs you allow to influence you one way or the other". The Court cannot be satisfied beyond reasonable doubt if there be still open some reasonable hypothesis compatible with the accused's innocence. It must be remembered that, in the heat and hurry of a trial, witnesses can make mistakes; their capacities and stimuli for accurately observing and remembering vary from witness to witness; the ability and desire to narrate truly may be slight or great; a prosecution case perfect in every way can be so only by tailored evidence; there must be recognition at the outset that nicely accurate results cannot be expected in human affairs; rather a rough approximation to truth alone is attainable; the Courts of fact should remember this: 1982 Cr.L.J. 2123 (Del.).

Witnesses may lie but the circumstances do not. Thus, broad probabilities emerging from circumstantial evidence should be given proper weight: (1973) 1 Cut.W.R. 392.

Every evidentiary circumstance is a probative link, strong or weak, and must be made out with certainty. Link after link forged firmly by credible testimony may form a strong chain of sure guilt binding the accused. Each link taken separately may just suggest but when hooked on to the next and on again may manacle the accused inescapably. Only then can a concatenation of incriminating facts suffice to convict a man. Short of that is insufficient: A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 241: (1974) 4 S.C.C. 267.

Cumulative effect of circumstances may irresistibly prove guilt; circumstantial evidence of conclusive character unerringly pointing to guilt at times may be more reliable than direct evidence; but the absence of motive would be a strong circumstance favouring the accused: 1973 Cr.L.J. 723.

In case of circumstantial evidence, the Court has not to consider whether the cumulative effect of the circumstances establishes the accused's guilt beyond a 'shadow of doubt'. The 'shadow of doubt', even in cases depending on direct evidence is shadow of 'reasonable' doubt; in its practical application, the test which requires the exclusion of other alternative hypothesis is far more rigorous than the test of proof beyond reasonable doubt: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 765: (1981) 2 S.C.C. 35: (1981) 2 S.C.R. 384.

In every case depending on circumstantial evidence, the whole of the law governing such cases need not be set out in the judgment. Legal principles are not magic incantations; their importance lies more in their application to the facts of the case than in their recital in the judgment. The only thing is that the judgment must show that the finding of guilt, if any, has been reached after a proper and careful evaluation of the circumstances and that they are not compatible with any other reasonable hypothesis: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 765: (1981) 2 S.C.C. 35: (1981) 2 S.C.R. 384.

Rule of benefit of reasonable doubt does not imply a frail willow bending to every whiff of hesitancy. Judges are made of sterner stuff and must take a practical view of legitimate inferences flowing from evidence, circumstantial or direct: A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 241. If a reasonable doubt arises regarding the guilt of the accused, the benefit of that cannot be withheld from him: A.I.R. 1973 S.C. 2773. See also 1976 Cr.L.J. 1342 (Ori.) (D.B.); 1979 Raj.L.W. 103; 1976 Raj.L.W. 345 (D.B.); 1973 W.L.N. 330 (Raj.); (1974) 1 An.W.R. 407; (1972) 1 Cut.L.R. (Cr.) 245; (1971) 2 Cut.W.R. 797; A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 1410; 1977 Raj.Cr.C. 195 (D.B.); (1974) 78 Cal.W.N. 334; 1980 Raj.Cr.C. 219 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 1382; A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 315; 1980 Raj.Cr.C. 355; A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 1740.

Even a conjecture or assumption capable to explain otherwise inexplicable facts is not without some basis in direct evidence; even unsatisfactory evidence can be made use of as indicated in A.I.R. 1967 All. 64: 1967 Cr.L.J. 134. Circumstantial evidence, not infrequently, indicates the truth more unerringly than direct testimony: A.I.R. 1971 All. 304.

Though, circumstantial evidence must be of a conclusive nature and circumstances must not be capable of a duality of explanation, it does not mean that the Court is bound to accept any exaggerated, capricious or ridiculous explanation which may suggest itself to a highly imaginative mind: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 1675: (1981) 3 S.C.C. 610: 1981 Cr.L.J. 1273.

The basic rule of criminal jurisprudence is that if two views are possible in case of circumstantial evidence, one pointing to the accused's guilt and the other to his innocence, the Court should adopt the latter view: A.I.R. 1991 S.C. 1842; 1980 Raj.L.W. 208 (D.B.); 1978 Cr.L.J. 830 (Bom.); 1972 M.L.J. (Cr.) 177 (Mys.).

Where circumstances are susceptible of two equally possible inferences, the Courts should accept that inference which favours the accused rather than an inference which goes in favour of the prosecution: A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 1164; 1995 Cr.L.J. 3002 (Him. Pra.) (D.B.).

While appreciating the circumstantial evidence, the mere fact that there is only a remote possibility in favour of the accused, it would not be legally justified to allow the accused to escape punishment. It is true that the principle of innocence of an accused must be kept in view while appreciating the circumstantial evidence but simultaneously, it must also be kept in view that guilty person should not be allowed to escape punishment only on a remote possibility of innocence in his favour. In such case, the judicial conscience of the Court must be tested on the anvil of rational thinking man, who could reasonably, honestly and conscientiously arrive on the same conclusion. The Court cannot afford to give a long rope to the subordinate Courts to entertain untenable doubts about innocence of an accused on fanciful conjectures in a brutal crime committed in broad day-light. If this is permitted the law and the law Courts will not be able to protect the society from antisocial elements for whom society has developed the concept of law and law Courts from time immemorable: 1995 Cr.L.J. 1004 (Raj.) (D.B.).

Circumstantial evidence in order to furnish a basis for conviction in a criminal case requires a high degree of probability. It must be consistent and consistent only with the guilt of the accused. Suspicion is not sufficient to fasten the guilt on accused.

Where the explanation offered by an accused person is plausible, although a Court or a jury may not be convinced of its truth, the prisoner is entitled to an acquittal. The prosecution must show the explanation to be false: 1961 Ker.L.T. 1023: I.L.R. (1962) 1 Ker. 215: 1962 M.L.J. (Cr.) 640.

Suspicion is not a substitute for proof. In Criminal law the prosecution has to prove the guilt beyond reasonable doubt: A.I.R. 1995 S.C. 135.

Evidence adduced on both sides—Appraisal of: 1964 B.L.J.R. 701.

In a case where an accused pleads not guilty and does not plead any definite or specific case and leaves the proof of the charge entirely to the prosecution, the question whether the charge has been established beyond reasonable doubt or not must necessarily be based on the prosecution evidence. But in a case, where a specific defence is taken by the accused and evidence is adduced in support of his defence, the defence evidence also forms part of the record of the case as much as the prosecution evidence does. In such a case, it would be the duty of the Court to consider the entire evidence as a whole and then arrive at a decision. Under such circumstances, there is no bar to find corroboration even in the defence evidence: 1969 All.Cr.R. 565: 1969 All.W.R. (H.C.) 875.

Before conviction based solely on circumstantial evidence can be sustained, it must be such as to be conclusive of the guilt of the accused and must be incapable of explanation of any hypothesis consistent with the innocence of the accused. But this does not mean that before the prosecution can succeed in a case resting upon circumstantial evidence alone, it must meet any and every hypothesis suggested by the accused, however, extravagant and fanciful it might be. Before an accused can contend that a particular hypothesis pointing to his innocence has remained unexcluded by the facts proved against him, the Court must be satisfied that the suggested hypothesis is reasonable and not far-fetched. Further, it is not necessary that every one of the proved facts must in itself be decisive of the complicity of the accused or point conclusively to his guilt. It may be that a particular fact relied upon by the prosecution may not be decisive in itself, and yet if that fact along with other facts which have been proved, tends to strengthen the conclusion of his guilt, it is relevant and has to be considered. In other words when deciding the question of sufficiency, what the Court has to consider is the total cumulative effect of all the proved facts each one of which reinforces the conclusion of guilt and if the combined effect of all those facts taken together is conclusive in establishing the guilt of the accused, the conviction would be justified even though it may be that any one or more of those facts by itself is not decisive.

Held, on facts and circumstances of the case, that the guilt of the accused persons has been established beyond all reasonable doubt and the facts proved against them were of such a nature that the only conclusion which any Court would legitimately reach was that the offences under Ss. 120-B and 420, I.P. Code had been committed by each one of the four accused persons and under S. 419, I.P. Code by accused No. 3: (1969) 2 S.C.W.R. 807: A.I.R. 1970 S.C. 648.

Nature of proof required—Some links missing in prosecution evidence—Circumstances held not sufficient to warrant conviction: 1961 Ker.L.T. 546.

Though it cannot be laid down, as a law of general application, that, in no case, a Judge can accept a part of the prosecution story when he has disbelieved its other part, as a rule of prudence, it will not be safe to rely on the evidence of witnesses on one part of the prosecution story when it has been disbelieved as to its material part. It is elementary that where the prosecution has a definite or positive case it must prove the whole of the case: 1969 Pat.L.J.R. 306: 1970 Cr.L.J. 64: A.I.R. 1970 Pat. 20.

A conviction cannot be sustained even if the Court is satisfied that the prosecution story 'may be true' unless and until it is found that the prosecution story 'must be true': A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 637: 1957 M.L.J. (Cr.) 672.

Criminal Procedure Code (1898), S. 367—Onus of proving everything essential to establishment of charge against accused lies on prosecution—Evidence must be such as to exclude to a moral certainty even reasonable doubt of guilt of accused—In the matter of doubt it is safer to acquit than to condemn—Hypothesis of delinquency should be consistent with all facts proved: 1967 Cr.L.J. 52: A.I.R. 1967 Goa 4 (F.B.).

Criminal trial—Onus of proof in a criminal case is on the prosecution—Proof, need not, however, be a mathematically accurate proof—Standard of proof required is indicated in S. 3 of the Evidence Act, which is applicable to the former Portuguese territory from 1st June, 1964—Being adjective law, law of evidence has retrospective effect—Supreme Court of justice — Vol. 60, page 536—Boletim ministerio de justica: 1967 Cr.L.J. 473: A.I.R. 1967 Goa 51 (F.B.).

The duty that is cast on the prosecution in a criminal case is to prove their case beyond reasonable doubt against the accused. If the evidence produced in the case falls short of the quantum and the quality required by the Court trying the case, then the prosecution takes the consequences thereof. If the prosecution keeps back any evidence from some oblique motive, then obviously a Court is entitled to use that circumstance against the prosecution and in favour of the accused while judging the evidence which the prosecution chose to produce in the case. Where, however, the prosecution offers adequate explanation for the non-production of all the eye-witnesses named in the first information report and if that explanation is found satisfactory by the Court, then obviously the prosecution cannot, because of that circumstance alone, incur any disability: 1957 All.L.J. 857: 1958 Cr.L.J. 324: A.I.R. 1958 All. 214.

Where the Court accepts the story of the prosecution in respect of the crime in essential particulars, that is to say, the manner in, and the circumstances under which, it was committed, and also that some of the persons, alleged to have taken part in it, had actually been participants in the crime, the Court should endeavour to find out which of them were the actual participants, and should not throw out the case, merely because the prosecution partly had embellished the actual occurrence by making false embroideries to it, and there were discrepancies in the evidence of the prosecution witnesses. The doctrine of separating the grain from the chaff applies to such a situation. It is not intended to apply to the following cases: (1) Where the prosecution account of the occurrence is not acceptable in material particulars forming the core of the happenings, the Court will not ordinarily be justified to act upon any rival theory of the defence, attempted to be proved or suggested during the trial in such a way as to take out one part of it to supplement the prosecution evidence and reject the other part of it, and then come to the conclusion that the prosecution had proved its case. (2) Where the case of the prosecution regarding the occurrence is sought to be proved by evidence which is wholly unacceptable, e.g., witnesses are unreliable, by reason of enmity, by telling an extravagant story, by reason of inconsistencies in their evidence, want of corroboration in suitable cases on material parts of the story and other like infirmities, the case of the prosecution must be rejected outright. (3) Where the facts proved beyond doubt, or admitted, indicate that some sort of occurrence must have taken place, there is no rule of law preventing a Judge from arriving at in theory of actual happenings, if this can be fairly done on all the evidence. But this is not permissible, when the prosecution story about the occurrence is found to be false in its fundamental aspects: 1959 B.L.J.R. 416: 1959 Cr.L.J. 1009: A.I.R. 1958 Pat. 362.

Offence under S. 218, I.P. Code—Burden to prove fact of dishonesty lies heavily on the prosecution: 1968 Cr.L.J. 721: A.I.R. 1968 All. 207.

Notification under R. 44-A prohibiting sale of Kesari Dal for human consumption—Held, onus was on prosecution to prove beyond reasonable doubt that Kesari Dal kept in the shop of the accused was for sale for human consumption—Unless onus was discharged offence was not brought home and accused must be given benefit of doubt: (1967) 33 Cut.L.T. 830.

Onus of proving case on prosecution—No question of presumption arises in respect of facts which prosecution has to prove—Existence of facts cannot be presumed unless case comes under S. 114, Evidence Act: 1965 Kash.L.J. 125: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 640: A.I.R. 1965 J.&K. 105.

Recovery of property from accused inside harbour under alleged Mahazar—Mahazar though prefaced as such, appearing like statement of attestor—Recovery in presence of attestor, held, could not be believed as attestor, lorry cleaner, was unable to state lorry number or its driver's name coupled with the fact that special report made by Police Constable after recovery made no mention of attestor's name: 1969 Mad.L.W. (Cr.) 245.

Discrepancies and caution—Accused being previous convict—Prosecution still is not relieved of its duty to prove its cases beyond reasonable doubt—Conviction cannot be sustained on basis of conjectures and surmises: 1969 Cr.L.J. 739: A.I.R. 1969 Goa 68.

Credibility of circumstantial evidence largely depends upon the impression created in the Court's mind: (1975) 1 An.W.R. 304 (D.B.).

The plea of improbability can be pressed into service in many criminal cases. The veracity of the prosecution case is to be judged by the reliability of the witnesses who have deposed about the occurrence. If the witnesses are natural and have given a consistent, straight forward and unbiased account, their evidence is not to be discredited on the ground that a rational-minded accused would not behave or act in the manner stated by these witnesses. There are various ways in which a Court can assure itself that the case presented by the prosecution is concocted or substantially embellished. The prosecution story is not to be subjected to the critical and meticulous test of rationalism. It is the experience of Criminal Courts that criminals who are brought to trial seldom act rationally and the motive in most cases is such that it would not impel an ordinary thinking individual to commit the crime: (1969) 71 Punj.L.R. 33: 1969 Cr.L.J. 848.

The accused's motive need not be established in every criminal case; however, if sought to be established but found to be false, it may have some effect on the prosecution case, though absence of motive would not: 1975 Cr.L.J. 354.

Appreciation of evidence—Circumstantial evidence — Murder — Motive — Importance of—Absence of motive if necessarily vitiates conviction: (1962) 2 Cr.L.J. 354: A.I.R. 1962 Cal. 504.

Intention or object of accused—Has to be judged from facts and circumstances of the case: 1968 Cr.L.J. 584: A.I.R. 1968 All. 170.

Intention is not capable of direct proof as fact—Intention is to be gathered from surrounding circumstances and conduct of accused.

Per V.S. Jetley, J.C.—In criminal cases, intention, motive or knowledge under which a person acts, is an important consideration. Intention being a state of mind can never be directly proved as a fact. Further, a man is presumed to intend the natural consequences of his acts. This is a subjective investigation and intention is to be gathered from the surrounding circumstances and also the conduct of the accused: 1967 Cr.L.J. 184: A.I.R. 1967 Goa 11 (F.B.).

The motive that led to the commission of the offence is always there though often it remains undiscovered; its non-proof in cases of direct evidence is of no consequence; however in cases resting on circumstantial evidence, proof of its presence or absence is of greater weight: 1983 Cr.L.J. 1854 (Cal.); 1980 Cr.L.J. 71 (Punj.) (D.B.).

In circumstantial evidence facts in issue are indirectly inferred, not directly perceived; motive is no doubt of importance in circumstantial evidence but instances are not lacking where atrocious crimes were committed for very slight motives: 1982 Cr.L.J. 2123 (Del.).

Where accused was alleged to have robbed deceased after killing her and there was direct evidence of the witnesses that the accused was sleeping in deceased's room on the night of incident and tried to run away in the night and chain belonging to deceased was recovered at accused's instance and medical evidence showed that deceased died a homicidal death and further plea of false implication of the accused was not substantiated, held, omission on the part of the prosecution to discover motive was of no consequence; conviction of the accused was proper: 1994 Cr.L.J. 3656 (Him. Pra.) (D.B.).

Where prosecution case rested on ocular testimony of son and wife of deceased but the motive for alleged offence could not be said to be entirely on the side of the accused and it was found that prosecution changed its version after obtaining a copy of post-mortem report and the testimony of alleged eye-witnesses concerning the manner in which the occurrence took place did not sound natural, probable and convincing, held, accused could not be convicted for offence of murder: 1995 Cr.L.J. 1059 (P.&H.) (D.B.).

Where the motive for crime is totally absent and testimony of the eye-witnesses is not reliable and entire prosecution story is cooked up and not worthy of credence, accused deserves the benefit of doubt and consequent acquittal. Where deceased died as a result of strangulation but the motive for crime was absent and the manner of strangulation as stated by alleged eye-witnesses was falsified by the medical evidence and further there was delay in filing of F.I.R., held, prosecution failed to bring home guilt of the accused. Hence, accused was entitled to benefit of doubt: 1994 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 364 (Raj.) (D.B.).

Where accused who was last seen with the deceased was alleged to have committed murder of the deceased and it was found that there was absence of motive for murder and further accused alongwith others carried dead body of deceased publicly to the hospital for treatment and also prosecution failed to establish continuous chain of circumstances, held, accused could not be convicted for offence of murder: 1994 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 343 (Ori.) (D.B.).

Foreign markings on goods can be taken as a circumstance to infer that they were of foreign origin: (1988) 34 E.L.T. 571 (Ker.) (D.B.).

Where a car was brought at the spot at an odd morning hour, with the convict sitting at its back seat and was taken to and parked on the kutcha track, with its engine kept running, and when intercepted and interrogated by the Customs Officials, he did not express lack of knowledge about the presence of gold in the car dicky, and which on search yeilded gunny bags containing gold and wet mud thereon indicating that they had been placed in the dicky only a little ago, held, these incriminating circumstances clearly pointed to the convict's guilt. [A.I.R. 1970 Bom. 79, Affirmed]: A.I.R. 1972 S.C. 1224: (1971) 2 S.C.R. 583.

Where the proof of guilt of an accused person rests only upon circumstantial evidence the several pieces of testimony which have to be regarded as links in the chain of this evidence, have to be considered in their cumulative effect. S. 106 of the Evidence Act cannot apply to shift the burden of proof in a criminal case where the onus lies upon the prosecution throughout to establish the guilt of the accused beyond reasonable doubt. Even where there are facts specially within the knowledge of the accused which could throw a light upon his guilt or innocence, as the case may be, the accused is not bound to allege them or to prove them. But it is not as if the section is automatically inapplicable to criminal trials. The true rule is that S. 106 does not cast any burden upon an accused in a criminal trial, but where the accused throws no light at all upon facts which ought to be especially within his knowledge and which could support any theory or hypothesis compatible with his innocence, the Court can also consider his failure to adduce any explanation as an additional link which completes the chain: I.L.R. (1960) Mad. 157: (1960) 1 M.L.J. 118: A.I.R. 1960 Mad. 218.

Where accused was alleged to have killed his wife and children and he was found lying injured in his house alongwith corpses of his wife and children and a sickle and knife having blood-stains were also found in the same house and doctor opined that injuries found on deceased persons could be caused by a sickle and further report of the Chemical Analyst stated that there was human blood on sickle and knife and blood group also fitted in with the prosecution case, held, the aforesaid circumstances unmistakenly completed the entire chain of circumstantial evidence against the accused which could only be consistent with his guilt wholly inconsistent with his innocence and incapable of being explained on any other reasonable hypothesis: 1994 Cr.L.J. 3493 (Bom.) (D.B.).

Where accused was alleged to have killed deceased and though he was seen by good number of people in the vicinity and he was taken into custody at a place some distance away from the spot, still he pleaded that he was not at all present at the spot and subsequently he stated that some persons murdered the deceased but the accused neither filed a complaint in police station nor took any steps to unfold his own version of the incident, which did not even remotely fit into the circumstances, held, the only possible conclusion would be that it was the accused and accused alone who committed the murder of the deceased. [1992 Cr.L.J. 1529 (S.C.); 1983 Cr.L.J. 1457 (S.C.), Rel. on]: 1994 Cr.L.J. 2798 (Karn.) (D.B.).

Where there is no eye-witness to the murder and the case against the accused depends entirely on circumstantial evidence, the standard of proof required to convict the accused on such evidence is that the circumstances relied upon must be fully established and the chain of evidence furnished by these circumstances should be so far complete as not to leave any reasonable ground for conclusion consistent with the innocence of the accused. In the case of circumstantial evidence, not only should the various links in the chain of evidence be clearly established, but the completed chain must be such as to rule out a reasonable likelihood of the innocence of the accused. But in a case where the various links have been satisfactorily made out and the circumstances point to the accused as the probable assistant, with reasonable definiteness and in proximity to the deceased as regards time and situation and he offers no explanation, which, if accepted though not proved, would afford a reasonable basis for conclusion on the entire case consistent with his innocence, such absence of explanation or false explanation would itself be an additional link which completes the chain.

Therefore, in a murder case, where the accused who were inimically disposed towards the deceased were, a few hours prior to the incident, seen assembled at the house of accused No. 1 and preparing to use their fire arms and after the shooting incident, they were found absconding for several days without any proper explanation for their disappearance and the evidence also disclosed that the fatal shots came from within the house of accused No. 1, which fact also stood confirmed by recognised medico-legal principles, it was held that the complicity of the accused persons in the commission of the offence under S. 302 read with S. 34 of the Penal Code must be considered proved beyond doubt: 1967 Cr.L.J. 1155: A.I.R. 1967 Ori. 118.

Where in a criminal prosecution under Ss. 300 and 376 of the Indian Penal Code, neither the accused and the deceased being last seen together, nor the recovery of dead body at his instance, were proved beyond reasonable doubt, and there was no mention of such recovery in the inquest report or the panchnama and medical evidence did not find any recent sign of sexual intercourse, held, the accused was entitled to the benefit of doubt: A.I.R. 1991 S.C. 1388: 1991 Cr.L.J. 1809.

Where offence of rape was alleged against the accused and minor prosecutrix recognised accused from his voice and stature in dark night and prosecution witness saw accused running after occurrence in moon light but his distance from accused was not mentioned, held, accused was entitled to benefit of doubt: 1994 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 326: (1994) 1 Gau.L.R. 197.

Where offence of rape was alleged against the accused and it was found that the prosecutrix who was unknown to the accused accompanied him to a movie and also stayed in a hotel and neither any injury was present on her private parts nor was there any semen discharge on pubic hair and prosecutrix neither shouted nor asked for any help when alleged rape was being committed, held, offence of rape was not proved against the accused. [1977 Cr.L.J. 817 (S.C.), Rel. on]: 1994 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 327 (J.&K.).

Where none of the prosecution witnesses had seen the accused stabbing the deceased with a knife but they did depose having seen the accused quarrelling with the deceased and immediately thereafter they also saw the accused running with a blood-stained knife in his hand, apprehended him with the aid of several others , and handed him over to a Police Sub-Inspector, but they were declared hostile; the Sub-Inspector, however, proved that the witnesses had indeed apprehended the accused and made him over to the Sub-Inspector; the medical evidence conclusively established that the deceased had died of injuries inflicted by a sharp-edged weapon; the accused's clothes soaked with blood belonged to the same group as that of the deceased; the prosecution witnesses were independent and had no reason to make false statements; the accused's motive for the assault was also established by oral evidence; held, taken cumulatively, all these facts form a chain so complete that there is no escape from the conclusion that within all human probability the murder was committed by the accused and none else; the facts proved admit of no explanation on any other hypothesis than that of the accused's guilt; conviction maintained: A.I.R. 1988 S.C. 615.

Where the appellant and her paramour prosecuted for the murder of her husband and though they were found to be in complicity but the paramour was acquitted on benefit of doubt, and the nature of injuries on the deceased being such as could not have ordinarily been inflicted by a woman's frail hands, held, there was no justification to maintain the conviction and sentence of the appellant: A.I.R. 1991 S.C. 342.

The accused, a male and a female, were charged with murdering the deceased by making him unconscious at her house by making him drink excessively, then strangulating him by pulling apart a rope tied on his neck and dragging his dead body and dumping it in a nallah half a kilometer behind her house, which was recovered four days thereafter. The dragging marks on the ground as well as the trail of the tracking dog led to the house. The death by strangulation and consumption of liquor by the deceased was established by medical evidence. The liquor bottle and steel container wherein the liquor was served were recovered from her house at her instance. The rope and the deceased's slippers were recovered at the instance of the male accused. Held, in the absence of direct evidence of murder, the above complete chain of circumstances, duly established by witnesses, is sufficient to prove the guilt of the accused, both under S. 302 as well as S. 201 of the Indian Penal Code: 1995 Cr.L.J. 943 (Bom.) (D.B.).

Where no one had seen the husband being attacked at night by a sharp edged weapon and it had been stated in the F.I.R. that some culprits had attacked him and the attempt to murder was sought to be proved against his eighteen year old wife who had been slapped by him a little earlier for her refusal to bed with him and the recovery of stolen ornaments at her instance allegedly concealed by her on that night in a rat-hole outside the house, held, the concealment and recovery being a concoction and contrary to the ordinary course of human nature, her conviction on circumstantial evidence could not be sustained: 1995 Cr.L.J. 169 (Madh. Pra.).

To attempt to isolate a particular fact from the surrounding circumstances and to discuss the logical inference may be useful mental exercise. But it is wholly out of place in any judicial decision. Judge's experience of life is undoubtedly an important factor in evaluating the evidence placed before him. But he must judge the action and reactions of the accused and witnesses before him from their standard: (1969) 18 Law Rep. 412 (Mys.). See also (1962) 1 Cr.L.J. 733: A.I.R. 1962 Mys. 124: 1963 M.L.J. (Cr.) 5.

Murder—Circumstantial evidence. See (1964) 1 Cr.L.J. 596 (Madh. Pra.).

Trial for murder — Circumstantial evidence—Appreciation of—Opinion of doctor not conclusive: 29 Cut.L.T. 557.

Criminal trial — Prosecution must dislodge presumption of innocence available to accused by leading evidence to prove guilt—Mere suspicion, however, strong, not sufficient for conviction: 1966 Ker.L.J. 868.

Circumstantial evidence raising mere suspicion but not proving complicity of accused in crime — Mere suspicion is not enough proof to convict: 31 Cut.L.T. 401: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 385: A.I.R. 1965 Ori. 170.

Murder case—Eye-witnesses independent and natural—Corroborating evidence of complainant—Medical evidence also consistent with their version—Conviction of accused proper: 1989 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 78 (D.B.) (All.).

Charge of dacoity—Occurrence taking place on a dark and cloudy midnight—Culprits taking precautions to conceal their identity by painting themselves, wearing masks and using turbans to cover their faces—Sole witness failing to explain how he identified culprits—Absence of corroboration direct or circumstantial—Accused could not be convicted: 1982 Cr.L.J. 500: (1981) 52 Cut.L.T. 512.

Murder of Guru during night—Guru living with chela—Disappearance of chela next morning—This is a circumstance which stands against the chela and it has to be considered alongwith the other circumstances and the direct evidence forthcoming in the case: I.L.R. 32 Pat. 243: A.I.R. 1954 Pat. 109.

The mere possession of the bill-hooks by the accused cannot be relied upon as a circumstantial evidence to support the case that those bill-hooks must have been used for committing murder where the bill-hooks do not contain blood-stains. There must be further evidence to connect bill-hooks found with the accused with bill-hooks alleged to have been used for committing the murder: 1955 An.W.R. 220: A.I.R. 1955 Andhra 161.

Where the witnesses had seen only the causing of stab injuries and the assailant is only one, it is an inference that the other injuries were caused by the same assailant. There could be no complication in the case of a single assailant. It could be different in the case of more than one assailant and where there is no common intention. An inference might be legitimately drawn that the accused had caused all the injuries, in the circumstances and in the situation in which he was seen: (1966) 2 An.W.R. 338: 1966 M.L.J. (Cr.) 726.

Murder and robbery taking place—Accused the only companion of deceased, found within 24 hours of the incident, in unexplained possession of goods stolen in robbery—Circumstance held incompatible with innocence of the accused and incapable of explanation upon any other hypothesis than his guilt: I.L.R. 32 Pat. 243: A.I.R. 1954 Pat. 109. See also 1957 M.L.J. (Cr.) 120: A.I.R. 1957 Ker. 65.

Where the facts indubitably established were (i) that the jewels belonged to the deceased; (ii) that she had them with her on the night when the murder took place; (iii) that the accused were found to be in possession of the same the next morning after murder; and (iv) that they were unable to explain how they came by them, the hypothesis most favourable to the accused in the circumstances, is that, under Illus. (a) to S. 114 of the Evidence Act, they either stole them or received them knowing them to be stolen: I.L.R. (1956) Andhra 538.

Presumption—Possession of stolen property: A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 1179.

Where accused purchased 9 kg. of silver for a paltry sum deliberately knowing it to be stolen silver and on his information several recoveries were made by the Investigating Officer of the silver ingots during the course of investigation, held, conviction of accused for receiving stolen property was proper: 1995 Cr.L.J. 625 (Raj.).

Mere fact of knowledge of accused of existence of stolen articles in place accessible to all is not conclusive proof of possession of those articles by accused: 31 Cut.L.T. 396.

Where three inmates, the man and his mother and wife, of a house were found to have been killed by cutting and stabbing with a chopper/knife and the ornaments worn by them were removed and taken around ten at night, and the accused, a petty money lender desperately in need of funds had been seen near the house shortly before the murder time, was seen afterwards near a culvert wearing only a chuddy and washing his clothes, his blood-stained thumb and foot impressions were found in the house, the bedsheet of one of the deceased, recently torn, was stained with O group blood and the torn piece was found, with same blood, from the spot where he was seen washing his clothes, and some of the removed ornaments were also recovered at the accused's instance; his alibi not having been proved, held, the chain of circumstances proving his guilt was complete; merely because, as contended by the defence, some other person might have also been involved in the murder, is no ground to set aside his conviction: 1995 Cr.L.J. 55 (Ker.) (D.B.).

The fact that the accused was arrested with blood-stained clothes when he was running away from his house after the occurrence points amply to the guilt of the accused: 1958 B.L.J.R. 60: A.I.R. 1958 Pat. 190.

Discoveries of incriminating articles containing human blood given by accused—They are very strong incriminating circumstances to arouse suspicion that accused might have been author of murder but suspicion, however grave, cannot take place of legal proof: (1969) 35 Cut.L.T. 301. See also S. 3, Note 65.

Accused charged with offence of murder—Accused and deceased last seen together at place wherefrom dead body of deceased recovered—Accused failing to give satisfactory explanation as to what happened to deceased and how deceased got fatal injuries—Accused producing knife stained with blood to police—Pant of accused found containing blood mark—On serological test both articles found containing human blood—Doctor opining that injuries on deceased could have been caused by knife produced by accused; circumstantial chain of evidence held was complete and accused convicted: (1969) 35 Cut.L.T. 258.

Recovery of weapon on statement of accused—Reliability of evidence relating to recovery—Depends on a large measure on whether the investigation was honest and straightforward—Where evidence of fact of most damaging character has been manufactured and produced in Court and F.I.R. was got prepared in an improper manner, evidence relating to discovery of alleged murder weapon cannot be accepted unless the same is above board and free from doubt: 1966 Cr.L.J. 369: A.I.R. 1966 All. 142; 1986 Cr.L.J. 2077.

Investigating Officer deposing to statements made by accused indicating places where incriminating articles were concealed, prior to recovery of those articles—Statements not corroborated by search witnesses—Held, corroboration by contemporaneous entries in search list was sufficient: (1964) 30 Cut.L.T. 544.

Where in a murder charge, soon after the deceased was found to be missing, the appellant (accused), who had earlier held out a threat that he would take revenge on the father of the deceased, made a statement to the father of the deceased that he had a hand in the disappearance of the deceased by throwing him in a furnace. Held, that the statement was an incriminating circumstance against the accused even if the statement was made in anger. The fact that the deceased's body was not found in a furnace but in a well was of little consequence in the circumstances of the case: 1957 Cr.L.J. 328: A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 211.

Murder of wife—Appreciation of evidence—Accused addicted to heavy drinking—At time of death of deceased, there was no one in house except accused—Trustworthy medical opinion that death was due to asphyxia—Held, it was accused who murdered his wife: A.I.R. 1982 S.C. 1217: 1982 Cr.L.J. 1572.

Where accused made a confessional statement (though subsequently retracted) about his having murdered his mother-in-law by strangulation and accused was last seen with the deceased and further the medical evidence proved that deceased died as a result of asphyxia by throttling, held, accused could be convicted for offence of murder: 1994 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 320 (Andh. Pra.) (D.B.).

Murder by poisoning—Medical evidence unable to determine the poison—Contention that medical evidence alone should be considered in deciding whether the death is violent or unnatural, not accepted—Conduct of accused and other circumstantial evidence were also held relevant in proving the guilt of the accused—Indian Penal Code, 1860, S. 302: (1966) 68 Bom.L.R. 941: 1967 Mah.L.J. 25: 1968 Cr.L.J. 453: A.I.R. 1968 Bom. 127.

Where there are strong circumstances against the accused who was alleged to have killed her brother-in-law by poisoning him by putting poison in his food, the fact that no explanation is offered by her for those circumstances completes the chain of evidence against her. [A.I.R. 1955 S.C. 801, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1959 Him. Pra. 3.

No direct evidence as to which of the two persons including the accused, murdered the deceased. Facts established showed that accused had opportunity and also strong motive to do away with the deceased that he was insistent on cremating the corpse as early as possible when he was being prevented from doing so. Held, that the conduct of the accused far from establishing his innocence certainly showed that he was aware of the manner in which the old woman had met with her death and was most anxious to dispose of the body so as to avert any suspicion or proof of her having met with an unnatural death as it was finally found by the Civil Surgeon on a post-mortem examination of the dead body and that the prosecution succeeded in establishing the guilt of the accused: A.I.R. 1954 S.C. 720: 1954 Cr.L.J. 1802.

Confessional statement of accused, believed and forming main evidence against accused—Rest of evidence not sufficient in itself to convict accused, treated as corroborating confession—This is the correct estimate of probative force of other evidence: 1970 Cr.L.J. 603 (All.).

Sufficiency of evidence—Uncorroborated testimony of a single eye-witness—Dark night—Absence of source of any light—Witness a pregnant woman who suffered from night blindness—Her testimony also not corroborated by other witnesses—Conviction set aside as single eye-witness did not inspire sufficient evidence: 1980 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 112: 1981 Raj. Cr.C. 199 (D.B.).

Where apart from other circumstances which could not be said to have reasonably been established on record, the prosecution alleged that the murder, committed on 16th, was discovered on the 18th when the dead body was recovered from a room not proved to be in the accused's exclusive possession and that the accused had been coming all this while to the spot to get a pit dug in the courtyard to bury the deceased even after foul smell had started emanating from the room, held, such version being highly unbelievable, no credence could be given to it: 1995 Cr.L.J. 470: A.I.R. 1994 S.C. 2585.

Murder—Proof of—Recovery of body is not essential—It can be proved by circumstantial evidence provided that jury is warned that evidence must irresistibly lead to that conclusion: I.L.R. (1967) 1 Mad. 226.

Murder—Proof—Corpus delicti not traceable—Proof of murder solely dependant on retracted confession—Improbability of murder—Duty of Court: A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 381: 1957 Cr.L.J. 559. Proof of mens rea: A.I.R. 1957 Mad. 675: 1957 Cr.L.J. 1279; Effect of prosecution not examining any witness: 1957 B.L.J.R. 338; Proof—Adultery—A.I.R. 1957 Mad. 766; Proof—Evidence of single witness: I.L.R. (1957) Cut. 642; Proof—Conspiracy: A.I.R. 1958 Mys. 150: 1958 M.L.J. (Cr.) 341; Proof—Criminal conspiracy: A.I.R. 1957 Bom. 226: 1957 Cr.L.J. 1107; Proof—Benami: A.I.R. 1957 Ker. 121; Election: A.I.R. 1960 Punj. 45; Company whether bogus or real; A.I.R. 1956 Bom. 749: (1956) 58 Bom.L.R. 20; Motor Vehicle—Cancellation of permit on refusal to review it on grounds of conviction: A.I.R. 1958 All. 30.

The circumstances, namely, that the accused on the date of occurrence about an hour before sunset was seen proceeding with the deceased in the direction of the scene of the occurrence, that the accused came home without the deceased the same evening in hurried steps and with her cloth lifted up, that the cloth was stained with human blood and that the two Naulis of the deceased which were seen on her person up to her going towards the scene of the murder had been discovered at her instance from the thatch of her hut were only consistent with the guilt of the accused: A.I.R. 1954 S.C. 279: 1954 Cr.L.J. 743.

The mere fact that the accused and the deceased, both real brothers, were last seen together in the field, held, did not lead to the conclusion that the accused must have murdered him: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 1620.

Accused charged with offence of murder—Accused and deceased last seen together at place where from dead body of deceased recovered—Accused failing to give satisfactory explanation as to what happened to deceased and how deceased got fatal injuries — Accused producing knife stained with blood to Police—Pant of accused found containing blood mark—On serological test both articles found containing man blood—Doctor opining that injuries on deceased could have been caused by knife produced by accused—Circumstantial chain of evidence, held, was complete and accused convicted. Penal Code (1860), S. 302: (1969) 35 Cut.L.T. 258. See also 1980 Srinagar L.J. 614 (D.B.).

Deceased and accused seen together on day of occurrence—Injuries on person of deceased caused by sharp cutting instrument like sickle — Sickle recovered — Clothes of accused found blood-stained at the time of arrest — Blood-stains not satisfactorily explained by accused—Ring which deceased was wearing produced by accused—Evidence held sufficient to prove that accused was guilty of murder: (1962) 1 Cr.L.J. 733: A.I.R. 1962 Mys. 124: 1963 M.L.J. (Cr.) 5.

Where two accused were last seen with the deceased and though both should explain the disappearance of the deceased, one of them is acquitted of the charge of murder and no appeal is filed against the acquittal, the very circumstance that the deceased was last seen with them ceases to be of an incriminating character and the other accused cannot also be convicted solely on that basis: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 1949: 1979 Cr.L.J. 1310.

Omission of the prosecution to send the blood-stained earth found at the place of occurrence for chemical examination, held, throws a reasonable doubt on the prosecution's case: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 2263.

Prosecution for possession of opium—Analytical examination of article seized not necessary in every case: (1964) 1 Cr.L.J. 453 (Madh. Pra.).

Criminal trial—Material on record justifying finding in favour of accused—Court, held, could act on it though accused had not taken it as a specific ground of defence—[Cr.P.Code (1898), S. 367]—[Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954, S. 16 (1) and (7)—Matterdal—Analyst testing it only for pulse—Court also treating it as food-grain—Absence of additional tests could result in acquittal—Fact that accused had not pleaded it in defence, held, immaterial]: 1970 Cr.L.J. 340: A.I.R. 1970 Cal. 120.

Material objects—Weapons recovered not sent to ballistic expert—Recovery does not link accused with crime: 1969 Cr.L.J. 1002: A.I.R. 1969 Mad. 219.

Murder case—Overwhelming direct and circumstantial evidence for prosecution—Knife and clothes recovered from accused not got examined by Chemical Examiner—Lacuna, held, of no consequence: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 771: A.I.R. 1965 J. & K. 126.

In a case in which any general exception in the Penal Code is pleaded by the accused and evidence is adduced to support such a plea, but such evidence fails to satisfy the Court affirmatively of the existence of circumstances bringing the case within the general exception pleaded, the accused is entitled to be acquitted if upon a consideration of the evidence as a whole a reasonable doubt is created in the mind of the Court whether the accused is or is not entitled to the benefit of the said exception: 1958 All.W.R. (H.C.) 622: 1958 All.L.J. 511: 1958 All.Cr.R. 415: 1959 Cr.L.J. 413: A.I.R. 1959 All. 233.

Sufficiency for conviction—Validity. See Penal Code (1860), S. 148: 1969 Cr.L.J. 301: A.I.R. 1969 Ori. 23; 1969 B.L.J.R. 569.

Murder—Deceased was under medical treatment—Nature of her illness not clear—F.I.R. recorded much after incident—Alleged demand for dowry by accused, as mentioned in F.I.R. not supported by evidence—No evidence to prove ill-treatment or torture of deceased before her death—Her cremation, not objected—No adverse inference of guilt can be drawn for not having informed her father about death—Failure of prosecution to establish her own case—Accused entitled to acquittal: 1992 Cr.L.J. 1930 (S.C.).

Standard of proof in regard to the plea of alibi as well as in regard to prosecution evidence should be a reasonable standard: 1958 All.W.R. (H.C.) 48.

Good faith—Standard of proof: A.I.R. 1957 Madh. Pra. 95.

Appreciation of evidence—Eye-witnesses normally do not observe infliction of every injury caused to the victim; causing of injuries is inferred from circumstantial evidence. Thus, where witnesses had seen only causing of injuries and there was only one assailant, inference is that other injuries were caused by same assailant: 1966 M.L.J. (Cr.) 726: (1966) 2 An.W.R. 338.

The mere fact that the accused was seen running away from the place of occurrence, held, is not enough to convict him: 1981 Cr.L.J. 1110 (Gau.) (D.B.).

In a case of murder of five persons inside their family house, when prosecution evidence itself is not acceptable, mere gravity of offence cannot be made basis for conviction: A.I.R. 1992 S.C. 1131: 1992 Cr.L.J. 1426: 1992 All.L.J. 395.

The circumstances that an accused person may have taken fright and remained traceless until the time when he presented himself in the Court of the District Magistrate cannot be used against him. The fact that a man, after finding out that he is wanted by the police, takes fright and absconds is certainly suspicious but explicable on grounds other than guilt also: 1966 Cr.L.J. 1369: A.I.R. 1966 All. 607; (1975) 1 An.W.R. 304 (D.B.); 1973 Raj.L.W. 58; 1979 All.Cr.R. 273 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 2156. Accused absenting from his house throughout the night of occurrence, held, his conduct was not consistent with his innocence: (1973) 39 Cut.L.T. 1156 (D.B.). See also I.L.R. (1974) Him. Pra. 509 (D.B.).

Absence of accused from his house for couple of days—Not sufficient to prove abscondence: 1969 Cr.L.J. 1393: A.I.R. 1969 Goa 116. See also S. 8, Note 3, infra.

Offences under Ss. 120-B, 171, 365, 398 of Penal Code—Threatening letter by accused two years prior to alleged commission of offences—Offences committed at night—Accused proving to be on duty on date of offence up to 7.30 p.m. and claiming to have gone for picture thereafter—Identification parade not held—Accused identified by voice only—Prosecution witnesses turning hostile—No cogent and convincing direct evidence to prove that arrested persons were same as travelled in the car used for committing alleged offences—Held, a threatening letter, taken in itself, cannot be an evidence for the commission of the offence unless it is proved. The prosecution could not prove by cogent, convincing and unimpeachable evidence the guilt of the accused: 1980 Raj. Cr.C. 1 (D.B.).

Intention to cause death—Injury caused with sharp edged instrument resulting in fracture of skull and making victim unconscious for number of days—Inference as to intention of accused not to cause death not to be drawn without examining doctors under whose treatment victim was kept: 1961 Jab.L.J. 1282: (1962) 2 Cr.L.J. 190: A.I.R. 1962 Madh. Pra. 239.

Where five members of a family and servant in the family died of injuries caused to them and the five members included a six months old child and the injuries inflicted upon these persons number 67, some of them being either upon the abdomen or upon the chest, this is shocking crime but the Court's approach to the evidence in the case must be dispassionate and free from prejudice and the examination of the evidence must be fair and just in fixing the guilt upon the accused persons. It would not be right to inflict death penalties upon a number of persons merely because six persons have been killed. It certainly, is not a case of mathematical equation. Nobody would suggest that for one murder there ought to be a penalty of a sentence of death passed on one person. It must, depend upon the facts of each case, and if, evidence was forthcoming to show who were the persons who actually assaulted the six persons, it would be possible to consider the case upon a different footing. In proper cases the Court should discriminate and that is probably for the reason that although a sentence may be logical, it may not be proper: (1957) 59 Bom.L.R. 244: A.I.R. 1957 Bom. 226: 1957 Cr.L.J. 1107: I.L.R. (1958) Bom. 1092.

Clandestine carrying of a liquid in tough rubber tubes—Circumstance not sufficient to conclude that the liquid contains alcohol—Grave suspicion cannot take the place of proof: 1967 Cr.L.J. 167: A.I.R. 1967 Bom. 61.

Evidence taken together establishing allegation of the prosecution that the accused murdered the deceased at a certain place with the spade, took his cash in the bag, disposed of the corpse in the channel, buried the clothes of the deceased, washed his own clothes at the culvert, paid certain amount to his mother and concealed remaining amount in the cloth bag in the hayrick behind his house—Held, criterion of the circumstantial evidence was satisfied and the accused was guilty of murder under S. 302, I.P.Code: 1974 Mad.L.W. (Cr.) 43 (D.B.).

Where the circumstances sought to be proved were that (i) the accused was much perturbed when the deceased lady attributed paternity of her new born child to the accused's son (ii) the deceased and her new born baby were murdered and (iii) the accused walked to the police station holding a blood-stained chopper in his hand on the same forenoon and handed over the chopper to the police and requested them to do whatever was necessary in the matter, held, the circumstances when put together could not form a chain much less a completed chain for drawing the irresistible inference that the deceased were murdered by the accused and none else. Therefore, the accused could not be convicted for the offence of murder: 1995 Cr.L.J. 61: (1994) 1 Ker.L.J. 696 (D.B.).

Where couple of hours before the incident there was a furious quarrel between the accused and the deceased in which the former asked the latter as to why he had cut the grass in his field and went away threatening that he would see him that very day, and a couple of hours after the said quarrel the informant found, while he was returning from the house of Sarpanch, that his father was dead, held, the aforesaid circumstantial evidence was not sufficient to warrant an inference that it was the accused alone who had murdered the deceased. [1957 Cr.L.J. 1014 (S.C.), Rel. on]: 1995 Cr.L.J. 1432 (Bom.) (D.B.).

Where accused husband caused death of his pregnant wife by kicking and beating and evidence of eye-witnesses was fully corroborated by medical evidence, held, conviction of accused was sustainable: 1994 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 413 (Raj.).

Where in a case of murder by gun-shot injuries, the testimony of the eye-witnesses, notwithstanding lengthy cross-examination, remained unshaken and their presence at the spot was also established, and further said testimony was corroborated by medical evidence as well as by the ballistic expert and no material inconsistent about the injuries sustained by the deceased was shown, the motive for murder being that the deceased and some others had assaulted and threatened him with death sometime earlier for which the accused had lodged a Police report, held, the accused had rightly been convicted for murder: 1995 Cr.L.J. 2038 (Raj.) (D.B.).

Where medical evidence amply supported the evidence of the eye-witnesses with regard to the manner and the nature of injuries inflicted which were responsible for death of deceased and the fact that the accused appeared before the police and produced the weapon of offence and gave a report and that from him the blood-stained clothes were recovered, held, all these are admissible and could be used against the accused for convicting him. [1991 Cr.L.J. 458 (Karn.), Foll.; 1954 Cr.L.J. 230 (S.C.); A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 209, Expl. and disting.]: 1994 Cr.L.J. 2584 (Mad.) (D.B.).

Delay in post-mortem examination of dead bodies is not material factor which should seriously tell against authenticity of prosecution story—Recovery of weapons of offence from odd places as result of statements made by accused to police—Circumstances go against theory of fabrication and establish correctness rather than falsity of evidence with respect to recoveries: (1961) 63 Punj.L.R. 742.

No explanation offered by accused-appellants in respect of facts completely proved by prosecution and some of them not even contested by appellants—Held, absence of explanation would itself be additional link which would complete chain even in case of circumstantial evidence: (1967) 69 Punj.L.R. (Del.) 168.

Where an accused was charged under Ss. 366 and 376 of Penal Code, the circumstance that the accused induced the victim girl aged 15 years to go away with him to Bombay would prove case of prosecution under S. 366: 1993 Cr.L.J. 907 (Karn.).

The fact that the deceased was stabbed in the heart and might have, bleeded internally is sufficient to explain the circumstance that no blood mark was found on the scene of occurrence: A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 1656.

Prosecution deliberately producing false witness for procuring conviction—Credibility of rest of evidence affected—It is unsafe to act upon any evidence in such a case: (1961) 63 Punj.L.R. 908.

Murder by poisoning—Circumstantial evidence—Nature of: (1965) 1 Cr.L.J. 321: A.I.R. 1965 Ori. 38.

Appreciation of evidence—Delay in lodging F.I.R.—Kidnapping of minor girl—Delay of three days in lodging F.I.R., held, did not justify rejection of prosecution case: 1969 Cr.L.J. 1282 (Del.).

The statement made in the F.I.R. that a certain person was an assailant is not substantive evidence and can be used only for the purpose of corroboration under S. 157 or contradiction under S. 145, Evidence Act against the maker thereof alone. The fact that a complaint was made against that person implicating him as an assailant is admissible for the limited purpose to show that such a complaint whether true or unfounded, was made: (1965) 1 Cr.L.J. 744: A.I.R. 1965 Ori. 99.

The first information report is the basis of the case although it is not the last word on the prosecution case. The fact that no eye-witness is mentioned by name therein, is a circumstance against the prosecution, particularly when the complainant was aware or could reasonably be aware of his presence. This omission has to be satisfactorily explained: 1969 Cr.L.J. 1393: A.I.R. 1969 Goa 116.

It is not necessary to give the names of eye-witnesses in the F.I.R. According to S. 154 of the Cr.P.Code, under which an F.I.R. is made, what is required, is that information relating to the commission of a cognizable offence should be given. The words 'relating to the commission of a cognizable offence' do not and cannot mean that the information must give details of all the elements of the offence or give the names of the witnesses. The fact therefore, that the name of the witness is not mentioned in F.I.R. does not affect the evidence: 1957 Jab.L.J. 321: 1957 Cr.L.J. 1138: 1957 M.P.C. 461: A.I.R. 1957 Madh. Pra. 153.

Scope—Negotiable instrument—Defendant failing to prove absence of consideration — Plaintiff also failing to prove consideration — Duty of Court in such cases—Presumption: A.I.R. 1959 Raj. 1 (F.B.).

Disciplinary action against public servant—Finding of guilt when can be based on circumstantial evidence—Evidence not justifying such finding—Error can be corrected under Art. 226: (1963-64) 68 Cal.W.N. 215: A.I.R. 1964 Cal. 503.

Suit to recover loan—Plaintiff, a respectable Advocate—His evidence as against that of defendant would be case of oath against oath—Plaintiff's interested testimony would therefore require corroboration. Held, that the sole testimony of the plaintiff was not only not corroborated but on the contrary there were telling circumstances to show that he was not the real creditor so far as the suit transaction was concerned. His suit must, therefore, fail: (1964) 6 Ori.J.D. 235: 31 Cut.L.T. 6: I.L.R. (1964) Cut. 640.

Where the links completed the chain of circumstantial evidence against the accused, held, it would be substantial and sufficient corroboration of the approver's statement in material particulars: A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 1320: (1975) 4 S.C.C. 234.

Circumstantial evidence in the nature of recoveries and chemical evidence is of no avail in the absence of evidence to show non-tampering of sealed packets after their seizure till their delivery to the laboratory: 1980 Raj.Cr.C. 355.

Roof of a godown belonging to the accused was requisitioned by the Government for the use of the military. During the occupation by the military, the accused had repeatedly complained to the authorities that the roof was being damaged by the military authorities by the way in which it was being used, that as a consequence of it the roof had begun to leak and that the jute belonging to the accused which was stored underneath the roof in the godown was being spoiled. After the premises were de-requisitioned and handed over to the accused, the accused laid claim to compensation and damages. The claim was scrutinized by the Government Officer and the claim for the reduced amount was sanctioned and paid to the accused. The gravamen of the prosecution case was that the allegations of damages to the roof by misuse of the military as well as the allegation of collapse thereof were absolutely false, fraudulent and collusive and that there had been deliberate misrepresentation in this behalf, while it was the defence case that these allegations were substantially true and that there was no question of any misrepresentations, fraud or collusion. In the view of the High Court, the evidence did not disclose that any damage on the roof worth the name was caused by the occupying military and the subsequent conduct of the accused was such as to lead to a reasonable and necessary inference that the claim in this respect was fraudulent and the result of a conspiracy. There was no specific evidence, in the nature of contemporaneous reports or the like as to the condition of the roof (1) when it was taken over by the military authorities from the accused and (2) when it was handed back by them to the accused nor was there any direct evidence about the actual kind of use to which it was being put by the Government during this period. Held, (i) that in the absence of direct evidence, the conclusion had to be necessarily formed with reference to the assertion and counter-assertion in the correspondence between the accused and the Government and the subsequent conduct of the parties. The offences charged had, therefore, to be brought home to the accused in the light of the principles laid down by A.I.R. 1952 S.C. 343: 1952 S.C.J. 509: (1952) 2 M.L.J. 631 as applicable to such cases. Before a person could be found guilty with reference to mere circumstantial evidence, each of the circumstances relied upon must be clearly established and the proved circumstances taken together must be such as reasonably to exclude the probability of innocence; (ii) that taking all the features together, the circumstances actually made out fell far short of establishing any dishonesty, or fraud in respect of the claim for compensation due in respect of damage to the roof. There must be room for suspicion that the claim was rather overrated and that one of the accused who recommended the claim and on whose recommendation it was sanctioned, was accommodating. But this was no substitute for proof of dishonesty and fraud; (iii) that as regards the claim for compensation in respect of the alleged damages to the stock of jute stored within the godown, there was reason to think, on the evidence in the case (apart from any subsequent circumstances) that the claim had been very much inflated without any basis or foundation, though the occurrence of some damage might be true and that the question then was whether the circumstances brought forward relating to this portion of the case were such as to lead to a clear inference that this claim was fraudulent and the result of a conspiracy; (iv) that there were definite and clinching circumstances against the accused which lead to a reasonable and necessary conclusion that the claim put forward by them for compensation in respect of the alleged damage to the jute had been deliberately and fraudulently bolstered up and was the result of a mutual arrangement: 1954 Cr.L.J. 1679: A.I.R. 1954 S.C. 660.

Apart from the fact that depending upon or drawing any inference on the basis of rejected suggestions is an impossible thing for a Court to do, suggestions of complicity in fraudulently filling up a form signed in blank has to be proved by positive and acceptable evidence. It is not possible upon mere suggestions and suspicions to ask a Court to hold a state of affairs to be true suggesting the commission of more than one offence punishable under law: 13 Law Rep. 153: A.I.R. 1968 Mys. 18.

A and B, two brothers entered into partnership and started business of commission agents. Accounts were maintained by B who was in charge of account books. On death of B on 3rd November, 1957, his heirs including his eldest son H continued the business with surviving partner A till it was dissolved by mutual consent on 5th February, 1958. A instituted suit on 4th February, 1961, against H and other heirs of B for rendition of accounts of dissolved firm. A found two entries dated 5th February, 1958, in account books evidencing division of partnership and closing of business that day. It was nobody's case that the entries were deeds of dissolution of partnership. The suit as well as the first appeal was dismissed on ground of suit being time-barred. On second appeal the question was whether there was any agreement between the partners A and B that in case of death of either of them, the heirs of deceased would become partners in place of deceased, held, (i) that the entries of 5th February, 1958, showed that even after the death of B the business of the firm under the same style and name was continued by his heirs, particularly his eldest son and the surviving partner A; (ii) that from such conduct and circumstances, the existence of an agreement of the kind in question between the original partners could be inferred. There is nothing in S. 42 to indicate that the contract to which the operation of Cls. (a), (b), (c) and (d) of that section is subject, or that it should be a contract between more than two partners. A contract to continue the partnership after the death of a partner may be implied from the conduct of the parties. Though the contract must be one between the original partners, the conduct of the surviving partner and the heirs of the deceased partner after the death of partner may evidence an original contract that the partnership should not be dissolved on the death of a partner; (iii) that the suit was within time: (1969) 71 Punj.L.R. 152: A.I.R. 1969 Punj. 244.

Benefit of doubt.—To convict accused it must be such that no other conclusion excepting the guilt of accused is possible — Facts proved in case not incompatible with innocence of accused—Accused is entitled to benefit of doubt: 30 Cut.L.T. 478: (1964) 6 Ori.J.D. 231.

If there is any doubt in the evidence, the benefit of that doubt must go in favour of the accused: 1956 Pat.L.R. 434. See also A.I.R. 1965 Andh. Pra. 361; (1965) 1 Mys.L.J. 476: A.I.R. 1966 Mys. 142; 1966 Cr.L.J. 361; A.I.R. 1967 All. 204.

Prosecution evidence raising suspicion against accused — Suspicion, howsoever strong, cannot take the place of proof—Benefit of doubt should go to the accused: (1964) 2 Cr.L.J. 497: A.I.R. 1964 All. 481; A.I.R. 1965 Ori. 170: (1963) 2 Cr.L.J. 385.

Evidence and proof—Evidence of witnesses not named in complaint—Testimony of—Possession of complainant not proved—Benefit of doubt, held, could be given: 1963 B.L.J.R. 251.

Opposite party violating Court's order to hand over papers and documents to petitioner—Existence of papers and documents doubtful—Benefit of doubt must go to opposite party and he cannot be found guilty of contempt: (1963-64) 68 Cal.W.N. 330.

Dying declaration not satisfactory—Police investigation inadequate and defective—Evidence not conclusive—Benefit of doubt given to accused: A.I.R. 1970 Assam 137.

Prosecution for offences under Ss. 395 and 412, Penal Code—Suspicious circumstances —Delay in filing F.I.R. not explained—No mention of accused persons in F.I.R.—

Confession made by accused, not true—Identification by prosecution witnesses of accused persons doubtful—Benefit of doubt held rightly given: 29 Cut.L.T. 455.

Prosecution for selling adulterated milk—Delay not explained—Benefit of doubt given on that ground: 1969 Cr.L.J. 1278 (Andh. Pra.).

Trial for offence under Prevention of Food Adulteration Act—Contravention of provisions of Act and Rules alleged—Witness not examined by food inspectors—Benefit of doubt to accused: 1969 Cr.L.J. 1344: A.I.R. 1969 Bom. 353.

Prosecution under S. 9(a) — Reports of Public Analyst, conflicting—Benefit of divergence must go to accused: 1967 Cur.L.J. 411.

Accused is entitled to benefit of doubt if his version may reasonably be true though he might have failed to establish its truth—Onus on accused is not as heavy as it is on prosecution: (1967) 33 Cut.L.T. 1088.

Defective investigation by itself is not ground for throwing out prosecution case and giving benefit of doubt to accused: (1966) 32 Cut.L.T. 494.

The prosecution story was that in a quarrel that arose over putting up of a fence, the accused fired a gun at a particular person. The shot, however, missed him and struck another person who was coming from the opposite direction. The defence-story was that while the accused was sleeping in his house, some 40-50 persons belonging to the opposite party in the village tried to forcibly enter into his house and, finding no other way of rescue, the accused fired one round in self-defence. In the trial the Sessions Judge found that the deceased was shot at from a distance of about 60 feet and the question of right of private defence did not arise. In view of the fact that there was party faction in the village, and enmity between the complainant and the prosecution witnesses and the accused, and in view of the medical evidence supported by Ballistic Expert's opinion it was, however, extremely doubtful if the firing was made at a distance of 60 feets as has been tried to be proved. Held, that in the circumstance, it was not safe to rely on the evidence of the eye-witnesses and benefit of doubt could be given to the accused: I.L.R. (1959) Cut. 654.

A obtaining decree and permanent injunction against B in respect of possession of land—Sudden fight between party A and party B—Party B found to be aggressors—Larger number of injuries on party B cannot wipe out criminal liability of that party—Minor discrepancies in statements of prosecution witness—Benefit of doubt—Benefit of doubt cannot be given where totality of evidence is in favour of conviction: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 331: A.I.R. 1965 All. 417.

Non-production of documents—Effect—Benefit of doubt—In view of confession and admission by accused there was held no question of raising any reasonable doubt on non-production of documents called for by him: 1967 Cr.L.J. 1401: A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 1590.

Appreciation of evidence—Statement of one witness being only evidence to connect accused with offence—Witnesses giving different version before committing Court from that given before Sessions Court—Nothing further to connect accused with offence—Held, good ground for acquitting accused: 1967 Cr.L.J. 975: A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 1027.

In a criminal trial, benefit of doubt often plays an important part. If some of the evidence leads to a conclusion that a man is guilty and if another part of the evidence in the same case indicates that the man may not be guilty, or if two possible views of a conflicting nature can be spelt out from the entire facts of the case, the accused gets benefit of doubt: A.I.R. 1966 Cal. 388.

Accused B, approaching K, a minor married girl and suggesting her to meet him at particular place if she wants to go to her parents—Same day on receiving information from G that B is waiting for her, K leaving her parents-in-law's house to meet B at pointed place from where she was taken from place to place—Held, it cannot be said that K was not under lawful guardianship of her parents-in-law on the day of occurrence—There being no evidence that G ever met K or B thereafter or he took away K or enticed her, benefit of doubt should be given to him: (1965) 67 Punj. L.R. 628.

Prosecution of husband and wife under Ss. 302 and 201, I.P.Code, respectively—Each of them taking blame at some stages on himself or herself—Each indicating that they were justified in shooting deceased—Wife stating that she shot him when he tried to abduct her—Circumstance showing that a muzzle loading gun was used—But no evidence to show that accused was the only owner of muzzle loading gun in that village—No other evidence to pin responsibility on one of the two definitely or even to make out common intention—Assuming accused's gun was used and then put on dung heap, that by itself while creating suspicion may not point to one or the other definitely as offender—In view of wife's statement it would be a case of justification in self-defence—If her statement is rejected, nothing is left—Therefore, held, in circumstances that it was a fit case for benefit of doubt: 1969 Jab.L.J. 525: 1969 M.P.L.J. 524: 1969 Cr.L.J. 1291.

Offence under Ss. 302 and 324, Penal Code—Omission in F.I.R. as to all the weapons used and individual acts of accused—Absence of any reference to any specific overt Act, committed by accused even in inquest report—Version of witnesses in Sessions Court attributing specific acts to three accused and altogether exonerating fourth accused from attack upon accused: Held, it was a subsequent development in prosecution case—It would be improper to implicitly rely upon such version and to hold accused guilty—Accused given benefit of doubt: (1969) 2 An.L.T. 200.

Charge under S. 379, I.P. Code for committing theft of a silver waist cord from possession of a child—Accused caught hold of the child and after dashing the child against stone ran away—Subsequent missing of waist cord—Accused immediately went to police station and surrendered there—No recovery of waist cord—Accused held entitled to benefit of doubt: 1969 Mad.L.W. (Cr.) 29: (1969) 1 M.L.J. 511.

Seven accused persons—Three accused given benefit of doubt by reason of their names being not mentioned in F.I.R.—Other accused also need not be acquitted on that ground: A.I.R. 1970 Bom. 166.

Witness naming five assailants—Fact that Court gives benefit of doubt to two of them and acquits them is no reason for disbelieving testimony of witness: (1962) 1 Cr.L.J. 473: A.I.R. 1962 S.C. 424.

Accused person is entitled to benefit of reasonable doubt in matter of sentence as in matter of conviction: 1970 Cr.L.J. 91 (Goa).

19. Evidence in civil and criminal cases—Distinctin between.—"There is no difference between civil and criminal cases as to evidence; whatever is proper evidence in one case is in the other. With respect to criminal cases, if there is any doubt, one would lean in favour of a defendant, for this reason, that is not to be set right afterwards". Lawrence, J., Stone's case, (1796) 25 How. St. Tr. 1314. "There is no difference, in point of evidence, whether the case be a criminal or civil case, the same rules must apply to both." Hothem B., King v. Cator, (1802) 14 Esp. 143. "It has been solemnly decided that there is no difference between the rules of evidence in civil and criminal cases. If the rules of evidence prescribe the best course to get at truth, they must be and are the same in all cases and in all civilised countries." Best J., R. v. Burdett, (1820) 4 B. & Ald. 95. See also A.I.R. 1943 Mad. 38. The standard of proof required in criminal cases is not different from the standard of proof required in civil matters: 1957 All.L.J. 857: 1958 Cr.L.J. 324.

In a criminal case when the Court is called upon to convict a person having committed any offence, it has to satisfy itself that possibility of innocence is ruled out, but in a civil case all that is necessary to insist upon is that the proof adduced in support of a fact is such that should make a prudent man to act upon the supposition that it exists: I.L.R. (1953) Patiala 187: A.I.R. 1954 Pepsu 14.

It is well-established that in criminal proceedings facts are to be proved beyond reasonable doubt to result into a conviction; in civil proceedings, the Court is to determine the existence of facts on probability and preponderance of evidence; burden to prove shifts in civil cases but not in criminal cases: (1989) 1 Hindu L.R. 125 (P.&H.).

Civil proceedings—Finding can be rested on probabilities of the case: 1959 Ker.L.T. 1302: I.L.R. (1960) Ker. 106: A.I.R. 1960 Ker. 195.

Unlike in criminal cases, the balance of probabilities is the governing standard of proof in civil litigation. The petitioner's case for enhanced compensation based on findings in settlement report cannot be accepted just because there is no evidence on the part of the State to challenge it.

The petitioner's case for compensation will have to be judged on merits.

Held, in the instant case that petitioners are entitled to compensation for lands at 16 times the net annual yield on the basis of Verma Settlement Report, 1938: I.L.R. (1964) Cut. 785: A.I.R. 1965 Ori. 49.

Where in a suit for specific performance of an agreement to sell a share in managing agency, it is alleged that the agreement was void on the ground of its being against public policy, because the share was offered as a bribe, the burden is on them who allege, to establish the plea. They are not required to prove that fact beyond reasonable doubt as in a criminal case. The probative effects of evidence in civil and criminal cases are not always the same. In civil cases the preponderance of probability constitutes a sufficient ground for a decision but in criminal cases the prosecution has to prove the charge beyond reasonable doubt. Of course, if the facts and circumstances are such that no reasonable man would draw a particular inference from them or if the degree of probability in the case is such as to include any other hypothesis besides the one proposed to be proved, then the party who relies on a particular theory cannot be said to have discharged the onus of proof of establishing that theory. But if there is evidence strongly preponderating in favour of anyone of the theories set up, the Court is entitled to act upon it: A.I.R. 1959 Madh. Pra. 151: 1960 M.P.L.J. 334 (F.B.).

Standard of proof—Civil case involving allegation of charges of criminal or fraudulent character — Insistence on proving charges beyond reasonable doubt is wrong: A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 1734.

Evidence in civil cases is to be recorded in the mode laid down in O. 18 of the Code of Civil Procedure: (1972) 1 Cut.W.R. 318.

A fact may be taken as proved in a civil suit, though the evidence thereof may not be considered sufficient for conviction in a criminal case; in a civil suit, mere preponderance of evidence is sufficient but not in a criminal case where the prosecution must prove the charge beyond reasonable doubt. No conviction can be recorded where the prosecution story considered as a whole 'may be true' and not 'must be true': 1979 All.Cr.R. 185 (D.B.).

It is well established that the burden of proving that a member of a joint Hindu family had thrown his self-acquired property into the common stock lies on the person asserting it; this burden can only be discharged by proof that the owner had clearly expressed his intention to abandon his separate and exclusive right in favour of the members of the joint family; such intention may be expressed by words or inferred from the parties' conduct: (1974) 87 Mad.L.W. 817 (D.B.).

Income-tax Act, 1922, S. 10(2)—Burden of proving that expenditure is allowable deduction is on assessee—Burden, however, is different from proof itself: (1966) 61 I.T.R. 480 (Mad.).

20. Appreciation of evidence—General. —(See also S. 5). In the matter of appreciation of evidence, no hard and fast rule can be laid down; yet, in most cases, it is useful as a first step to find out whether the presence of the witness at the scene at the material time was probable; whether the substratum of the story narrated by the witness is consistent with the other evidence on record or the natural course of human events or the surrounding circumstances and inherent probabilities of the case or whether it will carry conviction with a prudent person. If the answers are in the affirmative, and the evidence of the witness appears to the Court to be almost flawless and free from suspicion, it may accept it without seeking corroboration from any other source. These are only broad guidelines which may often be useful and not iron-cased rules uniformly applicable in all situations: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 82: (1981) 3 S.C.C. 675. See also I.L.R. (1967) 1 Ker. 640; 1969 Cr.L.J. 467: A.I.R. 1969 Goa 40.

No hard and fast rule can be laid down about appreciation of evidence; after all, it is a question of fact; each case has to be decided on its own facts: A.I.R. 1987 S.C. 1328: (1987) 2 U.J. (S.C.) 116: (1987) 3 S.C.C. 360: 1987 Cr.L.J. 1065.

Criminal case ought to be decided on broad view of evidence and by considering salient features of the case: (1964) 2 Cr.L.J. 711: A.I.R. 1964 Pat. 561.

How the evidence adduced on both sides is to be dealt with, is a matter which rests with the Court and no fault can be found unless the appraisal of the evidence appears to be vitiated on account of wrong placing of the onus on one or the other party: 1964 B.L.J.R. 701.

Witnesses are expected to depose to what they have seen and heard and not to draw inferences from what they see; the privilege of drawing inferences is given to Courts and not to witnesses: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 775.

Evidence—Appreciation of—Duty of Judge: A.I.R. 1958 All. 293: 1958 Cr.L.J. 462.

If a witness is withheld by the prosecution, the complainant as well can bring to the notice of the Court for summoning such witness; but ordering re-trial on such a ground will seriously prejudice the defence as during the re-trial, the prosecution will get ample opportunity to fill up the lacuna. Thus, where though the prosecution had failed to produce the medical officer who conducted post-mortem examination, held, as charge against the accused could not be established beyond reasonable doubt otherwise also, no purpose will be served if there would be further direction for re-trial: 1995 Cr.L.J. 930 (Cal.).

Where the accused and the deceased in the murder case were closely related and the eye-witnesses examined-in-chief supported the prosecution version but could not be cross-examined because the defence Counsel was — as found by the Court — absent on design and the cross-examination could be effected rather late when the eye-witnesses turned hostile in their cross-examination, held, the Sessions Court rightly convicted the accused on the basis of their evidence as given in the examination-in-chief, the Court was justified in proceeding against them for perjury; such a course should be followed in similar situations to curb some manipulations: 1995 Cr.L.J. 1738 (Andh. Pra.) (D.B.).

Any information which is based on an information given by someone else has no value unless the informer who gathered the information is produced and opposite party is given an opportunity to cross-examine him. Where a question arose regarding genuineness of a report by defence witness regarding the incident which was in turn based upon information given by another person, held, since informer was neither examined nor his report in original was produced, no reliance could be placed on report of defence witness, it being based on hearsay: A.I.R. 1995 Del. 164.

Where the testimony of the first informant, on whose statement the formal F.I.R. was registered was cogent and consistent and was corroborated by other materials on the record, held, mere acquittal of some of the accused nominated by him as being present alongwith the accused persons at the time of occurrence is not enough to discredit his evidence: 1995 Cr.L.J. 2682 (S.C.).

Witnesses can and may easily perjure, but circumstances properly established rarely mislead. Witnesses are not averse to bury grains of truth in high heaps of chaff of untruth. The paramount duty of every Court is to separate the grain from the chaff on a careful and scrupulous analysis and if that is not possible give the benefit of it to the accused lest the innocent be convicted: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 215: A.I.R. 1965 Ker. 196: I.L.R. (1964) 2 Ker. 654.

Criminal trial—Duty of Court. See I.L.R. (1964) 2 Ker. 654: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 215: A.I.R. 1965 Ker. 196.

A Judge must assess the evidence by the yardstick of probabilities, its intrinsic worth and the animus of witnesses; he must not mechanically compute the evidence on record: 1974 Cr.L.J. 1120 (Ori.).

Where the parties' subsequent conduct shows that the partition effected under the Pancha's guidance was mutually accepted and acquiesced in, held, mere absence of the defendant's signature on the memorandum of partition will not invalidate the partition: A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 1119: (1975) 1 S.C.C. 556: (1975) 1 S.C.W.R. 691.

Though it is laid down in A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 804 that the evidence recorded at a late stage must be received with a pinch of salt, nevertheless each case has to be considered on its own facts: (1993) 1 D.M.C. 326 (S.C.).

Where in a case under the Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substance Act, 1985 for possessing drugs without valid documents, the prosecution had alleged that the accused was apprehended when he fell down while trying to escape on his motor-cycle, but the defence countered that in absence of any injury on his person, the case of the prosecution story of the accused having fallen down from his vehicle was hardly acceptable, held, the prosecution did not claim that the accused had sped away to some distance and had fallen down from the speeding vehicle; its case was that the accused, on seeing the Police party, tried to accelerate the speed and in the attempt fell down and then immediately stood up; the defence had no force: A.I.R. 1989 S.C. 1966.

Complainant stating that accused had inflicted injuries with sword on him—Other prosecution witnesses stating that they did not see any sword at the place of incident.

Held, that evidence of the latter being of negative character could not be taken to counteract and rebut the complainant's evidence that sword was used by the accused—The recovery of a sword containing human blood is a circumstance corroborating the statement of the complainant that he was injured by the accused with the sword: 1961 Raj.L.W. 55: (1961) 2 Cr.L.J. 430.

Criminal trial—Mob attack—Evidence of eye-witness regarding persons taking part: I.L.R. 42 Pat. 293.

Where the accused, a member of the Armed Forces, had taken a leading and prominent part in spearheading and committing the murder and his plea of alibi had also failed, held, a mis-description or omission in the promptly recorded F.I.R. about the number of shots fired, injuries on the injured witness or the accused being a military man, would not tell on the prosecution case or the statements of the eye-witnesses with regard to his participation in the crime: A.I.R. 1992 S.C. 1389: 1992 Cr.L.J. 1952.

Right of private defence—If there is a great disproportion between number of injuries inflicted on two sides, it certainly indicates that those who inflicted larger number of injuries were likely to be aggressors: 1967 Cr.L.J. 598: A.I.R. 1967 All. 204.

To bring home the offence of the criminal breach of trust, the prosecution must establish the entrustment of the property to the accused and its mis-appropriation by him: 1983 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 127 (Ori.).

Damaging statements cannot be got rid of merely by dismissing them as slips of tongue: A.I.R. 1982 Cal. 488: (1981-82) 86 Cal.W.N. 673: (1982) 1 Cal.L.J. 493.

For establishing that a school is established by a minority community, held, it is not necessary to prove that it was constructed by the community; even if a school, previously run by another organisation, is taken over by or is transferred to the Church which reorganised and managed it in conformity with Roman Catholics' ideals, it can be safely accepted as a school established by the Roman Catholics: A.I.R. 1974 Ker. 197: 1974 Ker.L.T. 78: I.L.R. (1974) 1 Ker. 137: 1974 Ker.L.J. 1.

Merely because the school was successively having a non-Christian as its Headmaster, held, that would not make it a school not established or administered by the Christian community: A.I.R. 1974 Ker. 197: 1974 Ker.L.T. 78: I.L.R. (1974) 1 Ker. 137: 1974 Ker.L.J. 1.

Where four receptacles containing about 100 packets of opium were, as per the seizure list, produced by three accused, held, it must further mention as to which receptacle was produced by which accused; if the attesting witnesses in their deposition implicate only one accused and say that he had produced all the four receptacles from inside the haystack, the story becomes absolutely unreliable; it is contradicted by the earlier documentary record to which both witnesses are parties: A.I.R. 1972 Gau. 7: 1972 Cr.L.J. 779.

Appreciation — Suit regarding land — Identification of land—Survey Plot number is important—No mention or wrong mention of Khata number makes difference: A.I.R. 1965 Pat. 279.

21. Factors in considering weight of evidence.—It cannot be said to be an axiom of law that every Court must reject examination-in-chief whenever cross-examination does not confirm it. A Court may believe any witness or any part of any witness's evidence and disbelieve any other part and it is entitled to come to the conclusion that the examination-in-chief is true and that statements in cross-examination are false: 1937 M.W.N. 986.

Low status of witness is not sufficient to discredit him: 1924 M.W.N. 445: A.I.R. 1924 P.C. 106 (P.C.).

The mere fact that a witness is a man of no means is no ground to discredit his evidence: A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 297: 36 Cr.L.J. 1307.

Where the parties to a suit are at issue on a vital question, such as the genuineness of defendant's signature to the document sued on, the safe principle is to consider which story fits in with the admitted circumstances and resulting probabilities. The Privy Council upheld the finding of the Chief Court as to the genuineness of the signature, in reversal of the decision of the first Court: I.L.R. 38 Cal. 805: 21 M.L.J. 1127: 38 I.A. 155 (P.C.).

In a dispute as to facts, great weight naturally attaches to the finding of the trial Judge: 15 Cal.W.N. 717: 10 I.C. 903 (P.C.).

The fact that a witness makes mistakes in identification is no reason for discrediting his evidence in other matters: I.L.R. 45 All. 300: A.I.R. 1923 All. 342.

In India where references to time are generally mere approximations there is large margin of honest error: 15 Bom.L.R. 297: 19 I.C. 328. See also 1994 Cr.L.J. 1206 (S.C.) (Minor inconsistency as to time).

A theory of improbability in order to prevail against positive evidence must be clear and cogent; it must be such as to justify the rejection of the positive evidence as concocted and unreliable: (1919-20) 24 Cal.W.N. 860: A.I.R. 1921 Cal. 677.

Presumption against misconduct is among the probabilities to be taken into account in estimating the value of evidence and where the character and position of the person is above reproach this probability becomes stronger. The mere fact that this or that thing in a complete transaction is improbable does not count for much as against clear and distinct evidence of reliable witnesses: I.L.R. 39 Cal. 245: 16 Cal.W.N. 266.

Illustrative cases.—The mere fact that the promissory note is stamped with a King Edward stamp does not prove that the note was executed in 1911 and not in 1915, in the absence of any evidence that there were no King Edward stamps in existence in 1915: A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 607.

Where a witness keeps quiet for many days after the occurrence and comes forward after the police had made a discovery, he is not reliable: A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 438 (2).

Without deliberately intending to tell a lie human beings are prone to believe what they wish, to confound what they believe with what they heard and to ascribe to memory what is merely the result of imagination: A.I.R. 1922 Oudh 178.

The evidence of respectable persons with special means of knowledge, owing to relationship to the parties, on the matters they depose to, should not be viewed with suspicion especially in cases where only oral evidence will ordinarily be available: 25 I.C. 660: 1 O.L.J. 383.

It is a good working rule not to act upon the evidence of persons who are vitally interested in the result of the case, unless that evidence receives corroboration. See A.I.R. 1922 Pat. 111.

Interested evidence is not necessarily false evidence: A.I.R. 1938 Sind 202: 178 I.C. 520. See also A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 629: 189 I.C. 232 (Witnesses being employee of party producing him). Where a party comes into a Court with a story, which cannot be believed in its essential details, it is impossible to rely on a part of the story for the purpose of convicting the accused: 19 Cr.L.J. 877: 47 I.C. 73.

The fact that the prosecution produces a false witness for the purpose of procuring a conviction must affect the mind of the Court as to the rest of the evidence, and when the other witnesses are easily amenable to police influence, the effect will be greater. It would be extremely unsafe for the Court to act upon any of the evidence in the case: 37 Cr.L.J. 493: A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 278.

Evidence of a person who is capable of being easily won over by either side is not entitled to any respect: A.I.R. 1936 Pesh. 12: 160 I.C. 452.

As to evidence of witnesses recorded by Commissioner, see A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 81: 176 I.C. 242.

It is not necessary to tender the evidence taken on commission formally at a trial to make it evidence in the case: (1932-33) 37 Cal.W.N. 666: A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 412.

22. Appreciation of evidence—Evidence to be weighed and not counted.—(See also Notes given under S. 134). It is the function of a Judge to arrive at a decision in civil or criminal cases, by weighing evidence and not by counting the number of witnesses examined by a party. It is the quality and not the quantity of the evidence that ought to influence the decision of a case and it is upon this fundamental maxim that S. 134 of the Evidence Act is based: 11 Mys.L.J. 468: 39 Mys.H.C.R. 141.

The conviction depends upon the veracity and the reliability of the evidence of the witnesses already examined. The evidence is not to be counted but has to be tested and weighed. It is the quality which is material. If the evidence of the witnesses examined by the prosecution is reliable, then it is not a tenable ground that the prosecution should have examined some more witnesses, encumbering the records with oral evidence: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1630: A.I.R. 1968 Tripura 57.

Mere numbers cannot be taken into account for determining the value of the evidence: 1938 All.W.R. (H.C.) 656: 1938 All.Cr.C. 122.

Appreciation — Evidence has to be weighed and not counted: 1959 An.L.T. 884: (1961) 1 Cr.L.J. 218: A.I.R. 1961 Andh. Pra. 70.

It is not enough to prove a fact that number of witnesses should assert it. Proof of a fact would depend upon the character of the witnesses, their competency to speak to the fact. It is the assurance or persuasiveness of the evidence which alone would incline a judicial mind to put any reliance on the testimony: 19 Cut.L.T. 316: A.I.R. 1954 Ori. 40.

It is elementary that the evidence of an infirm witness does not become reliable merely because it has been corroborated by a number of witnesses of the same brand; for evidence is to be weighed, not counted: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 989: 1975 U.J. (S.C.) 692: (1976) 1 S.C.C. 37.

Neither the number of witnesses examined nor the quantity of evidence adduced but it is the quality of the evidence that counts: (1982) 1 S.C.C. 218: 1983 M.L.J. (Cr.) 405: A.I.R. 1983 S.C. 126; 1986 M.P.L.J. 652 (D.B.); testimony of a single witness may be sufficient if his evidence is found to be honest and trustworthy and suffers from no infirmities: 1980 Rajdhani L.R. 126: I.L.R. (1979) 2 Del. 302 (D.B.).

Witnesses have to be weighed, not counted; in human affairs, quality matters more than the quantity; an accused may justly be convicted even on the evidence of a single eye-witness provided it is convincing and appears to be truthful: 1976 Kash.L.J. 253: 1976 Cr.L.J. 1310; 1982 Cr.L.J. 1702 (Ker.); 1995 Cr.L.J. 1160 (Raj.).

The evidence of an otherwise infirm witness does not become reliable merely because it is corroborated by a number of witnesses; evidence is weighed, not counted: 1978 Raj.L.W. 298 (D.B.).

The evidence of a single eye-witness, especially when corroborated by medical evidence of autopsy and other witnesses who had actually come to the spot soon after the deceased was stabbed cannot be rejected as unreliable; his evidence can neither be considered wholly unacceptable nor wholly impeachable; it has to be considered in the light of the features of the case which should put the Court on its guard; though it is not the principle of law that a conviction cannot be based on the testimony of a single witness, yet it is a well known principle of criminal jurisprudence that, before convicting the accused on the testimony of a single witness, the Court must have implicit faith and reliance on his testimony; but where a single witness, not an eye-witness, was interested, hostile, unreliable, infirm and discrepant, the accused is entitled to the benefit of doubt and acquittal: 1981 Mad.L.W. (Cr.) 237.

It is open to a Judge to rest his finding on the solitary testimony of a single witness whom he found to be credible even if he had a personal interest in the litigation: (1958) 60 Punj.L.R. 49: A.I.R. 1958 Punj. 164.

It is not the law that a fact cannot be proved by the evidence of a single witness. If there is nothing intrinsically unbelievable in the evidence of a particular witness, the Court can well rely upon his testimony and find the facts deposed to by him as proved: (1967) 33 Cut.L.T. 640: I.L.R. (1967) Cut. 616.

The law is well settled that the evidence of a single witness, if believed, would be sufficient to prove a fact. This is because the evidence has to be weighed and not counted. The qualitative and not quantitative character of the evidence is what the Act stresses. The law is also well settled that the evidence of a witness need not be necessarily true in all respects. It may be partly true and partly untrue. It is for the Courts to separate truth from untruth. The maxim 'falsus in uno falsus in omnibus' has not received general acceptance by the Courts in our country. Untruth on a major point would doubtless shake the credit of a witness but not necessarily on a minor point: 1969 Cr.L.J. 1393: A.I.R. 1969 Goa 116.

Legally there can be no objection in basing the conviction of the accused on the sole testimony of a witness provided he is above reproach and entitled to full credit. But where there was bad blood between the parties from before the occurrence and litigation both civil and criminal was going on between them, complainant's failure to promptly lodge a report at the police station, omission of the names of the accused from the report, omission to mention his wife's presence at the place of occurrence in the report and the allegation of his being relieved of a wrist watch and ring all cast serious doubt on his veracity. Held, on facts that the convictions were based on evidence which was not on record and hence the convictions were set aside: 1968 Cr.L.J. 378: 1968 Raj.L.W. 35: A.I.R. 1968 Raj. 63.

Where, in a criminal trial, there was only one prosecution witness who stated about the recovery of non-duty paid ganja from the possession of the accused but his evidence was corroborated by the confessional statement made by the accused and recorded by another prosecution-witness, the contention that conviction ought not to have been based upon the testimony of one witness alone was not upheld: 1957 B.L.J.R. 149.

In criminal cases, it is the weight of the evidence and not the number of the witnesses, which the Court has and ought to consider: 63 I.C. 407: 24 O.C. 225. Per Rowland, J.—Evidence needs to be not merely enumerated but weighed; the safe principle is to consider which story fits in with the admitted circumstances and resulting probabilities. The real test for either accepting or rejecting evidence is how consistent the story is with itself, how it stands the test of cross-examination and how far it fits in with the rest of the evidence and the circumstances of the case. If witnesses are prima facie interested or dis-interested, or if they have changed or developed their story from time to time, these are also matters that ought to be regarded: I.L.R. 21 Pat. 854.

It is improper for Judge to tell the jury in his charge that "the law is, the more heinous is the offence the more rigid or stricter the proof shall be." That is not a correct view of the law. The law is the same whether the offence is heinous or not; the standard of proof is exactly the same, namely, that the evidence should be such as to lead a reasonable mind to a satisfactory conclusion that the offence has been brought to the accused: I.L.R. 21 Pat. 865.

There is no provision in the Indian law requiring more than one witness to prove any fact: 1937 A.M.L.J. 134.

A test to assess the credibility of evidence is whether the evidence is inherently probable and whether the conduct of the prosecution witnesses is such as would invest them with any measure of veracity. A witness who has something in his knowledge vitally concerning the matter of enquiry cannot be believed if he does not mention it at the time when he is expected to do so: 41 P.L.R. J. & K. 11.

Even an unreliable witness may not be false; and if the Police have trumped up one witness or two or has embroidered the story to give it a credible look, that by itself cannot defeat justice if there is clear and unimpeachable evidence of the accused being guilty; even if the case against the accused hangs on the evidence of a single eye-witness, it may be enough to sustain conviction based on sterling testimony of a competent, honest man although as a rule of prudence the Courts call for corroboration; a platitude it is, but witnesses have to be weighed and not counted: A.I.R. 1973 S.C. 2622.

Conviction can be based on testimony of a single credible witness—Unless required by statute corroboration of his evidence should not be insisted upon, except where it is required as a rule of prudence—Single witness, a soda vendor, having some convictions for petty offences—This does not lessen the credibility of his evidence: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1362 (Ker.).

Misapprehension implies a positive and demonstrable mistake or misunderstanding; whereas mis-appreciation of evidence is more subjective and by no means so capable of logical demonstration: I.L.R. (1938) Nag. 442: A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 394.

23. Corroboration.—There is no rule of law compelling a Court to accept uncorroborated testimony of any party: (1979) 1 Ren. L.R. 290 (Del.).

Corroboration is not an absolute requirement except for prudence and caution. See 1989 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 218 (Ori.).

Corroboration renders other evidence more probable: 1980 All.L.J. 674 (D.B.).

Corroboration, in order to be of any value, must be on material particulars and the facts relied on for corroboration must be established by reliable and independent evidence. These facts must be such as to lend assurance to the crucial issue in question: 1962 Jab.L.J. 28: 1961 M.P.L.J. 1361.

Evidence is not sufficient to constitute corroboration if it is such as itself requires corroboration: 1970 Cr.L.J. 91 (Goa).

The testimony of a witness, though given traditionally on oath, has still to be judged by the Court on the touchstone of the probabilities of the case and conduct of the witness; if there is something inherently improbable, no question of seeking corroboration can arise; the acceptability of a witness's testimony is not determined merely because it is given on oath; the sanctity of oath is not always recognised by the witnesses. If the Court accepts a testimony merely for its having been given on oath, the Court would be failing in its duty of testing the veracity of evidence given in the Court: (1988) 1 Bom.C.R. 92 (D.B.).

The evidence of a witness who shifts his stand requires corroboration by other reliable evidence, at least in material particulars: 1976 Cr.L.J. 228. See also 1973 Cr.L.J. 1880 (Madh. Pra.).

It is not necessary that there should be independent confirmation of every material circumstance in the sense that the independent evidence in the case, apart from the testimony of the complainant or the accomplice, should itself be sufficient to maintain conviction. The independent evidence must not only corroborate that the crime was committed but must in some way reasonably connect or tend to connect the accused with it by confirming in some material particular that the accused committed the crime. The corroboration must also come from independent sources and lastly the corroboration need not be by direct evidence that the accused committed the crime. It is sufficient if it is merely circumstantial evidence of his connection with the crime. The nature of corroboration of the evidence of a witness from that of an accomplice is different. The standard of corroboration in the case of a witness is not as strict as it is in the case of an accomplice or an approver: I.L.R. (1962) Cut. 726: (1963) 2 Cr.L.J. 294: A.I.R. 1963 Ori. 144.

Criminal trial—Even evidence which is not completely reliable can be acted upon when corroborated by reliable evidence: 1966 Cr.L.J. 1363: 1966 All.L.J. 1046: A.I.R. 1966 All. 590.

Corroboration evidence—Principles of—Not applicable to rape cases—As a matter of prudence, however, Courts insist upon the need of corroboration: 1967 Cr.L.J. 922: A.I.R. 1967 Raj. 159.

Evidence, appreciation of—Statement of one partly reliable witness can be corroborated by statement of more than one similar witness—Partly reliable and partly unreliable witnesses—Corroboration by independent evidence not required and Court may act on circumstances lending assurance to testimony of witnesses: I.L.R. (1965) 15 Raj. 129: (1965) 1 Cr.L.J. 219: A.I.R. 1965 Raj. 32.

Where the witness is neither wholly reliable nor wholly unreliable the Court seeks corroboration from some independent evidence or from circumstances. There can be no corroboration of a false or doubtful witness by another witness of the same character: A.I.R. 1960 All. 585: 1960 Cr.L.J. 1276: 1960 All.L.J. 361.

A witness who is partly reliable and partly unreliable cannot be relied upon without adequate corroboration on material particulars by independent evidence: 1962 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 224. See also 1989 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 188 (Ker.).

It is not possible to have corroboration by one witness in identical terms with the testimony of another; the proper course is to read the witnesses' evidence as a whole to find out whether there was corroboration on material aspects: A.I.R. 1985 Mad. 321: (1985) 98 Mad.L.W. 248: (1985) 2 M.L.J. 100 (D.B.).

It is generally not easy to find witnesses on whose testimony implicit reliance can be placed; it is always advisable to test their evidence on the anvil of objective circumstances appearing in the case: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 1936.

The complainant in a trap case, being an interested witness, needs to be corroborated in some material particulars though corroboration on all material aspects should not

Murder trial—Corroboration of witness who deposes as to material facts alleged by prosecution is desirable and in some cases necessary: 1967 Cr.L.J. 357: A.I.R. 1967 Goa 21 (F.B.).

24. Examination of only material witness.—(See also S. 114, Illus. (g)). The Evidence Act does not provide that any particular number of witnesses should be examined in proof of any fact and therefore, a conviction can be based even on the solitary testimony of a single witness provided that witness is believed by the Court. This principle will generally hold good when the fact to which he deposes is not within the knowledge of anyone else or when the incident or the occurrence is not witnessed by anybody else. But when there are others equally respectable and disinterested who have witnessed the occurrence, which is in issue and when those witnesses or at least some of them are not examined in corroboration of the evidence of the other witness and no explanation is offered for their non-examination, generally it is unsafe to rely on the uncorroborated testimony of a single witness in a case of this type where the liberty of the subject is at stake. The non-examination of the other material witnesses, though available, will very much weaken the evidence of the single witness, however respectable he may be: I.L.R. (1956) Mys. 118: A.I.R. 1956 Mys. 51.

Evidence—Prosecution not required to produce all witnesses—But must produce witnesses essential to unfolding of the narrative: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 499: A.I.R. 1965 Him. Pra. 49.

The prosecution need not examine all the witnesses; it is sufficient if it examines the witnesses whose evidence is essential to the "unfolding of the narrative": A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 1586: (1971) 2 S.C.C. 42. It does not require that all eye witnesses should necessarily be called: A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 701: (1976) 4 S.C.C. 348. But non-examination of material witness without assigning any acceptable and convincing reason may cast serious reflection on the propriety of the trial itself: 1976 Cr.L.J. 1504 (Mad.).

Once a witness examined on oath by the prosecution was believed and his evidence was found trustworthy by the Court, held, non-examination of further witnesses would be of no effect. [1977 Cr.L.J. 642 (S.C.) and 1979 Cr.L.J. 917 (S.C.), Rel. on]: 1981 Raj.L.W. 150: 1982 Cr.L.J. 36; A.I.R. 1970 Bom. 166.

The prosecution is only required to produce such witnesses who assist in unfolding the prosecution story and any other category of witnesses who do not assist in unfolding the prosecution story would not be necessary witnesses. Multiplicity in examination of witnesses, who do not in any manner add to or subtract from what has been stated by the witnesses is always to be avoided: 1979 Chand. L.R. (Cr.) 68: 1979 Sim.L.C. 371 (D.B.).

If the prosecution's evidence is reliable and trustworthy, any infirmity arising out of non-examination of other witnesses does not affect the credibility of the witness already examined: 1979 W.L.N. (U.C.) 252 (Raj.) (D.B.).

Where the prosecution gave up certain prosecution witnesses for having been won over by the defence, held, their non-examination would not affect the probative value of the evidence of other prosecution witnesses: A.I.R. 1989 S.C. 1456: 1989 Cr.L.J. 1466.

No doubt, one who reaches the spot after the occurrence may be treated as an independent witness and his evidence may be worth consideration; but his not being examined will not adversely tell upon the prosecution version supported by otherwise trustworthy and reliable evidence: (1992-1) 40 B.L.J.R. 436 (D.B.).

Non-examination of material witness throws doubt over the case of the prosecution—Cr.P.Code (1898), S. 367: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1390 (Manipur).

Non-examination of a person who could not give any material evidence is not fatal: A.I.R. 1992 S.C. 1602: 1992 Cr.L.J. 2421.

Non-examination of witnesses other than eye-witnesses, held, does not affect the prosecution's case: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 1173: (1979) 4 S.C.C. 332.

The law laid down in A.I.R. 1978 S.C. 1558 is clear and manifest; it is not important as to who were not examined; it is more important whether the witnesses actually examined should be believed: (1989) 2 Bom.C.R. 475 (D.B.).

The witnesses essential to the unfolding of the narrative on which the prosecution is based must be called by the prosecution; whether the effect of their testimony is for or against the prosecution case is of no consequence: (1987-2) 28 Guj.L.R. 878 (D.B.).

If the evidence of two eye-witnesses is believed, it is not necessary to multiply witnesses to prove the case; thus, the non-examination of a third witness, also injured in the occurrence, cannot cast any doubt on the prosecution case: A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 184: 1980 U.J. (S.C.) 70: (1980) 3 S.C.C. 55.

Examination of witnesses—Murder case —Child, a daughter of accused, said to be sleeping at time of occurrence—Child also staying with accused after occurrence—Prosecution's failure to examine child—Whether proper: 1967 Cr.L.J. 1023: A.I.R. 1967 Manipur 11.

Prosecution's case cannot be thrown out merely because of its inability to produce independent witnesses: (1988-2) 29 Guj.L.R. 823: A.I.R. 1988 S.C. 696; A.I.R. 1988 S.C. 1998.

If the evidence adduced by the prosecution is found to be reliable, held, non-examination of witnesses of locality would by itself not render the accused's conviction unsustainable in law: 1995 Cr.L.J. 2583 (Bom.).

The question of examining independent witnesses assumes importance only when the Court has a genuine doubt about the reliability of the witnesses already examined; such witnesses are supposed to give an independent, dis-interested version which can corroborate or contradict the witnesses already examined and facilitating the Court's task in appreciating the overall evidence in proper perspective; the question of examining independent witnesses ultimately pertains to the satisfaction of the Court's judicial conscience. It is well known that corroboration is merely a rule of prudence, not a rule of law. It is a rule which must be present to the mind of every Court while appreciating evidence in criminal trials; but if the Court feels safe and secure in accepting and relying upon evidence of a witness, it need not seek for its corroboration examination of independent witnesses: (1990-2) 31 Guj.L.R. 1215 (D.B.).

Failure to bring independent witnesses of an offence committed in rural areas, held, should not be treated as an infirmity; it would be unrealistic to hold that the evidence actually adduced should be disbelieved on that count: 1981 Raj.L.W. 150: 1982 Cr.L.J. 36.

Where the only eye-witnesses examined in a murder case were the brother and maternal first cousin of the deceased attacked at 9.00 a.m. in the chowk and despite the presence of other persons nearby in the shops, the Patwarkhana and the Gurudwara none else was examined and their testimony abounded in gross contradictions and their conduct was wholly against the course of human nature, held, such evidence could not be relied upon to hold the accused persons guilty of murder. However, two accused who in the course of their examination under S. 313 of the Code of Criminal Procedure admitted that they had inflicted injuries on the person of the deceased with hockey and gandasi and the injuries so inflicted being sufficient in ordinary course of nature to cause the death, they were convicted for murder under Ss. 302/34 of the Indian Penal Code; their statements amounted to evidence. [A.I.R. 1953 S.C. 468, Rel. on]: 1995 Cr.L.J. 1333 (Raj.) (D.B.).

Where the eye-witnesses' presence at the thickly populated scene of occurrence was not natural but doubtful and no independent local witness was examined and the prosecution version was materially different from the deceased's dying declaration and even the names of the accused in the dying declaration were also different and there was no mention of the so-called eye-witnesses having seen the occurrence and the injuries on the accused were also not explained by the prosecution, held, the accused was rightly acquitted: A.I.R. 1989 S.C. 1519. See also 1979 Cr.L.J. 236 (All.) [Overruled on another point in 1981 Cr.L.J. 379 (All.) (F.B.)].

As it is well known that in case of Police Nakabandi, it may take hours to get any result of the Nakabandi; a normal citizen would not agree to spend his time and energy in such police pursuits and, therefore, witnesses available being Police Officers or being under their influence cannot be disbelieved for that reason only: (1976) 78 Punj.L.R. 288.

In a matrimonial cause under S. 13 of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1956, the wife, allegedly beaten by the husband inside the house, has no independent corroborative evidence; its witnesses by and large would be the husband's family members or neighbour or servants: (1983) 2 D.M.C. 77: 1983 Rajdhani L.R. 729 (Del.).

Major and minor contradictions in evidence of witnesses—Non-examination of independent witness in case of minor discrepancy—Effect. See (1965) 1 Cr.L.J. 580: A.I.R. 1965 Pat. 176.

Where on complaint of a person, accused in four criminal cases, a trap was laid 10 days after the payment of Rs. 2 as bribe to a bench clerk in Court and another two rupees paid to him by the complainant were recovered from the clerk after taking him to the adjoining room after about 20 minutes without taking an independent witness from the Court hall or the next room, held, in appreciating evidence, the background should not be forgotten; though the panch witness corroborated the complainant but the delay in effecting the recovery, the failure to examine independent witnesses admittedly available in the Court hall and the next room to which the accused was taken, render the entire prosecution case to be unacceptable: A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 1558.

26. Position of Trial and Appellate Court.—An appellate tribunal may bring its knowledge of life and business to bear even in cases where in the lower Court contemporary communications and course of business are used, and it can say that evidence given about them at the trial cannot be true: A.I.R. 1915 P.C. 50: 34 I.C. 273 (P.C.).

In a matter of appreciation of evidence and the credibility of witness the opinion of the trial Judge should not be lightly disturbed on appeal: I.L.R. 39 Bom. 386: 42 I.A. 110: 28 M.L.J. 593 (P.C.). Also see I.L.R. 43 Cal. 707: 31 M.L.J. 1: 43 I.A. 73 (P.C.); A.I.R. 1941 Bom. 129: I.L.R. (1941) Bom. 211; A.I.R. 1943 Pesh. 29: 207 I.C. 342; 28 Cal.L.J. 306: 48 I.C. 561; I.L.R. 39 All. 426; 39 I.C. 666; 27 I.C. 276: 20 Cal.L.J. 501; I.L.R. 1 Rang. 461: A.I.R. 1923 P.C. 156: 46 M.L.J. 334 (P.C.).

Appreciation of evidence and credibility of witnesses—Opinion of Trial Judge has to be given due weight: 1969 Cr.L.J. 1393: A.I.R. 1969 Goa 116.

There are four ways by which a trial Court can hold a witness unreliable: (a) the witness's statement is inherently improbable or contrary to the course of nature; (b) the witness's deposition contains mutually contradictory or inconsistent passages; (c) the witness is found to be a bitter enemy of the opposite party and therefore, possesses ample motive for wishing him harm; (d) the witness's demeanour whilst under examination is found abnormal or unsatisfactory (a contingency provided for by S. 363, Cr.P.Code). With regard to items (a), (b) and (c) above, the Court of appeal in evaluating the testimony of a witness is not at all in an inferior position compared to the trial Court, but may stand in a position of greater advantage over the trial Court, for it can view the evidence of the witness concerned more objectively and so is in a better position to decide the question of his credibility. It is only in respect of item (d) that the trial Court can be deemed to be in a more favourable position, for it alone has the advantage of watching the demeanour of the witness whilst in the witness-box and can, if it so chooses, make a note about the demeanour. The statutory definition of 'proof' in S. 3, Evidence Act combined with the above analysis would go to show that when the trial Court as a result of its observation of the demeanour of a witness reaches a certain conclusion on the credibility of the witness and thereupon arrives at a finding of fact, that finding must be given great weight by the appeal Court; but if the trial Court's assessment is based on one or more of items (a), (b) and (c) above, there is no legitimate reason why the Court of appeal should not after taking into account the matters before it including the reasons advanced by the trial Court, find a fact 'proved' and thereby upset a finding on that point by the trial Court: A.I.R. 1957 All. 53.

The statement of the Judge, who presided at a trial, whether it be in a criminal or a civil case is, as to what has taken place at the trial, conclusive. But a distinction must be drawn between what is part of the record of the Court and a report submitted in response to or for the purpose of eliciting the truth of an allegation contained in an application for transfer or in an affidavit supporting it. Such a report to the superior Court does not partake of the nature of the record of the Court and has no incontrovertible quality attached to it. Such a report does not partake of the character of a judicial proceeding; it is essentially administrative in character. It can be contradicted and can even be disbelieved for sufficient reasons. It is a different matter that ordinarily weight would be attached to a statement of the presiding officer of a Court. No doubt in such cases there is the possibility of the Magistrate being embarrassed but it is no unqualified duty of the superior Court to protect subordinate Courts from such embarrassment; it can never be at the cost of justice. Where a superior Court has to ascertain the truth of an allegation, no avenue can be shut out which might lead it to the truth: 1963 Jab.L.J. 314: (1963) 1 Cr.L.J. 820 (Madh. Pra.).

Appreciation of evidence — Position of trial and appellate Court — Factors to be considered: A.I.R. 1957 All. 53.

Appellate Court — Remarks regarding demeanour of witness, recording of—Non-compliance with rule—Effect: 1968 Ker.L.J. 123.

Where oral evidence is crucial and the trial Court had come to a finding after observing the witnesses' demeanour, held, the appellate Court would not interfere, notwithstanding some discrepancies therein: A.I.R. 1991 Andh. Pra. 47.

The highest judicial mandate in Sarju Prasad, A.I.R. 1951 S.C. 120 and Madhusudan, A.I.R. 1983 S.C. 114 lays down that primacy must be attached to the trial Court's opinion on the witnesses' credibility; the appellate Court must be very slow in discarding evidence of any witness in appeal who had been found reliable and accepted by the trial Court: A.I.R. 1987 Madh. Pra. 244: 1987 Jab.L.J. 462: 1987 M.P.L.J. 719.

The uniform practice in the matter of appreciation of evidence is that if the trial Court has given cogent and detailed reasons for not accepting the testimony of a witness, the appellate Court in all fairness ought to deal with those reasons before proceeding to form a contrary opinion: A.I.R. 1972 S.C. 1716.

If a trial Court or the first appellate Court does not consider it necessary to discuss in detail any relevant evidence on record, held, it should better indicate its reasons in short to that effect so that the second appellate Court is not required to probe into the matter like a first Court of appeal: A.I.R. 1978 Ori. 125.

In appraisal of oral evidence, the trial Court's opinion carries great importance because it had the opportunity to look to the demeanour of the witnesses; thus, but for cogent reasons, normally the appellate Court does not disturb the trial Court's findings based on oral evidences: (1990-2) 38 B.L.J.R. 1171; 1979 Raj.L.W. 103; A.I.R. 1973 Mys. 205; 1973 Cr.L.R. 475 (Bom.); 1980 M.L.J. (Cr.) 793; 1971 W.L.N. 360 (Raj.) (D.B.).

Evidence considered and accepted by the original Court, cannot be interfered with by the appellate Court, when it is supported by documentary evidence: A.I.R. 1991 Andh. Pra. 47.

Merely because the trial Court had seen the witnesses, watched their demeanour and accepted their evidence will not prevent the appellate Court from re-appreciating and disbelieving their evidence: (1994) 1 M.L.J. 44 (D.B.).

The question whether the plaintiff was a son of a particular person or not is a question of fact; it cannot be agitated in second appeal unless it satisfies the condition therefor set out in S. 100 of the Code of Civil Procedure: 1983 All.W.C. 87 (Rev.).

27. Maxim — 'Falsus in uno falsus in omnibus'.—The maxim 'falsus in uno falsus in omnibus' has not received general acceptance in different jurisdictions in India; nor has this maxim come to occupy the status of a rule of law. It is merely a rule of caution. All that it amounts to is that in such cases the testimony may be disregarded and not that it must be disregarded. The doctrine merely involves question of weight of evidence which a Court may apply in a given set of circumstances, but it is not what may be called 'a mandatory rule of evidence': A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 366, followed in A.I.R. 1957 Mad. 750: 1957 Cr.L.J. 1298 (1); A.I.R. 1958 S.C. 813; I.L.R. (1962) Cut. 303. The principle is expressed in another form by saying that the Court must be careful to examine the entire evidence and must distinguish the chaff from the grain and must not take to an easy course of discarding the entire prosecution case merely because a part of the story is false: 28 Cut.L.T. 523: I.L.R. (1963) Cut. 67: (1963) 1 Cr.L.J. 550; 1994 Cr.L.J. 3624 (All.).

The maxim 'falsus in uno falsus in omnibus' is a maxim of ancient origin which is now not implicitly followed by Court in the appreciation of evidence. It is the duty of the Court to sift the evidence and separate the truth from the falsehood, if it can: A.I.R. 1923 Rang. 30. It is generally unsafe to apply the doctrine 'falsus in uno falsus in omnibus' to evidence of witnesses in India. Where the evidence is substantially correct, simply because there are deliberate falsehoods in it, it should not be totally rejected: A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 269; 1969 B.L.J.R. 932.

The fact that a witness has been disbelieved on one point is no reason for discarding his evidence altogether. The fact that certain witnesses have not been believed against some of the accused is no reason for not believing them against others: A.I.R. 1942 Oudh 60.

Evidence which is unreliable must be deemed to be unreliable against all the accused persons. It cannot be said to be unreliable as against certain accused only and reliable as against others when the witnesses are more or less the same: 1939 M.W.N. 879: 50 Mad.L.W. 557.

Legal maxim 'falsus in uno falsus in omnibus' (false in one thing, false in every thing) not applicable in India—Indian Court can reject a part while accepting the rest of the testimony of a witness; such rejection and acceptance of the evidence is not an error of law: 1966 All.W.R. (H.C.) 57: A.I.R. 1966 All. 515; 1995 Cr.L.J. 2583 (Bom.).

There is no rule of law that the testimony of a witness must either be believed in its entirety or not at all. It is really a matter to be considered on the facts and circumstances of each case. It is fully competent for a Court, for good and cogent reasons, to accept one part of the statement of a witness and reject another: (1960) 62 Punj.L.R. 413: A.I.R. 1960 Punj. 395.

The maxim 'falsus in uno falsus in omnibus' is not an absolute rule of law, but a rule of caution. Even if there is anything untrue in the evidence of a witness, the true portions can be believed and the other portions disbelieved: 1960 Ker.L.T. 965.

The principle of 'falsus in uno falsus in omnibus' does not apply to criminal trials; the Court is duty bound to separate the grain from the chaff instead of rejecting the prosecution case on such general grounds: A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 957: (1980) 1 S.C.C. 201; 1979 Cr.L.J. 603 (Karn.) (D.B.); (1983) 55 Cut.L.T. 472.

The maxim 'falsus in uno falsus in omnibus' is not applicable in India; thus, a witness cannot be branded liar and his evidence discarded on the sole ground that a part of his testimony is not reliable; besides as held in Sarju Prasad, A.I.R. 1951 S.C. 120 and Madhusudan, A.I.R. 1983 S.C. 114 primacy must be attached to the trial Court's opinion on credibility of a witness; the appellate Court must be very slow in discarding in appeal the evidence of any witness found reliable and accepted by the trial Court: A.I.R. 1987 Madh. Pra. 244: 1987 M.P.L.J. 719: 1987 Jab.L.J. 462.

The maxim 'falsus in uno falsus in omnibus', cannot be applied to this country. Most of the witnesses for one party while giving out substantial truth introduce one or two falsehoods or exaggerations into their statements. If the Courts were to act upon the above maxim it will be very difficult, if not impossible, to decide majority of cases correctly. The Courts are, therefore, called upon to very carefully scrutinize the evidence produced before them and separate chaff from the grain and sift out truth from falsehood: 1958 Raj.L.W. 505.

The maxim 'falsus in uno falsus in omnibus' (false in one thing, false in every thing) is neither a rule of law nor of practice. It is not a sound rule to apply in the circumstances of this country; where a witness has given unreliable evidence on certain particulars, the Court is duty bound to scrutinise the rest of his evidence with care and caution; if found trustworthy and the substratum of the prosecution case on the whole remains unimpaired, the Court should uphold the prosecution case to the extent it is safe and trustworthy: 1977 Cr.L.J. 59: 1976 Raj.L.W. 345: I.L.R. (1976) 26 Raj. 499 (F.B.); 1976 Cr.L.J. 39: 1975 Raj.L.W. 231; A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 21; 1974 All.Cr.R. 215.

The maxim 'falsus in uno falsus in omnibus' is neither a sound rule of law nor a rule of practice. Hardly one comes across a witness whose evidence does not contain a grain of untruth or at any rate exaggerations, embroideries or embellishments; it is the Court's duty to scrutinise the evidence carefully by separating grains from the chaff. But the Court cannot obviously disbelieve the substratum or the material parts of the prosecution evidence and reconstruct a story of its own out of the rest: A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 277; (1976) 2 Cal.L.J. 113; 1972 Cr.L.J. 1302 (S.C.);

The maximum 'falsus in uno falsus in omnibus' cannot be mechanically applied; merely because the evidence of some prosecution witnesses was found unsafe for convicting the co-accused, the whole body of their testimony is not to be rejected; only the Court should be on its guard and should carefully scrutinise their evidence: A.I.R. 1993 S.C. 777: (1992) 2 S.C.J. 599: (1993) 2 S.C.R. 794: (1992) 3 S.C.C. (Supp.) 161: 1993 Cr.L.J. 426; A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 902: 1974 Cr.L.J. 755: (1974) 4 S.C.C. 479.

Witnesses cannot be branded as liars in toto nor can their testimony be rejected outright even if some parts of their testimony is demonstrably incorrect or doubtful; an astute Judge can separate the grains of acceptable truth from the chaff of exaggerations and improbabilities; sound commonsense demands that in assessing the worth of what necessarily is imperfect human testimony, the maxim 'falsus in uno falsus in omnibus' should not be mechanically applied: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 308: (1974) 3 S.C.C. 704.

Witnesses have a general tendency not to speak the whole truth; often they exaggerate and embellish; the entire fabric of their testimony is polluted obliging the Courts to disengage truth from falsehood by sifting the entire evidence as also the attending circumstances; and thus arrive at the witnesses' intrinsic credibility; there is no set measure for the same; each case depends upon its own facts and peculiarities; but only such infirmities would not render the testimony unreliable which reach the very core of the prosecution case: 1979 Cr.L.J. 727 (Del.) (D.B.).

The maxim 'falsus in uno falsus in omnibus' is not to be blindly invoked in appraising evidence in Courts where witnesses seldom tell the whole truth but often resort to exaggerations, embellishments and 'padding up' to support a story, howsoever true in the main; the Court has to disengage the truth from falsehood and to accept what it finds to be true and reject the rest. It is only where truth and falsehood are inextricably mixed up, polluting beyond refinement down to the core and the entire fabric of the narration given by a witness that the Court may reject his evidence in toto. There is no hard and fast rule that simply because the prosecution witnesses did not explain injuries on the accused's person at the earliest stage, their entire evidence should be discarded: 1979 Chand. Cr.C. 166 (Punj.); (1979) 81 Punj.L.R. 444.

It is rare to come across a testimony without a fringe or embroidery of untruth, even if it is true in the main; it is for the Court to separate the grain from the chaff; to accept what appears to be true and reject the rest; if a testimony is tainted to the core, falsehood and truth being inextricably intertwined, the Court should discard it in toto. But merely because some witnesses did not admit or expressed ignorance about certain collateral facts is hardly a ground to reject their ocular account when there was general agreement among them about the substratum of the prosecution case: 1981 Cr.L.J. 23.

Merely because one portion of a witness's testimony is not reliable is no ground to brush aside his entire evidence: A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 1453: 1976 M.L.J. (Cr.) 140: (1975) 4 S.C.C. 257.

Maxim not of unqualified applicability: A.I.R. 1968 Pat. 481. See also 1963 Ker.L.T. 292: 1963 Ker.L.J. 369: 1964 M.L.J. (Cr.) 347: (1964) 1 Cr.L.J. 493.

As to appreciation of evidence, see 45 M.L.J. 438: 23 Cal.W.N. 589 (P.C.). Per Young, C.J.—Where the falsehood is merely an embroidery to a story, that would not be enough to discredit the whole of the witness's evidence. But if the falsehood is on a major point in the case, or if one of the essential circumstances of the story told is clearly unfounded, this is enough to discredit the witnesses altogether: (1940) 42 Punj.L.R. 570: A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 457. It may be that sometimes prosecution witnesses go a little further in favour of the prosecution than they ought to have gone and try to exonerate themselves but their whole testimony cannot be thrown out simply because they have been responsible for a little embroidery to a story. The entire evidence has to be read with great care and falsehood should be sifted from truth, chaff separated from grain and Court should try to come to the truth on a careful and judicial consideration of the evidence: 1959 Raj.L.W. 35.

Evidence of a witness cannot be discarded altogether merely because he deposes falsely on one point; if the witness is reliable on other points, his evidence thereon may be accepted; but if testimony comprises of the bulk of falsehood inextricably mixed with traces of truth here and there, held, it can be disbelieved in toto. [(1965) 1 Cr.L.J. 226 (S.C.), Foll.]: 1982 Cr.L.J. 654 (Madh. Pra.).

It is now well settled that the Court has in every case to appraise evidence to determine the extent of its acceptability; merely because the Court considers it unsafe to rely on one part of a witness's testimony, it does not necessarily follow as a matter of law that it must discard it in all other respects; experience shows that interested witnesses have the tendency to exaggerate the guilt of the other party; imperfection of human memory and power of observation is also there; the Court has to sift evidence with care in each case and fully consider all relevant and material circumstances before deciding as to which part of the testimony it accepts and which it rejects: (1971) 2 S.C.W.R. 614: A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 2505.

It cannot be said that witness who tells lies on one point should not be believed on the other point. The only condition is that in such a case he can be believed if there is corroboration. It is a settled law that a witness can be believed on a part of the story if there is corroboration: 1967 M.P.L.J. 680: 1967 Jab.L.J. 504. See also S. 3, Note 29, supra.

Where a part of the evidence of a witness is disbelieved, the Court may act on the rest of his testimony provided it is unblemished and untainted; the Court has, thus, power to believe one part of a witness's evidence and disbelieve the other part; it may accept the testimony of some witnesses against one accused and may not accept it against the other: 1983 Raj.L.W. 639.

Court has right to disbelieve part of a witness's evidence and to believe part thereof: (1968-69) 73 Cal.W.N. 877: A.I.R. 1970 Cal. 292.

Merely because some accused are acquitted on the self-same prosecution evidence is by itself no ground to throw out the entire case. The maxim 'falsus in uno falsus in omnibus' (false in one thing, false in everything) is neither a sound rule of law nor of practice. Rarely is there a witness whose evidence does not contain some untruth or exaggeration; the Court's duty is to scrutinise it and separate the grain from the chaff; if the remaining evidence is trustworthy and the substratum of the prosecution case remains intact, the Court should uphold the prosecution case to the extent it is safe and trustworthy. [1970 S.C.C. (Cr.) 146, Rel. on]: (1983) 55 Cut.L.T. 312: 1983 Cr.L.J. 953; 1981 Cr.L.R. 73: 1981 Cr.L.J. 1622 (Bom.).

Where the only evidence against the accused, who were charged under Ss. 34 and 302 and S. 324, Penal Code, was the oral evidence of prosecution witnesses who had to be classed as interested witnesses and some of the accused were proved to have been falsely implicated in the capital charge and given prominent parts in the occurrence which resulted in the murder, it is equally likely that the entire evidence against the rest of the accused was also false and cannot be relied upon as against the rest for convicting them: 1955 An.W.R. 813: A.I.R. 1956 Andhra 53.

A witness can be believed in parts; the maxim 'falsus in uno falsus in omnibus' is neither a sound rule of law nor of practice; thus, where a minor girl victim of rape had immediately thereafter narrated the occurrence to a prosecution witness, a part thereof, severed from the rest of his statement, could be taken as corroborative evidence: A.I.R. 1971 Him. Pra. 17.

Judges of fact entitled to rely on one part of testimony of a witness while disbelieving another part: 1967 Cr.L.J. 1467: A.I.R. 1967 All. 532.

Where in a joint trial of two persons, accused of the same offence, the evidence of a witness was not believed by the Court as against one of the accused who was acquitted, it should not be believed against the other accused unless there were convincing reasons for believing it against him: (1940) 42 P.L.R.J. & K. 75. See also A.I.R. 1942 Bom. 37; A.I.R. 1959 J. & K. 5.

Where the improvements or additions made by the witness in his evidence were only minor and reflected his truthfulness, the fact that 15 of the accused who were also implicated by him were acquitted, did not warrant that his evidence should be disbelieved in toto: 1977 Cr.L.J. 538: 1976 J.&K. L.R. 549.

The testimony of a witness though not relied in respect of one accused, held, can be relied upon in respect of other accused: A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 991.

Merely because two of the four accused have been acquitted, though the evidence against all of them, so far as the direct testimony went, was the same, it does not necessarily follow that the other two must be similarly acquitted. Where the lower Court had differentiated the case of the accused who had been acquitted from the other two on the ground of absence of motive in the former case and, in addition to that, the evidence of the witnesses as against the convicted accused was consistent and not shaken by cross-examination, there is no sufficient reason for the appellate Court to go behind the finding which was based by the lower Court on that evidence: 1956 Cr.L.J. 827: A.I.R. 1956 S.C. 460.

Where it was contended that evidence of eye-witnesses was liable to be rejected on the ground that their evidence had not been accepted with regard to the four acquitted accused, held, it is well settled that maxim 'falsus in uno falsus in omnibus', that is to say, false is one thing, false in everything is neither a sound rule of law nor a rule of practice. In such a circumstance, the Court has to analyse the prosecution evidence carefully and on such analysis if the evidence is found to be consistent and reliable, the Court can accept the same with regard to the other accused persons and hold them guilty, even though the Court is unable to rely fully on the prose-cution evidence with regard to some of the accused persons: 1995 Cr.L.J. 410: A.I.R. 1994 S.C. 2507.

The appreciation of oral evidence by a Court cannot conform to certain set formulae or be measured by the yard-stick common to all cases. Ordinarily, a Court should not convict an accused on the basis of evidence not accepted by it in connection with the other accused, unless the evidence is corroborated otherwise; but this is not an inflexible rule of law but a rule of prudence for the appreciation of evidence and is not intended to prevent a Judge of fact appreciating the evidence that is placed before him, having regard to the circumstances of each case: 1956 An.L.T. 664: A.I.R. 1955 Andhra 247.

There is no rule of law that where some statements of a witness are found not corroborated by other evidence or for the matter of that are found to be not correct, his statement with regard to other matters could not be believed. Unless the witness is stamped as a wholly untruthful witness or his presence at the place of occurrence is rendered improbable there is nothing to prevent the Court from relying upon his statement with regard to some matters. The duty of the Court would be to remove the grain from the chaff; the chaff would be discarded and the grain taken: 1957 M.L.J. (Cr.) 231: (1957) 1 An.W.R. 336.

"A witness should not be partially believed and partially disbelieved" is a dictum which cannot possibly be upheld: A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 394. The rule in India is not that if a part of a witness's evidence is found to be of a doubtful nature, then his entire testimony has to be thrown overboard: 1957 All.L.J. 857: 1958 Cr.L.J. 324.

Evidence of prosecution witness—Truth and falsehood not separable—Entire evidence has to be rejected: A.I.R. 1970 S.C. 219.

Where the Court accepts the story of the prosecution in respect of the crime in essential particulars, that is to say, the manner in, and the circumstances under which, it was committed, and, also that some of the persons, alleged to have taken part in it, had actually been participants in the crime, the Court should endeavour to find out which of them were the actual participants, and should not throw out the case, merely because the prosecution party has embellished the actual occurrence by making false embroideries to it, and there were discrepancies in the evidence of the prosecution witnesses. The doctrine of separating the grain from the chaff applies to such a situation. It is not intended to apply to the following cases: (1) Where the prosecution account of the occurrence is not, considered on the evidence produced, acceptable in material particulars forming the core of the happenings, the Court will not ordinarily be justified in such a situation to act upon any rival theory of the defence, attempted to be proved or suggested during the trial in such a way as to take out one part of it to supplement the prosecution evidence or to add strength to that case or to the evidence adduced by the prosecution in support thereof, and reject the other part of it, and then come to the conclusion that the prosecution had proved its case. (2) Where the case of the prosecution regarding the occurrence is sought to be proved by evidence which is wholly unacceptable, e.g., witnesses are unreliable, by reason of enmity by telling an extravagant story, by reason of inconsistencies in their evidence, want of corroboration in suitable cases on material parts of the story and other like infirmities, the case of the prosecution must be rejected outright, irrespective of the fact whether or not there is any rival theory of the defence, or if there is any that is untrue. (3) Where the facts proved beyond doubt, or admitted, indicate that some sort of occurrence must have taken place, there is no rule of law preventing a Judge from arriving at a theory of actual happenings, if this can be fairly done on all the evidence. But this is not permissible, when the prosecution story about the occurrence is found to be false in its fundamental aspects. It will then be seldom possible to accept the evidence of the witnesses who have evidently conspired to tell a false story: 1959 B.L.J.R. 416: 1959 Cr.L.J. 1009: A.I.R. 1959 Pat. 362.

When the evidence is interminably intertwined; where a part of statement cannot be seperated from the rest, which is unbelievable, the entire testimony has to be rejected: 1995 Cr.L.J. 930 (Cal.).

Principle of 'falsus in uno falsus in omnibus' in proper cases can be applied in India—Witness found wholly unreliable—It is unsafe to rely on any part of his testimony—Each case has to be judged on its own merits: I.L.R. (1953) Mys. 201: A.I.R. 1953 Mys. 125.

No doubt, the Court can act upon the testimony of the P.Ws. in so far as some of the accused are concerned and discard their evidence with regard to other accused, as the maxim 'falsus in uno falsus in omnibus' (false in one thing, false in all) has not received general acceptance in different jurisdiction in India. But where the prosecution came to Court with a distorted version giving up the true state of affairs and the prosecution witness also are untrustworthy and do not reflect the true state of affairs, it is highly hazardous to rely on it and hold the accused guilty of any offence: Credibility of witness—Interestedness is not a circumstance for disbelieving witness—But it has to be taken into consideration in judging truth and reliability of witness: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1237 (Manipur).

28. Contradictions and discrepancies in evidence.—A Court should not be called upon to choose between two irreconcilable versions of a case or an event at the instance of parties who being fully aware of the facts are not entirely frank with the Court. When two witnesses on the same side—one of whom is a party to the suit and the other is completely identified with him give accounts at variance with each other of the same incident of which they claim personal knowledge, neither of the versions could be accepted. The unwholesome attempt to mislead the Court and to take the chance of the Court being forced to decide upon its own assessment of probabilities even when the parties are in a position to depose to material facts from personal knowledge deserves to be condemned in no uncertain terms. Courts cannot discharge their duty of doing justice between the parties to a litigation unless the parties are prepared to assist the Court with the utmost candour. Parties cannot ask the Court to solve a riddle placing before it the minimum information possible and with conflicting versions on the same side even as regards that: 1956 An.W.R. 1004: A.I.R. 1957 Andh. Pra. 584.

Mere verbal contradictions and discrepancies are not sufficient to discredit the clear and consistent testimony of eye-witnesses which is also supported by the circumstantial evidence. The measure of stupidity of these witnesses especially when they are villagers, is not the measure of their veracity and truthfulness: I.L.R. 8 Luck. 570: A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 333. See also I.L.R. 56 Mad. 356: A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 225: 64 M.L.J. 439.

Reproduction of conversation—Disparties in—Effect: A.I.R. 1957 All. 177: 1957 Cr.L.J. 337.

The proof of a fact depends not upon the accuracy of statements made at different stages of a case but upon the probability of its having existed. Evidence of a fact and proof of a fact are not synonymous. While there may be inaccuracies in the evidence, the fact sought to be proved may be so probable that a prudent man may act upon the supposition that it exists. It is the broad fact that makes up those facts of the case, and not the little details that go to make up those facts that will make the existence of those facts probable or not. Discrepancies are bound to occur in human testimony and mathematical precision in the statements of witnesses cannot be expected. Unless the contradictions are of such nature as to affect the existence of the fact in issue, they cannot be regarded as material. The omission of a detail in an earlier stage of the proceedings is not to be treated as a contradiction of the facts spoken to later unless it is a material fact: 19 Cut.L.T. 14: A.I.R. 1954 Ori. 33.

Contradictory statements at various stages of the case not only affect reliability but also create (serious difficulties for the Court to arrive) at the truth. If the contradictory statements are not explained in a reasonable manner and have been made deliberately and motivated by improper and ulterior consideration, they run the risk of being completely ignored: 1969 Raj.L.W. 68: I.L.R. (1968) 10 Raj. 1076: 1970 Cr.L.J. 558.

Contradictions of minor nature in the evidence of witnesses who witnessed the recovery of incriminating articles as a result of the statement by the accused, do not affect the factum of recovery: A.I.R. 1959 Him. Pra. 3.

Credibility of testimony, oral and circumstantial, depends considerably on totality of judicial evaluation, not its isolated scrutiny. While proof beyond reasonable doubt should necessarily be adduced in all criminal cases, the proof need not be perfect. Proof beyond reasonable doubt is a guideline, not a fetish; the guilty should not get away with it because truth suffers some infirmity when projected through human processes. Judicial quest for perfect proof often results in the police presenting fool-proof concoction; why? Because the Court asks for the truth to look true? No, we must be realistic: A.I.R. 1978 S.C. 1091: (1978) 3 S.C.R. 393: (1978) 4 S.C.C. 161.

Discrepancies—Prosecution case cannot be discarded by reason of discrepancies which are not material: 1967 Cr.L.J. 1250: A.I.R. 1967 All. 447.

Discrepancies do not necessarily demolish testimony; delay does not necessarily spell unveracity; and tortured technicalities do not necessarily upset conviction when the Court has had a perspicacious, sensitive and correctly oriented view of the evidence and probabilities to reach its conclusion. Proof of guilt is sustained despite little infirmities, tossing peccadilloes and peripheral probative shortfalls. The 'sacred cows' of shadowy doubts and marginal mistakes, processual or other, cannot deter the Court from punishing crime sensibly and substantially brought home: A.I.R. 1978 S.C. 1542.

Evidence of witnesses in this country cannot be discarded on the ground of discrepancies as to time and date of matters in respect of which they do depose. The witnesses are mostly illiterate and their evidence as to time and date cannot be expected to be arithmetically correct: I.L.R. (1967) Pat. 636: A.I.R. 1968 Pat. 481.

Cr.P. Code, 1898, S. 367—Appreciation of evidence—Discrepancies in testimony of witnesses on material points have to be carefully weighed in arriving at the truth—Broad facts of a case and not the little details are to be considered—No importance attached to discrepancy as to time: 1967 Cr.L.J. 52: A.I.R. 1967 Goa 4 (F.B.).

Slight variations and discrepancies in details are bound to appear in the testimony of a truthful witness; the Court is, therefore, required to inform itself that variances on the fringes, discrepancies in details and contradictions in narrations cannot militate against the veracity of the testimony's core if there is an impress of truth and conformity to probabilities of the case: 1977 Raj.L.W. 241 (D.B.).

Appreciation of evidence—Major and minor discrepancies. See 1966 Mad.L.W. (Cr.) 82. See also S. 3, Note 28, supra.

Overmuch importance cannot be attached to minor discrepancies because:—(1) a witness is not expected to possess a photographic memory to recall the details; (2) ordinarily, overtaken by the events; the witness could not have anticipated the occurrence, often a surprise, his mental faculties might not have been attuned to absorb the details; (3) the powers of observation and absorption differ from person to person; (4) people cannot accurately recall a conversation to reproduce the very words used or heard; they are not human tape recorders; (5) as to the exact time of an incident or the time frame of the occurrence, people make estimates by guesswork on the spur of the moment and time-sense varies from person to person; (6) ordinarily persons cannot accurately recall sequence of events occurring in rapid succession or a short time span and may get confused; (7) even wholly truthful witnesses sometimes get overawed and nervous by the Court atmosphere and piercing cross-examination. Thus, discrepancies which do not go to the root of the matter cannot be attached too much and undue importance: A.I.R. 1983 S.C. 753: 1983 Cr.L.J. 1096: (1983) 3 S.C.C. 217.

In appraising oral evidence to test whether several witnesses' testimony on same facts is credible, the deposition on material facts alone should be considered; human minds are so differently constituted and influenced by differences of experience that same facts may produce in different individuals very different degrees of belief; minor discrepancies are bound to occur in human testimony; a mathematical precision in the statement of witnesses cannot be expected: I.L.R. (1978) 2 Del. 48. See also I.L.R. (1971) 1 Del. 432 (D.B.).

An apparent mistake or a minor discrepancy in a testimony would not render it entirely unreliable: 1975 Cr.L.J. 354.

Mere discrepancies in the eye-witnesses' statements is no ground to dub the prosecution case as false where discrepancies are of minor nature and do not affect any material facts; every witness on the scene cannot give identical accounts of what happened, especially when evidence was recorded long after the occurrence; discrepancies in matters of detail occur even in the statements of truthful witnesses; they are hardly a ground to discard the evidence out-right when there is general agreement and consistency in regard to the substratum of the prosecution case: (1981) 52 Cut.L.T. 155.

While scanning evidence, the Court must keep in view whether the scene of occurrence is rural or urban; when the witness is a village rustic or an uneducated young man, some contradictions are bound to appear in the statements of even truthful witnesses during the stress of cross-examination; photographic picturisation of the occurrence is not expected from untutored witnesses; rather, the effort to harmonise minutest details betray Police tutoring, not rugged truthfulness. Discrepancies in details, contradictions in narrations and embellishments in inessential parts cannot militate against veracity of the testimony: 1977 Raj.L.W. 212 (D.B.).

Minor contradictions are bound to appear in evidence of ignorant and illiterate women; even with trained and educated persons, memory sometimes plays false; besides the evidence of a witness would very much depend upon his power of observation; may be, some aspects of an incident are observed by one witness but not by the other though both were present at the scene; testimony of witnesses should not be rejected merely because of minor contradictions: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 1541: 1976 U.J. (S.C.) 122: (1976) 1 S.C.C. 584.

In the depositions of witnesses, howsoever, honest and truthful, there are always normal discrepancies resulting from normal errors of observation and memory occasioned by lapse of time and mental disposition such as shock and horror caused by the occurrence; but material discrepancies are not normal; they are not expected of a normal person: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 1390: (1981) 2 S.C.C. 752: 1981 Cr.L.J. 1012.

The evidence of a natural and disinterested witnesses is not to be thrown out merely because of some inconsequential omissions in their statements recorded by the Investigating Officer; but such omissions need not be in respect of material particulars or the accused's identity. [1979 Cr.L.J. 1027 (S.C.), Rel. on]: 1982 Cr.L.J. 2162 (Ori.).

Because of lapses of human memory, minor inconsistencies in the statements of witnesses are bound to occur; thus, the discrepancies, not shaking the basic prosecution version may be ignored: 1992 All.L.J. 749: 1992 Cr.L.J. 2294 (D.B.).

The Court cannot reject an eye-witness, who spoke with slight and inconsequential variations, on unsubstantial grounds and on the basis of insignificant discrepancies: (1963) 2 Cr.L.J. 294: A.I.R. 1963 Ori. 144.

Persons giving their testimony of an occurrence are liable to disagree on minor points. Their power of observation, recall and expression may not be the same and some differences are possible. It is only the broad facts and not the little details that are to be considered in weighing evidence: 1969 Cr.L.J. 1393: A.I.R. 1969 Goa 116.

Where witnesses had neither interest nor motive to falsely implicate and their evidence is consistent, straightforward and cogent in all respects, held, their evidence cannot be disbelieved merely because there were some minor discrepancies therein: A.I.R. 1984 S.C. 452: 1984 Cr.L.J. 185: 1984 S.C.C. (Cr.) 384.

It is settled that while appreciating evidence, the Court should always keep in view that discrepancies in details, contradictions in narration and embellishment in essential parts should not affect the core of the testimony; it is also settled that discrepancies in details occur even in evidence of truthful witnesses because of natural differences in individual faculties; credibility of prosecution witnesses should be subjected to judicial evaluation of totality and not only of isolated scrutiny; sometimes even truthful witnesses become over-enthusiastic and exaggerate; that should not be taken as embellishment in their testimony: 1987 M.P.L.J. 382 (D.B.); 1986 M.P.L.J. 652 (D.B.).

It is well known that witnesses in India cannot be expected to be wholly witnesses of truth. Most of them are illiterate and uneducated, and necessarily there is likely to be some contradiction in their evidence. Mere contradiction, however, would not be the basis of an acquittal, if on a thorough scanning the essence of the prosecution case is found to be established. If, on the other hand, on the evidence of the prosecution the Court finds difficult to reject the defence story, though on its own merit it might not have been established, and the prosecution case does not appear to be established beyond reasonable doubt, the prosecution case is bound to fail and the accused is entitled to the benefit of doubt: (1969) 35 Cut.L.T. 278: I.L.R. (1969) Cut. 159. See also S. 3, Note 28.

It is common experience that the discrepancies do occur even in the statements of perfectly honest witnesses which are really due to difference in individual faculties with regard to observations, recollection and recital of details and unless there is any good ground to indicate that they are due to deliberate attempt to suppress or depart from the truth, it is unfair to discard the direct testimony of witnesses merely on account of such discrepancies, when there is general agreement as to material circumstances. [1987 Cr.L.J. 178 (Raj.), Disting.; 1973 Cr.L.J. 1783 (S.C.); 1981 Cr.L.J. 23 (S.C.); 1983 Cr.L.J. 1272 (S.C.); 1993 Cr.L.J. 1734, Rel. on]: 1995 Cr.L.J. 25 (Raj.) (D.B.).

Evidence of witnesses who are not relatives and whose presence at the scene of occurrence is not doubtful, held, cannot be rejected because of trifling contradictions: 1977 Raj.L.W. 241 (D.B.). Also see 1988 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 10 (Pat.) (Witnesses—Village ladies —Wife and daughter of victim—Held, minor contradictions in their evidence was of no effect).

Merely because the eye-witnesses had succeeded in escaping unhurt, or there were discrepancies in their statements about the day they had gone with the deceased is no ground for jumping to the conclusion that they were not in the deceased's company or nearabout; discrepancies in collateral or subsidiary facts or matters of detail occur even in the statements of truthful witnesses, particularly when they are deposing to the events which occurred long before; such discrepancies are hardly a ground to reject the evidence when there is general agreement and consistency in regard to the substratum of the prosecution case: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 697: (1981) 2 S.C.C. 1: (1981) 2 S.C.R. 615: 1981 Cr.L.J. 410.

While appraising inconsistencies between evidence of witnesses, held, the Court should be concerned with identifying and separating the main strands of truth; too minute an attention to immaterial detail may result in failure of justice: (1977) 2 Karn.L.J. 412: 1978 Cr.L.J. 290.

Unless on good grounds the discrepancies in the eye-witnesses' evidence constitute a deliberate attempt to keep back the truth, held, it would be unfair to discard their entire evidence because of the discrepancies; such of their evidence as is corroborated by other evidence or circumstances can be relied upon; thus, where the eye-witnesses had been trying to rescue the deceased under attack by the unlawful assembly, their inability to specify where the blows given by each individual accused had fallen, is not a valid reason at all to reject their evidence: 1982 Cr.L.J. 1167 (Ori.).

Witnesses deposing from memory some months after the incident—Discrepancies in statements would not by itself be a ground for discarding their evidence: 1968 Cr.L.J. 958: A.I.R. 1968 Pat. 258.

Evidence of past events—Witnesses cannot be expected to speak to details of events which happened several years before they give their evidence: A.I.R. 1970 Tripura 43.

Before a witness is disbelieved on a fact it must be clearly proved by evidence that the fact deposed to is contrary to either an admitted or proved fact; mere casting aspersion on the fact being possible is not sufficient to disbelieve him, especially when he was testifying fact occurring years ago: A.I.R. 1989 All. 17: (1989) 14 All.L.R. 814.

The mere omission of an eye-witness to mention all the details of the occurrence in his statement before the Police cannot be a ground for brushing aside his sworn testimony in Court. It is wrong on the part of a Court to be influenced by matters of such details while appraising the evidence of a witness who has deposed before the Court about an incident which had taken place nearly 16 months earlier. The duty of the Court is to see whether on broad facts the evidence of the witness is consistent with his earlier statements or not. If the witness has omitted to state before the police what specific weapon a particular accused was armed with or which accused had assaulted whom, there is no contradiction in his evidence in Court which can be regarded as discrediting his testimony. Further, if the evidence of the witness is inconsistent with respect to the weapon in the hand of a particular accused person, then his evidence may be disregarded only with respect to the weapon which that accused was armed with, but that cannot justify the rejection of his evidence even with regard to the identification of a particular accused person as a member of the mob: I.L.R. 42 Pat. 293.

Where a witness had deposed before the Court, ten years after the occurrence, held, some discrepancies in his evidence have to be ignored; quite naturally lapse of memory is inherent in the case: (1986) 1 Bom.C.R. 50.

Where witnesses testify four years after the occurrence, held, their testimony is bound to have discrepancies: 1985 Cr.L.J. 563.

Statements given by the witnesses before the police are meant to be brief; they cannot take the place of evidence in the Court; where omissions in the statements to the Police are vital, they merit consideration; mere small omissions, however, do not justify a finding that the witnesses are self contradicting liars: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 1234.

Contradictions between evidence given by witness at trial and that before committing Magistrate—Contradictions of minor details lose all weight and importance: (1965) 1 Cr.L.J. 160: A.I.R. 1965 Cal. 89; A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 1027.

Discrepancies and contradictions—Eye-witnesses: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 134: A.I.R. 1965 Tripura 22.

Discrepancies in prosecution evidence—Such evidence disbelieved in some respects —Entire prosecution evidence should not be rejected — Court should try to weigh the evidence properly — Availability of other corroborative evidence and non-production thereof cannot be a ground for rejecting the evidence led in the case if it is otherwise persuasive and convincing: 1961 Raj.L.W. 55: (1961) 2 Cr.L.J. 430.

Criminal trial—Complaint by Hindus under S. 298, Penal Code, on ground of bullock-slaughter in their sight—Eye-witnesses—One witness stating sight was from distance of 12 kanis while others stating from 1 kani or 1/2 kani—One witness stating colour of slaughtered bullock as spotted black and white, other stating it as Makra and white—Held, discrepancies were minor discrepancies which would not affect merits of testimony—Held further that when lower Courts had come to concurrent findings of fact, Court of Revision should not interfere with appreciation of oral evidence: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 134: A.I.R. 1965 Tripura 22.

Witnesses to raid — Discrepancies on points of minor importance not casting any reasonable doubt on prosecution version—Discrepancies no ground for disbelieving prosecution witnesses: (1964) 66 Punj.L.R. 81.

Conflicting versions — Murder case—Fight between two rival groups one belonging to village B and other to village K—As a result of injuries from the former group, S died and M received simple injuries—From other group one received three grevious injuries and two others received various simple injuries—Sessions Judge finding impossible to trace origin of fight due to conflicting versions and holding it to be free fight convicted both parties according to injuries inflicted on each other—On appeal, held, that conviction and sentences on either set of accused were unsustainable: (1969) 71 Punj.L.R. 393.

Where the murder took place on a moonlit night and the eye-witnesses who were familiar with and recognised voices of the accused, attributed overt acts to the accused and corroborated the deceased's dying declaration, and the accused, clearly identified by the eye-witnesses, bore enmity to the deceased whose blood tallied with the blood-stains on the accused's clothes, held, merely because the testimony of the eye-witnesses, illiterate ruralites as they were, had some discrepancy as to the type of the weapon of the offence is not sufficient to set aside the conviction: 1995 Cr.L.J. 25 (Raj.) (D.B.).

Where there are two statements of a witness mutually irreconcilable there is nothing to prevent the Court from applying its mind to discover which of them is true: A.I.R. 1942 Oudh 193: 1941 O.W.N. 1246.

Where it was alleged that accused persons attacked husband and wife as a result of which wife died and husband received injuries and there was a delay of 17 days in recording statement of husband and further husband shifted his stand regarding identity of accused persons, place of occurrence and the manner in which beating took place and the evidence of remaining witnesses was not reliable, held, the statement of husband could not be treated to be simple and straightforward statement and it could not form basis for conviction of accused: 1994 Cr.L.J. 3503 (Raj.) (D.B.).

When a witness makes a reckless statement which appears to be altogether false, the safest course is not to place any reliance on his evidence: 11 O.W.N. 950: A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 388.

Discrepancies in the statements of witnesses on material points should not lightly be passed over, as the value to their testimony is seriously affected by them: I.L.R. 36 All. 187: 26 M.L.J. 442 (P.C.).

Where a solenama is executed by the person who himself purchased the stamp papers, the purpose of the document as also the manner of payment is stated therein, and the attesting witnesses and the writers support the evidence of the plaintiff about the execution of document and its consideration, the document cannot be brushed aside on some minor discrepancy in the oral evidence since it will be a serious thing in the administration of justice: A.I.R. 1954 Sau. 26.

Appreciation of evidence—Discrepancies and contradictions—Effect of—One witness stating that motor cycle which knocked the deceased was black in colour—Another witness stating that it was of chocolate colour—Similarly, one stating that there was heavy traffic on road—Another stating that there was no heavy traffic—Contradiction because one spoke relating to time of accident while the otherspoke of time immediately after accident when there is naturally crowd gathered—Evidence, held, could not be ignored as contradictory: A.I.R. 1969 Mad. 180.

Three persons were prosecuted under S. 302, I.P. Code. The Additional Sessions Judge acquitted two of them as medical evidence was not in accord with oral evidence and there were discrepancies and contradictions in the oral testimony of eye-witnesses. The third accused was, however, convicted on the ground that the evidence of the witnesses was consistent so far as he was concerned that he was the assailant of the deceased.

Held, that if the evidence of the eye-witnesses was found discrepant, contradictory and unreliable so far as the other two accused were concerned, their evidence must be accepted with great caution even against the third accused and his conviction could not be based for murder on such evidence only. Such evidence ought not to be relied upon without strong corroboration: 1958 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 60.

Where the evidence of one eye-witness was corroborated by another eye-witness, held, the trial Court cannot discard their evidence because of some minor discrepancy in their respective evidence: A.I.R. 1994 S.C. 1581.

Where a transaction consists of a single act of payment, contradictions on the point cannot be easily elicited; even false witnesses would not falter; it is, therefore, usual to attack their credibility by eliciting their answers on minor details; for only then can the seemingly solid wall of falsehood can be breached: A.I.R. 1976 Goa 60.

Where discrepancies in the eye-witnesses' testimony were comparatively minor and did not go to the root of the prosecution story, held, their evidence has to be accepted: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 1167: 1981 Cr.L.J. 630: 1981 S.C.C. (Cr.) 676. See also 1993 Cr.L.J. 1756 (Pat.) (Minor discrepancies in the evidence of natural and probable witness not going to the root of matter).

Some minor and nominal discrepancies in the evidence of an eye-witness, an unsophisticated adivasi woman, do not justify its rejection: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 1163: 1981 U.J. (S.C.) 319: 1981 S.C.C. (Cr.) 607.

F.I.R. not by an eye-witness but based on information received—Minor discrepancies between statements in report and evidence should be ignored: 1969 Cr.L.J. 1393: A.I.R. 1969 Goa 116.

Where a medical certificate granted by a doctor was definite that he had advised the defendant, suffering from high blood pressure, to take rest and undergo treatment for two weeks was rejected by the Court because the doctor had stated to have examined the defendant once while the defendant had stated that the doctor had examined him three to four times, held, such minor discrepancy did not render the doctor's evidence as unreliable; the memory of witnesses giving evidence more than year after the event may not serve them completely right: (1975) 41 Cut.L.T. 1117.

Appreciation of evidence in criminal cases—Woman complaining of rape on her both by A and S in F.I.R. and in her first statement to the Police completely exonerating S at the trial probably due to attempts made to suppress part played by S—S discharged by committing Court—Held, that would not make the rest of the story spoken to by prosecution witnesses against A any the less believable: (1962) 1 Cr.L.J. 671 (Tripura).

Inconsistency in the statements of the prosecution witnesses in respect of the place of sealing of the packets of the articles seized, held, is fatal as sealing is an important part of the investigation: 1995 Cr.L.J. 3083 (Ori.).

A complaint lodged with the Police was investigated and the Police finding it false sent a final report. Being dissatisfied the complainant lodged a complaint case before a Court. The Court found Police investigation as unsatisfactory and of perfunctory nature and that the findings arrived at by the Police were unreliable. It was contended that the evidence led by the prosecution in the complaint case should be discarded as the same was found false by the Police. Held, the weight of prosecution evidence cannot be displaced by such comparison. Even discrepancies found in the statements by witnesses made in Court and those recorded in case diary will have no substantial weight in view of the fact that faithful recording of statements by the Police was itself suspicious and no sanctity could be attached to them: 34 Cut.L.T. 585: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1196: A.I.R. 1968 Ori. 172.

Discrepancies in evidence duly noticed and considered by law Courts—No inference in revision: 1969 Cr.L.J. 1986 (Ori.).

29. Improvements / variations in evidence.—Improvements and variations between their earlier and latter statements, held, are not by themselves sufficient to dub their testimony as infirm: 1983 Cr.L.J. 218: (1983) 1 S.C.C. 218: A.I.R. 1983 S.C. 126. A parrot like reproduction is not expected from an independent witness. Thus, even if the witnesses do not relate the incident in the same language or manner which, in the opinion of the Court, is natural, held, same does not effect the credibility of the witness; indeed absence of such variations could lead to the doubt whether the witnesses are tutored: 1994 M.P.L.J. 57 (D.B.).

Witness trying to improve upon prosecution story—Effect: A.I.R. 1969 Cal. 321.

It is rare to come across the testimony of a witness which does not have a fringe or an embroidery of untruth although in the main it may be true; it is for the Court to separate grain from the chaff and accept what appears to be true and reject the rest. It is only when a testimony is tainted to the core and falsehood and truth are inextricably intertwined, that the Court should discard it in toto. The mere fact that some witnesses did not admit or had expressed ignorance about certain collateral facts was hardly a ground to reject their ocular account when there was general agreement among them with regard to the substratum of the prosecution case: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 897: 1980 (Supp.) S.C.C. 489; 1974 Ker.L.T. 328.

In criminal trials when a particular witness or batch of witnesses are shown to have swerved from the path of truth either by suppression or by concoction, or by embellishment of facts which are untrue, such evidence must as a rule, be discarded in the absence of any independent and reliable corroboration by aid of which the truth out of the tarnished evidence can be sifted and falsehood distinguished. Once it is found that a witness is lying in part in absence of any sure test to distinguish the truth from falsehood in the case, the whole testimony becomes discredited and cannot be relied upon for any purpose whatsoever: 34 Cut.L.T. 215: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1251. See also 1994 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 344 (Ori.) (D.B.).

Where a witness who in his earlier statement to the Police had not stated that he witnessed the occurrence and did not see the accused running, tries to make improvement and tries to become an eye-witness of the occurrence, held, his testimony cannot be believed and he cannot be said to be an eye-witness to the occurrence: 1995 Cr.L.J. 1944 (Raj.) (D.B.).

Where during her life time the deceased-wife had never complained regarding the alleged ill-treatment by her husband and in-laws, held, evidence that she was put to torture and humiliation was unreliable: 1995 Cr.L.J. 930 (Cal.).

Where in course of trial witnesses testified that husband and in-laws of the deceased had subjected her to cruelty but such a version was not presented during investigation, held, testimony of such witnesses could not be relied upon: 1995 Cr.L.J. 930 (Cal.).

Where the defendant claiming benefit of S. 3(2) of the T.N. Occupant Kudiyiruppu (Conferment of Ownership) Act, 1971 had not contended in his written statement that either he or any of his family members were cultivating agricultural land by his or their own manual labour but only orally contended in his testimony that his son was cultivating the land but without examining the son as a witness and without producing any extract from the Adangal register, held, the defendant's evidence constitute improvements upon his pleadings; he could not be declared as an agriculturist entitled to the benefit: A.I.R. 1981 Mad. 196: (1981) 94 Mad.L.W. 253: (1981) 1 M.L.J. 506.

30. Admissions—Appreciation of.—(See also S. 17, et seq). A clear cut admission of a fact made by a party, held, is prima facie proof of that fact: (1981) 1 Sim.L.J. 253.

Admission by a person—Person can lead evidence to prove the admission to be erroneous. [A.I.R. 1960 S.C. 100, Rel. on]: 1967 Cr.L.J. 1036: I.L.R. (1967) Cut. 106: A.I.R. 1967 Ori. 110.

The Court cannot decide a case on small admission here and there, when evidence is given after a lapse of eight years. Some allowance must be made for forgetfulness and lapse of memory. A case, in such a situation must be judged on broad probabilities: (1966) 68 Bom.L.R. 228: I.L.R. (1966) Bom. 420: 1967 Mah.L.J. 65: A.I.R. 1968 Bom. 112.

An admission or concession by a party should be strictly construed: 1976 All.W.C. 720.

A retracted admission allegedly obtained by coercion, is not to be acted upon: 1982 Lab.I.C. 1745 (Andh. Pra.).

An offer made by the guardian of a minor to be bound by the statement made on special oath by the other party, not amounting to a compromise, held, does not require the Court's leave; it is binding on the minor: 1973 All.L.J. 103: 1973 All.W.R. 49: A.I.R. 1973 All. 464.

Where a plaintiff abandons her case at any stage and practically accepts her opponent's case and claims the relief based on the facts pleaded and proved by her opponent, held, she cannot approbate and reprobate; she cannot allege one set of facts and on finding them unsustainable, to stage a volte face and seek for relief on the basis of inconsistent set of facts: A.I.R. 1978 Mad. 361: (1977) 2 M.L.J. 179 (D.B.).

Modes of giving evidence—Two alternative modes allowed by Act—Before second mode is adopted first has to be fulfilled—Depositions in prior judicial proceeding—Admission in present suit—Before admission conditions mentioned in S. 33, have to be fulfilled—Consent of parties is not enough: (1962) 3 Guj.L.R. 418: A.I.R. 1962 Guj. 68.

Where after the decree of partition of family properties, certain parties failed to take over the plot allotted to them in the decree, held, it amounted to surrender by conduct of the rights granted to them under the decree: 1977 All.W.C. 66.

31. Suppression of evidence—Inference from.—(See also Ss. 101-104 and 114, Illus. (g)). There is no rule of law or of prudence which lays down that the evidence of witnesses must be discarded if they suppress the fact that they were armed and if they do not explain the injuries received by members of the party opposed to them. The matter depends entirely upon the facts of each case. [A.I.R. 1956 S.C. 460, Rel. on]: 1957 B.L.J.R. 756: 1959 Cr.L.J. 71: A.I.R. 1959 Pat. 22.

Where a party has been guilty of suppression of evidence, no conclusion in his favour should be arrived at merely on the ground of paucity of evidence which is of his own creation and a trial Judge would not be justified in giving his decision in favour of such a party on a mere application of the rule of onus of proof: A.I.R. 1949 F.C. 88: (1949) 1 M.L.J. 568 (F.C.).

Where the defence is founded on a relevant and vital document seized from the accused's custody but not deliberately produced by the prosecution, it would be difficult to sustain his conviction; thus, where a store keeper of the Food Corporation of India was caught at night while getting wheat bags loaded in the truck and the Police, also having seized the release order in favour of a co-operative society, did not produce it at the trial, held, prosecution was duty bound to produce the release order to show that the goods being loaded were not covered by it; the release order, a very relevant and vital document, having been deliberately withheld by the prosecution, the accused's conviction could not be sustained: A.I.R. 1987 S.C. 856: (1987) 1 U.J. (S.C.) 477: (1987) 2 S.C.C. 104: 1987 Cr.L.J. 773.

Notwithstanding the burden of proof, an adverse inference may be drawn if a party withholds evidence in his possession which can throw light on the facts and issues; it is not a sound practice for those desiring to rely upon a certain State of affairs to withhold from the Court the best evidence in their possession which could throw light upon the issues and to rely upon the abstract doctrine of the onus of proof: (1978) 91 Mad.L.W. 636.

Where a defendant had not come out with the best evidence in his possession, held, he cannot be permitted to rely upon the abstract doctrine of onus of proof: (1983) 96 Mad.L.W. 693 (D.B.).

In criminal trials when witnesses are shown to have swerved from the path of truth, either by suppression or by concoction or by embellishment of untrue facts, their evidence must, as a rule, be discarded in the absence of independent and reliable corroboration, by the aid of which, the truth out of the furnished evidence can be sifted and falsehood distinguished; their testimony is tainted, suffers from intrinsic infirmities and makes the prosecution case highly improbable: 1976 Cr.L.J. 262: 42 Cut.L.T. 726.

Concealment of fact by one party—Effect—Evidence of opposite parties standing at 'oath against oath' on a certain point—One party found to have concealed facts on another point—Such party will lose weight of its testimony: (1968) 2 An.W.R. 564.

32. Falsity of defence—Effect of.—Falsity of defence is no proof of facts which the prosecution has to establish; a false defence plea can at best be an additional circumstance, if other circumstances point unfailingly to the accused's guilt: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 765: (1981) 2 S.C.C. 35: (1981) 2 S.C.R. 384.

Falsity of the defence does not relieve the prosecution from proving its case beyond reasonable doubt—The burden of proving guilt is always on the prosecution except in certain cases: A.I.R. 1967 Goa 60.

It is for the prosecution to prove its case; falsity of defence is no proof of the accused's guilt unless the prosecution's case is otherwise established; it is only when other circumstances unfailingly establish the accused's guilt that the falsity of his defence may provide an additional link to the chain of incriminating circumstances. [1979 Cr.L.J. 921 (S.C.) and 1981 Cr.L.J. 325 (S.C.), Rel. on]: (1982) 54 Cut.L.T. 321: 1982 Cr.L.J. 2342.

It is only when the various links in the chain of prosecution evidence have been satisfactorily proved, they point to the accused's guilt with reasonable definiteness and they are in proximity to the time and situation that the Court may take into account the falsity of the accused's explanation and defence as an additional link in evidence to lend assurance that the accused is indeed guilty. [A.I.R. 1984 S.C. 1622, Foll.]: 1995 Cr.L.J. 169 (Madh. Pra.).

It is perfectly open to the accused to say that his defence may be false but that cannot make the case of the prosecution true or rather such as if accepted would constitute an offence for which he is sought to be made liable: (1966) 1 L.L.J. 71: 1966 Cr.L.J. 1429: A.I.R. 1966 Guj. 293.

Merely because the defence had not been able to say as to how and why a case had been instituted against the petitioner or some witness had been deposing against him, which law does not require the defence to show, the case of prosecution cannot be accepted as true and reliable: (1982) 53 Cut.L.T. 368.

33. Absconding—Inference from.—(See also S. 8). "Running away from justice must always be considered as evidence of guilt"—Clerk, L.J. Muir's case: (1793) 23 How. St. Tr. 230: A.I.R. 1935 Pesh. 75.

"Flight or an escape from arrest for felony, is acknowledgment of guil.... Every man, who is accused, is bound to submit himself to the judgment of the law; and, whether it be a trespass, whether it be a felony with which he is charged, it may, with truth, be said of him who shrinks from trial—Faciuns fatetur qui judicium Fugit" Day, J., Johnson's case: (1805) 29 How St. Tr. 192. See 1941 O.W.N. 981: A.I.R. 1941 Oudh 517.

"Flight in criminal cases is itself a crime. If an innocent man flies for treason or felony, he forfeits all his goods and chattles. Outlawry, in a capital case, is as a conviction for the crime. And many men who never were tried have been executed upon the outlawry." Lord Mansfield, Rex v. Wilkes, (1769) 4 Burr. Part IV, p. 2549. Mere absconding of an accused person should not form the basis of a conviction. It comes in as a very useful piece of corroborative evidence if there is other evidence to connect the accused with the crime, but per se absconding is not enough to bring home the charge to the person who has absconded: 37 Cr.L.J. 988: A.I.R. 1936 Pesh. 169. See also 1941 O.W.N. 981: A.I.R. 1941 Oudh 517 (An absconding accused being unable to give proper explanation is a point in favour of the prosecution).

Where a murder was sought to be proved by circumstantial evidence but the prosecution witnesses turned hostile and the blood-stained knife recovered on the accused's disclosure was not proved to carry human blood, held, merely because the accused had absconded immediately after the occurrence is not sufficient to convict the accused of murder; his acquittal by the trial Court upheld: 1995 Cr.L.J. 735 (Madh. Pra.) (D.B.).

34. Statement of accused.—Statement must be taken as a whole—Court not entitled to tear from it only those passages which go to support the prosecution case: I.L.R. (1960) 2 All. 235; 1983 All.L.J. (N.O.C.) 13; A.I.R. 1967 Manipur 11.

Though statement of an accused is not evidence under S. 3, Evidence Act, it can be used against accused—If it is confessional statement, it cannot be so used: 1968 Cr.L.J. 992 (Goa).

It is not open to Court to dissect statement and pick up part which is incriminating and reject part which is exculpatory: 1969 Cr.L.J. 409: A.I.R. 1969 Guj. 69. See also (1969) 35 Cut.L.T. 400; 1980 Rajdhani L.R. 43 (Del.).

Statements made by accused in examination under S. 342, Cr.P. Code—Utility in considering his defence—Not useful as evidence: 1969 Cr.L.J. 1149: A.I.R. 1969 Ori. 228.

Unless the circumstances appearing against an accused are put to him in his examination under S. 342 or S. 313 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, held, they cannot be used against him: A.I.R. 1984 S.C. 1622: (1985) 1 Bom.C.R. 208.

A cross-complaint made by the accused before the police is nothing but a former statement of the accused and can be used to corroborate or contradict the accused only if the accused gives evidence in Court. It may also be used as an admission of the accused but not by the accused in his favour in view of S. 21, Evidence Act. Hence, when an uncertified copy of such a cross-complaint is produced by the accused himself through a defence witness and the accused has not given any evidence in Court, the document is inadmissible in evidence under the provisions of Ss. 21, 145 and 157: 1963 (1) Cr.L.J. 355: (1963) 4 Guj.L.R. 448.

The recording of the accused's confession under S. 164 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1974, must necessarily and exclusively be by the Judicial or Metropolitan Magistrates; such a statement recorded by an Executive Magistrate-cum-Tehsildar is without jurisdiction and, therefore, inadmissible: 1995 Cr.L.J. 396 (P.&H.) (D.B.).

Murder case—Statements of eye-witnesses in committing Court and under S. 164, Cr.P.Code connecting the accused with crime—In Sessions Court witnesses resiling from their statements on the ground that statements were obtained under coercion—Statements cannot be relied upon under S. 288, Cr.P.Code: A.I.R. 1963 J.&K. 34: 1963 (2) Cr.L.J. 148 (D.B.).

Where the genesis of the occurrence could not be known as no witness was present there, the only direct version would be in the statement of the accused, if he chooses to give his version; his statement should be considered in the light of the prosecution evidence and weighing it in the scale of probabilities: A.I.R. 1978 S.C. 315: (1978) 1 S.C.C. 130.

Statements of detenu and accomplices recorded under S. 108 of Customs Act are not confessions and, therefore, the question of falling back upon requirement of S. 164,

Cr.P.Code does not arise. The statements are admissible in evidence and form sufficient and adequate material to form opinion for detaining authority for purposes of preventive detention. [1992 Cr.L.J. 231 (Andh. Pra.), Overruled]: 1994 Cr.L.J. 112 (Andh. Pra.).

Statement of accused recorded under S. 108 of Customs Act cannot be relied upon to corroborate evidencing witnesses: A.I.R. 1992 S.C. 1583: 1992 Cr.L.J. 2516.

35. Accomplice.—(See Notes under S. 133). There is no warrant for the extreme proposition that if a man sees the perpetration of a crime and does not give information of it to anyone else, he might well be regarded in law as an accomplice and that he could be put in the dock with the actual criminals. Indeed, there can be no doubt that the evidence of such a man should be scanned with much caution and the Court must be fully satisfied that he is a witness of truth, especially when no other person was present at the time to see the murder. Though he was not an accomplice, the Court would still want corroboration on material particulars as he is the only witness to the crime and as it would be unsafe to hang the accused (four in this case) on his sole testimony unless the Court feels convinced that he is speaking the truth. Such corroboration need not, however, be on the question of the actual commission of the offence; what the law requires is that there should be such corroboration of the material part of the story connecting the accused with the crime as will satisfy reasonable minds that the man can be regarded as a truthful witness: 1956 S.C.J. 382: 1956 S.C.R. 247: A.I.R. 1956 S.C. 379; 1965 M.L.J. (Cr.) 38.

Evidence of accomplice should be corroborated in material particulars: 1984 Cr.L.J. 1289 (Ori.); (1987) 3 Bom.C.R. 241. See also A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 449: (1976) 1 S.C.C. 644.

The statement of a co-accused recorded under S. 313 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, held, cannot be used against another co-accused: 1985 Cr.L.J. 1501 (Him. Pra.).

Accomplice witnesses—Pimps and prostitutes are accomplice witnesses in a case against accused for keeping a brothel—Evidence not sufficient without independent corroboration: 1969 Cr.L.J. 1553: A.I.R. 1969 Cal. 416.

36. Reputation and hearsay.—Distinction between. See 14 Pat.L.T. 482: A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 189. No standard of special strictness is applicable to the proof of collateral relationships in India, and there is no rule that a person claiming as a collateral heir is bound to allege and prove his title through the common ancestor in all its stages. [I.L.R. 6 Cal. 626, Expl.]: 168 I.C. 881: 46 Mad.L.W. 88: 39 Bom.L.R. 1005: A.I.R. 1937 P.C. 201 (P.C.).

The Evidence Act does not contain any express provision making evidence of general reputation admissible as proof of relationship: 168 I.C. 881: A.I.R. 1937 P.C. 201 (P.C.). In India, it is most dangerous to accept vague statements of hearsay information. Often what a man hears he believes that he saw it himself: 24 Cr.L.J. 791: A.I.R. 1924 Oudh 187. Testimony of A relating to what M told N and the latter passed on to A is hearsay and is, therefore, inadmissible in evidence: 1956 Raj.L.W. 211: A.I.R. 1956 Raj. 58 (S.B.).

Prosecution under S. 294, Penal Code for using obscene words towards school girl and teasing her on road—No eye-witness or informant (girl) produced by prosecution—Prosecution relying on sole testimony of witness who had reached the spot after the incident and was told about the words used by the girl—Evidence pure hearsay and inadmissible—Ss. 6 and 8, Evidence Act do not apply—Offence not proved: 1964 Kash.L.J. 267: (1965) 1 Cr.L.J. 554: A.I.R. 1965 J.&K. 37.

37. Pleadings.—A statement of a party before Court but not on oath is only part of the pleading and not legal evidence: (1933) 35 Punj.L.R. 99: A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 234. Evidence in a previous suit or affidavits filed in a previous litigation do not prove anything. Such evidence or such affidavits can be used powerfully when put to a witness as a means of destroying that witness's testimony and if the attack thus launched is successful it results in the witness leaving the box discredited. That does not however prove what is contained in his previous evidence or affidavits. The matter ends with a witness discredited: 1941 Nag.L.J. 596.

38. Medical examination/blood group test.—(See also S. 45). Medical certificate—Value of: A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 697. It is well settled that in a defamation case based on an allegation that a woman has had illicit pregnancy she cannot be compelled to submit to a medical examination against her consent and her refusal to do so is not evidence against her: 31 Cr.L.J. 584: A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 159.

A Court has no power, either under the Code of Civil Procedure or the Evidence Act or the Hindu Marriage Act, to compel a person to undergo the blood grouping test against his consent; it can only give directions and, if unreasonably refused, it can draw adverse inferences: 1979 W.L.N. (U.C.) 71 (Raj.).

39. Expert's evidence.—(See also S. 45). Evidence of an expert, like any other witness, has to be appreciated in accordance with law and accepted only if found trustworthy. An opinion evidence of an expert after its acceptance by the Court becomes the decision of the Court and ceases to be an opinion evidence of the expert. Under the circumstances, evidence of an expert also has to be interpreted like any other evidence. In so doing, the effort should be made to explain the same and correlated with the evidence of eye-witnesses. It is only when the two become irreconcilable that the question of accepting one or the other arises and not otherwise: 1994 M.P.L.J. 57. See also 1980 Raj.L.W. 96 (D.B.).

Where, on the one hand, the opinion evidence of experts points to the improbability of a certain happening and excludes the happening either as impossible, or as so highly improbable as to be a practical impossibility, and on the other the direct evidence is to the effect that the event did actually happen, then the Court should hesitate to accept direct evidence for the simple reason that miracles do not happen. Certainly, where the direct evidence itself is doubtful and is rendered improbable then also Court should hesitate to accept it. But where the direct evidence is quite convincing and the witnesses are intelligent and independent and further the expert evidence does not exclude it then direct evidence has to be accepted: 1965 Jab.L.J. 1196: A.I.R. 1965 Madh. Pra. 107.

A comparison microscope is the most important and most widely used scientific instrument in comparing the crime cartridge with the test cartridge. Though there has been considerable difference of opinion amongst investigators regarding the use of photographs in a Court for the purpose of illustrating the matching of the markings, and while it may be that microscope photographs, when taken with the due care and in the best of conditions, may enable the evidence to be placed on the record in a visible form, it cannot be denied that a Court would not be justified in rejecting the opinion of an expert who has examined the markings under the comparison microscope and categorically stated that he had compared the land and groove markings on the bullets under a comparison microscope, simply because he did not think it necessary to take the photographs. [(1971) 3 S.C.C. 208, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1978 S.C. 1204: (1978) 3 S.C.C. 86.

When there is a vast divergence of opinion between various writers on the subject, and their opinions could not be said to have been given on circumstances exactly similar to those in the case, held, the testimony of the medical expert and other witnesses cannot be discredited only on the basis of passages from the books on Medical Jurisprudence: 1977 Raj.L.W. 241 (D.B.).

Before a Court can act on the opinion evidence of a handwriting expert two things must be proved beyond any manner of doubt, namely, (i) the genuineness of the specimen or admitted handwriting; and (ii) the handwriting expert's competence, reliability and dependability and his evidence inspiring confidence: A.I.R. 1992 S.C. 2100: 1992 Cr.L.J. 3454.

It cannot be laid down as a general rule that on the defendant choosing to deny his signatures, the plaintiff must examine a handwriting expert; nor is the Court bound to accept the evidence of a handwriting expert as true; the Court has to apply its own mind to the evidence of the expert and either to believe or disbelieve it. [A.I.R. 1957 All. 119, Dissent. from]: A.I.R. 1973 Raj. 12: 1973 Raj.L.W. 182: 1972 W.L.N. 658.

Where an expert had testified that the insect infected maida, when its sample was lifted, could possibly contain only eggs, held, the Court could not discard his opinion on the basis of some passages in a book without putting them to the expert: 1985 Cr.L.J. 285: 1984 F.A.J. 407 (Del.).

Where two reports of the contents of an export consignment were contradictory, one based on scientific analysis and the other disclosing no basis, held, the report on scientific basis is to be preferred: 1985 Tax.L.R. 2584 (Mad.).

The mere opinion of a witness about the goods' condition based on guess-work and not from personal knowledge is not acceptable; thus, where witnesses testified that the sluice valves enclosed in packets were lying in rows and must have been in good condition, their opinion of the condition of the valves was liable to be rejected: 1979 U.J. (S.C.) 203: (1979) 4 S.C.C. 351: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 1225.

When the report of the expert is produced and marked as an exhibit the accused cannot argue that he did not get an opportunity to know the contents of the report at any time. Thus, where the accused even after his examination under S. 313, Cr.P.Code did not ask for an opportunity to cross-examine the expert, held, non-furnishing of details contained in the report to the accused was not fatal to the prosecution case: 1994 Cr.L.J. 3562 (Ker.) (D.B.).

A gold dealer is competent to testify about gold's purity; his opinion is entitled to some weight, even if he had not tested it like a regular scientist, unless something negatives his opinion: 1976 Cr.L.J. 165.

Possession of contraband opium—Evidence—Failure to subject article to chemical analysis not fatal to prosecution in every case—Persons familiar with article can prove that it is opium by ordinary tests of sight and smell: 1963 M.P.L.J. 830: (1964) 1 Cr.L.J. 44: A.I.R. 1964 Madh. Pra. 11.

Opium Act, 1878, S. 9(a) and (b)—Offence under—Evidence—Chemicals test not necessary in every case—Experienced witnesses testifying articles as opium is sufficient: (1963) 2 Cr.L.J. 714 (Madh. Pra.).

Where accused was convicted for carrying illicit liquor in motor tube but sample was not sent to Chemical Analyst instead it was examined by Excise Sub-Inspector who was not specially skilled or trained officer to come to any conclusion in that regard and conviction was based on his evidence alone, held, conviction was unsustainable: 1994 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 350 (Ori.).

Where an auctioneer of Government goods deposing three years afterwards that the goods sold looked like new and his impression was based on superficial examination unaided by record, held, his testimony could not be accepted: 1979 U.J. (S.C.) 203: (1979) 4 S.C.C. 351: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 1225.

Till the guns recovered at the instance of the accused are sent for ballistic examination and a report is obtained that they are in working order, mere recovery of guns cannot connect the accused with the crime. [1984 W.L.N. (U.C.) 15 (Raj.), Foll.]: 1994 Cr.L.J. 2952 (Raj.) (D.B.).

In case of close range firing, the brown parchment-like appearance of the zone of scorched skin and embedded specks of unburnt powder are permanent. It is the accepted view of medicolegal experts that these are the unmistakable signs of a 'near' discharge of a weapon—When such a firearm is discharged from a distance, there will be total absence of characteristic of a 'near' discharge; ingraining of unburnt particles of powder is absent if fired from beyond ten feet. It is also the medico-legal view that at a distance of six or nine feet the wound is still ragged, the shot entering en masse, at the same time the pellets show a tendency to scatter, for the wounds at this distance shot holes may be found above the main wound due to the upward jerk of the muzzle caused by recoil kick of the weapon. These medico-legal experts give several examples as a general guide in determining the distance at which the weapon was discharged; at the same time they also express that there are so many circumstances to be considered such as, length of barrel, choke or cylinder, black or smokeless powder, size of shot, etc., that a series of experiments must first be carried out with the same weapon and loading as were used in the case under investigation before a definite opinion can be given: I.L.R. (1964) Cut. 623.

40. Doctor's evidence.—(See also S. 45). A doctor is not always a witness of truth; but generally the Courts act on the doctor's findings while appraising evidence of other witnesses because the doctor's evidence is objective, and not tainted in the sense as coming from a partisan or interested witness: (1989-2) 37 B.L.J.R. 18 (D.B.).

There is no irrebuttable presumption that a doctor is always a witness of truth; his evidence is to be appreciated like that of any other witness: A.I.R. 1983 S.C. 66: (1982) 2 S.C.C. 396.

Even if the medical evidence is negative still if the circumstances warrant and unerringly point to the guilt and only to the guilt of the accused, then the Court will be justified in convicting the accused on the basis of circumstantial evidence irrespective of the fact that the medical evidence in the case is negative. [A.I.R. 1960 S.C. 500, Foll.]: 1995 Cr.L.J. 1964 (Karn.) (D.B.).

True, medical evidence, primarily being evidence of opinion and not of fact, is hardly conclusive or decisive; and equally true, when medical evidence is in conflict with the eye-witnesses' statements, it discredits the eye-witnesses, and all the more where eye-witnesses cannot be unreservedly believed; it is extremely unsafe to act upon the testimony of interested eye-witnesses if contradicted by the medical evidence though the case may be different where the eye-witnesses are totally disinterested and their evidence is cogent and convincing: 1982 Kash.L.J. 194. See also 1989 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 76 (Ker.); 1989 Cr.L.J. 288 (S.C.) (Medical opinion pointing to alternative possibilities).

The eye-witnesses may not give a very correct and accurate account of the version and may at places make exaggerations or may fail to give correct facts either on account of lapse of memory or on account of inability to observe minutely or to recount and recite correctly. Sometimes, the Medical Officers also do not bestow sufficient care while performing examinations and their opinions may not be properly formed on account of inadequate or defective examinations or lack of complete knowledge. Naturally, therefore, the Court must carefully examine the discrepancies and if it is reasonably open to arrive at a substantial and true version of the prosecution case, the Courts should adopt the easy course of throwing away the prosecution case on the alleged discrepancies between the medical evidence and the eye-testimony: (1961) 1 Cr.L.J. 155: A.I.R. 1961 Raj. 24.

Where the expert evidence, including medical evidence, is at variance with ocular evidence, held, the conflict can be resolved after proper scrutiny; if after close and careful analysis, the oral evidence is found to be convincing, it has to be preferred; exaggerated picture of the occurrence and minor discrepancies, if any, have to be ignored; otherwise, the safest course is to rely on medical evidence. The Court, however, has to keep in mind that expert evidence is corroborative; one of the methods of appraisal of oral evidence is to test it on touchstone of medical evidence to find out whether the injuries could have been caused in the manner alleged by the prosecution; beyond that, it does not carry much weight: (1988) 36 B.L.J.R. 337 (D.B.); 1989 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 186 (Pat.).

Medical evidence cannot override direct evidence if direct evidence is satisfactory and reliable: 1984 Cr.L.J. 921: 1984 S.C.C. (Cr.) 484: A.I.R. 1984 S.C. 1233.

If there is inconsistency between occular account and medical evidence and the occular account is beyond reproach, the Court should overlook the conflict and accept the occular account: 1995 Cr.L.J. 1432 (Bom.) (D.B.).

Where the deceased sustained two massive injuries one on his chest and other on his thigh but alleged eye-witness was absolutely silent about the thigh injury and infact in the entire evidence adduced by the prosecution there was no explanation about the thigh injury of the deceased, held, said witness could not be relied upon. [1979 Cr.L.J. 51 (S.C.), Rel. on]: 1995 Cr.L.J. 792 (Bom.) (D.B.).

Where accused was alleged to have killed driver of Police jeep in a Police encounter and the testimony of ocular witness did not accord with medical testimony inasmuch as ocular witness deposed that shot was fired at from a long distance while medical evidence showed that deceased received two gun shot injuries, both from a close range resulting in charring of the skin, held, conviction of the accused under Ss. 302 and 34 I.P.Code was not proper. [1955 Cr.L.J. 930 (S.C.), Rel. on]: 1994 Cr.L.J. 3770 (Raj.) (D.B.).

Where the Doctor's evidence does not corroborate the statements of the prosecution witnesses, it would be unsafe to convict the accused on such a statement which is not corroborated by medical evidence.

Where the statement of the Doctor was hypothetical and he gave his own experience of cases like the one in question, the opinion of the medical man cannot be allowed to outweigh the testimony of disinterested eye-witnesses: 1957 M.L.J. (Cr.) 231: (1957) 1 An.W.R. 336.

Medical evidence conflicting with oral evidence of eye-witnesses—Oral evidence of eye-witnesses not corroborated in material particulars by any circumstantial evidence—Held, eye-witnesses evidence stood discredited and Court was wrong in convicting accused on such evidence: A.I.R. 1969 Cal. 321.

Medical evidence is an opinion evidence given by an expert and deserves respect by the Court, such evidence cannot be brushed aside without any justifiable reason: 1994 M.P.L.J. 57 (D.B.).

Where the Doctor who treated the victim of a dowry death deposed that the deceased had told him that her mother-in-law had burnt her, held, merely because the Doctor did not record this statement in the medical register is no ground to disbelieve him; he is a Government Doctor then on duty in the hospital; and nothing was elicited from his cross-examination that he was interested in the prosecution or inimically disposed towards the accused; as he himself had treated the victim, there was no question of finding out whether the victim was in a position to make statement or not; and the statement made by her before the Doctor was not a dying declaration, only a communication by the patient to the Doctor treating her: A.I.R. 1988 S.C. 1785: 1989 Cr.L.J. 2070.

Medical evidence—Appreciation of. See A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 364.

The evidence of a medical witness, however eminent he may be relating to the condition of a patient on a previous date, is not of much evidentiary value when there is positive evidence as to his actual condition at that previous time: 1964 Ker.L.J. 724: 1964 Ker.L.T. 497: I.L.R. (1964) 2 Ker. 259: A.I.R. 1965 Ker. 189.

No medical officer indicates in the certificate the exact condition of the patient; thus, absence of indication in a medical certificate that its holder was unable to move during the period he was ill and unable to appear in the Court was not fatal to the plea of illness: A.I.R. 1986 Ori. 102.

The best person to give an opinion about the nature and shape of the weapon is the Medical Officer who had conducted the autopsy. Thus, where the doctor testified that the injuries could have been caused with a pharsa or some other sharp-edged weapon, held, the High Court was clearly in error in substituting its own opinion based on conjectural premises for that of the Medical expert: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 897: 1980 (Supp.) S.C.C. 489.

Unless the injured person is present in the Court and identified by the doctor, no document even the one said to be a wound certificate relating to the injuries found on that person when examined by the doctor, could be brought on record. Thus, where injured person died long before the trial commenced, held, it was not open to the prosecution to bring on record wound certificate in respect of said person: 1995 Cr.L.J. 701 (Andh. Pra.) (D.B.).

Merely because a doctor witness (who proved the medical certificate) was not found reliable does not entitle the Tribunal to throw out his entire evidence: (1979) 1 Ren.L.R. 681 (Del.).

Where Modi's Medical Jurisprudence mentioned different times for digestion of European and Indian Foods and also other factors that may lead to variations in time, held, the Courts in appraising such evidence should not impute exactitude to medical evidence oblivious to variables noticed by experts and otherwise; the Court must not abandon a scientific attitude to medical science to avoid judicial superstition: A.I.R. 1973 S.C. 2622. See also A.I.R. 1994 S.C. 672: 1994 Cr.L.J. 626 (Inconsistency between ocular and medical evidence).

The fact that the deceased's bladder was full of urine shows that, in all probability, he had a few hours' sleep at the time of his death: (1963) 2 Cr.L.J. 198 (All.).

One of the modes of testing the eye-witnesses' account is to seek whether the injuries said to have been inflicted according to them can actually cause the medical results as found by the doctor. In a case of murder by gun when there is a contradiction between the statements of the eye-witnesses and the medical testimony not only with regard to injuries inflicted on deceased but also with regard to the manner in which the gun was fired, it behoves the prosecution to have the matter clarified by the evidence of ballistic expert. But it cannot be said that the eye-witnesses' account should be discredited merely because their evidence does not harmonise with that of medical witness: 1967 Cur.L.J. 51.

Evidence with regard to time of occurrence—Statement of eye-witness not consistent with medical evidence—Medical evidence value of—Witness being illiterate lady of village, she may not have exact idea of time—Held, that there was no reason to doubt prosecution story regarding time of occurrence—Cr.P.Code, 1898, S. 509: 1969 Pat.L.J.R. 482: 1969 B.L.J.R. 897. See also S. 3, Note 62, supra.

41. Evidence of tracks.—(See also S. 45). Where the site of murder was a ploughed field and though two persons were placed there by the Police as guards, there was no evidence to show that any foot-prints were preserved at the spot and the four moulds of the accused's foot-prints were lifted therefrom only when the Investigating Officer came at the spot, and noticed the foot-prints of which no mention at all is made in the inquest report but the concerned witness referred it in his testimony before the Court; besides, nothing on the record indicated that while taking the accused's specimen foot moulds he was asked to wear the same shoes as he was wearing when he committed the offence, held, such and other similar circumstances showed that no reliance could be placed on the foot-print moulds to hold him guilty of murder; the accused acquitted. [1990 Cr.L.J. 2296 (S.C.), Rel. on]: 1995 Cr.L.J. 248 (P.&H.) (D.B.).

Evidence of tracks measured three days after the occurrence and examined twelve days after would not be of much use since the peculiarities of the foot-prints would in all probability be obliterated by the physical forces of nature: 33 Cr.L.J. 935: A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 557. It is unsafe to rely completely on the evidence of trackers as to the correspondence of foot-prints: 42 I.C. 129: 18 Cr.L.J. 897. See also A.I.R. 1942 Sind 11 cited under S. 7, infra.

42. Evidence of age.—(See also S. 35). The date of birth given in the High School certificate, held, should not be lightly disbelieved: 1992 All.L.J. 873.

Where a certified copy of a date of birth entry in the school register, proved by its Headmaster, was fully supported by other documentary evidence and circumstances, held, his evidence may be safely acted upon: A.I.R. 1983 Andh. Pra. 181: (1983) 1 A.P.L.J. 78.

A public servant under S. 21(9) of the Indian Penal Code is an officer in the Government's service on pay; an employee in a non-Government school is not a public servant; an entry made by him in the school register is not admissible in evidence under S. 35. [A.I.R. 1940 Rang. 191; (1968) 70 Punj.L.R. (S.N.) 31; A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 598; (1969) 71 Punj.L.R. (S.N.) 21 and A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 282, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1975 P.&H. 198.

Under the Educational Rules, every school has to maintain registers of admissions with prescribed particulars; such records can be considered as official records admissible under S. 35; the section does not forbid the admissibility of a certified copy of an entry showing the date of birth mentioned in the school register. [A.I.R. 1960 Andh. Pra. 253, Foll.; 1936 Mad.W.N. 111; A.I.R. 1959 Ker. 12 and A.I.R. 1975 P.&H. 198, Dissent. from]: A.I.R. 1983 Andh. Pra. 101.

Though birth certificate is a conclusive proof of age of a person but in absence of such evidence, oral testimony of his mother is more authentic and is preferable to that of doctor: 1971 Raj.L.W. 456.

In absence of a school certificate, age can be proved by some other mode, parents being the best witnesses therefor; horoscope entries can also be used but by examining its author or the person who had read it soon after it was prepared. But there is a very great confusion of thought in civil Courts where a horoscope is often accepted as substantive evidence with a vague idea that such a document contains a relevant fact under S. 32, while a horoscope is helpful in proving the date of birth under S. 159 or S. 160: A.I.R. 1986 Madh. Pra. 218: (1987) 1 Hindu L.R. 241.

Original horoscopes have little evidentiary value, though they may be admissible under S. 32(5). [A.I.R. 1941 All. 385; A.I.R. 1957 Ker. 103 and A.I.R. 1965 Him. Pra. 32, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1978 Mad. 42: (1978) 91 Mad.L.W. 4: (1978) 1 M.L.J. 460.

In criminal proceedings, the statement of a witness's age forms no part of his deposition and is not usually the statement of the witness himself, but an estimate of the Court: A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 627.

A witness's age mentioned above his deposition is not an authentic statement and cannot be relied upon as proof of his age: A.I.R. 1984 Ori. 26: (1983) 56 Cut.L.T. 496.

An approximate estimate of the age of a party made by third parties who might not have had any specified means of knowledge is not of much value: I.L.R. 56 All. 766: A.I.R. 1934 All. 406 (F.B.).

Where a person who has no expert knowledge on the question of the age of trees is appointed a Commissioner, his estimate as to the age of certain trees can be treated only as a rough one and cannot be taken as the last word on the subject: 1948 R.D. 274.

Appearance or rather description as regards age of a person and estimate of age or reliance on memory regarding post events as to the time they took place is hardly a reliable basis to come to a definite finding about the age of any person. The best evidence of age has always been considered to be the evidence regarding the actual date of birth: (1962) 64 Bom.L.R. 86: I.L.R. (1961) Bom. 963: A.I.R. 1963 Bom. 25.

In matters of genealogy reliance can be placed upon memory and tradition: 30 Pat.L.T. 359.

It is a well-known fact that when the age is not in issue villagers are particularly careless in stating their age. As such the statement of age cannot be of such positive character in determining a particular issue long after the date, when the determination of age was not one under consideration when the statement was made: 1939 All.W.R. (B.R.) 44: 1939 R.D. 164.

Only Doctor's opinion regarding age of a lady being 18 years, held, is not conclusive regarding her age: 1979 Raj.Cr.C. 122.

43. Contempt cases.—For an incident or happening in a Court, the Presiding Officer's version is entitled to pre-eminence and acceptance; it is only in the rarest case that it should be disregarded; for an incident resulting in contempt of Court proceedings, the Presiding Officer clearly falls in the category of wholly truthful and reliable witnesses; his solitary, oral testimony indeed is sufficient to sustain his version, more so if it was forthrightly and credibly given. [A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 614, Rel. on]: I.L.R. (1978) 2 P.&H. 63 (F.B.).

A contempt case is not a lis between a contemner and the Presiding Officer; no evidence in justification of contempt can be allowed; the plea of justification and recording of evidence in fact is a fresh contempt: I.L.R. (1978) 2 P.&H. 63 (F.B.).

The charge of contempt must be proved beyond reasonable doubt: I.L.R. (1975) 1 Del. 250.

44. Title/possession.—(See also Ss. 35 and 110). It is settled law as laid down by the Privy Council in 53 Ind. App. 220: A.I.R. 1926 P.C. 100; 47 Ind. App. 57: A.I.R. 1920 P.C. 46; A.I.R. 1948 P.C. 210; A.I.R. 1961 Andh. Pra. 361, and by the Supreme Court in (1978) 1 S.C.R. 177: A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 2012 and (1991) 2 S.C.R. 531: A.I.R. 1991 S.C.W. 1303 that mutation of names in revenue record is no evidence of title, though it may be relevant for other purposes; it is an equally settled law that in case of open land title follows possession: A.I.R. 1994 S.C. 1496.

Record-of-rights—A's properties mutated in favour of his reversioners on a certain date—Certain other properties were entered in A's name on the same day—Entries, held, did not necessarily prove that 'A' died: (1968) 70 Punj.L.R. 1046: 1968 Cur.L.J. 268.

Presumption of correctness of entries in record rights: A.I.R. 1967 Cal. 10.

A mere entry in the Settlement Khatian that the petitioner has a Sthitiban (occupancy) status, held, cannot create title: (1971) 1 Cut.W.R. 558.

In absence of proof of the terms of a will either by producing the original or by secondary evidence, held, the beneficiaries title to the suit property cannot be upheld: (1973) 2 M.L.J. 506.

Rent receipts will not prove title—Only prove possession: I.L.R. (1966) Cut. 483.

To prove the factum of possession over disputed land, held, mere residence of the claimant in the village where the land is situate is not sufficient or conclusive: 1983 All.C.J. 305.

Title — Proof of — Municipal record — Value of — Entries in the municipal jamabandis cannot prove title: 1960 Nag.L.J. 113: (1960) 62 Bom.L.R. 322: A.I.R. 1961 Bom. 169.

'Proof and its method'—Mere entry in the current settlement or record-of-rights is no conclusive proof of ownership in separate acquisition by a person—It is so especially in the presence of evidence that the property is part of the joint family property: A.I.R. 1967 Ori. 74.

Wajib-ul-arz—Entries in—Weight of. See A.I.R. 1961 All. 206.

Land revenue receipts do not ipso facto prove actual possession of the land by the holders of the receipts: A.I.R. 1979 Gau. 55.

In a proceeding under S. 5(1)(iii) of the Bihar Land Reforms (Fixation of Ceiling Area and Acquisition of Surplus Lands) Act, held, the question of possession cannot be determined on the basis of the report of the Circle Officer as it is not a statutory report and can-not take the place of evidence to be adduced in such proceedings: 1977 B.B.C.J. 452 (D.B.).

Title — Proof — Sale certificate cannot prove title: A.I.R. 1961 Guj. 115. See also S. 3, Note 44, supra.

The oral evidence of an independent witness as to possession cannot be brushed aside unless there are strong reasons for doing so. The fact that no writing has been produced about panchayat having given possession of land to a particular person is not such a reason: 1959 Raj.L.W. 35.

45. Corruption cases.—(See also Ss. 101-104). There is slight difference in the mode of proof in civil and criminal cases; in a civil case a finding can be given on preponderance of probabilities, in a criminal case the finding of guilt can only be recorded if evidence is sufficient to prove the guilt beyond any shadow of doubt. Even though a charge of bribery in an election is akin to a criminal charge, yet in the very nature of things it is a civil dispute; if in case of a charge of bribery, the accused is found to be guilty of misconduct, held, his plea of innocence stands shattered: A.I.R. 1985 P.&H. 6.

The fact that the party is alleged to have accepted bribe in a civil case does not convert it into a criminal case, and the ordinary rules applicable to civil cases apply. Therefore, the contention that when bribery is to be inferred from circumstantial evidence, the circumstances must be such so as to exclude any other reasonable possibility cannot be accepted: A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 1734.

The Anti-Corruption Department Officers must seriously endeavour to secure really independent and respectable raid witnesses to inspire confidence in the Court's mind so that the Court is not left in doubt as to whether or not any bribe was paid to the accused public servant: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 91: (1976) 1 S.C.C. 145. See also (1981) 83 Punj.L.R. 402.

It depends on the circumstances of each case whether the complainant bribe-giver was willing to give bribe or he was compelled and reluctantly agreed to give bribe; in the latter case, he cannot be treated as an abettor and his evidence cannot be treated as that of an accomplice and if the Court feels it safe after due caution it may convict the accused on their evidence where the panch witnesses turned hostile and were not independent, the Court may rely on the complainant's and the Police Officer's evidence to convict the accused if the attending circumstances were consistent with his guilt and not with his innocence: (1987-2) 28 Guj.L.R. 878 (D.B.).

In a bribery case, the official to whom the bribe was offered cannot be disbelieved (i) merely because some complaints had been made against him but ultimately no substance was found therein or (ii) that he had used inappropriate language in describing his powers and functions: A.I.R. 1973 S.C. 2679.

Mere recovery of money from the person of the accused, in the absence of a demand and voluntary acceptance of the bribe by him, held, is not sufficient to establish the offence: 1980 Cr.L.R. 162 (Guj.).

Where prosecution evidence in a case under the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, had material contradictions and no scientific test to show that the accused had handled the currency notes was employed, held, it is a ground for legitimate doubt on the truth of the prosecution story; conviction set aside: A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 674.

Where a public servant tried for possessing assets disproportionate to his known sources of income had shown by vast documentary and other evidence that those assets belonged to his father-in-law, a man in affluent circumstances, held, the public servant was entitled to acquittal; he is not required to prove his innocence beyond all reasonable doubt; he has merely to bring out preponderance of probability: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 1186: (1981) 3 S.C.C. 199.

Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, S. 4(1)—Accused shown to have accepted money as gratification other than legal remuneration—Presumption under S. 4(1) that amount was received as motive or reward such as is mentioned in S. 161 of Penal Code must arise and burden will be on accused to rebut that presumption—Rebuttal must be by explanation supported by proof within meaning of S. 3 and not merely by putting forth reasonable and probable story: 1967 Cr.L.J. 21: A.I.R. 1967 Bom. 1.

Where in a bribe case against a Government servant, the complainant's and the Police Officer's oral evidence is corroborated by circumstantial evidence which is consistent with the accused's guilt and not with his innocence, held, prosecution version can be accepted even if the trap witnesses turn hostile or are not independent: A.I.R. 1984 S.C. 1453: (1984) 1 S.C.C. 254.

Where in a prosecution for accepting a bribe the currency notes smeared with phenolphthalein powder were recovered from the accused's shirt pocket; the pocket was not washed with a solution of sodium corbonate but in water which did not, indeed could not, change its colour; held, it did not amount to proof of the currency notes not having been placed in the accused's pocket: 1980 Cr.L.J. 538. See also (1978) 80 Punj.L.R. 242.

While appreciating the evidence in a prosecution for acceptance of bribe the background of the prosecution story should not be forgotten: A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 1558: 1980 Cr.L.J. 1096.

Where in a bribery case, the prosecution witnesses and the complainant came from the same village and same patti, held, that did not mean that they were mutually related and their evidence should be discarded: A.I.R. 1987 S.C. 1441: (1987) 1 U.J. (S.C.) 687: (1987) 2 S.C.C. 486: 1987 Cr.L.J. 1180. See also (1982) 23 Guj.L.R. 438.

Where Patwari accused of bribery pleaded enmity with the complainant based on the Patwari having got reviewed the mutation entries in the names of the complainant's sons held, it is not an acceptable ground for grudge; the complainant's evidence could not be discarded on such ground: A.I.R. 1987 S.C. 1441: (1987) 1 U.J. (S.C.) 687: (1987) 2 S.C.C. 486: 1987 Cr.L.J. 1180.

An offer of bribe, an electoral offence amounting to a corrupt practice, partakes of a quasi-criminal nature; the onus to prove it lies initially on the election petitioner: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 1599: (1976) 2 S.C.C. 455: (1976) 2 S.C.R. 445.

A corrupt practice is a serious thing; it leads not merely to the setting aside of the election of the successful candidate but his also being disqualified to stand for election for a certain period; it should be proved beyond reasonable doubt: A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 1053: (1975) 1 S.C.C. 531.

46. Election matters.—(See also Ss. 101-104). In appreciating evidence, particularly in election matters, the witnesses' interest in, and support to any particular political party, are relevant factors to determine their bias; there are also other factors such as their knowledge of the pamphlets' contents, their preserving the same, the action they took and whether they are chance witnesses or had an opportunity of knowing about the incident; there may be some witnesses who may claim to have supported the successful candidate but they might have changed their loyalty afterwards: (1974) 3 S.C.C. 719: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 405.

Standard of proof required in election matters in proving corrupt practices is the same as that for criminal offence: 1967 Cr.L.J. 691: A.I.R. 1967 Andh. Pra. 155. See also S. 3,Note 46, supra.

The broad and general unqualified contention, that in election cases, merely because a witness has supported a candidate of the political party of his liking, he must for that reason alone and without more be described as an interested witness not worthy of belief, could not be sustained. This is undoubtedly a relevant circumstance, but in each case the evidence of a witness has to be weighed and evaluated on its own intrinsic worth in the background of all relevant surrounding circumstances including his personal and political leanings and social status, etc: A.I.R. 1965 Punj. 463.

Corrupt practice affecting election—Circumstantial evidence has the same place and relevancy in election matters as in civil or criminal proceedings: 1967 Cr.L.J. 691: A.I.R. 1967 Andh. Pra. 155. See also S. 3, Note 46, supra.

Testimony of an election agent admitting allegations of corrupt practices by him is not admissible in evidence in absence of proof that he was engaged by the candidate to carry on his propoganda and was in charge of his publicity: (1973) 52 Elec.L.R. 333 (Raj.).

The Police are presumed to be concerned with law and order; at a large gathering, anything might happen for which the Police might be held responsible; thus, where the Police had taken down the speeches at an election meeting, the audio cassettes and short-hand notes of such speeches may become relevant in an election petition and might be summoned as evidence; they are neither inadmissible nor irrelevant: (1991) 4 Bom.C.R. 156.

Where in an election petition the testimony of C.I.D. officers in regard to specific public meetings was rejected on the ground that the returned candidate's list of public meetings kept by the Police had not mentioned those meetings, held, it was an erroneous approach; obviously the lists were not exhaustive; they refer only to those public meetings where the Police staff is sent for maintenance of law and order; it is difficult to appreciate how the oral testimony of a witness can be contradicted by a negative inference from the absence of an entry in the register maintained by another witness, when that other witness has not deposed that his register or list was exhaustive and no other public meetings were held; the positive evidence of the C.I.D. officers supported by a chart furnished by the Inspector General of Police could not be rejected: A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 308: (1975) 3 S.C.C. 646.

In a petition under the Representation of the People Act, 1951, for setting aside an election for slanderous speeches and distribution of libellous leaflets against the defeated candidate in some public meetings, held, negative evidence is ordinarily no good to disprove the factum of meetings; but to disbelieve a witness for having appeared to give evidence without summons is altogether wrong: A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 290: (1974) 2 S.C.C. 660. See also 1970 U.J. (S.C.) 753; A.I.R. 1985 N.O.C. 44 (Del.); A.I.R. 1985 N.O.C. 235 (Him. Pra.).

Distribution of an objectionable pamphlet, undoubtedly a corrupt practice, is indeed very easy to allege but very difficult to rebut; as it can be printed by anybody in any Press with utmost secrecy and is deemed to be proved merely by its publication, by giving a free licence to any defeated candidate to get an objectionable pamphlet published and circulated amongst his supporters and produce them as witnesses to testify that it was printed or published or circulated by the successful candidate; the Court in such circumstances frowns on such evidence from tainted or interested sources: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 1599: (1976) 2 S.C.C. 455: (1976) 3 S.C.R. 445.

Election—Representation of the People Act 1951, S. 98 — Election petition — Witnesses examined by either side found to be interested—Evidence of Returning Officer—Few circumstances would not justify rejecting of his evidence in toto though he was found to be not totally disinterested and independent witness—His evidence will have to be scrutinised carefully and must be accepted at least to the extent to which it may be supported by circumstantial evidence: (1969) 1 S.C.C. 636: (1969) 2 S.C.J. 759: A.I.R. 1969 S.C. 1034. See also A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 1.

Though, ordinarily the opinion of the Election Tribunal on appreciation of evidence is entitled to great weight where the Presiding Officer who delivered the judgment recorded the evidence of only one witness he having no opportunity to watch the demeanour of other witnesses when deposing, he was in no better position in assessing the value of the evidence and the appellate authority could examine the evidence relied by him and form its own opinion from the same: 1962 Jab.L.J. 28: 1961 M.P.L.J. 1361.

Where in an election petition, the petitioner's polling agent deposed that the elected candidate had asked his polling agents at the polling station that he was leaving some persons behind and they should see to it that no one is permitted to vote for the rival candidate but he had made no complaint in writing to the Presiding Officer, held, no reliance could be placed on his evidence: A.I.R. 1986 S.C. 3: 1985 (Supp.) S.C.C. 611.

Where in an election petition, the village chowkidar deposed that when he was at the polling booth to cast his vote he saw the supporters of a candidate having an altercation with a voter whom he rescued with some other persons' help, but he made no report to the Deputy Commissioner or the Sub-Divisional Officer or the Assistant Sub-Inspector of Police present there, held, his failure to make reports speaks volumes against the credibility of his evidence: A.I.R. 1986 S.C. 3: 1985 (Supp.) S.C.C. 611.

Where the witnesses deposing on a point generally speaking fall under two heads, one set consisting of those who worked for the petitioner in the election and the other set of those, who worked for the opposite elected candidate, it is not proper to dismiss them with the observation that the first set is interested, while the second set has come to depose against its own party; this is a thoroughly wrong approach to the evidence and would tend to deprive the Court of the most competent material available. The evidence has to be appraised on its own merits in the light of the other materials placed on record: A.I.R. 1959 Assam 200.

Where in an election petition the defence of alibi is raised against the charge of bribery, held, not only it should be pleaded in the written statement but should also be suggested to the petitioner and his witnesses in cross-examination: I.L.R. (1972) 2 Cal. 618.

47. Eviction matters.—(See also Ss. 101-104, Note 43 and S. 106, Note 12). It is not necessary that the landlord alone should go into the box and depose about his bona fide requirement; his agent or anybody on his behalf can do so if his evidence is cogent, convincing and trustworthy; the landlord's failure to enter the witness box does not by itself negative his claim for bona fide requirement: (1983) 96 Mad.L.W. 394.

There is no rule of law requiring the Court to accept unrebutted evidence of tenants; the Judges are entitled to draw upon their own experience, and probabilities and circumstances of the case for coming to their conclusions: (1979) 1 Ren.L.R. 806 (Del.).

As leave to contest an eviction application is granted to the tenant under S. 23-C of the M.P. Accommodation Control Act, 1961, only when his application for leave, supported by an affidavit, discloses such facts as would disentitle the landlord from seeking his eviction on the ground specified in S. 23-A, but once the leave has been granted, the landlord's application under S. 23-A has to be disposed of on inquiry on evidence alone; the landlord has to discharge the burden of proving several factual situations pleaded by him except the nature of his requirement being bona fide which is made a rebuttable presumption under S. 23-D (3); thus, the tenant cannot be asked to adduce evidence in rebuttal without first requiring the landlord to prove his position except the 'bona fide' nature of his requirement: A.I.R. 1990 Madh. Pra. 106.

Prima facie case—Inquiry as to suit for eviction—Application for stay of suit under S. 8 of Kerala Prevention of Eviction Act (XII of 1966)—Evidence on record should be considered although not elaborately, to find whether prima facie case of tenancy is made out: 1969 Ker.L.T. 664.

Where one brother was evicted by the other brother as an ex-licensee but the Additional District Judge reversed the eviction order on finding that there was sufficient nucleus of ejmali fund left by their father for purchasing the property; it was, thus, a joint family property; held, this being an inference from the totality of facts and circumstances, it is not without evidence or totally unwarranted by the evidence on record: A.I.R. 1981 Cal. 285.

Normally, where the husband's evidence is sufficient to establish certain facts, the wife need not enter the witness box unless some facts have to be established on her own evidence; but where eviction of a tenant was sought from the wife's property on the ground that it was required for the husband's business, held, the husband was a necessary witness and ought to have been examined: (1987) 100 Mad.L.W. 612.

48. Accident cases.—(See also Ss. 101-104, Note 16 and S. 106, Note 8). In case of an accident occurring in split seconds, it is not expected of an eye witness to give its graphic description; the only safeguard that the Court must bear in mind is that such witness should be reliable and truthful, inspiring the Court's confidence, and his evidence should be capable of legal inferences as to the manner of the accident: (1989) 2 Bom.C.R. 49 (D.B.).

Where the accident had occurred on an open road in an uninhabited area and the evidence showed that the driver had applied foot brakes which were in order and the truck had stopped 30 ft. away, held, it could not be said that the truck was driven at a very high speed; rash and negligent driving was not proved: 1979 Raj.L.W. 310. See also (1971) 2 Cut.W.R. 121; I.L.R. (1980) 1 Del. 360.

Merely because the driver immediately removed the victim to the hospital, held, is no evidence of his being not negligent: I.L.R. (1981) Him. Pra. 323: A.I.R. 1982 Him. Pra. 67.

As a rule, mere proof that an event or accident has occurred, with its cause unknown, is no evidence of negligence; but peculiar circumstances constituting the event or accident, in a particular case, may by their concordant, clear and unambiguous voices prove somebody's negligence as the cause; it is to such cases that the maxim res ipsa loquitur may apply, where the cause of the accident is unknown and no reasonable explanation as to the cause comes forth from the defendant; it needs to be reiterated that such an event or accident must be of a kind which in the ordinary course of things does not occur if persons entrusted with the management and control use due care. But some decisions indicate that satisfaction of such a condition alone is not enough without further evidence that it was within the defendant's control to prevent the cause for in such an event the defendant is in a better position than the plaintiff to explain how the accident occurred. Instances of such special kind of accidents which "tell their own story" of being offspring of negligence are where a motor vehicle mounts or projects over a pavement or one car rams another from behind, or even a head-on-collision on the road's wrong side. The res must not only bespeak negligence but also pin it on the defendant: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 1848.

Where in a motor accident claim case, the evidence of a witness about the driver driving the vehicle rashly and negligently was found to be reliable, held, his non-examination in the criminal case would not affect his credibility: A.I.R. 1989 Andh. Pra. 337.

In a motor accident claim case, burden lies on the Insurance Company to establish breach of the policy conditions; it is for the Company to prove that the vehicle was being driven by a driver holding no valid licence: A.I.R. 1979 Karn. 114 (D.B.).

The Police are often unable to record statements of all eye-witnesses. It would, thus, be wrong to disbelieve a witness in a motor accident claim case solely on his admission that to his reckoning, the Police had previously not recorded his statement: A.I.R. 1993 Madh. Pra. 79 (D.B.). See also 1972 Acc. C.J. 375 (Mys.) (D.B.).

Where a witness claiming to be a passenger on the motor vehicle deposed before the Motor Accident Claims Tribunal that he had written a complaint in the complaint book kept in the vehicle and two other witnesses claimed to be also signatories to that complaint but the complaint book was neither referred in the criminal case against the bus driver nor was it shown to, or seized by, the investigating officer, held, the Tribunal was justified in not relying on their evidence: A.I.R. 1977 Gau. 31 (F.B.).

Where in a motor accident claim case arising out of a truck accident there was positive evidence of the persons carried in the truck that they had not paid the driver and there was no suggestion that they had any reason to give false evidence, held, their positive testimony has to be accepted: A.I.R. 1985 Andh. Pra. 69: (1984) 2 A.P.L.J. 122.

Merely because an eye-witness, in a motor accident claim case, called it a Fiat and not an Ambassador car which was involved in the accident, held, it was not a sufficient ground to disbelieve him; it could as well be a mere lapse of memory: A.I.R. 1983 All. 409: 1983 All.L.J. 230 (D.B.).

Where in a motor accident claim case, the vehicles' photographs taken on the date of accident were exhibited but without producing their negatives or examining the person who had developed the negatives, held, the Tribunal had rightly not relied upon the photographs: A.I.R. 1977 Gau. 31 (F.B.).

In a claim petition under S. 110-A of Motor Vehicles Act, 1939, a discrepancy in the age of the victim does not justify the conclusion that the claimants were not related to the deceased as his daughter-in-law and son, respectively, unless there is positive evidence on record to that effect: A.I.R. 1992 Ori. 32 (D.B.).

Where in a motor accident claim case it was found that the deceased, an Assistant Engineer, was having a monthly salary of Rs. 1,000 per month, held, having regard to his circumstances, the deceased must have been spending Rs. 500 upon himself and contributing only Rs. 500 for the welfare of his family per month; the evidence of his widow that he was spending only Rs. 150 or so on himself and used to give the remaining amount to her for family expenses, coming from a highly interested witness, could not be accepted: A.I.R. 1984 All. 119 (D.B.).

Where in a compensation case under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1923, there is no direct evidence of the accident but only very scanty material is available on record about the circumstances in which the incident took place, held, the Court was not relieved of its duty to arrive at a conclusion on the vital issues on the basis of available material: (1990) 1 C.L.R. 465 (Bom.) (D.B.).

49. Borrowing by karta of HUF for immoral purposes.—(See also Ss. 101-104, Note 60). Where a Hindu son assails the sale of a joint family property by his father, the burden lies upon him to establish that the debt for payment whereof the sale was effected was of such a nature that he, as a son of the Hindu father, was under no pious obligation to discharge; it is, thus, for the son to establish that the debt was incurred for an immoral purpose. Adduction of evidence tending to show his father's general immorality is not sufficient; though it is not necessary to prove by direct evidence that the money borrowed was expended on vices but the son must establish the connection between the debt and his father's immoral habits, either by direct evidence, if available, or by circumstances, which are more telling and can never tell lies. Thus, where the son established that his father, when he contracted the debt, was indulging in a life of vice which, but for the borrowings, he could not afford, and that there was no other necessity or purpose for such borrowing to connect it with the family, held, it would be reasonable to infer that the debts borrowed were for immoral purpose; it is not necessary for the son to further establish by direct evidence that the debts borrowed were indeed utilised to feed the vice: 1984 Hindu L.R. 53 (Andh. Pra.).

The receipt of money by a person lawfully entitled to do so creates a debt binding upon his sons as well; merely because he had subsequently misappropriated the amounts so received would make no difference to the binding nature of the debt and liability therefor upon the sons' shares in the joint family property: (1986) 2 Hindu L.R. 454: (1986) 99 Mad.L.W. 662.

Recitals in mortgages or deeds of sale about the existence of necessity for alienation cannot be treated as evidence by themselves of such necessity; to substantiate it, there must be evidence aliunde: (1986) 1 Hindu L.R. 175 (Karn.) (D.B.).

Where in a suit for partition and separate possession the plaintiffs had challenged the very necessity of raising the loans and had specifically alleged that they were raised for immoral purposes, held, recitals in the sale deeds, being of recent origin and having come into existence within three years anterior to the date of the suit could not be accepted as proof of the facts stated therein in the absence of other evidence to prove them: (1988) 1 Hindu L.R. 770 (Karn.) (D.B.).

50. Credibility of witnesses.—Where the evidence produced by one party is in direct conflict with the evidence produced by the other, the following tests may be applied for judging the veracity of the witness: (1) the evidence which is consistent with the finding which is already established; (2) the comparative nearness in relationship of the witness; (3) the impartiality of the witnesses; (4) the inherent probability of their statements; (5) the impression created in the minds of the Judge by the demeanour of the witnesses in the box: I.L.R. 9 Luck. 121: A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 197. See also (1935-36) 40 Cal.W.N. 257: A.I.R. 1936 P.C. 60: 70 M.L.J. 225 (P.C.); 1942 O.W.N. (B.R.) 578; 1941 A.M.L.J. 67.

No one is bound to suspect dishonesty in a person of good credit and reputation with whom he is dealing merely because that person occupies a position which would enable him to act dishonestly if he were a rogue: I.L.R. 37 Bom. 122: 40 Ind. App. 1 (P.C.).

It is undoubtedly true that the law has not laid down any clear standard for the sufficiency of evidence to induce belief. It is also true that belief is rarely the consequence of a strictly logical process and that sometimes the same evidence which to one may be convincing, to another may seem absurd. But nevertheless the matter of believing evidence is not left to the mere intuition of an individual Judge, for a Judge, in believing or disbelieving evidence acts on his reason in conformity with his knowledge, observation and experience which always furnish adequate grounds for believing or disbelieving evidence: 1957 All.L.J. 857: A.I.R. 1958 All. 214.

It is well settled that credibility of a witness should not be accepted merely because it is corroborated by the evidence of other witnesses, but such credibility should be tested on the touch-stone of the broad probabilities of the case. If doubt arises with regard to any material fact in a criminal case, the accused is always entitled to the benefit of such doubt: 1995 Cr.L.J. 2036 (Ori.).

In appreciating the prosecution evidence the Court's prime duty is to ensure that the evidence is legally admissible, the witnesses are credible and have no interest or ulterior motive to implicate the accused: A.I.R. 1972 S.C. 975: 1972 Cr.L.J. 606.

Where it is alleged that a certain transaction was collusive, a practical down to earth thinking is needed and a commonsense appraisal of the situation is required. The case must be determined on the total impression created on the mind of the Court by all the facts and circumstances disclosed in the case. It is open to the Court to lift the veil and look behind the same in order to see who were the real parties and what was the real nature of the transaction: 1960 B.L.J.R. 30: A.I.R. 1960 Pat. 182.

When a person gives evidence on oath the presumption should be that he has spoken the truth—that is the oath he takes—and the burden must lie on him who challenges the veracity of that statement to show that it is not true and if that burden is not discharged by any of the recognised legal methods, then a Court can have no legal justification for not relying on the evidence of a witness given on oath. Throwing over-board the sworn testimony of witnesses merely by using phrases 'the statement does not ring true' or 'the statement does not carry conviction' is never legally sufficient. A Court has to give reasons for coming to the conclusion as to why 'the statement does not ring true' or 'the statement does not carry conviction' or why it does so: 1957 All.L.J. 857: A.I.R. 1957 All. 214.

The law does not recognise the impeachment of a witness on communal grounds, and the argument that the witnesses belonged to the plaintiff's community and, therefore, their evidence should not be believed, is against the spirit of the Constitution of India: 1958 M.P.L.J. 494: A.I.R. 1958 Madh. Pra. 407.

It is not safe to assume that a case must be false if some of the evidence in support of it appears to be ambiguous or is clearly untrue. There is on some occasions a tendency amongst litigants to back up a good case by false or exaggerated evidence: 24 Cal.W.N. 626 (P.C.).

Where two witnesses for the prosecution tell practically the same story, it is absurd to disbelieve one and believe the other and base a conviction on his evidence: (1941) 43 Bom.L.R. 946. The fact that the witnesses deposed with consistency their version cannot be characterised as parrot like and devoid of naturalness and credibility: 1977 M.L.J. (Cr.) 583 (D.B.).

Credibility of evidence — Opinion of medical man cannot outweigh testimony of dis-interested eye witnesses: 1957 M.L.J. (Cr.) 231: (1957) 1 An.W.R. 336.

While dealing with a version spread over several consecutive stages, careful regard should be had to them all and their truth or falsehood must be rested on a review of the entire case. The incidents have to be judged in the light of what preceded and followed, and it would be an error to seggregate the incidents and test their veracity in isolation: 52 Mad.L.W. 57: A.I.R. 1940 P.C. 93 (P.C.).

A witness's credibility is to be judged from his behaviour in the witness-box particularly when confronted with inconvenient facts or his contradictory statements made earlier: 1972 Cr.L.J. 956 (Him. Pra.) (D.B.); 1976 Cr.L.J. 1310 (J.&K.) (D.B.).

In order to judge the credibility of the witnesses, the Court is not confined only to the way in which the witnesses have deposed or to the demeanour of witnesses but it is open to it to look into the surrounding circumstances as well as the probabilities, so that it may be able to form a correct idea of the trustworthiness of the witnesses. The issue, namely, whether the testator did execute a will and if he did, then whether it was duly attested by the witnesses, cannot be determined by considering the evidence adduced in the Court separately from the surrounding circumstances which have also been brought out in the evidence, or which appear from the nature and contents of the document itself: (1964) 6 S.C.R. 814: A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 354; (1967) 12 Law Rep. 92 (Mys.).

A person's ability to speak the truth depends upon his knowledge and power of expression; his knowledge depends partly on his accuracy in observation, partly on his memory and partly on his presence of mind; his power of expression depends upon infinite circumstances and varies in relation to the subject-matter; his will to speak the truth depends upon his education, his character, his courage, his sense of duty, his relation to the particular facts he is to testify, his humour for the moment and so many other circumstances; no single circumstance is decisive or determinative; it is the cumulative effect of all the circumstances: (1978) 1 An.L.T. 407 (D.B.).

The fate of every criminal case depends upon its facts and the intrinsic worth of evidence rather than what was said about evidence of witnesses in other decided cases in the context of their own facts; the credibility of a witness has primarily to be decided upon his evidence and how he had fared in cross-examination and the impression created by his evidence in the context of other facts; criminal cases cannot be put in a strait jacket; though despite similarity between the facts of some cases, there would always be shades of difference which, quite often, may prove to be crucial. Decided cases can be of help on questions of law like admissibility of evidence or applicability of some general rule of evidence like the weight to be attached to the accomplice's evidence; but reference to decided cases hardly seems apposite when the Court is to decide whether the evidence of a particular witness should or should not be accepted: A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 246: (1975) 1 S.C.R. 561: (1975) 3 S.C.C. 39.

Evidence of witnesses cannot be discarded merely because they did not react in a particular manner: A.I.R. 1983 S.C. 680: 1983 Cr.L.J. 1272: (1983) 3 S.C.C. 329.

Persons react to situations in different ways; villagers may not have the sense to report everything coming to their notice; they may not voluntarily get involved; their evidence, therefore, cannot be discarded because they had not openly declared to have seen the occurrence before they were traced and interrogated by the police; they cannot be deemed casual or chance witnesses if they are probable witnesses by the standards of rural life. Thus, where some villagers had met the accused at odd hours (night) while performing their usual share of duty immediately after the murder, had a close vision of them, seen one of them carrying the weapon and had a short talk with the accused, held, their evidence could not be discarded merely because they had not mentioned those facts to any body before their interrogation: 1985 Cr.L.J. 114.

Where rural witnesses deposed that they had seen the accused assaulting the deceased, held, it necessarily implies that there was sufficient visibility for them to recognise the assailants; in villages, people are well known to each other and can identify persons even from a distance in dark nights by their gait, stature and manner of movement: (1983) 55 Cut.L.T. 312. See also 1994 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 165 (Ori.).

It is common ground that villagers are usually reluctant to get involved in an occurrence, especially if the accused are desperadoes; non-examination of neighbours would be of no effect, when on testimony of independent witnesses the prosecution had satisfactorily proved its case: A.I.R. 1978 S.C. 368: (1978) 1 S.C.C. 142.

There is no warrant for the extreme proposition that if a man sees the perpetration of a crime and does not give information of it to anyone else, he might well be regarded in law as an accomplice and that he could be put in the dock with the actual criminals. See 1956 S.C.R. 347: A.I.R. 1956 S.C. 379, cited under Note 35, supra.

Considering the habits of the people of this country, particularly of the undeveloped districts there is nothing unusual in the conduct of not disclosing the occurrence until the police arrives. No adverse inference therefore can be drawn: I.L.R. (1962) Cut. 726: (1963) 2 Cr.L.J. 294: A.I.R. 1963 Ori. 144.

There is nothing unusual, having regard to the habits of Adivasis in their conduct in not disclosing the occurrence until questioned by the Police. There is a natural tendency on the part of such people not to get mixed up in such matters—That is not a ground for not giving credence to their evidence: A.I.R. 1970 Ori. 100.

The testimony of an ignorant and rustic woman from the countryside cannot be judged with the same standard of exactitude and consistency as that of an urban, sophisticated lady; her evidence has necessarily to be tested on the anvil of objective circumstances: 1980 Rajdhani L.R. 126: I.L.R. (1979) 2 Del. 302 (D.B.).

All are well aware as to how an illiterate or semi-literate witness behaves in the witness-box for cross-examination; such witnesses are often unable to give the exact year of the particular incident they may be deposing about. Their evidence need not be scrutinized on mathematical calculation; their entire evidence should be considered to find out if it is reliable, satisfactory and trustworthy: A.I.R. 1981 Pat. 204: 1981 B.L.J.R. 501: 1981 B.L.J. 273: 1981 B.B.C.J. (H.C.) 414.

Village witnesses generally have vague ideas of placing incidents in a particular year by calculation of years in relation to other incidents; their evidence in this respect cannot be judged by mathematical accuracy: A.I.R. 1974 Ori. 120: (1973) 1 Cut.W.R. 809 (D.B.).

Where an unlettered Harijan deposed about the date of his knowledge of the ex parte decree, held, his statement should not be construed mathematically: (1971) 1 Cut.W.R. 329: A.I.R. 1971 Ori. 262: 37 Cut.L.T. 378.

Witness, a villager, stating that he was irrigating his field alongwith his wife and son at about midday he went to his house to take his meals and to bring the food of his wife and his son—Trial Court impressed by the fact that normally not the witness himself but the wife should have gone to the house to fetch food for her husband and the son—Reason not proper to reject testimony, in view of fact that food had already been prepared at home and it was kept there and it was only to be brought to the field—If the wife did not go to house and he came to fetch it, it could not be said that the circumstance was such that his testimony should be disbelieved: I.L.R. (1967) 2 All. 360: 1968 All.L.J. 423.

While appreciating the evidence of a witness, the Court must see whether the evidence read as a whole appears to have a ring of truth; once that impression is formed, it is undoubtedly necessary for the Court to scrutinize the evidence, more particularly keeping in view the deficiencies, drawbacks and infirmities pointed out in the evidence as a whole and evaluating them to find out whether they are against the general tenor of the evidence and whether the earlier evaluation is shaken as to render it unworthy of belief; minor discrepancies on trivial matters not touching the core of the case, hyper-technical approach by taking sentences torn out of context here or there, attaching importance to some technical error committed by the Investigating Officer not going to the root of the matter would not ordinarily permit rejection of the evidence as a whole; even honest and truthful witnesses may differ in some details unrelated to the main incident; the power of observation, retention and reproduction differs from individual to individual and cross-examination is an unequal duel between a rustic and a refined lawyer: A.I.R. 1985 S.C. 48: (1985) 1 S.C.C. 505.

Witnesses, eyes and ears of justice, should not be discarded on flimsy grounds; their evidence should be appreciated and approached with care and caution keeping in view reasonable improbabilities, deficiencies, drawbacks and infirmities; the Court should be concerned with inherent basic realities, merit and the general trend or tenor of the evidence; the Court should go by the yardstick of probabilities and intrinsic truth and value; it should try to see if there is a ring of truth therein. The Court should not exaggerate the defects, contradictions, deficiencies or inconsistencies that do not go to the root of the matter; but when the discrepancies, contradictions and falsehood are so glaring as to destroy the Court's confidence in the witnesses, the Court should not accept their evidence: (1992-1) 40 B.L.J.R. 436 (D.B.).

A statement made by a witness need not necessarily be true because no other witness contradicts it. For an assessment of truth or acceptability of the oral evidence given even by a party in favour of his own case, it is necessary for the Court to derive support from other evidence placed on record relating to his previous statement and previous conduct, and general probabilities suggested by the entire evidence: A.I.R. 1966 Mys.178.

Appreciation of evidence—Proof of fact—Does not rest on any prescribed quantum of evidence—Credibility of oral testimony is primarily the satisfaction of trial Court which has first hand knowledge of witnesses: (1966) 1 An.W.R. 65.

It is an error of law to reject evidence of a certain class of persons merely because they belonged to that class: A.I.R. 1972 All. 369: 1972 Ren.C.R. 448.

The veracity of a witness does not necessarily depend upon his status in life; clerks are not less truthful or more amenable than superior officers; clerks, called as panch witness would not cease to be independent merely because they would fear disciplinary action if they did not support the prosecution. [(1965) 1 Del.L.T. 362, Overruled]: A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 873: (1980) 2 S.C.C. 390: (1980) 2 S.C.W.R. 161.

Unfortunately, witnesses belonging to a respectable class and lawyers' profession are prone to state facts not as they are but as what they believe to be just; scruples tend to vanish when a witness believes that his evidence, though somewhat untruthful, serves a justifiable end: A.I.R. 1971 All. 304. It is the duty of the members of the legal profession to be frank and truthful because the Courts always rely upon on mere statements made at the bar: I.L.R. (1972) 2 Cal. 480.

If there is any presumption of truth attaching to oral evidence and the onus be on the accused to prove that it is not true, the Court would be bound to act upon it if the witness concerned cannot be proved to be a liar. That would practically throw the burden on the accused to prove his innocence and go against the basic presumption of innocence of the accused. The oral testimony is one of the materials for consideration by the Court in coming to its findings but it has to be tested by the yard-stick of probability along with the other materials on record and it must pass that test before it can be accepted. In spite of the evidence on oath, it is the duty of the prosecution to satisfy the Court that evidence is capable of acceptance and if the Court is not satisfied, the evidence in spite of the oath to support it, is of no avail. To cite a simple case, the Court may reject an evidence on oath in view of the suspicious demeanour of the witness and that is because the demeanour of the witness is one of the materials to be taken into consideration before his testimony is accepted: (1965) 1 Cr.L.J. 160: A.I.R. 1965 Cal. 89.

Testimony of partially unreliable witness—Value of: A.I.R. 1967 All. 64.

Witness naming five assailants—Fact that Court gives benefit of doubt to two of them and acquits them is no reason for disbelieving testimony of witness: (1962) 3 S.C.R. 590: 1962 M.L.J. (Cr.) 263: A.I.R. 1962 S.C. 424.

Suppression of truth by witness on minor point—Does not discredit evidence which otherwise is true: 1969 Cr.L.J. 1393: A.I.R. 1969 Goa 116.

Where in a deposition, truth and falsehood were inextricably mixed up and the entire fabric of narration was polluted, held, its rejection in totality is justified: 1979 B.B.C.J. 701 (D.B).

It often happens in the case of witnesses in this country that their statements given soon after the occurrence are nearer the truth and their version gets embellished or curtailed with the passage of time according to their susceptibility of being influenced by one party or the other. Unless a Court takes into consideration this circumstance and gives full weight to it, it may often lead to a miscarriage of justice. It would, therefore, appear not safe to accept the testimony of the witnesses given in an omnibus manner in the Court implicating all the accused in the offence of mischief but the Court has to test their evidence with reference to the first information report: I.L.R. (1964) 2 Mad. 978.

It is common experience that when two persons have seen a mob, then one is in a position to give more names than the other, of persons taking part in the occurrence, depending upon his individual power and opportunity of observation. It is also common experience that a witness who has sustained severe injuries in course of an occurrence is not in a position to be so keen in the matter of observing the faces of the culprits as another witness who is present at the scene but has escaped unhurt. A witness who has been attacked and assaulted by the rioters is not expected to have identified all the accused persons when another eye-witness has claimed to have identified. It is no business of a witness who has identified twelve accused persons in a mob to protect, if in his presence another witness who was undoubtedly involved in the occurrence, is able to give out the names of only three accused persons: I.L.R. 42 Pat. 293.

The decision in 1959 Ker.L.T. 709, does not lay down any general rule that a Court can safely believe witnesses who give false statements to the Police first and then swear to entirely different versions in Court. The acceptability of their evidence depends upon the bona fides of the explanation for their varying statements. The question whether such an explanation is genuine is of course a question of fact and would depend entirely on the circumstances of each case: 1959 Ker.L.J. 1405: 1960 Ker.L.T. 166.

There is no rule of law or of prudence which lays down that the evidence of witnesses must be discarded if they suppress the fact that they were armed and if they do not explain the injuries received by members of the party opposed to them. The matter depends entirely upon the facts of each case: 1957 B.L.J.R. 756: 1959 Cr.L.J.71: A.I.R. 1959 Pat. 22.

When many persons are being tried on a charge as grave as that of murder, the responsibility of the witnesses appearing at the trial is correspondingly onerous as any false statement by a witness can put some or all accused on the board of gallows: 1968 Cr.L.J 929: A.I.R. 1968 Goa 72.

It is not safe to act upon uncorroborated testimony of an eye-witness especially when his evidence has been rejected in the case of the three persons who were equally implicated by him and who have been acquitted by the trial Court: 1959 Cr.L.J. 42: A.I.R. 1959 J. & K. 5.

Where the informant who knew the accused lodged the emergency Police report within an hour or an hour and half of the occurrence and names of only two accused appeared therein and neither the convicts' names nor the weapons of offence, namely, the sword and soda water bottles, were mentioned therein, the names of two convicts were interpolated therein later on, and the medical evidence negatived the use of soda water bottles as there were neither contusions nor glass splinters as per the autopsy reports, on the bodies of the deceased, held, the conclusion is irresistible that the prosecution case is concocted: 1994 Cr.L.J. 3602 (Bom.) (D.B.).

Credibility of witness—Absence of inherent vice—Adverse presumption on any matter cannot be drawn in absence of opportunity to explain it: A.I.R. 1970 Cal. 38.

In appraising oral testimony, the Court should not ignore the balance of probabilities; where it finds that the witnesses speak in unison about an incident, the Court may reasonably infer that they are singing to the tune of a common master; for true witnesses are bound to differ on minor details: 1979 Hindu L.R. 123: 1979 Marriage L.J. 477 (Del.).

The testimony of a witness not related to the complainants assumes greater sanctity: 1979 Chand. Cr.C. 190 (D.B.).

Evidence of eye-witness—Not giving many details of occurrence in her statement under S. 161 and S. 164, Cr.P.Code—Not a ground to reject her evidence: A.I.R. 1994 S.C. 826: 1994 Cr.L.J. 938.

When the Police take signatures of witnesses on their statements, despite the ban under S. 162 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, it need not always be presumed that the Police did not consider them to be reliable; it is a question of fact to be determined on its own facts in each case: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 631: 1981 (Supp.) S.C.C. 567.

Ocular version by a person injured in the same incident is of great value to the prosecution: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 2027.

Where presence of eye-witness, who is also injured at the time of occurrence is beyond question having regard to the fact that he had sustained injuries in the course of very same transaction at the very time and place of occurrence, held, the facts deposed by him about the deceased and his deposition about his own injuries has to be attached great value when his presence at the scene of occurrence was natural: 1995 Cr.L.J. 1160 (Raj.) (D.B.).

A witness posing to have been injured and even duly corroborated by the medical evidence, does not become a speaker of gospel truth; it is well known that medical evidence at the most strives to corroborate the injured witness mainly on three points: (i) the Doctor had found on examination the injuries on the witness's person; (ii) the injuries could probably be caused by the weapon used in the offence; and (iii) at best, the presence of injuries establishes the presence of the witness at the time and place of occurrence. Thus, far and no further; corroboration by medical evidence cannot be further projected into evidence as also establishing the accused's identity or authorship of the injury; that has still to be established. Thus, before a Court can safely accept and rely upon the evidence even of an injured witness, it has to closely scrutinize the evidence by examining (i) whether the injury was received in the same incident; (ii) whether the accused was previously known to the injured; (iii) if not, whether the accused was distinctly described in the statement before the Police; (iv) whether there was sufficient light at the time and place of the incident to identify the accused; and (v) whether the injury ruled out self-infliction. An injured witness passing these four tests carries with him an inbuilt guarantee of truth; the Court could certainly place implicit reliance upon his evidence: (1990-2) 31 Guj.L.R. 1215 (D.B.).

Where the High Court had given very cogent reasons for accepting the evidence of eye-witnesses and the evidence of one of them who was an injured witness who had made statement at the hospital shortly after the incident was corroborated by the evidence of other witnesses, held, the order of conviction and sentence passed by the High Court was not to be interferred with: 1995 Cr.L.J. 2687 (S.C.); (1995) 2 S.C.J. 75.

Where a large number of persons attack, it is very difficult for a witness to state as to who caused which injury to which particular part of a particular individual; a witness attempting to do so may rouse grave suspicion about his veracity: 1978 Raj.L.W. 289 (D.B.).

In cases of concerted attacks by a mob on the victim, it is often difficult to determine the role of each accused therein; but that is no ground to reject prosecution evidence on the substratum or the main incident: 1973 Cr.L.J. 1443.

Fight between the rival parties over land dispute—Injuries caused to members of both parties and death of one member—Conflicting versions of incident given by rival parties—Court should attempt to find out which version is more probable bearing in mind the basic fact that burden is always on prosecution to prove their case beyond doubt—Evidence Act (1872), S. 3, 'Proved' and Ss. 101-104: (1964) 1 Cr.L.J. 101 (Ker.).

Fight in broad day-light between rival parties—Equally serious injuries caused to members of both sides—Failure of prosecution to explain injuries caused to accused—Safe for Court to act on prosecution evidence: (1964) 1 Cr.L.J. 101 (Ker.).

See Penal Code, 1860, S. 34: (1964) 2 Cr.L.J. 567: A.I.R. 1964 Ori. 251.

Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 302, 147 and 149—Murder caused by blows of lathis by unlawful assembly—One accused sentenced to death while others to imprisonment for life—In case of rioting it is difficult to say whose lathi blow fell on whom and who caused particular injury and probability that fatal injuries were caused by accused other than one sentenced for death cannot be ruled out—Held, further that in view of advanced age of accused there could be no reason for awarding him more severe punishment than life imprisonment: 1966 All.Cr.R. 330.

Where a crowd of assailants who are members of an unlawful assembly proceeds to commit an offence of murder in pursuance of the common object of the unlawful assembly, it is often not possible for witnesses to describe accurately the part played by each one of the assailants. Besides, if a large crowd of persons armed with weapons assaults the intended victims, it may not be necessary that all of them have to take part in the actual assault. Where, for instance, several weapons were carried by different members of the unlawful assembly but it appears that the guns were used and that was enough to kill 5 persons, it would be unreasonable to contend that because the other weapons carried by the members of the unlawful assembly were not used, the story in regard to the said weapons itself should be rejected. Appreciation of evidence in such a complex case is no doubt a difficult task; but criminal Courts have to do their best in dealing with such cases and it is their duty to sift the evidence carefully and decide which part of it is true and which is not: (1964) 8 S.C.R. 133: (1965) 1 S.C.J. 605: I.L.R. (1964) 2 All. 694: A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 202.

The Court is not entitled to attribute to the witnesses conspiracy and perjury, unless the story told by them, coupled with the surrounding circumstances is of itself so unnatural and improbable that only one conclusion, viz., conspiracy and perjury, is reasonably possible: A.I.R. 1934 P.C. 12: 66 M.L.J. 151 (P.C.).

Where the prosecution case was that the four deceased and the two witnesses were inside the house when it was set on fire; the deceased came out one after the other and ran in different directions; they were chased and attacked by different sets of the accused; and the two witnesses continued to remain inside till the last, held, it is not an artificial and improbable version; the deceased, inside the house, might have felt afraid to come out in a body and become easy targets; they might have, for the same reason, run in different directions; the two witnesses might have thought that since the fire had not spread beyond the chappar portion, they would be safer inside; the fact that the four dead bodies were found lying at different places lends credence to the evidence of the witnesses: A.I.R. 1989 S.C. 2004.

Attempt to murder—Use of fire-arm—When a fire-arm is used in offences such as an attempt to murder, it is hardly ever that the companion of the accused who is armed with a fire-arm goes and catches the victim, as he is afraid of being hit by the shot if fired: (1961) 2 Cr.L.J. 396 (Punj.).

Simply because the witnesses are the accused in the counter case their evidence cannot be discarded; but it has to be scrutinized thoroughly: (1981) 51 Cut.L.T. 186.

Conviction of a lawyer for demanding bribe from the accused for payment to the Magistrate for seeking favour for the accused in a criminal case, held, cannot be based on sole testimony of that accused: 1980 Raj.Cr.C. 28.

The question of believing or disbelieving a witness arises only after his examination; a party cannot decline to produce a witness merely on the presumption that if produced, he would be treated as an interested witness: (1981) 94 Mad.L.W. 192 (D.B.).

Where a prosecution witness, a young boy of 15-16 years, had received no injuries on his body and on that score was disbelieved by the trial Court, held, such reasoning is merely speculative. Various persons react differently in similar circumstances; it is difficult to probe into the accused's minds as to how they will act in a particular situation; where they had already assaulted two men and two ladies with weapons, they might have thought that it was enough and they spared the young boy. Lack of injuries on his person could not thus be a valid ground to reject his entire testimony: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 2499: (1976) 4 S.C.C. 362.

Where in the State and Gaon Sabha's suit for declaration of ownership and possession over certain plots, the Pradhan appearing as a witness stated that he did not know whether the Gram Samaj was a party to the litigation, held, it is unbelievable that the Pradhan would not know it; from his statement, he appears to be a brazen-faced liar; it is unsafe to rely on his testimony for finding out the truth: A.I.R. 1976 All. 121: 1975 All.W.C. 632 (D.B.).

Where the only witness was very much interested in denying his liability under the documents and in disclaiming his signatures thereon, held, the prosecution was duty bound to establish its case by producing more reliable evidence; the High Court erred in relying on the word of that witness and thereby giving the benefit of doubt to him and not to the accused who deserved it; the onus of proof being always on the prosecution, it has to establish beyond reasonable doubt all ingredients of the offence: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 1012: (1979) 3 S.C.C. 391.

Once evidence of a witness has been discarded by the Court, it should not be used to judge the veracity of other witnesses; it would not be a reliable yard-stick: A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 856: (1975) 3 S.C.C. 742.

Quite often a shop owner, engaged in his business, might not have witnessed an incident occurring nearby; but another person near the scene might have seen it; merely because the other person was there by sheer coincidence and saw the incident, his evidence, if trustworthy, is not to be discarded on the ground that no shop-keeper was cited as a witness; as stated in A.I.R. 1983 S.C. 680, in a street murder only passersby will be witnesses; their evidence cannot be brushed aside or viewed with suspicion because they are mere 'chance witnesses'; to discard evidence of street hawkers and street vendors on such a ground is to abandon good sense and take too shallow a view of evidence: (1992) 2 Ker.L.J. 952 (D.B.).

Per Desai, J.—After a witness has been found to be competent to give evidence and has made a statement which is admissible in evidence, the question whether it should be believed or not is essentially a question of fact. Neither the Evidence Act nor any other Act lays down any law to determine as to which statements should be believed or not: 1962 All.L.J. 1119: A.I.R. 1963 All. 161: I.L.R. (1963) 1 All. 585 (F.B.).

The fact that the Police had examined the witnesses only after a very long time is certainly a circumstance to be taken into account to consider whether their evidence before the Court could be relied on: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 1901.

Delayed in examining a vital witness is a suspicious circumstance; the Court should, therefore, endeavour to uncover the reason for such delay; it is only after it gets a plausible explanation therefor that the Court can rely upon his evidence: 1994 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 348 (Ori.) (D.B.).

Where accused committed murder of five innocent persons by pouring petrol in their room and a rickshaw driver after reading about the incident in the newspaper deposed that accused had hired his rickshaw on fateful day and in that rickshaw they carried tins to the petrol pump and brought back the said tins filled with petrol and went to a particular place and there was no evidence showing any enmity between accused and the rickshaw driver, held, evidence of said witness could not be discarded simply on the ground that he came forward for giving statement after seven days: 1995 Cr.L.J. 1956 (Bom.) (D.B.).

Where eye-witness to the occurrence was not examined immediately after the occurrence and he stated that because he was frightened, he left the village but it was not stated as to what he was afraid of, or from which source he apprehended danger and further he did not disclose the incident before anybody till he deposed in the Court, held, evidence of such an eye-witness was unworthy of credence: 1995 Cr.L.J. 2255 (Ori.) (D.B.).

Murder charge—Eye-witness not coming forward and telling the Investigating Officer what he had long after stated in Court—His omission to do so condemns his testimony as an afterthought: A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 216: 1975 Cri.L.J. 26.

Where in a murder case, the Chowkidar of the locality had lodged a report of the incident in details, before the murder was discovered and before even any one had suspected that the accused had a hand in the crime, the truthfulness of the evidence of such a witness could not be challenged: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 1723: 1974 Cr.L.J. 1171.

Testimony of witness—Suit by depositor against Bank for recovery of amount deposited—A deposing that the plaintiff, who was already known to him had twice deposited money in that branch office some 13 or 14 years ago—Held, that it was not improbable for A to remember name of plaintiff and his testimony could not be ignored—Evidence Act, 1872, S. 3: A.I.R. 1963 J.&K. 29.

Case under Ss. 147, 448 and 353, Penal Code—Witness, in his first report, naming only a few of the accused—Judge rejecting evidence of witness as untrustworthy in respect of those accused—Evidence cannot be relied upon to convict other accused not mentioned and to whom no particular conduct was attributed: 1961 M.L.J. (Cr.) 699: (1962) 1 Cr.L.J. 832 (Mys.).

The mere non-mention of the name of a witness in the first information report is not by itself enough to hold that the witness did not see the occurrence: 1957 All.L.J. 857: 1958 Cr.L.J. 324.

Merely because the name of a witness is not mentioned in the first information report, his evidence cannot be rejected on that ground; it should be reckoned at its probative value: 1979 All.L.J. 222 (D.B.). Neither any rule of law nor of prudence require that if evidence of an eye-witness is consistent with the story narrated in the first information report, his evidence should be accepted on its face value: 1975 W.L.N. (U.C.) 77 (Raj.) (D.B.).

The credibility of the testimony of the witnesses who could name the accused at the trial, held, cannot be discarded simply because the name of this accused was not mentioned in the statement under S. 161 or 164, Cr.P.Code or before the warden who tried to gather facts from different persons who claimed to have witnessed the occurrence: 1978 Raj.L.W. 123 (D.B.). An omission in the statement of a witness under S. 161, Cr.P.Code only affects its reliability, not its admissibility: (1978-79) 83 Cal.W.N. 248 (D.B.).

Criminal trial—Credibility of witness: (1962) 2 Cr.L.J. 156 (Raj.); 1994 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 157 (All.).

Tribunal not making any note about demeanour of a witness in his deposition—Only thing noted was that he sometimes smiled and sometimes laughed while giving evidence—No material to show as to why the witness behaved in such manner—It is not correct to think that evidence given by witness is not entitled to credence by reason of such demeanour—Tribunal was not justified in disbelieving the witness on account of his demeanour, in his judgment given after long delay: I.L.R. (1960) Mys. 1307: A.I.R. 1961 Mys. 106.

Sea Customs Act (1878), Chap. XVII—Absence of provision in Act regarding maintenance of diary by Customs Officer cannot be a good ground for rejecting their testimony: I.L.R. (1965) Bom. 648: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 616: A.I.R. 1965 Bom. 195.

Evidence of witnesses cannot be rejected as "highly incredible" on the ground that it does not satisfy certain notions of propriety: A.I.R. 1953 Nag. 374: I.L.R. (1954) Nag. 204.

A Judge cannot travel beyond the record of the case before him and rely for the rejection of an important witness in the case on information gained from other cases heard by him: 193 I.C. 327: A.I.R. 1941 Lah. 22.

Want of status or of riches can have no relevance on his credibility and reliance: 1965 Mah.L.J. 565: 1967 Cr.L.J. 21: A.I.R. 1967 Bom. 1.

No witnesses's evidence can be discredited by reason merely of the profession he pursues or the status he occupies in life. In all cases, the evidence of each witnesses has to be weighed on its own merits and considered in the light of the other accepted evidence in the case. It is only when there are inherent improbabilities in the evidence given by the witness that a Court of law is justified in coming to the conclusion that it is incredible. To characterise that a witness is a pleader's clerk and therefore, his evidence should not be accepted is a situation which is totally repugnant to the rules bearing on the appreciation of evidence: A.I.R. 1960 Andh. Pra. 359.

Evidence cannot be discredited merely on ground that witness belongs to a particular political party: 1967 Ker.L.J. 399: 1967 M.L.J. (Cr.) 311: 1967 Ker.L.T. 1122.

A witness's evidence should not be rejected merely because he appeared to be nervous while in the witness-box: 1940 All.L.J. 26: A.I.R. 1940 All. 175.

Appreciation of evidence — Confused statement of witness — Inference from: 1968 Cr.L.J. 584: A.I.R. 1968 All. 170.

It is very difficult to rely on the statement of a witness who is not in a position to disclose his source of knowledge. In the absence of such evidence, the statement of the witness would be nothing more than a mere opinion: I.L.R. (1956) Hyd. 868: A.I.R. 1957 Hyd. 29.

The fact that a party is not prepared to take oath is not by itself a ground for disbelieving his evidence: 1959 Ker.L.T. 1348: 1959 Ker.L.J. 1001.

The fact that there has been some litigation between the witness and the accused by itself is no reason for disbelieving his testimony if it is otherwise acceptable: 1957 Cr.L.J. 532: A.I.R. 1957 Punj. 81.

The fact that the witnesses for one of the parties to a suit happen to be his employees is not a sufficient ground for not relying on their evidence, especially when none but the employees could be witnesses to the transaction in dispute: 189 I.C. 232: A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 629.

In considering the question as to whether evidence given by the witness should be accepted or not, the Court has to examine whether the witness is an interested witness and to enquire whether the story deposed to by him is probable and whether it has been shaken in cross-examination.

It would be unsafe to discard the evidence of a witness which appears otherwise to be reasonable and probable merely because some suggestions were made to him without those suggestions being proved to be true: 1963 B.L.J.R. 226: (1963) 3 S.C.R. 722: A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 1728.

Though it cannot be laid down as a law of general application that in no case a Judge can accept a part of the prosecution story when he has disbelieved its other part, yet, as a rule of prudence, it will not be safe to rely on the evidence of witnesses on one part of the prosecution story when it has been disbelieved as to its material part: 1963 B.L.J.R. 332.

It is well known that a Burman Buddhist is as a rule reluctant to give evidence against an accused person in a murder case. If he can help it, he will always try and avoid it. The natural reluctance becomes more pronounced when the accused person happens to be a pongyi. Therefore, unless a more cogent reason than that of discovering a few discrepancies is given, evidence given by such persons should not be rejected: 37 Cr.L.J. 418: A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 60.

Evidence of a witness cannot be rejected outright on the ground that he was championing the cause of the party calling him when there is evidence that he had made certain statements favouring the opposite party. [A.I.R. 1949 P.C. 207, Rel. on]: 1959 Jab.L.J. 78: A.I.R. 1959 Madh. Pra. 151 (F.B.).

A party who produces witnesses in Court produces them as witnesses of truth and simply because portions of their statements are not favourable to the party producing them, they cannot be condemned as biased witnesses: (1961) 2 Cr.L.J. 55 (All.).

Where a raid was conducted at a premises where illicit distillation of liquor was carried on and an independent witness in raid who was dropped by prosecution joined hands with the defence and his evidence that he was not party to raid was unshaken, held, merely because he came up as a defence witness his testimony could not be discarded more so when evidence of official witness was not free from discrepancies: 1994 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 357 (P.&H.).

It cannot be laid down as a general rule that if the principal prosecution witnesses are interrelated, their statements should not be believed in toto. Each case is to be decided on its own merits and in the light of the circumstances disclosed: 41 P.L.R. 802. See also 1939 M.L.R. 78 (Cr.).

Appreciation of evidence in criminal cases—Woman complaining of rape on her both by A and S in F.I.R. and in her first statement to the police, completely exonerating S at the trial, probably due to attempts made to suppress part played by S—S discharged by committing Court—Held, that would not make the rest of the story spoken to by prosecution witnesses against A anytheless believable: (1962) 1 Cr.L.J. 671 (Tripura).

The correct method of appreciating and assessing the evidence of a witness is by scrutinizing the evidence on its merits, and it is only when a doubt arises whether the witness is in fact deposing to the truth or not that the necessity would arise to investigate into the possible reasons for his conduct and what could have motivated the same, such as intimate interest in the person on whose behalf he had come to Court to give evidence, or strong enmity or ill-will prevailing between the witness and the person against whom he had come to give evidence. Courts should not start with the investigation of these reasons without first making an impartial and judicious appreciation of the evidence of the witness on its own merits: 1961 An.L.T. 404: A.I.R. 1961 Andh. Pra. 461.

The moment a witness appears to consider as to whom he should name out the persons present at an occurrence, it immediately puts the Court on its guard and one normally hesitates from placing implicit reliance on such a witness for it cannot be said that he has told the whole truth and nothing but the truth: 1961 All.Cr.R. 323; (1961) 63 Punj.L.R. 632.

Witness trying to implicate persons in a serious charge of murder is unreliable: 1970 Cr.L.J. 1327: A.I.R. 1970 Assam 121.

Mere competence to depose as an eye witness does not necessarily mean that their evidence should be taken as reliable. Once it is established that the eye-witnesses belong to a hostile faction and that they are suppressing a material portion of the occurrence, it is difficult to accept their evidence as to how exactly the fight took place. Doubtless, if a consistent story is put forward, it may be possible for a Court even to accept the testimony of partisan witnesses specially where the village is divided into two factions and disinterested persons may not be available. But when the F.I.R. version and the case as put forward in the Court do not tally, it will be extremely hazardous for a Court to conjecture as to how the fight must have taken place: 25 Cut.L.T. 433.

Where the rejection of a witness's evidence by the trial Judge is solely based on the evidence, oral and documentary, placed before him, and he makes no comment on the demeanour of the witness or on his truthfulness apart from comments on the probabilities of the truth of the story actually told by the witness viewed in the light of the surrounding circumstances, the appellate Court is in as good a position to judge the matter as the trial Court; the appellate Court may reappraise the evidence and arrive at its own conclusion: A.I.R. 1934 P.C. 12: 66 M.L.J. 151 (P.C.). See also I.L.R. 8 Luck. 315: A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 128; 76 I.C. 63: 46 M.L.J. 334 (P.C.).

Appreciation of evidence by a Court of law cannot be based on any set principles. A Court of law should while deciding the facts of a case seek guidance from its experience when it is called upon to appreciate correctly the value of the evidence before it. In a trial by jury, usually it is for the jury to appreciate the evidence of a witness and it is left to the Judge to lay down the law. In India, where there is no trial by jury, the Judge is not the Judge only of law but also of fact and in appreciating the evidence, he is to act as a jury. He is to form his own estimate of the evidence produced before him and should not be haunted by the idea that there is no ruling or precedent to guide him.

Where the statement of an approver made in examination-in-chief was found to be crammed and he repeated verbatim on cross-examination every detail of the story given in the examination-in-chief, held, that the crammed story of the witness created an impression that the Court should be extremely cautious in taking the story given by the approver at its face value and the Court should probe deeper into the matter: I.L.R. (1964) 14 Raj. 651: 1964 Raj.L.W. 264.

The prosecution story was that the accused demanded certain sum from the complainant and on latter's showing inability to pay, fired a gun at him, which the complainant cleverly avoided by lying flat. The trial Court disbelieved the story of firing but convicted the accused under S. 387, Penal Code.

Held, that the real accusation of firing having been disbelieved the same witnesses could not be relied upon for their statements with respect to the demand of money and the conviction for extortion could not be upheld: 1960 Cr.L.J. 78: 1959 M.P.L.J. 1186: A.I.R. 1960 Madh. Pra. 11.

Direct evidence of witnesses should not be brushed aside in the light of any circumstance unless the existence of the fact in issue is inconsistent with or rendered improbable on proof of the existence of that circumstance: 1980 All.Cr.R. 72: 1979 All.L.J. 1285.

Offence under S. 468, I.P. Code—Witness typing the document alleged to have been forged by accused—Testimony of such witness, almost of an accomplice, ought not to be relied upon without corroboration: 1963 Raj.L.W. 416.

Prosecution for rash driving—Prosecution witness cited but not examined—Examined in defence—His evidence acceptable and left unrebutted—Case of one witness against another—Accused held was entitled to benefit of doubt: 1970 Mad. L.W. (Cr.) 130.

Witness not summoned but called by party—Witness cannot become untruthful: (1964) 66 Punj.L.R. 1130: A.I.R. 1965 Punj. 140.

51. Past antecedents of witness.—Antecedents or mere interestedness of witnesses is not a valid ground to reject their evidence. Persons with questionable antecedents are not necessarily untruthful nor mere relationship with the deceased is a good ground to discard their testimony if their presence at the scene of occurrence was probable. All that is necessary is to scrutinize their evidence with more than ordinary care and circumspection to determine the part played by each of the accused. The effort should be to sift the grain from the chaff and to accept what appears to be true and reject the rest: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 697: (1981) 2 S.C.C. 1: (1981) 2 S.C.R. 615.

Even if past antecedants of a witness are such that he cannot claim respectability, held, his evidence cannot be discredited on that ground alone: 1978 Cr.L.J. 324 (All.) (D.B.).

Where an eye-witness's evidence is found to be truthful, and he had been examined by the Police during investigation immediately, held, merely because his character is not above suspicion, his testimony cannot be rejected: A.I.R. 1987 S.C. 1328: (1987) 2 U.J. (S.C.) 116: (1987) 3 S.C.C. 360.

Appearance of person as witness in one or two other cases is not sufficient to discredit him on that ground alone: 1969 Cur.L.J. 957.

The evidence of a witness cannot be discarded merely because he had been appearing for the prosecution in earlier cases: 1980 Cr.L.J. 571 (All.). Simply because a witness is cited as such in more than one criminal case, held, his evidence does not become doubtful: 1994 M.P.L.J. 57 (D.B.). See also (1972) 74 Punj.L.R. 176; (1971) 73 Punj.L.R. 774; 1975 Cr.L.J. 1630 (Punj.). The fact that a witness is appearing again and again for the prosecution casts doubt on his credibility: 1974 Punj.L.J. (Cr.) 329.

Where a witness on his own admission, had appeared as a prosecution witness four or five times in police cases from the same police station, held, his evidence could hardly carry any weight: A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 356.

The fact that a public servant had previously been suspended is not by itself sufficient to render his statement unreliable: 1976 Cr.L.J. 274: 1974 All.L.J. 100 (F.B.).

The evidence of a witness cannot be rejected merely because he had once been convicted without indicating the time or the nature of the offence; a man who has once erred may yet speak the truth: A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 701: (1976) 4 S.C.C. 348.

An occurrence inside a jail can only be testified by the prisoners then in jail; they are natural and probable witnesses; simply because they were undertrial prisoners, their evidence cannot be thrown out: (1987) 35 B.L.J.R. 127.

Where an offence is committed by a jail officer in jail premises against a convict the evidence of other convicts cannot be said to be unreliable. There is no reason to believe that those convicted of crimes of violence should be more untruthful than other persons. A person convicted of a crime of violence may be a man of admirable character: I.L.R. (1940) Lah. 521: A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 210.

The fact that the prosecution witness was once a history-sheeter, whose history-sheet had been closed 7 or 8 years before he had made the statement, or that the witness had appeared for police in one or two cases before appearing as a witness or the fact that he admitted that he could not identify the men arrested on the spot, is not sufficient to reject his testimony: 1959 All.L.J. 94: 1959 Cr.L.J. 1040: A.I.R. 1959 All. 559.

Theft case—Testimony of prosecution witness that accused sold goods to him—Testimony cannot be disregarded merely on ground that witness was habitual receiver of stolen property: 1966 Cr.L.J. 848 (Mys.).

Where a witness deposing in a murder case had been convicted of murder about 43 years ago, held, because of the long lapse of time, his testimony cannot be discarded or rejected on that sole ground: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 2588: 1976 Cr.L.J. 1998.

52. Relations/interested/partisan/inimical witness.—Testimony of interested, partisan and inimical witnesses cannot be discarded altogether on that ground, however, testimony of such witnesses must pass the close and severe scrutiny before it can be safely acted upon: A.I.R. 1994 S.C. 76; 1994 M.P.L.J. 452; 1994 M.P.L.J. 551; (1990-2) 38 B.L.J.R. 1242 (D.B.); (1990-2) 38 B.L.J.R. 1251 (D.B.); 1989 Mah.L.J. 626 (D.B.); (1988) 36 B.L.J.R. 279 (D.B.); (1988) 36 B.L.J.R. 545 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1985 S.C. 1384: 1985 Cr.L.J. 2009: (1985) 3 S.C.C. 703; 1985 Cr.L.J. 575 (Ori.); 1985 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 66 (Ori.); 1984 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 161 (Gau.); 1983 Cr.L.J. 1939 (Ker.) (D.B.); 1982 Raj.L.W. 513; 1982 Cr.L.J. 1624 (Ori.) (D.B.); 1981 Cr.L.J. 1474: 1980 Raj.L.W. 112 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 2304; A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 2499; A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 1153; A.I.R. 1972 S.C. 677; A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 1949.

The evidence of relations and partisan witnesses must be scrutinized with caution; but their evidence does not deserve to be rejected outright simply because they are relations or inimical: 1981 Cr.L.J. 530; 1981 Cr.L.J. 364.

Merely because the witnesses were relations or interested is by itself not sufficient to straightaway discard their evidence unless their evidence is shown to suffer from serious infirmities raising considerable doubt in the Court's mind: A.I.R. 1983 S.C. 839: 1983 Cr.L.J. 1112: 1983 S.C.C. (Cr.) 590: (1983) 3 S.C.C. 316; (1973) 1 Chand. L.R. 101.

The evidence of interested and partisan witnesses should be weighed in golden scale before relying upon the same: 1993 Cr.L.J. 1688 (Mad.).

The evidence of interested and inimical eye-witnesses is to be approached with caution; it cannot be discarded as of a partisan nature: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 2073: 1981 Cr.L.J. 1701: 1981 S.C.C. (Cr.) 672; if the Court is satisfied about its credibility, such evidence can certainly be relied upon: (1982) 54 Cut.L.T. 527; 1983 Cr.L.J. 1717: (1983) 56 Cut.L.T. 205.

The testimony of eye-witnesses cannot be rejected merely because they were interested and partisan, if on careful scrutiny of their evidence the Courts below have believed it: A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 1501: (1975) 4 S.C.C. 148; it only puts the Court on guard to scrutinize it with more than ordinary care: A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 216: (1975) 3 S.C.C. 752.

'Related' is not equivalent to 'interested'; a witness is 'interested' only when he or she derives some benefit from the result of the litigation; but if he is a natural and the only possible eye-witness in a case, he cannot be said to be 'interested': A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 1390: (1981) 2 S.C.C. 752: 1981 Cr.L.J. 1012: 1981 All.Cr.L.J. 254: 1981 S.C.C. (Cr.) 593: 1981 All.Cr.C. 235: 1981 All.W.C. 465.

The prosecution witnesses being partisans and interested is not sufficient to reject their evidence; if it is corroborated by other independent evidence after it has been scrutinized with caution, it may still be relied upon: 1979 Jab.L.J. 304: 1979 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 154 (D.B.).

Interested party or relation—Testimony cannot be fully reliable: I.L.R. (1965) 15 Raj. 529: 1965 Raj.L.W. 168.

The rule of careful scrutiny applies only to inimical or interested witnesses, not to independent witnesses: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 1241: 1981 U.J. (S.C.) 270: 1981 S.C.C. (Cr.) 646: 1981 Cr.L.J. 752.

Relations.—A criminal Court evaluating evidence of witnesses closely related to the deceased has, of course, to be very careful but it ought not mechanically reject such evidence on the sole ground that they are interested witnesses; that would invariably lead to failure of justice: A.I.R. 1991 S.C. 318: 1991 Cr.L.J. 402.

The mere fact that a witness is the deceased's collateral in some degree, is no ground to hold that he is not a disinterested or independent witness: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 83: (1976) 1 S.C.C. 181.

Relationship by itself is no ground to discredit the testimony of a witness if it is otherwise consistent and true; it is neither tainted evidence nor can it be equated to that of an approver: (1985) 1 An.W.R. 31 (D.B.); (1985) 1 An.W.R. 40 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1972 All. 369: 1972 Ren.C.R. 448; A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 2304: 1976 Cr.L.J. 1757: (1976) 4 S.C.C. 369: 1976 Cur.L.J. (Cr.) 230: 1976 S.C.C. (Cr.) 646; 1963 All.L.J. 977.

Evidence of close relatives and friends must be examined with great care and caution; such witnesses have a tendency to exaggerate, or add to, the facts: A.I.R. 1984 S.C. 1622: (1984) 4 S.C.C. 116: 1984 Cr.L.J. 1738.

Evidence of a witness cannot be discarded merely because he happens to be a close relative of the party: (1983) 2 D.M.C. 77: 1983 Rajdhani L.R. 729: 1983 Marriage L.J. 511: 1984 Hindu L.R. 74; 1995 Cr.L.J. 3255 (Andh. Pra.) (D.B.).

Evidence cannot be disbelieved on the ground of kinship; as only persons of one brotherhood had collected for a common cause, they were the only natural witnesses: 1979 Cr.L.J. 727 (Del.) (D.B.).

Merely because the eye-witnesses are related to each other and the deceased is no ground to reject their evidence out of hand, if otherwise it is found to be true and reliable: 1965 Ker.L.J. 412: I.L.R. (1965) 2 Ker. 33: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 647: A.I.R. 1965 Ker. 248.

Relationship of prosecution witnesses with the deceased is not a good reason to suspect their evidence against the accused, because they are far from likely to leave off the real culprit and name another person as the deceased's assailant: (1965) 2 An.W.R. 145: 1965 M.L.J. (Cr.) 602: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 440 (Andh. Pra.); 1957 Cr.L.J. 1200: A.I.R. 1957 All. 755; 1976 Kash.L.J. 253: 1976 Cr.L.J. 1310; 1975 Cr.L.J. 1405: I.L.R. (1974) 33 Pat. 644; (1974) 40 Cut.L.T. 159.

A witness is normally to be considered independent unless he springs from sources which are likely to be tainted and that usually means unless the witness has cause, such as enmity against the accused to wish to implicate him falsely. Ordinarily, a close relation of the deceased would be the last to screen a real culprit and falsely implicate an innocent person. Where the eye-witnesses have convincingly explained their presence and stated that they saw accused beating the deceased and nothing has been elicited against these witnesses that they were either hostile to the accused or were actuated by any private grudges, mere fact that the witnesses were related to the deceased would not render their testimony as untrustworthy: 1969 Cr.L.J. 1453 (Andh. Pra.).

In a trial for murder the evidence of the witnesses cannot be discarded merely on the ground that they are related to the deceased. That is based on the common sense view that ordinarily a relation should not implicate persons who are not involved in the murder. In such cases, however, the Court requires some sort of independent corroboration to lend assurance to the conviction that they are witnesses of truth: 35 Cut.L.T. 152: 1970 Cr.L.J. 1322.

In a case of murder the fact that the prosecution witnesses are relatives of the murdered man is no valid reason for discarding their evidence. What would be of importance is that the witnesses had enmity with the accused. Interest of the relatives is undoubtedly to see that the true criminal is prosecuted; they have no interest in accusing any one falsely unless they have enmity: A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 233.

It is erroneous in a murder case to reject evidence of witnesses because they are related to the deceased; close relative of the deceased would normally be most reluctant to spare the real assailants and to falsely

A related witness would not shield the real culprit because of his affinity with the deceased and, therefore, evidence of a related witness is much more reliable than the evidence of an interested or inimical witness: 1994 M.P.L.J. 57 (D.B.).

Close relations are anxious to see that the true culprit is punished; it is unnatural for a daughter to falsely implicate her mother as the author of the murders; she would do so only if the mother had in fact committed the murder: A.I.R. 1978 Ori. 19 (F.B.).

Close relations do not falsely implicate somebody else in place of real culprits; but the chance of their including some innocent persons alongwith the guilty cannot be ruled out: 1979 Chand. Cr.C. 190 (D.B.).

Witnesses bearing no grudge or animus against accused—Witnesses not interested in the deceased also—Fact that the witnesses are related to accused or the deceased not sufficient to discard their sworn testimony: (1963) 65 Punj.L.R. 505.

Criminal trial — Eye-witnesses relatives of complainant — Their testimony is to be judged with caution and does not mean that their evidence is to be discarded altogether: 1967 All.W.R. (H.C.) 604: 1967 All.Cr.R. 391: 1967 Cr.L.J. 1102.

Relationship of the prosecution witnesses to the murdered man is no ground for not acting upon their testimony if it is otherwise reliable in the sense that the witnesses were competent witnesses who could be expected to be near about the place of occurrence and could have seen what happened: 1956 Cr.L.J. 827: A.I.R. 1956 S.C. 460; A.I.R. 1958 J.&K. 23.

In a trial under S. 307, Penal Code, the victim of the attack is the best witness to speak about what happened. It is safe to act on his testimony when it is corroborated by circumstantial evidence and his wife who is likely to have been present at the time. The mere fact of relationship is no ground for discarding her testimony: 1959 Ker.L.T. 1014.

Relationship by itself is not sufficient to discard the evidence of witnesses as unworthy of credit in the absence of other circumstances to detract from the evidentiary value of their testimony: 24 Cut.L.T. 108: A.I.R. 1958 Ori. 92; A.I.R. 1958 Manipur 47; A.I.R. 1960 Tripura 4; 1959 Raj.L.W. 381; (1959) 61 Punj.L.R. 902; A.I.R. 1960 Madh. Pra. 73. See also 1994 Cr.L.J. 848 (All.); A.I.R. 1961 All. 198; (1982) 53 Cut.L.T. 470: 1982 Cr.L.J. 1160; A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 276; 1979 Chand. Cr.C. 166; 1966 All.Cr.R. 330: 1966 All.W.R. 554; A.I.R. 1983 S.C. 114: (1983) 1 S.C.C. 35; 1989 Cr.L.J. 1876 (Gau.); 1994 Cr.L.J. 3602 (Bom.) (D.B.).

The mere fact that any witness is related to the deceased is not a ground for regarding him as an interested witness. The imputation of interestedness could be made only in cases where it is shown that the witnesses are inimically disposed towards the prisoner. It is only when it is established that there is either discord or hostility between the accused person and the witnesses that the evidence of a witness could be treated as tainted. In good many of the cases, the witnesses would be either relations of the deceased or friends of his and on that ground alone their evidence could not be discarded. No doubt, if the circumstances are such as to throw doubt on the trustworthiness of the witnesses, it may not be safe to rest a conviction on such evidence: A.I.R. 1957 Andh. Pra. 231: 1957 Cr.L.J. 815. See also 1994 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 205 (Ori.).

Mere fact of relationship between the victim and the prosecution witnesses far from being a foundation for falsehood is often a sure guarantee of truth; they are likely to be most reluctant to spare the real assailant and falsely implicate another; mere relationship, when presence at the spot is corroborated, is not sufficient to suspect credibility. A witness is normally considered to be independent unless facts indicate to the contrary. Desirability of the testimony being subjected to close and severe scrutiny arises when it is shown that there was likelihood of an attempt to falsely implicate an accused; what is to be seen is whether the relative's testimony is credible and cogent. Thus, where the victim, his mother and the Doctor testified that the injury was on the left eye's upper lid, some confusion in the testimony of other witnesses does not affect the credibility of the mother's evidence: 1995 Cr.L.J. 390 (Ori.).

The fact that the prosecution witnesses in a murder trial are the sons and daughter of the victim does not detract from the value to be attached to their evidence, because naturally enough, they are interested in seeing that the real murderer of their father is convicted of the offence and they cannot be expected to adopt a course by which some innocent person would be substituted, for the person really guilty of the murder and that too, when no enmity as such has been proved to have existed between the witnesses and the accused as would induce them to give false evidence and to substitute him as the murderer in place of the real guilty. In fact their feelings would be strongest against the real culprit and, consequently, their evidence cannot be discarded on the mere ground of their close interest in the deceased: A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 1438.

In case of a relation witness whether corroboration is necessary or not will depend on the particular facts and circumstances of each case. It would not be admissible to rely upon evidence of a partisan witness without corroboration. It would be equally clear that his evidence is not a tainted one, but it would only make a difference in the degree of corroboration required rather than the necessity for it: 28 Cut.L.T. 523: I.L.R. (1963) Cut. 67: (1963) 1 Cr.L.J. 550.

Trial for murder—Eye-witnesses closely related to victim—Evidence given by such witnesses to be closely scrutinised—Plea that their evidence cannot be accepted unless it is corroborated is not acceptable: A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 328.

Merely because the witnesses are related to the deceased, their evidence cannot be discarded; but it is required to be closely scrutinized; if found reliable, natural and trustworthy, the Court is bound to accept it: (1991-1) 11 Guj.L.H. 296 (D.B.); 1993 Cr.L.J. 1756 (Pat.) (One of the wintesses related to both the parties).

The corroboration required of a witness, who is a relation of the deceased in a murder case, is not that kind of corroboration which would be necessary to support the evidence of an approver or an accomplice, but only such corroboration is needed as would be sufficient to lend assurance to the evidence before the Court and satisfy the Court that the particular persons were really concerned in the offence: 1969 Cr.L.J. 1002: A.I.R. 1969 Raj. 219.

A close relative, a very natural witness, cannot be regarded as an interested witness; the term 'interested' postulates that the witness must have direct interest in seeing the accused being some how or other convicted either because he had some animus against the accused or for some other reason: A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 472: (1976) 4 S.C.C. 158: (1977) 1 S.C.R. 280.

Testimony of witness—Distant relationship—May be corroborated by other witnesses—Witness cannot be disbelieved: 1970 Cur.L.J. 93 (Punj.).

Evidence of eye-witnesses — Eye-witnesses closely related to each other—Their evidence cannot be rejected but has to be sifted carefully: 1967 Cur.L.J. 850: 1968 Cr.L.J. 712 (Punj.)

Evidence of—Close relatives of deceased—When they are natural and free from inherent improbabilities, conviction can be maintained on their evidence—Discrepancies in their statement—If inconsequential do not affect merit of testimony. [A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 328, Rel. on]: (1969) 71 Punj.L.R. 73.

Two eye-witnesses relatives of the deceased and themselves injured persons—One witness whose field adjoins the scene of occurrence a wholly independent and natural witness—Testimony of these witnesses free from blemish, consistent and credible—Evidence of the witnesses can safely form a basis for a judgment of conviction of accused persons: 1969 All.W.R. (H.C.) 243: 1969 All. Cr.R. 169.

Relationship—Appreciation of evidence: 1968 Cr.L.J. 64: A.I.R. 1968 Manipur 7.

Close relation of complainant appearing as defence witness—It cannot be presumed that he is invariably actuated by some feeling of animosity towards complainant—Inference as to animosity must rest on tangible facts or circumstances and cannot be founded on mere conjecture or presupposition: 1969 All.Cr.R. 240: 1969 All.W.R. (H.C.) 369.

If a relation is called as a witness by a party, held, the Court must exercise appropriate caution while appraising his evidence; its probative value should be assessed in the context of the entire facts and circumstances of the case; the Court cannot discard it merely because it is evidence by a relation: (1983) 56 Cut.L.T. 185: 1983 Cr.L.J. 1711.

Evidence of close relatives about the possession of the house, held, cannot be rejected on that ground alone; such close relationship itself makes their personal knowledge probable: 1982 Kash.L.J. 263: A.I.R. 1982 J.&K. 141.

In a case relating to claim for compensation for death caused due to motor accident under S. 110-A, Motor Vehicles Act, the Claims Tribunal is not justified in rejecting the testimony of a witness on the ground that he is related to and, therefore, interested in the heirs of the deceased. Even in a criminal case, the evidence of an interested person is not to be rejected mechanically merely because the witness is an interested person, but the Court has to be careful in weighing such evidence and see whether the evidence strikes the Court as genuine or as probable: A.I.R. 1969 Del. 183.

In a motor accident claim case, evidence of the deceased's widow travelling with him in the car which met with the accident, held, could not be brushed aside merely because she was the widow of the deceased victim: A.I.R. 1983 All. 409: 1983 All.L.J. 230 (D.B.).

In a motor accident claim case, the evidence of an occupant of the vehicle, a relative of the deceased driver, held, cannot be discredited as of an interested witness in the absence of defence evidence to the contrary: A.I.R. 1982 Mad. 65 (D.B.).

Where in case of a motor accident, the deceased's brother lodged the F.I.R. soon after and claimed that he saw the accident from the field he was then working in, rushed to the spot and thence to the Police Station, held, his testimony could not be disbelieved merely because his presence at the scene was doubted when his version was natural and corroborated by an independent witness: 1979 All.L.J. 222 (D.B.).

A village wedding, unlike a city wedding, is not a formal affair; in second marriages, no invitations are usually issued; a witness visiting his relations and learning about the wedding being performed in the accused's house, also related to him, may as well go there and watch the marriage ceremony; his being related to both the sides is not of much importance; he is not a got-up witness: A.I.R. 1981 Bom. 283: 1981 Mah.L.J. 614: (1981) 83 Bom.L.R. 312.

Where the point in issue was as to whether the marriage was solemnised in the Kudiavaippu form, held, such a ceremony is one conducted inside the house attended to mainly by near relations only and, thus, persons competent to swear to the ceremony can only be the near relations: A.I.R. 1973 Ker. 250.

Where it is possible to explain the presence of all relative witnesses at the scene as their residential tenements were in its vicinity, held, their evidence cannot be discarded on the ground of relationship: (1971) 3 S.C.C. 413: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 1983.

Murder case — Three prosecution witnesses, relations of deceased — Witnesses present near scene of offence and in a position to see assailants—Besides them, there was one disinterested and independent witness—Evidence of these witnesses, held to be natural piece of evidence, and accepted—Fact that individual act was not described, could not be considered to be infirmity: (1969) 71 Bom.L.R. 375: I.L.R. (1969) Bom. 654: 1970 Cr.L.J. 621.

In a murder case, one of the eye-witnesses, apart from being a near relation of the deceased, was also one of the bitter enemies of the accused. The other eye-witness was the cooly engaged by 'the deceased'. Apart from their interestedness there was a fatal omission on the part of these two witnesses to name the assailants of the deceased, immediately after the commission of the crime. There was no satisfactory explanation for this serious omission. The two witnesses did not also give a consistent version as to where exactly the assailants were hiding themselves just before attacking the deceased. Held, that these circumstances led to a reasonable inference that those witnesses did not see the actual giving of the fatal blows by the assaillants. Their evidence so far as their claim to be eye-witnesses is concerned, must be rejected: (1964) 5 Ori.J.D. 145: (1964) 1 Cr.L.J. 464.

Where the murder had taken place in front of his house, his wife's presence at the scene was natural and probable and her testimony was corroborated by medical evidence, held, she should not be disbelieved merely because the accused's father had testified against her in a previous litigation: 1985 Cr.L.J. 1625: I.L.R. (1984) 2 Del. 388.

Where eye-witnesses, close relations of the deceased, had testified in the earlier trial that the five accused had killed the deceased and on their acquittal, they deposed in the second trial that other persons accused in the second trial had murdered him, held, the eye-witnesses were prepared to implicate the five persons acquitted on the earlier occasion and now they are accusing the new accused of the same serious charge; no credence could be given to their evidence; they were willing to lend their oath to any story that the prosecution advanced. [(1983) 1 Crimes 675 (Madh. Pra.), Reversed]: A.I.R. 1984 S.C. 911: (1984) 2 S.C.C. 350: 1984 Cr.L.J. 814: 1984 S.C.C. (Cr.) 250.

The witness being wife of the deceased is no ground for rejecting her evidence; but her evidence should be scrutinized with care: (1981) 3 S.C.C. 635: 1981 S.C.C. (Cr.) 774: 1982 Cr.L.J. 850: A.I.R. 1982 S.C. 1076.

Merely because the solitary eye-witness was the deceased's full brother is not sufficient to brush aside his testimony as interested when injuries found on his person lent assurance to his presence at the spot and his deposition is amply corroborated by the medical as also from the circumstantial evidence: A.I.R. 1978 S.C. 414: 1978 U.J. (S.C.) 84: (1978) 1 S.C.C. 474. See also A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 1085: 1977 Cr.L.J. 705.

Where though the two eye-witnesses were highly interested witnesses being the mother and real brother of the deceased, respectively, but their evidence was found to be implicitly reliable and trustworthy and was in conformity with the medical evidence, held, reliance could be placed on their testimony: 1995 Cr.L.J. 2583 (Bom.).

Where the only eye-witnesses happened to be wife and daughter of the deceased, held, merely because they were related and interested witnesses their evidence could not be thrown away or discarded: 1995 Cr.L.J. 1537 (Del.) (D.B.).

Where the prosecution witnesses were said to be related inter se and with the complainant but the accused had failed to point out the relationship, held, their evidence could not be discarded; at best, it was liable to be scrutinized with caution: 1985 Cr.L.J. 1829.

Where all the four eye-witnesses were consistent in their evidence about the accused having assaulted the deceased, held, merely because one of them was the deceased's grandson would not, by itself, justify viewing his evidence with distrust: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 702.

Where the parents of the victim had spontaneously named the assailants and the prosecution witness who had lodged the F.I.R. immediately thereafter had also mentioned therein their names as having been given by the victim's parents, and inspite of the fact that the parents had been subjected to intensive and incisive cross-examination, nothing tangible had been brought out from the parents for discarding their testimony, also corroborated by various other circumstances, held, the parents' testimony could not be brushed aside as being of interested witnesses; as parents of the victim, they would be the least disposed to falsely implicate the accused or substitute them for the real culprits: A.I.R. 1992 S.C. 891: 1992 Cr.L.J. 1091.

Where the presence of the eye-witnesses, who were relatives of the deceased, at the scene of occurrence was beyond question as all of them had sustained injuries in the occurrence, held, the fact of their being related to the deceased did not detract from the value of their evidence when their presence at the scene of offence was natural: A.I.R. 1988 S.C. 2249; A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 1822; A.I.R. 1993 S.C. 1544; A.I.R. 1983 S.C. 1081 [When the witness was common friend of both the deceased and one of the accused, his testimony not to be discarded as one of interested witness]; A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 1433: (1973) 3 S.C.C. 423 [Witness deposing against his nephew, held, his statement cannot be discarded simply because he is declared hostile].

Where a murder took place near about the midnight inside the house, held, the deceased's near relations living practically in the same house cannot be dubbed as interested witnesses; they are very natural witnesses; one cannot expect witnesses from outside to see the occurrence in such circumstances. [A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 472, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 184: 1980 U.J. (S.C.) 70: (1980) 3 S.C.C. 55.

Interested witness.—Mere interestedness of a witness by itself is not a valid ground for discarding or rejecting his sworn testimony; nor can it be laid down as an invariable rule that an interested witness's testimony can never result in conviction; all that is necessary is that the evidence of interested or related witnesses should be subjected to a very careful scrutiny with extreme care and caution; if it is found to be intrinsically reliable in the circumstances of the particular case, conviction may well be based thereon: 1992 All.L.J. 364: A.I.R. 1992 S.C. 1011: 1992 Cr.L.J. 1115.

Interestedness of witnesses alone is no ground for rejecting their testimony—Same has to be judged on his own merits: 1963 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 96: 1963 Jab.L.J. 415: A.I.R. 1963 Madh. Pra. 234.

It is well settled in case of interested witnesses' evidence that it should be tested in the light of probabilities, the previous statements and the surrounding circumstances: A.I.R. 1994 S.C. 549: 1994 Cr.L.J. 1116.

Eye-witness, highly interested in the prosecution and inimically disposed towards the accused, may not be absolutely immune from the tendency to rope in some innocents along with the guilty; the Court should, as a rule of caution, seek corroboration from independent source qua every accused: A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 216: (1975) 3 S.C.C. 752.

There is no absolute rule that the evidence of interested witnesses cannot be accepted without corroboration; but where they have poor moral fibre, weighed by a heavy load of bad antecedents and having a possible motive to harm the accused who was opposed to their immoral activities, held, it would be hazardous to accept their testimony without independent corroboration on crucial points: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 294: (1976) 1 S.C.C. 727: (1976) 2 S.C.R. 11: (1976) 78 Punj.L.R. 194: 1976 S.C.C. (Cr.) 160: 1976 Cr.L.J. 295: 1976 Mah.L.J. 174: 1976 M.P.L.J. 206: I.L.R. (1976) Karn. 720.

Interestedness of witnesses even if proved, will not justify rejection of their evidence in toto though it may necessitate scanning their evidence more carefully and with caution: (1969) 35 Cut.L.T. 1105: 1970 Cr.L.J. 298.

Where testimony receives ample and very strong corroboration from the documentary evidence, it should be accepted in spite of its being of a highly interested character: 1969 All.L.J. 190.

May be, witnesses are interested in the well-being of a person but if on scrutiny it is found that there was no indication of their depositions being coloured with such interest, the same need not be necessarily disbelieved; only such statements as are tainted by such considerations alone should be discarded: A.I.R. 1979 J.&K. 6 (D.B.).

Interested witnesses—Reliability: 1966 Cr.L.J. 772: A.I.R. 1966 Manipur 8.

Interested evidence must be corroborated by some other evidence—Otherwise it cannot be given full value: 1966 All.Cr.R. 297: 1966 All.W.R. (H.C.) 481.

Where the eye-witnesses to the occurrence had received injuries in same occurrence, held, merely because they were interested witnesses, their evidence could not be rejected outrightly: A.I.R. 1994 S.C. 1624.

In a case where injuries have been caused on both sides and a precise counter version is being pleaded on behalf of the accused, it is but natural that the testimony of their eye-witnesses should be partial to the version which they have chosen to give. All the eye-witnesses, therefore, come clearly within the ambit of the term 'interested testimony' and their testimony cannot possibly be final: 1970 Cr.L.J. 352: A.I.R. 1970 Punj. 85.

In a faction ridden village people who are really neutral, will be reluctant to come forward as witnesses to support one or the other side, lest they should invite trouble for themselves. This is a common tendency. So, in spite of the fact that prosecution witnesses are interested persons, the Court may, in the circumstances of a particular case, rely on their testimony: 1960 Cr.L.J. 1222 (2): A.I.R. 1960 Mys. 228: 1960 M.L.J. (Cr.) 575.

The fact that it is not an easy task in a village where there are factions to secure independent evidence does not obviate the necessity of the Court satisfying itself that the evidence on the strength of which it is asked to convict the accused is sufficiently reliable. Nor should the Court apply two different standards to the evidence on the side of the prosecution and to that on the side of the defence. Such a course cannot be justified by reason or by principle: 190 I.C. 366: 1939 M.W.N. 1256. See also 61 Cr.L.J. 209.

Oral evidence of witnesses from a faction ridden village has to be scrutinized with great care and caution; and the trial Court's views, which had the occasion to mark their demeanour should not be lightly brushed aside except for cogent reasons to do so: A.I.R. 1981 Pat. 103: 1981 B.L.J.R. 255.

In faction ridden localities the general tendency is to implicate some innocents as well, besides the guilty; if the Court finds evidence of a prosecution witness as unreliable, it must scrutinize the rest of his evidence with care and caution; if he finds it trustworthy and keeping intact the substratum of the prosecution case, it may uphold the same: 1979 M.L.J. (Cr.) 692.

In cases arising out of acute factions, there is a tendency to falsely implicate persons belonging to the opposite faction; to avert the danger of convicting innocent persons, the Courts should closely scrutinize the evidence of interested witnesses as also the F.I.R. with greater care and caution to separate the grain from the chaff; but in the absence of indications of fabrication, the Court cannot reject the prosecution version given in the F.I.R. and substantiated by evidence merely because of delay. However, all being matters for appreciation, much would depend on the facts and circumstances of each case: A.I.R. 1991 S.C. 63.

Interested evidence—Meaning of: A.I.R. 1967 Cal. 390.

Interested witness—Value of evidence: A.I.R. 1967 Assam 55.

Interested witness—Evidence of witness cannot be disregarded merely because he is interested—But Court will need extra caution in evaluating evidence of such witness. (Per Govinda Menon, J.): 1966 Ker.L.J. 868.

Credibility of witnesses—Interested witness. See 1965 All.W.R. (H.C.) 119; 1994 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 178 (Ori.).

To call the witnesses supporting the case of one of the parties, against their own interest, interested witnesses will be absolutely perverse: 1965 All.Cr.R. 125: 1965 All.W.R. (H.C.) 119.

The testimony of interested witnesses need not be discarded if it is corroborated by other evidence; however, it needs more careful scrutiny: (1982) 54 Cut.L.T. 527.

Interested witnesses are not necessarily false though their personal interest or stake in the matter must put the Court on its guard; the Court must closely scrutinize their testimony, indicating the reasons for accepting or rejecting it; no evidence should be disregarded simply because it came from interested persons. [Vide A.I.R. 1973 S.C. 51; A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 2304; A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 1; A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 1822; A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 82; A.I.R. 1990 S.C. 1242]: A.I.R. 1992 S.C. 891: 1992 Cr.L.J. 1091; A.I.R. 1981 Pat. 103: 1981 B.L.J.R. 255.

No law provides that in the absence of an independent witness, the evidence of interested witnesses should be thrown out and should not be relied upon for convicting an accused; the law only requires that in case of interested witnesses the Court should weigh their evidence with care and caution to exclude the possibility of false implication; besides, evidence of interested witnesses is not like that of an approver, presumed to be tainted and requiring corroboration; it is as good as any other evidence; in a faction ridden village, it will really be impossible to find independent witnesses; mostly only partisan witnesses would be the natural and probable witnesses; the primary thing to be seen is whether the witnesses, despite being interested, have spoken the truth and are creditworthy; once the Court finds that there is no reason to disbelieve them, their being interested is no ground to reject the prosecution case. [1976 All.W.C. 495, Reversed]: A.I.R. 1985 S.C. 1384.

Even in case of interested witnesses, the rule of scrutiny is merely a rule of caution, not a rule of law: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 1241: 1981 U.J. (S.C.) 270.

Mere living in the compound is no proof of interestedness: I.L.R. (1962) Cut. 726: (1963) 2 Cr.L.J. 294: A.I.R. 1963 Ori. 144.

Evidence of interested witness—Weight —Should be scrutinized with care—It is not the law that it is not entitled to any weight: (1971) 1 S.C.W.R. 34: 1970 S.C.D. 1057.

If the evidence of a witness is incredible, it need not be shown as to why he has implicated the accused; the absence of the explanation cannot stamp his evidence with truth; interested evidence is not necessarily true: 1982 Cr.L.J. 2342 (Ori.).

The testimony of an eye-witness corroborated by other evidence, held, cannot be discarded on the ground of his being an interested witness: A.I.R. 1985 P.&H. 71: I.L.R. (1985) 2 P.&H. 14. See also 1994 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 245 (Ori.).

Interested evidence is not necessarily false: 178 I.C. 520: A.I.R. 1938 Sind 202. Even in case of interested persons, it is not desirable that the evidence should be at once discarded. A Judge cannot shut out the evidence from consideration simply because it came from interested parties. No evidence is tainted simply because it comes from interested parties. No evidence is tainted simply because it comes from quarters interested in the prosecution but it has to be judged on its own merits: 1956 Cr.L.J. 1283: A.I.R. 1956 Assam 170; A.I.R. 1958 Pat. 353; A.I.R. 1959 Assam 200.

Fact that a witness has a close interest in complainant's party or is a distant relation cannot detract from value of his evidence—His evidence cannot be discarded on that ground especially when no enmity has been proved to exist between him and the accused as would induce him to give false evidence: 1970 Raj.L.W. 118: 1970 Cr.L.J. 653.

Merely because the eye-witnesses were interested in the deceased is no ground to discard their evidence or to seek its independent corroboration; but their testimony has to be viewed with caution and close scrutiny: 1981 Cr.L.J. 190. See also 1993 Cr.L.J. 2609 (S.C.) (It is not safe to rely on the testimony of interested witness without finding independent corroboration).

Interested evidence is not necessarily unreliable; even partisanship by itself is not a valid ground for discrediting or rejecting sworn testimony. There is no invariable rule that interested evidence, unless corroborated to a material extent in material particulars by independent evidence, cannot result in conviction; but the evidence of interested witnesses should be subjected to careful scrutiny, and if found intrinsically reliable or inherently probable, it may, by itself, be sufficient to result in conviction: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 82: (1981) 3 S.C.C. 675.

Where a party has brought on record the testimony of only the interested witnesses, this no doubt by itself does not discredit their testimony but renders their statements subject to close scrutiny, especially when it is against the admitted registered document: I.L.R. (1956) Hyd. 328: A.I.R. 1956 Hyd. 114.

Interested witnesses — Appreciation of evidence: (S) A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 199: 1957 Cr.L.J. 325.

Interested witnesses are not necessarily false witnesses; but the witness having a personal interest or stake in the case must put the Court on its guard. The evidence of such witnesses must be subjected to a closer scrutiny; indeed the Court may in a given case justifiably reject such evidence unless corroborated from an independent source; but the need for corroboration must arise out of the context and texture of evidence. Even interested witnesses may be interested in telling the truth; the Court, therefore, must assess the testimony of each important witness and indicate its reasons for accepting or rejecting it. A broad and general comment like a particular witness, being an election agent, cannot be relied upon is not a judicial assessment of evidence; evidence can be assessed only after its careful analysis: A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 1: 1976 U.J. (S.C.) 960: (1976) 4 S.C.C. 961: (1977) 2 S.C.R. 1. See also 1994 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 238 (Madh. Pra.) [Dowry-death—Accused-husband producing witness from his vicinity—Witness cannot be relied upon being interested witness].

No law requires that in the absence of an independent witness, the interested witnesses' evidence should be thrown out; what the law requires is that if witnesses are interested, the Court should scrutinize their evidence with care and caution to exclude the possibility of false implication. The evidence of interested witnesses is not like that of an approver which is presumed to be tainted and requires corroboration; the interested witnesses' evidence is as good as any other evidence. In faction ridden villages it is really impossible to find independent witnesses; only partisan witnesses would be natural and probable witnesses there. Once the Court finds by analysis of an interested witnesses' evidence that there is no reason to disbelieve them, it should not reject the evidence. [1976 All.W.C. 495, Reversed; A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 1985, Rel. on]: 1985 Cr.L.J. 2009: (1985) 3 S.C.C. 703.

Substratum of the eye witnesses' evidence cannot be rejected either on the ground of their interestedness or partisan character or that they were not speaking the whole truth: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 451: 1980 (Supp.) S.C.C. 641.

Interested witness—Weight to be given—Discretion — Acceptance or rejection of evidence — Interference in revision: 1958 Nag.L.J. 126.

Witness disbelieved on ground of interestedness — Finding of appellate Court — Not disturbed by High Court in second appeal: I.L.R. (1963) Cut. 901.

Eye-witness—Accused person in possession as lessees of land in management of deceased—Sole eye-witness to the occurrence interested in purchasing land—His interest in land, held, had no bearing upon question of his evidence in reference to murder—Some minor discrepancies in his statements not material and not affecting worth of his evidence—His evidence substantially corroborated by other items of evidence on record—Evidence of such witness was relied upon for conviction: 1969 Cr.L.J. 542 (Andh. Pra.).

Merely because a witness was known to, or intimate with, the deceased, held, is no ground for rejecting his testimony: A.I.R. 1994 S.C. 1459. See also 1994 Cr.L.J. 589 (All.); 1989 Cr.L.J. 1516 (Pat.) (Witnesses were friends).

Merely because the eye-witnesses belonged to the deceased's caste or neighbourhood is no reason to disbelieve them or to look for corroboration of their testimony: A.I.R. 1978 S.C. 1084.

Witnesses not belonging to the deceased's caste and not related to him but to his servant, held, are not interested witnesses: A.I.R. 1994 S.C. 846.

Where the witnesses were the deceased's family members and closest relations, held, it was quite natural for them to rush to the scene of occurrence on hearing the deceased's alarm; it would not, by itself, detract from their testimony: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 2499: (1976) 4 S.C.C. 362.

Where the prosecution witnesses were not only deeply interested in the deceased but had also made improvements in their testimony and that too, in material particulars over their statements to the Police, held, implicit reliance could not be placed on their testimony: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 1223: 1981 Cr.L.J. 729: 1981 S.C.C. (Cr.) 610.

Evidence of solicitor on behalf of his client—That solicitor is interested person, not enough for rejecting his evidence: A.I.R. 1960 Cal. 752.

Prosecution suffers from a serious stigma, namely, the stigma of bolstering up a false case against innocent people when certain interested witnesses utilise the opportunity, to, so to speak, rope in innocent people. Such witnesses cannot be relied upon: 1958 All.L.J. 327: 1958 All.W.R. (H.C.) 454: 1958 All. Cr.R. 302.

Defendants to suit being interested persons—Their testimony may not carry much weight: (1962) 2 S.C.J. 597: (1961) 3 S.C.R. 792: (1961) 63 Bom.L.R. 649: (1961) 2 S.C.A. 542: A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 1077. Value of evidence of interested witness. See 1988 Cr.L.J. 56 (Ker.); 1989 Cr.L.J. 2475 (Del.).

Where a party has brought on record the testimony of only the interested witnesses, this no doubt by itself does not discredit their testimony but renders their statements subject to close scrutiny, especially when it is against the admitted registered document: I.L.R. (1956) Hyd. 328: A.I.R. 1956 Hyd. 114. See Cr.P. Code 1898, S. 367; A.I.R. 1958 Madh. Pra. 380: 1958 Cr.L.J. 1402.

In a suit for recovery of money under a Burglary and House Breaking insurance policy, held, the accountant as well as the partner of the plaintiff's shop are most competent witnesses; their being interested persons is no ground for rejecting their evidence; however, persons assembled after the incident are not competent witnesses if they were not present at the time of incident: A.I.R. 1979 Cal. 56.

Where an accused has signed the money order slip, holding out his identity card and thereby establishing his identity obtains the money from the Postman, held, the Postman cannot be either an accomplice or even interested witness: A.I.R. 1972 Del. 13: 1972 Cr.L.J. 254.

In a prosecution of a Branch Manager of a bank for cheating and criminal misconduct, held, merely because the witnesses were the bank employees, working under the accused, their evidence could not be brushed aside: A.I.R. 1994 S.C. 1407.

Merely because all of them were departmental co-employees of the complainant would not detract from the witnesses' credibility; if their presence at the scene was natural, they could not be dubbed as interested witnesses: 1976 Cr.L.J. 132.

It may be that an employee of a Corporation had left the service of the Corporation and had made a claim for damages against the Corporation but that by itself would not disentitle the Labour Court to accept his sworn testimony in another case against the Corporation: 1981 Lab.I.C. 62.

Murder case—One prosecution witness, servant of accused at time of incident and at time of giving evidence in Sessions Court—Relationship between witness and accused (his employer) not strained—Witness, held to be an independent and disinterested witness: (1969) 71 Bom.L.R. 375: I.L.R. (1969) Bom. 654: 1970 Cr.L.J. 621.

If evidence of a witness inspires confidence, merely because there was some litigation with the opposite party's brother-in-law or that he and the party producing him were employed together would not make his evidence unreliable: A.I.R. 1986 Ori. 173 (D.B.).

Witness produced by husband in support of his application for judicial separation, an elderly man of 63 years—Wife admitting that there was no enmity between herself and the witness—Witness in no way interested in applicant—Parties living in a portion of his house for about 3 years—Hence, it is natural that the witness should know about quarrels between husband and wife—There is no reason why an elderly gentleman who was in no way connected with the husband should come and depose falsely against the opposite party, against whom he had no ill-will: A.I.R. 1970 Mys. 232.

Where in a case in which the fact of adoption was in question, the testimony of a witness who though related to and produced by the defendants was not going to gain anything by the decision of the case one way or the other, held, could not be rejected as that of an interested witness: A.I.R. 1974 Ori. 120: (1973) 1 Cut.W.R. 809 (D.B.).

Evidence of a witness attesting to an agreement of sale, if otherwise acceptable, cannot be rejected on the ground that being a brother of the plaintiff's son-in-law, he is an interested witness: A.I.R. 1992 Ker. 49 (D.B.).

Partisan witness.—The evidence of partisan witnesses is not to be discarded or rejected mechanically; the Court should appreciate such evidence carefully and find out about its discrepancies, its genuineness and probability of its story; the Court should find out if the witness's presence at the scene is probable, whether the substratum of his version carries conviction with a prudent person; if the evidence appears to the Court to be flawless and free from suspicion, it may accept it without corroboration. [A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 902; A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 2304; A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 82; A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 942; A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 1230; A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 2073, Foll.]: (1983) 55 Cut.L.T. 472. See also 1993 Cr.L.J. 1857 (S.C.).

Law is now well settled that conviction can be sustained basing on the evidence of partisan witnesses. What the law requires is closer and thorough scrutiny of their evidence. Thus, where evidence of such witnesses was cogent, reliable and did not suffer from any serious infirmity, held, reliance could be placed on such evidence: 1995 Cr.L.J. 2998 (Ori.) (D.B.).

Where in a melee with a large number of assailants, a numerous witnesses claimed to have witnessed the occurrence from different places and at its different stages, their evidence will undoubtedly be partisan; the distinct possibility of the innocent being falsely implicated with the guilty cannot be easily ruled out; to reject the entire evidence only on such ground is to shut one's eyes to the realities of rural life; a large number of the guilty would go unpunished; the evidence must be examined with utmost care and caution: A.I.R. 1978 S.C. 1647: 1978 Cr.L.J. 1713.

There is no doubt that when a Criminal Court has to appreciate evidence given by witnesses who are partisan or interested, it has to be very careful in weighing such evidence. Whether or not there are discrepancies in the evidence, whether or not evidence strikes the Court as genuine, whether or not the story disclosed by the evidence is probable, are all matters which must be taken into account. But it would be unreasonable to contend that evidence given by witnesses should be discarded only on the ground that it is evidence of partisan or interested witnesses. Often enough, where factions prevail in villages and murders are committed as a result of enmity between such factions, Criminal Courts have to deal with evidence of a partisan type. The mechanical rejection of such evidence on the sole ground that it is partisan would invariably lead to failure of justice. No hard and fast rule can be laid down as to how much evidence should be appreciated: (1964) 8 S.C.R. 133: (1965) 1 S.C.J. 605: I.L.R. (1964) 2 All. 694: A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 202.

Melee means a free fight wherein the combatants are mingled together; confused general fight between groups or among combatants. In case of a melee, with a large number of assailants and numerous witnesses claiming to have seen it from different places and at different stages and their evidence is undoubtedly partisan, there is a distinct possibility of the innocent being falsely implicated with the guilty; in a faction ridden society, it is but inevitable that evidence would be of a partisan nature; to reject the entire evidence on such sole ground is to shut one's eyes to the realities of our rural life; a large number of the guilty would go unpunished. [A.I.R. 1978 S.C. 1647, Foll.]. It is usual to adopt the test that conviction should be based on the consistent account of two or three or more witnesses; such a test, though apparently mechanical, is reasonable; appraisal of evidence in such complex cases is no doubt difficult but the Criminal Courts have to do their best; it is their duty to sift the evidence carefully and decide which of its parts is reliable and should try to be assured of the role attributed to each individual offender. [(1965) 1 Cr.L.J. 202 (S.C.), Foll.]. But the prosecution witnesses being consistent, and the evidence on record not indicating a mixed free fight with such confusion that the witnesses could have traced the occurrence in so far as their near and dear ones were concerned, Court's refusal to scrutinize the specific evidence and reject the entire evidence on the ground of a melee, held, is not justified: 1981 Cr.L.J. 516.

Evidence of a partisan witness cannot be discarded on that ground alone; but his evidence has to be scrutinized with more than ordinary care; the Court must focus its attention to search for discrepancies in evidence or whether it strikes to the Court as genuine and probable; it needs cautious judicial approach: A.I.R. 1978 S.C. 1647.

In cases involving a large number of persons if in the commotion some injuries are caused to others and evidence is partisan, it is often safer for the Court to be guided by the compass of probabilities along the rock-ribbed contours and converging on the heart of the matter; once the Court goes astray from the basic features, it is apt to lose itself in the labyrinths of immaterial details, desultory discussion and vacillation resulting from unfounded suspicions: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 902: 1974 Cr.L.J. 755: (1974) 4 S.C.C. 479.

In case of partisan witnesses, only general corroboration may be looked for; they do not need material corroboration as in the case of an accomplice's evidence: 1972 Cr.L.J. 381.

Partisanship by itself is no ground for discarding sworn testimony; interested evidence is not necessarily false evidence; in small villages divided on caste basis, the prosecution may not get a neutral witness; and even if he is there, he may be reluctant to come forward to support one or the other side; therefore, merely because eye-witnesses are associated with one faction or the other, their evidence should not be discarded; though no doubt, it should be subjected to careful scrutiny and accepted with caution: A.I.R. 1988 S.C. 1028.

A partisan witness is not necessarily untruthful; but his evidence has to be examined with greater care and caution than usual: 1984 Cr.L.J. 520.

The direct testimony of witnesses, if otherwise consistent, should not ordinarily be rejected on the ground that they are partisan witnesses, unless the surrounding circumstances discredit their version: A.I.R. 1990 S.C. 1242: 1990 Cr.L.J. 1269.

Evidence of partisan witnesses though acceptable yet should be scrutinised with care—In some cases Court as a matter of prudence will look for independent corroboration: I.L.R. (1967) Guj. 457: 8 Guj.L.R. 588: 1968 Cr.L.J. 746: A.I.R. 1968 Guj. 88.

Evidence of an interested or inimical witness, though required to be scrutinized with care, cannot be rejected as partisan evidence; if found creditworthy, it can be relied upon: 1977 Cr.L.J. 1941: 1977 S.C.C. (Cr.) 614: (1977) 4 S.C.C. 452: A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 2274; 1969 Cr.L.J. 1079 (Cal.).

There is no hard and fast rule that the evidence of a partisan witness cannot be acted upon, without corroboration. If his presence at the scene cannot be doubted and his evidence is consistent with the surrounding circumstances and the probabilities of the case and strikes to the Court as true, it can be a good foundation for conviction, more so when medical evidence also supports it: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 59: 1975 U.J. (S.C.) 891: (1976) 1 S.C.C. 401: 1976 Cr.L.J. 6: 1976 S.C.C. (Cr.) 19: I.L.R. (1976) Karn. 410: 1976 M.L.J. (Cr.) 383; 1965 M.L.J. (Cr.) 312: A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 202; 1965 Jab.L.J. 1196: A.I.R. 1965 Madh. Pra. 107.

In matrimonial matters, it is only the near relations or close friends and associates of the parties who are expected to be acquainted with the facts; their statements cannot be discarded merely on the ground of their being partisan witnesses; their evidence has to be considered on its normal merits and demerits: (1986) 1 Hindu L.R. 645 (Raj.).

The evidence of a partisan witness is not to be discarded as such; in a faction ridden locality, the prosecution may not find independent witnesses. But when the interested eye-witnesses did not belong to the locality and other persons, including nearby shopkeepers, belonging to the locality, independent and disinterested, were not examined, it would certainly cast serious reflection on the trial's fairness: 1985 Cr.L.J. 580.

Land dispute leading to mutual assault by rival parties resulting in deaths—Evidence—Appreciation of—Testimony of partisan eye-witnesses: (1963) 1 Cr.L.J. 700 (Ori.).

The evidence of partisan witnesses cannot be rejected altogether; but the Court should insist on independent corroboration before placing reliance upon their testimony: 1974 Cr.L.J. 234.

In cases of communal riots it would be unreasonable to contend that the evidence given by the witnesses should be discarded only on the ground that the persons who gave such evidence belong to one particular community and are as such partisan or interested witnesses. The mechanical rejection of such evidence on the sole ground that it is partisan would lead to failure of justice. When the evidence is of this nature, the Courts have to very carefully weigh such evidence with a view to ensure that taking advantage of the situation innocent persons are not falsely implicated: (1969) 35 Cut.L.T. 35: 1969 Cr.L.J. 990: A.I.R. 1969 Ori. 176.

Where inimical factions in the village, bitterly opposed to each other, had already taken toll of twelve lives, held, it would be idle to look for independent persons; only partisan witnesses would be available; they would, even otherwise, be natural and probable witnesses to the incident; it would not be right to reject their testimony out of hand merely on the ground that they belonged to one faction or the other: A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 1985.

Though the partisan witnesses' evidence cannot be rejected outright but where they had implicated one accused falsely, held, it would be highly unsafe to rely on their evidence against other accused: (1990-1) 10 Guj.L.H. 256 (S.C.).

Where interested and partisan witnesses had deliberately implicated an innocent person in a murder case, held, the Court should be on its guard; their evidence should be scrutinized with great care before relying upon it: 1982 Cr.L.J. 1585 (Ori.).

Evidence of partisan nature — Fact by itself does not render evidence false — But before accepting it Court should subject it to very careful scrutiny: (1962) 1 An.W.R. 396: A.I.R. 1962 Andh. Pra. 322: (1962) 2 Cr.L.J. 318: 1962 M.L.J. (Cr.) 366.

Witness having respect or loyalty to same religious institution as the victim does not make him partisan witness: (1970) 72 Bom.L.R. 405: 1970 Mah.L.J. 634: A.I.R. 1970 Bom. 438.

No rule of law lays down that a person, otherwise reliable and independent, on his being associated with a pre-arranged raid becomes an accomplice or a partisan witness; conviction on his testimony would not be untenable; every witness of a raiding party cannot be dubbed as an accomplice per se or even as an interested witness in the total absence of materials justifying such an inference: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 449: (1976) 1 S.C.C. 644: (1976) 3 S.C.R. 119: 1976 Cr.L.J. 346: 1976 S.C.C. (Cr.) 135: 1976 Cr.L.R. (S.C.) 86.

Evidence of accomplice and evidence of partisan witnesses — Distinction — Former needs corrboration for conviction while no corrboration is necessary in latter case: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1505: A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 1323.

Merely because a partition suit has been filed by the accused's father against the witness, held, by itself does not make him a partisan or interested witness: 1984 Cr.L.J. 29.

Inimical.—Bitter animosity can be a double-edged weapon; it may lead to deliberate false implication or make the witnesses wrongly infer and strongly believe (without having actual knowledge) that the offence must have been committed by the rival group: A.I.R. 1991 S.C. 1938: (1991) 4 S.C.C. 536.

Enmity between eye-witnesses and the accused is no ground to reject their statements totally; but they should be subjected to strict scrutiny: (1981) 52 Cut.L.T. 155. However see 1994 Cr.L.J. 1106 (S.C.).

Merely because the witnesses are inimical to the accused by itself is not sufficient for rejecting their testimony: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 1261:

(1979) 4 S.C.C. 641: 1980 S.C.C. (Cr.) 153: 1979 Cr.L.J. 1074.

The fact that the witnesses were inimically disposed towards the accused cannot, by itself, be a ground for total rejection of their evidence: A.I.R. 1978 S.C. 1506.

It is needless to emphasise that enmity is a double-edged sword which can cut both ways. However, the fact remains that whether the prosecution witnesses are close relatives of the deceased victim or on inimical terms with the deceased involved in the crime of murder, the witnesses are always interested to see that the real offenders of the crime are booked and they are not, in any case, expected to leave out the real culprits and rope in the innocent persons simply because of the enmity. It is, therefore, not a safe rule to reject their testimony merely on the ground that the complainant and the accused persons were on inimical terms. Similarly the evidence cannot be rejected merely on the basis of relationship of the witnesses with the deceased. In such a situation it only puts the Court with the solemn duty to make a deeper probe and scrutinize the evidence with more than ordinary care: 1995 Cr.L.J. 410: A.I.R. 1994 S.C. 2507.

Enmity is a double-edged weapon; it no doubt often provides motive for false implication but it also more often than not provides motive and incentive for making an attack. So that, merely because there subsisted enmity between the witnesses, on the one hand and the accused, on the other, is not sufficient to throw over-board the testimony of the witnesses, unless there is further material on which the testimony can be doubted. Where there is enmity between the prosecution witnesses and the accused the evidence has to be scrutinized with greater care, which means that the evidence has to be tested more fully in the crucible of probabilities: 1975 All.L.J. 857: 1958 Cr.L.J. 324: A.I.R. 1957 Madh. Pra. 153: 1957 Cr.L.J. 1138.

In order to draw an inference of false implication, hostility between witness and accused has to be grave. Mere hostility is insufficient to show that a person would make false allegation against his own brother: 1994 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 348 (Ori.) (D.B.).

Witness—Tendency towards enemies—It is not uncommon for the witnesses to rope in as many of their enemies as possible in a case where relations of the parties are highly strained: (1961) 2 Cr.L.J. 396 (Punj.).

Creditbility of: 1994 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 178 (Ori.).

Where the parties' relations are highly strained, the chances of the prosecution witnesses implicating their adversaries cannot be ruled out; but the prosecution witnesses cannot be dubbed complete liars merely because the Court has not accepted the prosecution case; the Court's judgment in such a case may properly be construed as giving the benefit of doubt to the accused: 1972 Cr.L.J. 1387.

The inimical witnesses' testimony corroborated in material particulars with other evidence on record, held, cannot be rejected as partisan; it is well-settled that the Court has to scrutinize it with abundant caution to ensure that innocent persons are not roped in: 1985 M.P.L.J. 268.

The evidence of a witness on inimical terms with the accused need not be discarded in toto; rather, it should be scrutinized carefully with reference to materials on the record to determine if it is credible: 1983 Raj.L.W. 594 (D.B.).

In cases of group rivalries and enmities, the general tendency is to rope in as many persons as possible as participants in the assault; the Courts have, therefore, to be very careful; if on close scrutiny, a reasonable doubt arises about participation of any accused, the Court should give to them the benefit of doubt. But where evidence of the deceased's mother and sister was corroborated by medical evidence against only some of the accused, held, the other accused were entitled to the benefit of doubt: A.I.R. 1991 S.C. 4: 1990 Cr.L.J. 2597.

The fact that a witness is on inimical term alone is no ground to brush aside his evidence; however, it should be scrutinized with great caution and should be accepted only when it finds corroboration: A.I.R. 1981 Pat. 103: 1981 B.L.J.R. 255.

In the absence of previous enmity, the evidence of the deceased's relatives cannot be regarded as suspect requiring corroboration from independent witnesses: A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 701: (1976) 4 S.C.C. 348.

Where admittedly long-standing enmity existed between two communities and both sides suffered injuries, it is necessary to look into facts objectively proved rather than to accept oral testimony of witnesses at its face value: A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 864: 1978 U.J. (S.C.) 924.

It is unsafe to uphold a conviction of the accused which is based on the evidence of witnesses who are shown to be inimical to the accused more especially when the majority of the assessors are of opinion that the charge is not proved: 179 I.C. 929.

Merely because all eye-witnesses were to some extent interested and inimical because they belonged to the faction headed by the deceased, by itself, is no ground to reject their testimony in toto; but their evidence should be scrutinized with great caution: A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 443: 1979 U.J. (S.C.) 354: (1979) 4 S.C.C. 483.

Where a case arose out of an acute faction and enmity between two groups, held, the evidence of interested witnesses is to be scrutinized with great care and caution; it should be examined in the light of the earliest report, the medical evidence and other surrounding circumstances: A.I.R. 1992 S.C. 956: 1992 Cr.L.J. 1286.

Where father of the deceased is also inimical to the accused his testimony has to be viewed with great caution; but it cannot be rejected as partisan unless found to be untruthful because of other infirmities: A.I.R. 1978 S.C. 191: (1978) 1 S.C.C. 178.

Where both the sides carefully suppressed a material portion of the occurrence in the first information reports lodged by both, and tried to show that they were innocent victims of the murderous attack from the opposite side, and the medical evidence left no doubt that both parties exchanged murderous blows with blunt weapons in consequence of which five persons on the side of the prosecution and five persons on the side of the accused sustained fairly severe injuries and one other was killed: Held, that though the accused's party was also guilty of suppressing a material portion of the occurrence the prosecution could not rely on this unsatisfactory feature in the counter F.I.R. but had to prove its own case beyond reasonable doubt. The evidence of the eye-witnesses had to be scrutinized with great care, especially when admittedly almost all the eye-witnesses belonged to the informant's party and were bitter enemies of the accused persons (Accused were given benefit of doubt): (1958) 24 Cut.L.T. 23.

Where one of the two accused persons contended that since he had given evidence against the deceased in an injury case, he had been falsely implicated by the deceased's wife and the prosecution witnesses nowhere stated that accused had caused any injury with lathi to deceased and no part had been ascribed to him in so far as the crime was concerned, held, the possibility that the said accused might have been falsely implicated on account of the past enmity could not be ruled out. Accordingly, he was acquitted: 1995 Cr.L.J. 2119 (S.C.).

53. Stock/decoy witness.—It is difficult to define the term 'stock witness', but if it appears to the Court that a particular person is always at the beck and call of the Police and is too willing to state according to their wishes, or that he has appeared in some Court and was disbelieved or some strictures were passed against him or his prosecution was ordered for perjury, such a person could be said to be the stock witnesses of the Police and his evidence is not entitled to any weight. Therefore, neither the evidence of the non-official witnesses should be rejected only on the ground that they have appeared in some Police cases previously, nor the evidence of the official witnesses, such as Police or Excise officials, should be ignored simply because they are holding official positions in their Departments. The evidence of each witness has to be judged from the material before the Court. If the evidence of a witness suffers from infirmities or other inherent weaknesses, then it should be ignored: (1965) 67 Punj.L.R. 260: 1965 All.Cr.R. 179: 1965 All.W.R. (Supp.) 6: 1965 Cur.L.J. 189.

A person who has often been appearing in Police cases does not necessarily become a stock witness or a tool in the hands of the Police. It depends on the facts and circumstances of each case. There are persons who, on the other hand, join the investigation in order to help the Police and trace the real offender; and if they join the Police investigation and appear as witness on more than one occasion for the prosecution to help the Police in bringing the offenders to justice, it would be very improper to term or dub them as stock witness: 1968 Cr.L.J. 858 (Punj.).

Practice of Police department in producing stock witnesses condemned. See A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 613.

No rule of law requires corroboration of a decoy witness's testimony; his evidence if sufficient and trustworthy can sustain a conviction: 1982 M.L.J. (Cr.) 22: 1982 Mad.L.W. (Cr.) 13: 1982 Cr.L.J. 702.

Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, S. 5(2) —Accused accepting marked currency notes from decoy witness—Credibility of decoy witness—Held, probability of truth of defence explanation could not be ruled out: (1967) 33 Cut.L.T. 649. See also S. 3, Note 53.

54. Trap witness.—A Court can act upon uncorroborated testimony of a trap witness, who appears to be a witness of truth. [1979 Cr.L.J. 329 (S.C.), Foll.]: 1982 Cr.L.J. 954 (Ori.).

Trap witness — Not an accomplice or approver—Necessity of corroboration: 1968 Cr.L.J. 925: A.I.R. 1968 Goa 63.

The trap witnesses are not to be discarded as accomplices; however, in a given case the Court can insist on independent corroboration for believing their testimony: 1979 Raj.L.W. 37.

Need for corroboration—Decoy or trap witness: 1967 Cr.L.J. 1138: A.I.R. 1967 Del. 51.

Though a trap witness is not an approver, he is certainly an interested witness in the sense that he is interested to see that the trap laid by him succeeded. He could at least be equated with a partisan witness and it would not be admissible to rely upon his evidence without corroboration. Though the Court rejects the evidence of the witness in regard to some events either because that part of the evidence is not consistent with the other parts of his evidence or with the evidence of some disinterested witnesses, the Court can accept the evidence given by the witness in regard to other events when that version is corroborated, in all material particulars by the evidence of other disinterested witnesses. The corroboration must be by independent testimony confirming in some material particulars not only that the crime was committed but also that the accused committed it. It is not necessary to have corroboration of all the circumstances of the case or every detail of crime. It would be sufficient if there was corroboration as to the material circumstances of the crime and of the identity of the accused in relation to the crime: (1962) 1 S.C.J. 231: (1962) 2 S.C.R. 195: A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 1762.

The uncorroborated testimony of a trap witness can also be acted upon, if the Court is satisfied from the facts and circumstances of the case about its truth: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 400.

Where trap witnesses were cross-examined in a scrappy and jumpy manner and their evidence was without contradictions and inner variations between their respective statements were confined to omissions of trivial details, held, their testimony could not be dubbed as unreliable: 1983 Cr.L.J. 1: A.I.R. 1982 S.C. 1511.

A trap witness in bribery case is really not an accomplice because he is not a willing party to the giving of a bribe. He is, however, a highly partisan witness and therefore, his evidence must be scrutinised with very considerable care and caution. Further, as a matter of substantive law there would seem to be no rule which stands in the way of a conviction being founded on the evidence of such witness in a proper case, but the Courts as a matter of prudence should normally and ordinarily look for material corroboration of his evidence from independent sources though it seems that perhaps it would be open to a Court to depart from this course for valid reasons to be stated by it in an exceptional case. Again, in seeking corroboration of the evidence of such a witness the Courts need not look for corroboration of every part or detail of the prosecution story, and it would be sufficient if corroboration is forthcoming as to the material circumstance of the crime and the identity of the accused in relation thereto: I.L.R. (1966) 16 Raj. 436: 1967 Cr.L.J. 121: A.I.R. 1967 Raj. 10.

Merely because trap witnesses in a bribery case are petty clerks, their evidence cannot be rejected as wholly unreliable, more so when they satisfy the test of being independent; in a country where renunciation is worshipped and grandeur and wild display of wealth frowned upon, it would be the travesty of truth to disbelieve witnesses of humble origin or belonging to officewise and wealthwise, lower strata of society as solely on that ground; the converse, unfortunately, appears to be true. [(1965) 1 Del.L.T. 362 (Punj.), Overruled; A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 91, Dist.]: 1983 Cr.L.J. 1: A.I.R. 1982 S.C. 1511.

Where witnesses are members of raiding party responsible for making trap to catch accused with the object of detecting an offence relating to prohibition, the evidence of such witnesses are not necessarily to be discarded in absence of any independent corroboration. If any witness is a partisan or an interested person and is concerned in the success of the trial his evidence must be tested in the same way as any other interested witness: 28 Cut.L.T. 47.

55. Chance witness.—A chance witness is a witness who should not normally be where and when he professes to have been. From that point of view one may be a chance witness even at one's house if, for instance, one should at that hour have been in one's office, and even a nomad in the desolation of Sahara may not be a chance witness if his being there and then was on his itineary. Held, that considering that the incident took place in the grand trunk road, only passers-by could have been natural witnesses of the same: 1957 Cr.L.J. 1378: A.I.R. 1957 All. 809. See also 1989 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 209 (Ori.). However see 1993 Cr.L.J. 2954 (All.).

Though a chance witness whose evidence so commonly discloses a meeting with the very person whose admission is required and details how the admission was volunteered in the course of conversation, is not necessarily a false witness, it is proverbially rash to rely upon such evidence: 1941 O.W.N. 565: A.I.R. 1941 P.C. 11 (P.C.).

If by coincidence or chance a person was at the place of occurrence at the time, he will be a chance witness; if he happens to be the victim's relative or friend or inimically disposed towards the accused, his being a chance witness is viewed with suspicion; his evidence is not necessarily rendered incredible or unbelievable; it, however, does require cautious and close scrutiny: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 2032: 1976 Cr.L.J. 1568: (1976) 3 S.C.C. 564.

The evidence of a witness cannot be brushed aside or viewed with suspicion by calling him a 'chance witness', that is, one who happened to be at the place of occurrence at the time by coincidence or chance. (See A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 2032). If a witness is free from bias for or against the prosecution, and has no personal interest in the trial's outcome (See (1991) 2 Ker.L.T. 217), his statement in the Court would fall within the juristic concept of 'oral evidence' under S. 3; the credibility of his evidence has to be evaluated just as any other 'oral evidence' available without pre-conceived notions: (1992) 2 Ker.L.J. 529 (D.B.).

Evidence of a chance witness is not to be outrightly rejected though it should be accepted after close scrutiny: 1981 Cr.L.J. 530.

The occasion for the presence of particularly an occurrence witness has to be examined with due regard to the time and scene of the occurrence; if his presence was usual, his failure to recapitulate a photographic reproduction of each and every injury and the places it was inflicted would not detract from his trustworthiness: (1993) 1 Ker.L.J. 76 (D.B.).

A chance witness is not necessarily a false witness; if his presence at the scene is proved clearly, he cannot be held a chance witness: 1976 Kash.L.J. 253: 1976 Cr.L.J. 1310 (D.B.).

The evidence of a chance witness is not necessarily incredible, it only requires cautious approach and scrutiny when he is a partisan witness: (1982-83) 87 Cal.W.N. 102; A.I.R. 1983 S.C. 680; (1989-2) 37 B.L.J.R. 458 (D.B.).

A witness figured as eye-witness in the F.I.R. and whose evidence received corroboration from another eye-witness, held, cannot be categorised as a chance witness: A.I.R. 1988 S.C. 1998: 1989 Cr.L.J. 88. See also (1991-2) 39 B.L.J.R. 1313 (D.B.); 1977 Raj.L.W. 100 (D.B.); 1976 Cr.L.J. 1310: 1976 Kash.L.J. 253 (D.B.); 1975 Cr.L.J. 1630 (Punj.); A.I.R. 1994 S.C.1029 [It is a common knowledge that the villagers do come to a town and when they belong to same village they move together and thus, three such witnesses witnessing a crime in the town could not be said to be chance witnesses].

It is very risky to attach credence to the evidence of tutored or chance witnesses: A.I.R. 1974 Cal. 61: 77 Cal.W.N. 944 (S.B.).

Evidence of a chance witness cannot be considered to be worthy of credence: A.I.R. 1961 J. & K. 42.

A mere chance witness, though not necessarily false, is proverbially unsafe; if his evidence is full of improbabilities no implicit reliance should be placed on it: 1978 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 34 (Punj.) (D.B.).

The testimony of a chance witness, though not necessarily false, is proverbially unsafe: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 276.

Chance witnesses—Their evidence would necessarily require corroboration by independent evidence: (1966-67) 71 Cal.W.N. 781. See also S. 3, Note 55, supra.

Where an eye-witness, injured in the incident, had satisfactorily explained his presence at the scene, his name was mentioned in the F.I.R. recorded soon after, and his evidence was consistent and conformed with the F.I.R., held, his evidence cannot be thrown over board because he was a 'chance' witness: A.I.R. 1989 S.C. 1822.

In case of a road being constructed through the petitioner's property in violation of the Court's injunction, neighbours and pedestrains were natural witnesses; thus, the disinterested neighbours' evidence in the petitioner's favour could not be discredited because they were chance witnesses and their evidence had some small discrepancies: A.I.R. 1990 N.O.C. 48 (Ker.).

A person attending the chamber of the Advocate who had advised the testator in the matter of preparation of the will, held, is not a mere 'chance' witness; his evidence cannot be brushed aside: A.I.R. 1981 Cal. 599.

Where the sole eye-witness, and a chance witness at that, was inimical towards the accused his version was highly doubtful, held, a conviction based on his sole testimony was not justified: A.I.R. 1994 S.C. 1250. See also A.I.R. 1994 S.C. 1251.

Charge under S. 323, I.P.Code — Allegation that accused had assaulted some harijans—Evidence of prosecution witnesses numbering about seven rejected merely on ground that six of them were victims and the seventh a non-harijan was a chance witness—Held, that evidence could not be rejected only on the ground that witness was chance witness: (1968) 10 Ori.J.D. 163: 34 Cut.L.T. 1332. Chance witness: 1968 Cr.L.J. 205: A.I.R. 1968 Ori. 26.

56. Child witness.—(See also Notes under S. 118). Appreciation of child witness's evidence: (1964) 66 Punj.L.R. 1230: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 127: A.I.R. 1965 Punj. 291.

In the case of an unsworn testimony of a young child, that evidence is admissible. S. 13 of the Oaths Act provides for cases in which the provisions of Ss. 5 and 6 of that Act have not been carried out: A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 490: (1938) 1 M.L.J. 289.

A child witness below the age of 12 is competent witness and though oath should be administered to such witness, held, simply because oath cannot be administered, his examination cannot be refused: 1982 Cr.L.J. 1702 (Ker.).

Tender age and old age are, of course, factors capable in law of affecting the testimonial capacity of a person; but merely because a witness is of tender or old age is hardly sufficient to negative his testimonial competence; all the same, Courts have cautioned from early times that it is only a sound rule in practice not to act on the uncorroborated evidence of a child witness, whether he was administered oath or not: (1993) 1 Ker.L.J. 359 (D.B.).

The competence of a child witness depends not so much on its years but its ability to understand the importance of taking an oath and the consequences of making a false statement; there is no precise age to determine competence of a witness; it depends on its capacity and intelligence to differentiate between the truth and falsehood as also the duty to speak the truth as assessed by the trial Judge; some of these methods cannot be photographed into the record: 1979 W.L.N. (U.C.) 252 (D.B.); 1981 Raj.Cr.C. 345.

The tender age of the child witness coupled with other circumstances like its demeanour, unlikelihood of its being tutored and so forth, may render corroboration unnecessary; it would be a question of fact in each case. Corroboration is not a rule of practice but of caution: 1983 Raj.L.W. 80.

All that is required in considering the evidence of a child witness is scanning it carefully and if after doing so it is found that there are no flaws or infirmities in the evidence of a child witness there is no impediment in the way of accepting the evidence of a child. Children are pliable and their evidence could easily be shaped and moulded. It is for this reason that a Court should see if there are any signs or indications of tutoring. Normally a Court should look for corroboration in such cases but that is more by way of caution and prudence and not as a rule of law. If after carefully scrutinizing the evidence the Court comes to the conclusion that there is an impress of truth in it there is no obstacle in the way of accepting the evidence of such a child: (1957) 1 An.W.R. 115: 1957 M.L.J. (Cr.) 43: A.I.R. 1957 Andh. Pra. 343. See also 1994 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 197 (Gau.); 1995 Cr.L.J. 1432 (Bom.) (D.B.).

Children are a most untrustworthy class of witnesses, for when of a tender age they often mistake dreams for reality glibly as of their own knowledge what they have heard from others and are greatly influenced by fear of punishment by hope of reward and by desire of notoriety: (1932) 34 Punj.L.R. 536: A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 667. See also (1945) 2 M.L.J. 493 (P.C.).

Evidence substantially true not infrequently assumes too perfect a form and witnesses, such as children, not infrequently get a story by heart which is nonetheless a true story. The real tests are how consistent the story is with itself, how it stands the test of cross-examination and how far it fits in with the rest of the evidence and the circumstances of the case: A.I.R. 1951 Punj. 399: 52 Cr.L.J. 917.

The proper tests to be applied with reference to the evidence of a child witness are how consistent the story is with itself, how it stands the test of cross-examination and how far it fits in with the rest of the evidence and the circumstances of the case: 1941 O.W.N. 1246: I.L.R. 17 Luck. 376: A.I.R. 1942 Oudh 193.

The evidence of witnesses of tender age has to be accepted with very great caution. Witnesses of this type are somewhat dangerous. It is so easy to make them repeat a story which the prosecution or the defence may desire them to put forward and there is no guarantee that they really understand the enormity of the offence which they are committing by making a statement which may not be true: 43 P.L.R. J.&K. 37.

The Court should not lightly rely upon uncorroborated evidence of a child witness; it should scrutinize the same with "extreme care and caution" when it is the only eyewitness: 1983 Raj.L.W. 80.

As per A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 1064 even if there are no infirmities in a young boy's evidence, it is desirable to seek its corroboration because of his tender age: 1975 Raj.L.W. 415 (D.B.).

The precautions which have to be taken in the case of a witness below twelve years are not necessary where the girl who had been kidnapped is above the age of twelve years at the time of her examination in Court. When in such a case the Court has in fact taken these precautions, namely, has satisfied itself that she realised the value of speaking the truth and the significance of the oath, and has appended the required certificate also, the girl's evidence becomes admissible even if she is taken to be a child witness. Such evidence if believed would be, even without corroboration, sufficient to maintain the conviction of the accused for the offence of kidnapping. The rule that the statement of the prosecutrix must be corroborated in material particulars by some other evidence, should be restricted to cases of rape only and should not be extended to other cases of sexual nature: 1957 Cr.L.J. 688: 1957 Raj.L.W. 345.

A boy of about seven years is not likely to distinguish between things heard by him and those which he has seen; and when there is a clear indication of inconsistent statements in his evidence not much importance can be attached to it. It is not illegal to examine a witness of tender years; but it is important that the Judge should, as a precaution, ascertain in the first instance by means of a few simple questions whether the intelligence of the child is such that it is capable of giving credible evidence; it is also desirable that the record of evidence should show that such a test has been in fact made. When it does not appear that any such attempt was made to test the capacity of the child witness to give his testimony, it is not safe to rely on the evidence of such a witness: 15 Pat.L.T. 586: A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 651. See also I.L.R. 20 Pat. 893: A.I.R. 1942 Pat. 150; 1957 M.L.J. (Cr.) 418: A.I.R. 1957 Ker. 153.

There is neither any immutable rule of law or of procedure which makes it mandatory for a Court to record the evidence of a child witness in question and answer form. It is only where the answers given by a child witness are either dubious or ambiguous or confusing that the non-recording of the evidence of a child witness in question and answer form may result in rendering the evidence unworthy of acceptance. Thus, where child witness's answers were very clear and they clearly suggested the questions in reply to which they had been given, held, the omission to record evidence of child witness in question and answer form would not render her evidence unworthy of acceptance: 1995 Cr.L.J. 1432 (Bom.) (D.B.).

When the prosecution case is solely resting on the evidence of a child witness of tender age and it is tainted with infirmities of description, on the point of proper identification and when there is evidence to show that she was tutored, it is very unsafe to base conviction on such evidence in a murder case: 1995 Cr.L.J. 595 (Madh. Pra.) (D.B.).

Where the only eye-witness was a teenager girl, held, her evidence has to be scrutinized with care and caution: A.I.R. 1973 S.C. 55: (1973) 3 S.C.C. 219: (1973) 2 S.C.J. 303.

A child, three and a half years old at the time of her examination, held, is not competent witness being unable to understand questions and give rational replies thereto: 1982 Raj.L.W. 469.

Where testimony of child witness, aged 9 years, who had witnessed murder of her mother was assailed on the ground that it was extremely improbable that seeing the accused armed with an axe (tikav), she did not run away, held, when the medical evidence showed that only one blow with a tikav was inflicted on deceased and thus, by the time the child witness would have thought of running away, the incident must have been over and the accused himself would have run away. Therefore, said contention was devoid of any merit: 1995 Cr.L.J. 1432 (Bom.) (D.B.).

Where the prosecution case depended entirely on a single child eye-witness and the accused's oral extra-judicial confession, held, circumstances in the case throw a serious doubt about the child's being an eye-witness and also destroy the veracity of the extra-judicial confession, there was no ground for conviction: A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 1621.

Where evidence of child witness was contrary to her earlier statement to the Police that her mother had committed suicide by pouring kerosene oil upon her body and igniting it, which supports the defence, held, her oral evidence could not be relied on to convict the accused for murder: (1991) 4 Bom.C.R. 618 (D.B.).

Where a child witness deposed that her uncle had killed her mother and the manner of assault as deposed by her was corroborated by medical evidence and there was no opportunity to tutor the child and further there was no reason why she would falsely implicate her uncle, held, the evidence of child witness inspired confidence: 1995 Cr.L.J. 1432 (Bom.) (D.B.).

Where evidence of a child witness who had witnessed murder of his brother and had also sustained injuries appeared to be truthful and unpolluted from external influences, held, it could be relied upon for convicting the accused: 1995 Cr.L.J. 1160 (Raj.) (D.B.).

Where minor son of one of deceased persons described the manner and the place where the deceased persons received injuries and no material infirmity was found in his evidence and it was also corroborated by medical evidence, held, evidence of child witness could be relied upon. [1976 Cr.L.J. 1031 (S.C.); 1973 Cr.L.J. 159 (S.C.), Rel. on]: 1994 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 407 (P.&H.) (D.B.).

Where an offence was committed during night and the entire case rested on a child witness who stated that she saw the accused in the lantern's light but fact of the lantern burning was not stated nor the accused were named to the Police and there were also other contradictions in her evidence, held, the accused could not be convicted on her evidence: A.I.R. 1992 S.C. 1131: 1992 Cr.L.J. 1426: 1993 S.C.C. (Cr.) 289.

Child witness—Observations of Sessions Judge—Value of: 1969 Cr.L.J. 1282 (Del.).

Evidence of child witnesses should be closely scrutinised—Nobody mentioned as murderer in F.I.R.—Accused who is alleged to be on illicit intimacy with deceased's wife, mentioned as suspicious in F.I.R.—Prosecution evidence making its entire story fantastic—Contradictions in statements of child witnesses — Suspicion however grave or might be can hardly be accepted as a substitute for proof of the guilt of accused: 1966 Raj.L.W. 382.

Where an eye-witness, aged 7 years, had improved upon his earlier statement before the Police, held, his evidence could not be relied upon: 1975 Raj.L.W. 415 (D.B.). Where in the site-plan, the places from where other witnesses had seen the occurrence had been marked but the place from where a child witness of 11 years had seen the occurrence had not been marked, though the site-plan was alleged to have been prepared at his instance, held, this omission was very significant and had a great bearing on the veracity of his statement: 1975 Raj.L.W. 435 (D.B.).

Murder—Child witness, the only eye-witness—Victim of tutoring—Two different versions, one before committing Court and another before Sessions Judge—No corroborating evidence to connect accused with murder—No reliance can be placed on such evidence—Conviction cannot stand—Court of fact can examine both versions—But when two conflicting versions are given and on evidence witness stands as condemned liar—Court needs corroboration in support of statement on which conviction is to be sustained: I.L.R. (1968) Cut. 748: 1970 Cr.L.J. 637.

Where evidence of child witness was not found to be reliable. See A.I.R. 1994 S.C. 454; 1983 Raj.L.W. 80; A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 135; 1995 Cr.L.J. 3187 (Andh. Pra.) (D.B.).

Where the statement of the child witness had not been promptly recorded by the Investigating Officer and possibility of her being tutored to give any statement could not be completely ruled out and further her statement was not truthful as she had made vital improvements in her statement given in the Court from what she stated to the Police, held, it would not be safe to place any implicit reliance on her testimony unless there is some corroboration from any other independant evidence: 1995 Cr.L.J. 3028 (Del.) (D.B.).

The accused was convicted entirely on the evidence of three witnesses out of whom one was a child witness. It was found that the other two witnesses had been changing their versions from time to time to suit the exigencies of the prosecution because they were interested in exculpating one of themselves from the offence for which he was standing his trial at the same time in a counter case. So far as the child witness, whose evidence was relied upon to corroborate the evidence of those two witnesses, was concerned he was speaking of the occurrence which took place at a time when he was 8 or 9 years old and after 6 years thereafter so that it was difficult to place reliance on his recollections of the occurrence. Further, there were some discrepancies also in his testimony.

Held, that in those circumstances it was quite unsafe to confirm the conviction of the accused which was entirely based on the evidence of those witnesses: 1957 Ker.L.T. 526: 1957 M.L.J. (Cr.) 418: A.I.R. 1957 Ker. 153: 1957 Cr.L.J. 1132.

Where a young boy of 13 to 14 years admits of having been tutored by the Police, held, no reliance could be put on his evidence: 1975 Cr.L.J. 78 (Him. Pra.) (D.B.). See also A.I.R. 1994 S.C. 454: 1994 Cr.L.J. 56.

A rural youth of 13 years, found by the Court to be of mature understanding, held, cannot be treated as a child witness: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 1347.

Where the presence of a child witness, a 16 year old son of the deceased, at the place of occurrence was established and he deposed that the accused, two of them armed with pharsas and two others with ballams, surrounded his father, pulled his legs from behind and his father fell down on the ground with his face downwards and described the incident in detail, and crying aloud and running away from the spot, and it was upon his information that another witness lodged the first information report at the Police Station, held, mere discrepancies regarding the number of blows and the side of the weapons used when the medical evidence was not in entire conflict with the child's oral testimony would not detract from its veracity; nor should it be taken that merely because the child was taken by the Police for producing him as a witness does not mean that he had been tutored; the accused could be convicted on his testimony, the other eye-witness having been declared hostile: A.I.R. 1995 S.C. 959: 1995 Cr.L.J. 1461.

Where version of the incident by a child witness was truthful, held, the Court is justified in relying on his evidence: 1979 Cr.L.J. 700: 1979 Cr.L.R. (S.C.) 81: 1979 U.J. (S.C.) 334: (1979) 4 S.C.C. 332: 1979 S.C.C. (Cr.) 968: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 1173. See also 1994 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 109 (Ori.).

Where testimony of a child witness was found to be natural and straight-forward, held, in absence of any material showing that he was tutored or influenced by any person, his testimony should be accepted: (1982) 54 Cut.L.T. 527. See also 1993 Cr.L.J. 772 (Pat.).

Evidence of a child witness aged only 6 years is to be approached with great caution; where serious infirmities and contradictions were found in his evidence, held, it could not be relied on: A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 135: (1977) 1 S.C.C. 707.

Evidence of a child witness who had immediately disclosed the occurrence and was corroborated by medical evidence, held, can be relied on: 1985 Cr.L.J. 1876.

Murder case — Child eye-witnesses unsophisticated school boys not shown to be inspired by feeling of enmity towards accused—Minor discrepancies in testimony held discrepancies of truth rather than badge of falsehood: (1964) 66 Punj.L.R. 1230: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 127: A.I.R. 1965 Punj. 291.

Where evidence of child witness was found to be acceptable and reliable: A.I.R. 1993 S.C. 2275: 1993 Cr.L.J. 2605; 1988 Cr.L.J. 1301 (Cal.).

A plea that a boy was major when the Urban Land (Ceiling and Regulation) Act came into force is liable to be rejected when there was a prior admission that his age was 14 years though he had at the relevant time indeed attained majority: (1983) 55 Cut.L.T. (B.R.D.) 38.

The precautions which have to be taken in the case of a witness below twelve years are not necessary where the girl who had been kidnapped is above the age of twelve years at the time of her examination in Court. When in such a case the Court has in fact taken these precautions, namely, has satisfied itself that she realised the value of speaking the truth and the significance of the oath, and has appended the required certificate also, the girl's evidence becomes admissible even if she is taken to be a child witness.

All that is required in considering the evidence of a child witness is scanning it carefully and if after doing so it is found that there are no flaws or infirmities in the evidence of a child witness there is no impediment in the way of accepting the evidence of a child. Children are pliable and their evidence could easily be shaped and moulded. It is for this reason that a Court should see if there are any signs or indications of tutoring. Normally, a Court should look for corroboration in such cases but that is more by way of caution and prudence and not as a rule of law. If after carefully scrutinizing the evidence the Court comes to the conclusion that there is an impress of truth in it there is no obstacle in the way of accepting the evidence of such a child: (1957) 1 An.W.R. 115: 1957 M.L.J. (Cr.) 43: A.I.R. 1957 Andh. Pra. 343.

57. Panch witness.—The evidence of the Panch witness in a trap case assumes considerable importance; it is high time that the officers of the Anti Corruption Department should be on special caution to ensure to have independent and respectable Panchas as witnesses; they must realise that they are dealing with the public servants' life and the liberty and they also have a presumption of innocence in their favour; before the Court can act on the complainant's testimony in a trap case, it must get independent corroboration on all material particulars from the Pancha's evidence or other independent sources; the evidence of the Police Inspector in a trap case cannot be used to corroborate the complainant's testimony: (1979) 20 Guj.L.R. 329 (D.B.).

It cannot be said that the evidence of every panch witness who takes part in the laying of a trap in cases of bribery can be regarded as evidence of partisan witness. Whether or not a panch witness in a criminal case is a partisan witness would always depend upon the circumstances of each case. If a panch witness occupying a respectable and disinterested position voluntarily helps the investigation by acting as a panch and his evidence appears to the Court to be wholly satisfactory, it may not perhaps be open for the accused to contend that the said evidence must necessarily and as a matter of law be regarded as that of a partisan witness: 1956 Cr.L.J. 725: A.I.R. 1956 Bom. 426.

58. Hostile witness.—(See also S. 154). A witness who states the truth cannot be dubbed as 'hostile' just because his statement does not suit the party producing him: A.I.R. 1956 Him. Pra. 58. See also 1984 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 197 (Gau.). The evidence of a hostile witness is evidence in the same manner and to the same extent as that of any other witness, whether called by prosecution or defence: 38 Cr.L.J. 271: A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 34.

Witness called by party giving answers adverse to his case—Appreciation of evidence—Duty of Court—Witness if can be treated as hostile: (1961) 1 Cr.L.J. 403: A.I.R. 1961 Mys. 74.

Merely because a witness is declared hostile his evidence cannot be rejected on that ground alone; however, once a prosecution witness is declared hostile, the prosecution's clear intention is not to rely on his evidence; the version of the hostile witness cannot be the version of the prosecution itself: A.I.R. 1978 S.C. 1096: (1978) 2 S.C.R. 788: 1978 U.J. (S.C.) 208: (1978) 2 S.C.C. 407. See also 1994 Cr.L.J. 596: A.I.R. 1994 S.C. 56.

Even if declared hostile, neither the entire evidence of a witness gets excluded nor is it rendered unworthy of consideration: A.I.R. 1989 S.C. 1543: 1989 Cr.L.J. 1785. However see 1989 Cr.L.J. 2050 (Mad.).

Evidence of hostile witness cannot be rejected altogether: 1967 Cr.L.J. 1023: A.I.R. 1967 Manipur 11.

The evidence of a prosecution witness cannot be rejected wholesale, merely on the ground that the prosecution had dubbed him 'hostile' and cross-examined him when his testimony was not shaken on material points: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 1848: (1980) 1 S.C.C. 30: I.L.R. (1979) 2 Karn. 2055: (1980) 1 S.C.R. 95.

The evidence of a witness, declared hostile, is not wholly effaced from the record; that part of his evidence which is otherwise acceptable can be acted upon: A.I.R. 1991 S.C. 1853; (1976) 42 Cut.L.T. 667 (D.B.).

After having been declared hostile the statement of a witness does not cease to remain a part of the record and it can be judged by the Court upon its own value and can be relied upon if it has any worth: 1981 All.L.J. 871.

Merely because prosecution witnesses had turned hostile is not sufficient to discredit their testimony, such of its parts which tally with other evidence may well be taken into consideration: 1985 Cr.L.J. 1373.

Some witnesses do turn hostile but that by itself would not prevent a Court from finding an accused guilty if there is otherwise acceptable evidence to support the prosecution: A.I.R. 1983 S.C. 911: (1983) 4 S.C.C.10.

Even if a witness is declared hostile, held, the Court can validly consider his evidence: 1981 M.P.L.J. 786: 1982 Cr.L.J. 254.

Neither law nor practice enjoins rejection in toto of the testimony of a hostile witness; his evidence needs to be carefully considered and properly sifted in the context of other evidence and circumstances of the case, the part found to be truthful can certainly be relied upon: 1982 Cr.L.J. 173 (Ker.).

The evidence of hostile witnesses cannot corroborate the evidence of the partisan witnesses: A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 236: (1975) 3 S.C.C. 343.

Permitting the prosecutor to ask leading questions does not amount to an adjudication of the witness's veracity; naturally his entire testimony cannot be thrown out. [1975 Mah.L.J. 776 (D.B.) held overruled in view of A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 294]: (1985) 2 Bom.C.R. 234 (D.B.).

Where a witness declared hostile had deposed that on hearing the alarm, he went to the deceased's house following another eye-witness who scaled over the wall and opened the front door from within and on going inside they saw the accused fleeing to their house by jumping over the partition wall, and the only reason of his being declared hostile was that he had failed to say that he had also seen them attacking the deceased, held, from its very nature, he could not have seen the actual attack; but for this, his evidence was in line with the evidence of the other eye-witness in all aspects; the High Court could not have brushed aside his entire evidence merely because he had been declared hostile: A.I.R. 1989 S.C. 1543: 1989 Cr.L.J. 1785.

Where in a case of murder of his step-brother by the accused, independent witnesses had turned hostile, the evidence of their uncle and aunt, in the absence of the proof of strong enmity or motive, cannot be discarded if otherwise reliable: 1984 All.Cr.C. 318: 1985 All.Cr.R. 81: 1985 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 17.

Where immediately after the murderous assault, the injured was taken to the Police Station where the Head Constable recorded the report of the injured's son, first dictated orally and later on submitted in writing by him but when it came to trial on the injured's death for murder, the version given by the prosecution witnesses including the deceased's aforesaid son in the Court, because of major changes about the origin and site of the occurrence became diametrically opposed to the first information recorded by the Head Constable with whom no enmity or want of cordial relations was shown and the prosecution had also failed to explain the injuries on the accused's person, held, the Head Constable's statement in the Court about his recording the first information provided no warrant to the trial Court to declare him hostile and permit the prosecution to cross-examine him. Merely because the Head Constable while recording the information had not appended the usual certificate at the foot of the recorded statement that it had been recorded as narrated and that it had been read over to the witness, was of no consequence whatsoever: 1995 Cr.L.J. 1991 (Mad.) (D.B.).

Person engaged in illicit distillation apprehended on spot—Mahazar witnesses turning hostile—Evidence of officer who conducted raid—Conviction, held, not bad: 1964 M.L.J. (Cr.) 664.

Where the witness had resiled from the version given during the course of investigation, and consequently, the prosecution treated him hostile wholesale, held, the net result was that though the prosecution elicited, what all he had stated during the course of investigation and brought on record, utilising the provisions of S. 145, the evidentiary value to be attached to such a testimony was practically negligible or, so to say 'nil': (1995) 1 An.L.T. (Cr.) 271 (Mad.) (D.B.).

Where the prosecution was unable to unfold the beginning and the end of occurrence, as most of its witnesses had turned hostile for some reason or the other and the remaining one or two prosecution witnesses had only supported it but in a very half-hearted and incredible fashion, held, the accused is entitled to the benefit of doubt: (1984-85) 89 Cal.W.N. 320 (D.B.).

59. Defence witness.—(See also Ss. 101-104). Defence witnesses are entitled to equal treatment with those of the prosecution; the Courts ought to overcome their traditional, instinctive disbelief in defence witnesses. True, quite often, they do tell lies but so do the prosecution witnesses: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 911: (1981) 2 S.C.C. 166.

Defence witnesses are often untrustworthy; that is no reason to assume that they always lie or that the prosecution witnesses are always trustworthy: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 329: 1974 Cr.L.J. 358: (1974) 3 S.C.C. 649.

Testimony of a witness cannot be discarded simply because he appears for the defence; the Courts have to give cogent reasons for discarding sworn testimony whether it is for the prosecution or defence: 1983 All.L.J. 1316.

Merely because evidence of one party is found not worthy of credence, his adversary's evidence is not necessarily true: A.I.R. 1984 N.O.C. 131 (Del.).

60. Police officer/Government servant.—As recently observed in (1988) 4 S.C.C. 302, the testimony of an Investigating Officer should not be rejected merely on the ground that he is, as such, interested in the prosecution's success; as public servant, he must be presumed to be acting honestly and conscientiously; his evidence should be assessed on its instrinsic worth: (1989) 1 Karn.L.J. 454.

Presumption that persons act honestly applies also to them as in the case of other persons—Mere fact that they are Police officers and hence interested in seeing the success of the case is not sufficient to treat their evidence with suspicion: (1965) 1 Cr.L.J. 76: A.I.R. 1965 Punj. 27.

The testimony of a Police Officer, if otherwise trustworthy, cannot be rejected merely because he is interested in the success of the case: 1981 Cr.L.J. 1244 (Raj.).

Where the injuries on the person of an accused clearly indicate a merciless beating and where they are not consistent with those alleged to have been caused at the time of arrest of an accused on his resistance to surrender and where medical evidence shows that they were caused much earlier, the whole investigation becomes suspect and no reliance can be placed on the words of the Investigating Officer who stoops to such methods for attaining his purpose or on the statement of the witnesses who support his version: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1028: A.I.R. 1968 All. 290.

Credibility of witness—Police witness—Value of—Same standards to be applied as in case of other witnesses: (1966) 2 Cr.L.J. 829: (1965) 1 Mys.L.J. 485: (1965) 2 Law Rep. 442.

Non-examination of the investigation officer is not necessarily fatal; the Court has to see whether his evidence is essential and if on finding that no prejudice will be caused to the defence, it may pronounce judgment without examining him: (1987) 35 B.L.J.R. 335 (D.B.); (1988) 36 B.L.J.R. 156 (D.B.). Where non-examination of the Investigating Officer resulted in acquittal of the accused in a dacoity case, whereby the informant suffered the loss of reward, held, the best way was to impose the cost of Rs. 20,000 on the State Government to compensate the informant for the loss occasioned to him only due to the Investigating Officer's default, leaving the State Government to proceed against the Investigating Officer and realise from him the costs and compensate itself: (1988) 36 B.L.J.R. 156 (D.B.).

Police Officer should not be disbelieved simply because he figures as witness, provided his evidence is reliable and credible: 1970 Cr.L.J. 69: A.I.R. 1970 Tripura 1.

Presumption that a person acts honestly applies as much in favour of a Police Officer and it is not judicial approach to suspect him without good grounds therefor: (1966) 2 An.W.R. 338.

The evidence of a Police Officer cannot be under-estimated merely because of his being a Police Officer: A.I.R. 1987 S.C. 98: (1986) 4 S.C.C. 439: (1986) 2 U.J. (S.C.) 728; 1957 Cr.L.J. 237 (Raj.); A.I.R. 1968 All. 290.

Evidence of Police Officers cannot be discarded only for their being Police Officers unless it is shown that they were hostile to the accused: A.I.R. 1973 S.C. 2783; A.I.R. 1965 Mys. 264: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 517; 1994 Cr.L.J. 3623 (All.).

The law, no where says that the testimony of a Police or Excise Officer should necessarily be discarded, unless it is corroborated by that of a non-official: 1956 Cr.L.J. 747: A.I.R. 1956 Him. Pra 26. See also 1989 Cr.L.J. 2038 (Ker.).

Where certain quantity of illicit liquor was seized and Sub-Inspector, Excise found that seized liquor was illicit distilled liquor and said finding was based upon certain tests and the plea that said official had grudge against the accused was found not substantiated, held, even though finding of said official was not corroborated by unofficial witnesses it was not sufficient to discredit otherwise credible witness. [1978 Cr.L.J. 1960 (S.C.); (1990) 70 Cut.L.T. 743, Foll.]: 1994 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 439 (Ori.).

Where in order to prove that accused was found to be in possession of opium, the prosecution produced police constables, who were not authorised to seize opium, as witnesses but their evidence was not corroborated by independent witnesses, held, said witnesses could not be relied upon. Conviction of accused was unsustainable: 1994 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 337 (Madh. Pra.).

The evidence of an agent provacateur is looked upon with suspicion and should be seldom relied upon in support of a conviction: 30 Cr.L.J. 941: A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 436. Any suspicion entertained by the Police Officer cannot be treated as evidence against the accused: 138 I.C. 704: 33 Cr.L.J. 677. There is no reason for discarding the evidence of a witness simply because he is a Police Officer who was charged with the investigation of the case. Police Officers are not worse than ordinary human beings and it cannot be said that all of them are liars, just as it cannot be said that all of them are entirely truthful. The evidence of a witness is to be examined on its merits and if it is improbable or absurd, it would be difficult to believe that evidence from whatever quarter it might come. If it is natural, consistent and bears the ring of truth, there is no reason to disbelieve it simply because the witness is lowly placed or belongs to a particular department of the Government: 1958 Raj.L.W. 527. A policeman's testimony like that of every other witness must be judged on its own merits and should be accepted or rejected according to the circumstances disclosed in each particular case: (1929) 31 Punj.L.R. 688: A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 892; 1993 Cr.L.J. 1622 (Statement of a Police Officer is entitled to same weight as that of a member of public). So also as to the testimony of Zaildars and Safaidposhes: 110 I.C. 674: 29 Cr.L.J. 738. See also (1934) 36 Punj.L.R. 174: A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 870.

Evidence of Police Officer of rank of Assistant Sub-Inspector cannot be lightly brushed aside: 1969 Cur.L.J. 957.

Conviction of a public servant on the testimony of the arresting officer having doubtful antecedents, held, cannot be sustained: 1981 All.L.J. 1203.

The human impulse is to speak the truth; that applies as much in favour of a Police Officer as of other persons; it is not the judicial approach to distrust and suspect a Police officer without good grounds therefor; thus, even if a Police Officer can be said to be interested in the success of the case, but where his statement is otherwise trustworthy, it should be acceptable to the Court: 1981 Raj.L.W. 370 (D.B.). See also 1981 Chand. Cr.C. 261 (Punj.); (1973) 1 Chand. L.R. (Cr.) 93; 1976 Cr.L.J. 274 (All.) (F.B.).

There is no rule of prudence as such or which has crystallized into a rule of law requiring that evidence of the Police Officer who had laid the trap should be treated as evidence of an accomplice requiring corroboration; in a particular case, the Court may be disinclined to act upon his evidence without corroboration; but, equally, in another appropriate case, the Court may unhesitatingly accept evidence of such an Officer. It is all a matter of appreciation; there can be no hard and fast rule nor any precedented guidance: A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 873: (1980) 2 S.C.C. 390: (1980) 2 S.C.J. 319: (1980) 2 S.C.W.R. 161.

A Police Officer cannot be disbelieved merely because he has no proper knowledge about the location of the villages falling within the territorial jurisdiction of the Police Station to which he is attached: (1981) 8 Cr.L.T. 312 (Punj.) (D.B.).

Conviction under S. 3 of the Railway Property (Unlawful Possession) Act, 1966, can be based on the sole testimony of a Sub-Inspector of Railway Protection Force: 1983 Mad.L.W. (Cr.) 59: 1983 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 178.

A home guard is not under the Police; he cannot be said to be not an independent witness: (1989) 1 Bom.C.R. 388 (D.B.); (1987) 2 Crimes 909 (Bom.) (D.B.).

The testimony of a village ramoshi cannot be discarded on the ground of his being under Police influence: A.I.R. 1973 S.C. 55: (1973) 3 S.C.C. 219.

Where in a proceeding under S. 109 of Cr. P. Code, a witness is a Gorkha watchman employed by some private agencies, the mere fact that he performs duties as night watchman can hardly be a sufficient reason for reaching the conclusion that he would be 'at the mercy' of the Police and would, therefore, be willing to give false evidence just to oblige them: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 517: A.I.R. 1965 Mys. 264.

Where a village panch, who had to perform public duties in many spheres, had appeared as a Police witness in previous prosecutions but had no animus against the accused, held, that per se is no ground to doubt his veracity: (1981) 83 Punj.L.R. 426: (1981) 8 Cr.L.T. 127: I.L.R. (1981) 2 Punj. 407: 1982 Cr.L.J. 29.

The evidence of each witness is to be appraised without prejudice; merely because the panch witness is a Government servant, his evidence cannot be dubbed as that of an interested person unless he had shown excessive zeal in the conduct and success of the prosecution: (1987-2) 28 Guj.L.R. 878: 1988 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 20 (D.B.).

In a bribery case, the evidence of the panch cannot be discarded merely because of his being a Government servant when there was nothing to show that he was interested in either of the parties or was in any way connected with the Investigation Officer. [A.I.R. 1985 S.C. 1092, Rel. on]: (1990-1) 10 Guj.L.H. 47 (D.B.).

Merely because a panch witness is a Government servant, it cannot be contended that he would be a privity to a false panchnama to entrap an innocent person: 1981 Cr.L.J. 527 (Guj.).

It is true that official witnesses are not to be disbelieved simply because they happen to be officials, but it depends on the facts of each case. The law is well set that while going for raids and recoveries at least two respectable non-officials are to be joined with the party. Where the prosecution case was that the accused was found carrying opium on a bicycle and the evidence disclosed that before the accused was stopped and search of tins alleged to contain opium was made, the Excise Officers had prior information and therefore, sufficient time to join in respectable non-official witnesses, which, however, they did not do and the case rested only on evidence of official witnesses and the accused also pleaded enmity against the Excise Sub-Inspector, held that the accused was entitled to the benefit of doubt: 1967 Cur.L.J. 212.

No rule of law requires that an accused of an offence under S. 7(1) read with S. 16(1)(a)(i) of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954, cannot be convicted on the sole testimony of a Food Inspector; it is only out of a sense of caution that the Courts insist that such sole testimony should be corroborated by some independent witness because the Food Inspector may in a sense be regarded as an interested witness; this caution is a rule of prudence, not of law; were it otherwise, every guilty person could escape punishment by bribing the panch witnesses: A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 56: (1977) 1 S.C.C. 173: (1977) 1 S.C.R. 592.

Case under Prevention of Food Adulteration Act—Seizure of sample by Food Inspector—Food Inspector deposing during trial that he had seized sample in presence of two witnesses as required by S. 10(7) of that Act—One of two witnesses who alone was examined denying his presence at the time of seizure and stating that he signed the seizure memo later on—Denial by witness is not by itself sufficient to hold that provisions of S. 10(7) were not complied with—Court can rely on evidence of Food Inspector alone and hold that seizure was made as required by that Act if it comes to the conclusion that it could be accepted in preference to the evidence of the attesting witnesses—There is no rule in law that evidence of Food Inspector alone cannot be believed or accepted: I.L.R. (1964) 1 Ker. 589: (1964) 2 Cr.L.J. 417: A.I.R. 1964 Ker. 261.

Duty of Court—Doing one's duty is not a reason by itself for a Court to reject one's evidence—Deputy Superintendent, Central Excise is entitled to check smuggling of gold and is interested in booking cases against smugglers—That is not enough reason to reject his evidence: 1969 Cr.L.J. 1022: A.I.R. 1969 Andh. Pra. 278. Duty of Court: 1969 Cr.L.J. 502: A.I.R. 1969 Ori. 73.

All public servants entrusted with duty to prevent crime have to perform unpleasant tasks against the suspects; but that is no reason to affect their evidentiary value unless there be something specific against them: 1976 Cr.L.J. 274: 1976 All.L.J. 100.

In appreciating oral evidence, it is to be assessed whether the witness is truthful or there is anything to doubt his veracity in any particular matter; where he is found to be untruthful on material facts, the matter ends. Where he is only partly truthful, the Court may take the precaution of seeking some corroboration, adequate and reasonable, but a Court is not entitled to reject the evidence of a witness merely because he is a government servant and might be under the influence of the investigating officers; if his association with the investigating agencies is unusual, frequent or designed, their evidence may be viewed with suspicion. Even in cases where Officers who, in the course of their duties, generally assist the investigating agencies, there is no need to view their evidence with suspicion as an invariable rule: A.I.R. 1985 S.C. 1092.

Courts of law should judge evidence by applying the well recognised test of basic human probabilities; the observation that the evidence of officers constituting the inspecting party is highly interested because they want the accused to be convicted runs counter to the well recognised principle that prima facie public servants must be presumed to act honestly and conscientiously; their evidence has to be assessed on its intrinsic worth; it cannot be discarded merely on the ground that being public servants they are interested in the success of their case: A.I.R. 1978 S.C. 1571: (1978) 4 S.C.C. 65: 1978 U.J. (S.C.) 701.

Prosecution under Prevention of Food Adulteration Act—Food Inspector and Sanitary Inspector cannot be treated as interested witnesses—Being concerned with investigation and prosecution of offenders, which are their essential duties, does not exclude them from category of competent witnesses: 1967 Cr.L.J. 154: (1966) 1 An.L.T. 279: A.I.R. 1967 Andh. Pra. 49.

Where intrinsic corroboration exists but has not been placed before the Court, held, testimony of the Customs Officers could not be accepted: (1988) 3 Bom.C.R. 614 (D.B.).

61. Private detective agency.—The private detective agencies are employed for substantial reward; they are understandably interested in the success of their investigation; their clients expect positive results from them; the Court, therefore, must view their evidence with utmost caution: (1988) 1 Bom.C.R. 464: (1983) 2 Hindu L.R. 517 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1975 Cal. 243.

62. Villagers'/labourers' evidence regarding time.—Labourers, masons and artisans, working on daily wages for fixed hours, have an accute sense of time; a labourer boy's version about the time of recording his statement cannot be rejected: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 135.

Time is hardly of any importance in a villager's life; even the urban folk make mistakes about time when there is no particular reason to remember it; a discrepancy of time regarding the accused's arrest is of no consequence: 1977 Raj.L.W. 241 (D.B.).

Where a villager mentions an event having taken place at a certain time, it need not be taken as a statement of exactitude; an hour or so this way or that may safely be assumed; the sluggish chronometric sense of the country-side people is notorious; time is hardly of the essence of their slow life; even the urbanites make mistakes about time in the absence of any particular reason to observe and remember the hour of a minor event like taking a morning meal: A.I.R. 1973 S.C. 2622.

Rustics have no sense of time; they give out approximate time which could be an hour or two on either side; wrong time mentioned by a rustic witness regarding an incident does not necessarily discredit her evidence: 1979 Jab.L.J. 117: 1979 M.P.L.J. 317: 1979 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 66 (D.B.).

Witnesses from the village are usually ignorant about dates and months. The mere fact, therefore, that they have said that the occurrence took place in Baisakh cannot discredit the prosecution case that it took place in Jeth on the 18th May, 1958: 1960 B.L.J.R. 275: 1960 Cr.L.J. 1485: A.I.R. 1960 Pat. 518.

63. 'Proved', 'disproved', 'not proved'.— It is apparent from definitions of the words 'proved', 'disproved' and 'not proved' given in S. 3 of the Evidence Act that it applies the same standard of proof in all civil cases. It makes no difference between cases in which charges of a fraudulent or criminal character are made and cases in which such charges are not made. But this is not to say that the Court will not, while striking the balance of probability, keep in mind the presumption of honesty or innocence or the nature of the crime or fraud charged. It is wrong to insist that such charges must be proved clearly and beyond reasonable doubt: A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 1734.

S. 3, while explaining the meaning of 'proved', 'disproved' and 'not proved', lays down the standard of proof about the existence or non-existence of circumstances from a prudent man's point of view; it indicates two conditions of mind: (1) when a man feels absolutely certain of a fact and 'believes it to exist'; and (2) though not absolutely certain, yet he feels the fact to be so extremely probable that a prudent man would act on the assumption of its existence by adopting the requirement of the prudent man's standard as a measure of proof. The Act simultaneously contemplates giving full effect to the circumstances or conditions of probability or improbability. A fact is said to be disproved when the Court finds that it does not exist or considers its non-existence probable in the prudent man's eye; the third stage comes where in the prudent man's eyes the fact is not proved, that is neither proved nor disproved. It is something different from a moral conviction as well as from a suspicion; it is the result of a process of keen examination of the entire material on record by 'a prudent man': A.I.R. 1990 S.C. 1459.

A distinction has to be drawn for the purposes of awarding compensation costs on the basis of falsity of pleas taken by the defendant between the 'facts not proved' and 'facts proved or disproved'. The failure to prove one's plea necessarily does not mean that the fact sought to be proved does not really exists. The distinction is clear from the definition of the term 'proved', 'disproved' and 'not proved' under S. 3 of the Evidence Act. While the terms 'proved' and 'disproved' denote the certainty with which mind believes the fact definitely to exist or not to exit, the term 'not proved' indicates the stage between two states of minds when one is unable to decide how the matter precisely stands. Where a person on whom burden lies to prove the fact alleged by him to exist fails to prove its existence and Court records a finding that the fact is not proved, it cannot be treated equal to a fact proved to be non-existent: A.I.R. 1994 N.O.C. 331 (Raj.).

The Act draws a clear distinction between the words 'disproved' and 'not proved'; a fact is disproved if from the materials on record, the Court believes that it did not exist or considers its non-existence so probable that a prudent man ought to, in the circumstances, act upon the supposition that it did not exist. On the other hand, a fact is said to be 'not proved' when it is neither proved nor disproved; merely because the plaintiff's statement about the presence of two witnesses at the time of payment is not corroborated by their statements, it does not show that his case regarding payment of consideration had been disproved: A.I.R. 1974 Raj. 96.

The word 'proved' seems properly to mean anything which serves either immediately or mediately to convince the mind of the truth or falsehood of a fact or proposition and the proof of matters of fact in general or other senses, the testimony of witnesses, documents and the like. The expression 'proved' postulates two conditions of mind, first that in which a man feels absolutely certain of a fact, in other words, 'believes it to exist,' and secondly that in which though he may not feel absolutely certain of a fact, he thinks it so extremely probable that a prudent man would under the circumstances act on the assumption of its existence: 1975 Raj.L.W. 346; (1971) 1 An.W.R. 65; (1946) 48 Bom.L.R. 746: A.I.R. 1947 Bom. 38 (S.B.). See also 1965 All.L.J. 182: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 581: A.I.R. 1965 All. 525; (1965) 6 Guj.L.R. 878: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 638: A.I.R. 1965 Guj. 281.

The evidence of identification must satisfy the test of being 'proved' as contained in S. 3; if the accompanying statement made at the time of identification renders the accused's recognition at the occurrence improbable, it cannot be excluded from the process of assessing his guilt; the purpose of such evidence is to indicate the witness's state of mind; the statement will be in issue or relevant for a reason quite apart from its truth or falsity: 1980 All.Cr.R. 313: 1980 All.L.J. 674 (D.B.).

The word 'proved' as defined, held, does not take in matters, including statements statutorily excluded: A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 873: (1980) 2 S.C.C. 390: (1980) 2 S.C.J. 319: (1980) 2 S.C.W.R. 161.

In judging whether a fact is or is not proved, the Court is entitled to take into consideration not only the statements of witnesses but also surrounding circumstances and the probabilities of the case. Even if the statements of the witnesses, standing by themselves, are open to criticism, a fact may be held established on such evidence read in the light of the surrounding circumstances: 1950 All.L.J. 596.

A Court, when it has to consider whether a fact is proved or not must not expect evidence which cannot be produced. Furthermore, a Court must consider all the evidence before it and this not merely as a number of independent bits of evidence. The whole of the evidence must be considered together and the cumulative effect of it must be weighed: I.L.R. 15 Luck. 191: A.I.R. 1940 Oudh 35. See also 1988 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 3 (Cal.).

'Proved'—Railways Act (1890) (as it stood before amendments of 1949 and 1961), S. 72 — Loss of many consignments on account of looting of wagons—Wagon containing appellant's consignment not proved as looted—Held, railway administration was liable for non-delivery of appellant's consignment: 1965 S.C.D. 831: (1965) 2 S.C.W.R. 599: A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 1666.

Legal proof is nothing more nor less than what is indicated in definition of word 'proved'—When once evidence comes before Court and stands test of severe legal scrutiny that evidence constitutes legal proof: 1966 Ker.L.J. 868.

A fact must be proved by best evidence—Fact that certain goods exported to port S and were transhipped to Port K—No witness on the fact examined—That issue of commission or letter of request to examine witnesses in foreign country would have been so expensive that such course could not have been adopted, not proved—Fact alleged cannot be held as proved: (1968-69) 73 Cal.W.N. 279.

'Proved'—Plea of D that P has transferred to him only tenancy and not goodwill of business—When business run by P and D is same and premises are located in business locality, conclusion is that goodwill must have necessarily passed: A.I.R. 1968 Raj. 278.

'Proved'—Salesman of licensed excise vendor found in unauthorised possession of excisable articles—Question if salesmen were acting on behalf of vendor to make him vicariously liable under S. 59—Salesmen found sitting in shop for purpose of selling goods when unauthorised goods were seized—Salesmen must be held to have been acting on behalf of vendor: 31 Cut.L.T. 221.

'Proved'—Part of prosecution story disbelieved—Evidence as to other part—Credibility—Evidence Act (1872), S. 3, Proved: 1963 B.L.J.R. 332.

A Magistrate recording a confession under S. 164 of the Code of Criminal Procedure or holding an identification parade does so as a matter of duty and discretion; he does not act as a Court; and where the identification memo prepared by the Magistrate had been lost and identification was sought to be proved by its copy prepared by the Investigating Officer, held, it could not be so proved; it had to be proved by the Magistrate from the original: 1974 Raj.L.W. 192.

'Disproved'—P challenging M's appointment under R. 7(7), M.P. Tendu Patta (Vyapar Viniyaman) Adhiniyam, 1964, as purchaser of Tendu leaves—Plea that without considering tender submitted by him M was appointed—P shown to have made fresh offer for purchase of Tendu leaves—Held, P could not have made fresh offer if his earlier tender had been pending and that making of fresh offer showed that earlier tender had been rejected to P's knowledge: 1966 M.P.L.J. 625: 1966 Jab.L.J. 1180.

'Not Proved'—Proof in civil and criminal cases—The evidence in criminal cases must be such as to exclude any reasonable doubt of guilt; if there be any such doubt the accused is entitled to be acquitted: I.L.R. 22 Cal. 313. Benefit of doubt—Duty of Court: A.I.R. 1958 Mad. 127: (1958) 1 M.L.J. 6: 1957 M.L.J. (Cr.) 707. Evidence—Dishonest intention not proved — Accused entitled to benefit of doubt: A.I.R. 1956 Ori. 212. See also A.I.R. 1957 Assam 74.

Case of exaggerated version and false implication—It is not possible to eliminate innocent persons from actual assailants—None of accused can be legally convicted: 1969 All.Cr.R. 57: 1969 All.W.R. (H.C.) 94.

Telegraphic message—No presumption can be made as to the person by whom such message was sent—No evidence to show that it was sent by the person by whom it was purported to be sent—On the other hand he is specifically denying it—Message held to be not proved: 1954 S.C.J. 395: 1954 S.C.R. 919: A.I.R. 1954 S.C. 316.

64. 'Matters before it'.—The term 'matters before it' include matters which do not fall within the definition of 'evidence': A.I.R. 1924 Nag. 385: 79 I.C. 609. Inference from fact—Every one of facts need not by itself be sufficient to establish guilt—All that is required is material whereon the Court can reasonably act upon supposition that a fact exists: 1953 All.L.J. 173: A.I.R. 1953 All. 493.

65. Proof—Generally.—(See also Notes under Ss. 101-105). Meaning of. See A.I.R. 1928 All. 303: 107 I.C. 564. Also (1929) 31 Bom.L.R. 515; A.I.R. 1934 All. 390: 154 I.C. 405.

What degree of probability amounts to 'proof' is to be determined in each case; probability amounting to 'proof' depends upon inter-dependence of evidence and confirmation of one piece of evidence by another; the concept of probability or its degrees cannot obviously be expressed in terms of mathematically enumerated units; unmistakably there is a subjective element in evaluation of the degrees of probability and the quantum of proof: A.I.R. 1988 S.C. 2154. See also 1994 M.P.L.J. 57 (D.B.)

Charge of conspiracy—Has to be proved by legal evidence—Suspicion alone cannot take place of legal proof—'In prosecution of

'In pursuance of the common object'—Applicability: 1968 Cr.L.J. 584: A.I.R. 1968 All. 170.

Per Desai, J.—Unless it is explained how and where to draw the line between proof and suspicion no useful purpose is served, and no guidance whatsoever is given to lower Courts, by the remark that suspicion is not proof. One test for judging whether the circumstantial evidence creates suspicion only or proved the guilt is whether it is reasonably consistent with his innocence or not. If it is, it only creates a suspicion against him: A.I.R. 1955 All. 443: 1955 All.L.J. 468.

A suggestion or suspicion put forth by the defence cannot alone discredit the eye-witnesses: A.I.R. 1992 S.C. 1579; 1982 Cr.L.R. 381 (Guj.).

Where there was only suspicion but no irresistible and only conclusion of guilt, held, the accused was entitled to the benefit of doubt; mere suspicion, however strong, is no substitute of legal evidence: (1981) 51 Cut.L.T. 343.

Where the death found to be due to forcible administration of poison but there was only suspicion and no direct evidence against the accused, held, the accused's guilt was not decisively established; suspicion did not amount to legal proof: A.I.R. 1990 S.C. 79.

On the prosecution failing to satisfactorily establish the accused's guilt beyond all reasonable doubt, held, their conviction under S. 302 read with S. 34 of the Indian Penal Code was liable to be set aside: A.I.R. 1992 S.C. 49.

A moral conviction about guilt has no place in criminal jurisprudence; a Court arrives at the truth from legal evidence adduced by either side; it is not to be guided by moral conviction or the crime's gravity; moral conviction does not lead to legal conviction; surmises and suppositions cannot take the place of legal proof; suspicion, however grave, cannot sustain a criminal charge: 1984 Cr.L.J. 1215: 57 Cut.L.T. 505; 1981 Raj.Cr.C. 345.

The line between 'legal proof' and moral conviction must be kept clear in considering the nature and quantum of proof. But once the evidence comes before Court and stands the test of severe legal scrutiny, that evidence constitutes legal proof. Then the dividing line vanishes. 'Legal proof' is neither more nor less than what is indicated by the definition of the words 'proved' in S. 3. While the Court is entitled to insist that the best possible evidence should be produced, no hard and fast rule as to the quantum of evidence required for the proof of a particular fact can be laid down as this must necessarily vary with the circumstances of each case: 1944 All.L.J. 87: A.I.R. 1944 All. 94.

Belief based on hearsay cannot take place of proof: (1965) 2 M.L.J. 181: 1965 M.L.J. (Cr.) 619.

Conclusive proof—Nature and scope of conclusiveness: 1965 All.L.J. 428.

Detection of liquor by mere smell—Cannot be a basis for conviction of accused: (1966) 68 Bom.L.R. 389.

Where the petitioner is required to prove negative facts, the same has to be generally proved by placing the relevant circumstances before the Court and leaving it to the Court to draw the necessary inference from the proved facts as it may not ordinarily be possible to prove those facts by evidence aliunde: A.I.R. 1965 Mys. 102.

A criminal case, unlike a civil case, is not tied down to a particular version; there is abundance of explicable inaccuracy, often intermingled with imagination and exaggeration, that the Courts dealing with criminal cases cannot throw the whole case overboard simply because parts of it are improbable but not sufficient to disbelieve entirely or to dub it as false; may be, facts are sometimes stranger than fiction. Prudence, however, compels the Courts to test the version advanced in the light of what one may reasonably expect from the ordinary or usual norms of human conduct and the common course of natural events so as to infer what may have actually happened. A conviction must rest on proof so strong that the Court must be convinced that what it concludes must necessarily have happened and it is not reasonably explicable in any other way: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 985: 1974 Cr.L.J. 784: (1974) 4 S.C.C. 84.

The degree of proof required is stricter in a criminal trial than in a civil proceeding; in a criminal trial, however intriguing be the facts and circumstances, the charges against the accused must be proved beyond all reasonable doubts; the proof should not be based on surmises and conjectures. Such requirement of proof beyond reasonable doubt continues even after insertion of S. 498-A in the Indian Penal Code and S. 113-A in the Indian Evidence Act; besides, it should be borne in mind that there is no absolute standard of proof in a criminal trial; whether the charges made against the accused have been proved beyond all reasonable doubts must depend upon the facts and circumstances of each case and the quality of evidences adduced and materials placed on record: A.I.R. 1994 S.C. 1418.

The degree of proof to justify conviction in a criminal case is no doubt that which a prudent man will employ in reaching a conclusion beyond reasonable doubt; however, an accused need not prove his case to the same degree; the standards employed in judging each version are those of a reasonable and prudent man; that is, what is natural to expect; what accords with the commonsense and ordinary experience; and not what is extra-ordinary and unexpected: A.I.R. 1973 S.C. 460: 1972 Cr.L.J. 1286: (1972) 3 S.C.C. 418: (1972) 3 S.C.R. 978.

It is sufficient for an accused to prove his case by preponderance of probabilities as envisaged by S. 3; he succeeds not by proving his case to the hilt but by throwing doubt on the prosecution case by the probability of his version. Once an accused offers a reasonable and probable explanation, it is then for the prosecution to prove the offence affirmatively. [A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 1970, Foll.]: (1981) 52 Cut.L.T. 56: 1981 Cr.L.J. 1458.

The question of burden of proof ceases to be a matter of any particular importance after adduction of evidence on both sides; and the Court is entitled to accept the case of one of the parties as proved; not merely on the positive evidence adduced by him but also on the discrepancies and lacuna in the evidence of the other side. A Court can base its conclusion not merely on the effect of the evidence taken as a whole but it may also draw an adverse inference against a party who being in a position to adduce better evidence deliberately abstains from doing so: A.I.R. 1949 Mad. 689: (1949) 1 M.L.J. 434. See also 80 Cal.L.J. 297; S. 114, Illus. (g).

Like a prudent man, the Court faced with conflicting probabilities about a fact will act on the supposition that the fact exists if preponderance is in favour of its existence; the first step in this process is to fix the probabilities and the second to weigh them, but the two may often intermingle; the impossible is weeded out at the first stage, the improbable at the second. Within the wide range of probabilities, the Court has often a difficult choice which ultimately determines where the preponderance lies; and important issues affecting the parties' status demand a closer scrutiny: A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 1534: (1975) 2 S.C.C. 326.

When it is shown that a particular consignment received by the railway servants was kept in the shed which was subsequently looted by the rioters, the only reasonable inference would be that the consignment was looted by the rioters who attacked the shed; it is not necessary for the railway servants to prove by direct evidence that the particular consignment was looted by the rioters: A.I.R. 1945 Cal. 267.

Too much importance need not be attached to statements which might have been made from ulterior motives and were more or less in one's own interest: A.I.R. 1958 Madh. Pra. 246.

There are occasions when the Court is compelled to draw inference which naturally and inevitably arise from such evidence as there is on the record. The mere paucity of evidence should not relieve the Court of its obligation to come to a conclusion on necessary and material issues. Thus, where the certificate of the police surgeon establishes that the giddiness and the collapse of a workman while working in a mill on a hot day was not due to any disease which was capable of being discovered by clinical examination and that very day the workmen dies at about mid-night, then it is a natural inference to draw that when a man suddenly collapses and dies very soon after and the doctor is not in a position to suggest any reason for this sudden collapse and the death ensuing, that he was suffering from heart trouble which cannot be discovered on a mere clinical examination: A.I.R. 1956 Bom. 424.

Standard of proof in civil cases—Money suit—Plaintiff bank producing copy of the books of account showing amounts which were borrowed on different occasions by defendant and which were admissible under S. 4, Banker's Books Evidence Act—Two witnesses of whom one was the manager of the Bank produced books to prove the amount due—Held, this was sufficient compliance with law and the Bank had proved the amount of debt which was due to it: (1957) 59 Punj.L.R. 117: A.I.R. 1957 Punj. 310.

The Court's judgment is the best proof for the contentions raised before it: 1979 All.L.J. (N.O.C.) 116.

Grievance of petitioner, a Government servant, that departmental enquiry against him by superior authority was engineered by subordinate authority and hence his transfer order after enquiry by superior authority was made mala fide—Since it is difficult to understand as to how a subordinate can influence his superior officer in giving findings and in making transfer, alleged mala fides cannot be held proved by petitioner: A.I.R. 1967 Punj. 76.

Mere allegation that order of detention is mala fide is not enough—Person alleging it has to prove it like any other fact in issue: 1968 Cr.L.J. 177: A.I.R. 1968 Mad. 54.

Evidence against estate of a deceased though uncorroborated can be acted upon, with proper scrutiny: (1965-66) 70 Cal.W.N. 114: A.I.R. 1966 Cal. 181.

Applicability. See (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 771: A.I.R. 1965 J.&K. 126.

Negligence—Whether fire was caused by negligence is a question of fact—There is no question of the applicability of any legal principle in drawing the inference from some basis of facts. [A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 49, Rel. on]. So also whether the plaintiff has discharged the prima facie burden of proof or whether the defendant has rebutted the evidence are also questions of fact: 1962 M.P.C. 60: 1961 Jab.L.J. 1516.

True, where the cause of fire is equally consistent with the defendant's being or not being negligent, neither the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur nor the principles underlying Ss. 3 and 114 of the Act are attracted and the Court cannot hold that the defendant's negligence stands proved; however, if the circumstances are not equivocal and in all probability the fire would not have taken place, but for some negligence of the defendant or his employees, held, doctrine is attracted: A.I.R. 1979 All. 35 (D.B.).

Merely because damages are difficult to estimate or assess with certainty or precision does not relieve the wrongdoer of his duty to pay damages for not abiding by his principal's instructions; lack of evidence in such cases would not be sufficient for burdening him only with nominal damages; the other party should be accorded the benefit of every reasonable presumption for the loss suffered; the Court may form its own conclusions on a reasonable basis about reasonable compensation for the loss inflicted; the Court should try to place the principal in such a position in which he would have been but for the breach of his instructions by the agent: 1981 Raj.L.W. 199.

Acceptance of gratification — Presumption—Nature and scope of—Rebuttal of presumption—Burden of proof must be discharged by proof in accordance with S. 3, Evidence Act: I.L.R. (1963) Guj. 837: (1964) 2 Cr.L.J. 291: A.I.R. 1964 Guj. 206.

A mere averment that a person was a de facto guardian is not adequate. There must be evidence to show that he in fact intermeddled with the estate of the minor or acted as a guardian previously. In absence of such pleading or evidence, he cannot but be regarded as a self-appointed guardian: A.I.R. 1958 Pat. 79.

Partnership Act, 1932, Ss. 4, 59—Registration under the Act is no conclusive proof of the real existence of a partnership—Element as to carrying on business must be present: (1966) 59 I.T.R. 457 (Cal.).

It is very difficult to assume that for treatment of epilepsy which affected a person with fits 'off and on' he was treated as inpatient in the mental hospital for a year and more. The inference can only be that he was insane in the concerned period: 1963 Ker.L.J. 39: I.L.R. (1963) 1 Ker. 76.

Merely because a deed is scribed on a stamp-paper by a regular petition writer, held, does not mean that it cannot be forged: 1989 Punj.L.J. 123.

Where in a suit for partition the defendant claimed that the family was spending money every year for doing guru pooja and utsavam and if the plaintiffs are allotted separate one-third share, a charge should be created over them to secure the performance of the guru pooja and utsavam, held, the burden lay on the defendant to establish his claim; in the absence of any evidence to show that the family as such was performing either guru pooja or utsavam, no charge made: (1974) 87 Mad.L.W. 397 (D.B.).

Where the defendant had forfeited the advance received by him from the plaintiff alleging breach of contract and claiming compensation for the loss suffered by entering into another transaction with a third party, held, to prove such loss the defendant must have produced that third party as his witness for the loss: A.I.R. 1987 Karn. 173: (1987) 1 Karn.L.J. 16 (D.B.).

Where a garnishee filed a self serving statement of account showing no amount was due to the judgment-debtor without producing account books kept in the regular course of business or affidavits, held, it did not constitute clinching or specific evidence; the statement is not proved in the manner known to law by corroborative evidence: (1979) 92 Mad.L.W. 209: I.L.R. (1979) 3 Mad. 77.

Where a written agreement was pleaded to have been orally cancelled, held, the oral agreement as well as cancellation should be proved positively; it cannot be decided on mere presumptions or probabilities; the test of what a prudent man would have done in such circumstances is not attracted; no acceptable explanation having been offered as to why cancellation was not evidenced in writing, oral agreement was not proved: (1989-2) 104 Mad.L.W. 151 (D.B.).

Where Court had compared the copies of the documents with originals and marked that as 'found correct' and in addition there were affidavits by the parties in support of those documents, held, those documents were properly proved: A.I.R. 1971 Manipur 1.

Where a candidate was not admitted in the Medical College in the quota reserved for the Scheduled Tribes though his father's service record showed that he belonged to a backward caste, held, the Scheduled Tribes are one of the recognised species of the genus 'backward classes'; the entry in the service record, the genuineness whereof was not challenged, could not be disregarded: (1987) 3 Bom.C.R. 615 (D.B.).

Right of privacy—Nature of—Proof. See A.I.R. 1969 Raj. 31.

Recital in deed of lease regarding earlier deed of surrender of lease property in favour of lessor—Recital is no proof of surrender—Surrender has to be proved by independent evidence: I.L.R. (1964) Cut. 854: A.I.R. 1965 Ori. 168.

Where a land holder claimed land for his minor daughters under the U.P. Imposition of Ceiling on Land Holdings Act, 1961, and the State did not rebut his evidence that they were unmarried, held, his claim could not be rejected merely because early marriages were not uncommon amongst villagers: A.I.R. 1980 All. 173.

Land Acquisition Act, 1894, S. 23—Grove land—Method of valuation by ascertaining annual value of produce not adequate—Firstly because owner may not have put property to its best use and secondly grove may not have yet started giving maximum yield—Such method should be resorted to only when no other alternative method is available—Held, that evidence of witnesses who have made offer to purchase grove was not only relevant but also acceptable and valuation arrived at on basis of offer rested on better footing and ought to be accepted: A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 465.

Where the Land Acquisition Officer, while awarding compensation, relied upon a statement of a person about the price of comparable sites without examining either the vendors or the vendees or the persons attesting the sale deeds, held, the statement was not admissible; he could not have relied upon it: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 472.

Where the question was as to whether the Mahant of a Math was coerced into appointing the plaintiff as his successor Mahant, held, the presence of the Police at the installation ceremony, far from advancing the defendant's case, destroys his case that the Mahant had acted under coercion: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 845: (1979) 3 S.C.C. 221: (1979) 2 S.C.R. 1012.

A very heavy burden lies on the plaintiff to prove that it was a religious institution, clothed with juristic personality and capable of holding and disposing of property; and he must also show at least some degree of antiquity of the existence of the smadhi and at least some long usage of its worship: 1978 Rev.L.R. 492.

Where Sikhs as a body sought a declaration under S. 7(1) of the Sikh Gurdwara Act, 1925, of a certain institution being a Sikh Gurdwara, and the witnesses deposing the existence of smadhis though not declared hostile were nevertheless sought to be discredited as being communists, held, they would not thereby become unreliable; rather, not belonging, to either of the parties, they lend credit to their testimony of being impartial: A.I.R. 1984 S.C. 858: 1984 U.J. (S.C.) 490: (1984) 2 S.C.C. 600.

In order to prove that a Muslim graveyard was dedicated to the public, the evidence should show that a large number of Muslims had buried their corpses from time to time in the graveyard; the Court will then presume it to be a public graveyard; its mention as a public graveyard in revenue or historical papers would be conclusive proof. Where land was given to Muslims as licensees with permission to use it as a burial ground but its usufruct proprietary rights were retained by the proprietors, and abundant documentary evidence in the form of Jamabandis showed that on its ceasing to be used as a graveyard, the land subsequently reverted to the proprietors and a part of it was allotted to the refugees from Pakistan and the rest was shown under cultivation of different persons, held, the essential ingredients for a public graveyard were not established. [A.I.R. 1969 P.&H. 144; A.I.R. 1971 P.&H. 482, Foll.; A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 1569, Disting.; 1986 Punj.L.J. 455, Not followed in view of A.I.R. 1971 P.&H. 482; 1982 Punj.L.J. 202, Applied]: A.I.R. 1991 P.&H. 89.

There are two modes to prove that a person has adopted the life of a sanyasi: (i) he has actually relinquished and abandoned all wordly possession and all desire for them; (ii) observance of ceremonies indicating severance from his natural family and secular life. However, in case of an orthodox sanyasi, it has also to be proved that necessary ceremonies like as 'Pindadana' or 'Birajahoma' or 'Prajapathiyesthi', without which renunciation is not complete, were performed: A.I.R. 1985 All. 104: (1985) 1 Cur.C.C. 515.

Where some tampering was done in a passport after it had been issued but there was no evidence as to who did it, held, the accused could not be said to have secured a fake passport: A.I.R. 1992 S.C. 2100: 1992 Cr.L.J. 3454.

When was the F.I.R. sent to the Superintendent of Police and the Ilaqa Magistrate is not a matter of which the Court can take judicial notice; it has to be proved like any other fact: A.I.R. 1978 S.C. 59: (1977) 4 S.C.C. 420.

Joint deliberation—Absence of—Must be pleaded and proved—Some deposition not signed by some arbitrators—Fact not sufficient to prove that non-signing arbitrators did not take part in proceedings: I.L.R. (1964) Cut. 685: A.I.R. 1965 Ori. 17.

Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act (4 of 1887), Ss. 7 and 4—Presumption under S. 7 does not extend to S. 4—Mere fact that accused was in possession of house does not make him guilty under S. 4: (1967) 3 Guj.L.R. 145.

Prostitution — Nature of evidence required to prove offence: 1967 Cr.L.J. 1140: A.I.R. 1967 Guj. 211.

Medical evidence—Hairs—Use of as an identification evidence: (1963) 2 S.C.J. 364: 1963 M.L.J. (Cr.) 465: 1966 Cr.L.J. 605: A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 821.

Where offence is highly anti-social and revolting and likely to rouse emotional prejudice in mind of Court, greater care in scrutiny of evidence is called for: 1966 Ker.L.T. 788: 1966 M.L.J. (Cr.) 773: A.I.R. 1967 Ker. 192.

Statement made before Court of law being on solemn affirmation, must rank higher than allegations made in complaint: 1967 Cr.L.J. 1304: A.I.R. 1967 Goa 121.

Adulteration charge—Prosecution under Ss. 10 (7), 16 and 17 (1) of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954—Evidence and proof: 1969 Cr.L.J. 347: A.I.R. 1969 All. 109.

Witnesses in same village or neighbouring village—Witnesses who can depose about good or bad character of a person are witnesses who live in same village or in neighbouring village and their statement cannot be discarded merely because they live in same village or in neighbouring village: 1966 All.Cr.R. 455: 1966 All.W.R. (H.C.) 729.

Benefit of doubt—Hindu marriage—No evidence that second marriage was solemnised according to Hindu rites—Accused (Husband) is entitled to benefit of doubt: 1970 M.L.J. (Cr.) 224: 1970 Cr.L.J. 1116: A.I.R. 1970 Mys. 201.

Infringement of copyright — Complaint by another that certain books are translations of his books—Proof—Duty of Court: (1967) 2 Cr.L.J. 1517: A.I.R. 1967 Ker. 234.

Complaint for infringement of copyright —S. 63 of Copyright Act postulates knowledge of accused: (1967) 2 Cr.L.J. 1517: A.I.R. 1967 Ker. 234.

Proof of posting.—(See also S. 114, Notes 45 and 47). A mere claim of having sent a communication to the addressee under a certificate of posting, held, is no proof either of its having been sent or received by the addressee; such a certificate of posting can be had for mere asking: (1994-1) 106 Punj.L.R. 375.

It is not at all difficult to obtain postal seal marks on post-cards with wrong dates. (Post-cards, held, were fabricated documents): (1961) 1 Cr.L.J. 544: 1961 B.L.J.R. 633.

A notice when sent by post and put in transmission goes out of the sender's power; whatever is written or mentioned therein is incapable of being altered; thus, where in a suit for specific performance of a contract, the closed undelivered registered envelopes containing the plaintiffs notices returned undelivered and opened in the Court, held, the contents of the notices are the best index of the plaintiffs intention about his being or not being ready and willing to perform his part of the contract, notwithstanding the fact that the notice had not been delivered: A.I.R. 1992 All. 174.

The contention that the endorsement of refusal on the notices is not admissible without examining the Postman is untenable; having been made by a public servant in the discharge of his duties, the endorsement is admissible per se without any further proof: (1987-2) 92 Punj.L.R. 239.

Service of summons by post—Proof—Defendant illiterate pardanashin lady—Acknowledgement bearing thumb-impression—Identity of thumb-impression not proved—Postal peon not examined—Fact that she did not categorically deny that it was her thumb-impression is not sufficient to hold that there was tender of registered letter to her especially when she had categorically denied that the letter was ever tendered to her or that she had accepted it: I.L.R. (1960) Cut. 522.

66. Adoption — Proof of.—(See also Ss. 101-104). Neither the principle that the factum of adoption and the authority to adopt may be proved by circumstantial evidence alone, i.e., by conduct, repute and recognition, etc., nor the consideration that evidence naturally gets lost with the lapse of time would justify acceptance of oral testimony, inherently improbable or instrinsically defective. Scanty direct evidence may, in a fit case, be supplemented by convincing circumstantial evidence; but if direct evidence does not inspire confidence but also appears to be definitely untrue, it cannot be accepted on consideration that no better evidence remained available for lapse of time; it is the paucity and not falsity of direct evidence that may be supplemented by circumstantial evidence; an inference as to the existence of the authority to adopt may be drawn from a long course of conduct which must be uniform and consistent: A.I.R. 1971 All. 29 (D.B.).

Adoption—Oral evidence—Reliability of witnesses: A.I.R. 1968 Mys. 309.

A witness cannot be disbelieved merely for not keeping note of the Tithi or date of adoption; one relation is not expected to note down the date of adoption of another relation: (1973) 1 Cut.W.R. 809: A.I.R. 1974 Ori. 120 (D.B.).

The omission of corroborative evidence of the mother of the adopted son and of the priest who officiated at the ceremonies, is not fatal to the plaintiff's case of adoption when the evidence of other witnesses is unchallenged: 1956 Madh.B.L.J. 779: A.I.R. 1957 Madh. Bh. 179.

Adoption, not being natural, is given wide publicity to make it known to relations and others; adoptions are normally ceremonious occasions when relations, neighbourers and castemen, both men and women, congregate; physical giving and taking of the son by the natural and adoptive fathers, respectively, is its essential feature and under the Hindu Adoptions and Maintenance Act, 1956, a statutory requirement. Where a pleading supporting adoption is silent or vague or no evidence is adduced about consultations between the natural and adoptive fathers or ceremonies of adoption, held, the adoption becomes doubtful; suppression of material evidence attracts adverse inference: A.I.R. 1994 N.O.C. 42 (Ori.).

Where the adoption had taken place long prior to the dispute in question, strict proof of every part of the ceremony would not be insisted upon. Thus, where not only the deed of adoption but also the power of attorney wherein the status of the defendant as the adopted son was acknowledged by the widow of the adoptive father, were produced, held, adoption of defendant was proved: (1987) 100 Mad.L.W. 71.

The fact of adoption must be proved like any other fact; but where a long period has lapsed between the adoption and its being questioned, every allowance for absence of evidence to prove adoption must be favourably entertained as direct evidence may not be available. But it is equally well settled, if direct evidence is available despite lapse of time, such relaxation is not permissible; thus, where all those present at the adoption were not dead and were available to be examined, held, the examination of only one witness claiming to have witnessed the adoption ceremony and whose evidence did not satisfy the requirements of Ss. 50 and 60 was not sufficient to prove adoption: A.I.R. 1985 Ori. 22 (D.B.).

Minor discrepancies and contradictions in oral proof of adoption, held, result from time-gap: (1988) 1 Hindu L.R. 342 (P.&H.).

Where an adoption had taken place several years ago and there was direct evidence of the adopter himself having accepted the adoption and treated adoptee as his son, non-production of any account of receipt of shogun, held, is not sufficient to discard the testimony recorded: (1994-1) 106 Punj.L.R. 95 (D.B.).

Where the question was as to whether the executant of a registered adoption deed had an authority from her husband to adopt and the only evidence of authority to adopt was her own statement contained in that deed, held, since the executant was dead when the question of adoption was challenged and thus, the Courts did not also have the advantage of her cross-examination on that point, such statement in that deed which though admissible in evidence could not be taken on its face value: A.I.R. 1981 All. 274.

Ancient adoption—Absence of evidence of giving and taking—Alleged adopted son treated by adoptive father and other relation including plaintiff who challenges adoption as son of adoptive father—Adoption, held, proved: A.I.R. 1970 S.C. 1286.

R's claim that he was adopted son of S—Question whether tying turban ceremony was done on R—Claim of opponents that 'thikana' record should have been produced—Practice of noting down in 'thikana' name of person, on whose head turban is tied not shown—Adverse inference is not justified: I.L.R. (1965) 15 Raj. 529: 1965 Raj.L.W. 168.

In a case where the fact under dispute was whether or not the plaintiff was adopted son of one G, held, deposition of a farm servant that he worked as sankhuna in the adoption ceremony and that the plaintiff called G as his father and G's wife as his mother, was admissible under S. 50: A.I.R. 1974 Ori. 120: (1973) 1 Cut.W.R. 809 (D.B.).

Where the Director of a Co-operative Building Society corroborated the natural father's evidence about adoption, held, merely because on supercession of the Society's management the natural father was its Special Officer, the corroborative evidence of the Director does not become unbelievable; the Court cannot infer that the Director was in any manner obliged to the natural father, particularly, when the husband of one of the defendants was also an officer in the Co-operative Department and all the witnesses testifying having witnessed the adoption had, in some way or the other, dealings with the Co-operative Department: A.I.R. 1994 Andh. Pra. 102.

67. Proof in case of fraud/undue influence.—(See also Ss. 101-104). Onus is on, party who advances plea of fraud to prove it by cogent evidence: 33 Cut.L.T. 621; A.I.R. 1965 Ker. 189.

Charge of fraud, whether made in civil or criminal proceedings, should be proved beyond reasonable doubt: 1975 M.P.L.J. 556.

There is no ritualistic formula nor a cut and dried test to prove the charge of undue influence; if all the circumstances taken together lead to the irresistible inference that the voters were pressurized, threatened or assaulted at the instance of the candidate or his supporters or agents, that should be sufficient to vitiate the election; while insisting on standard of strict proof, the Court should not stretch it to such an extreme extent as to make it almost impossible to prove a corrupt practice; that would defeat and frustrate the very laudable and sacrosanct object of maintaining purity of the electoral process. By and large, the Court while appreciating or analysing the evidence must be guided by the following considerations: (1) the nature, character, respectability and credibility of evidence; (2) the surrounding circumstances and the improbabilities appearing in the case; (3) the slowness of the appellate Court to disturb a finding of fact arrived at by the trial Court which had the initial advantage of observing the behaviour, character and demeanour of the witnesses; and (4) the totality of the effect of the entire evidence which leaves a lasting impression regarding the corrupt practices: A.I.R. 1984 S.C. 24: (1984) 4 S.C.C. 649: 1985 B.L.J.R. 19: (1985) 1 S.C.R. 1089.

By its very nature of things, a fraud is secret in its origin; means adopted for its success cannot always be proved to the very hilt; they have to be inferred from the circumstances. Each circumstance by itself may not mean much, but taking all of them together, they may reveal a fraudulent or dishonest plan. Undoubtedly, burden of proving fraud lies heavy upon the person alleging it; suspicions and surmises are poor substitutes for its proof; but that does not mean that every puzzling artifice or contrivance resorted to by the parties to the fraud must necessarily be completely exposed; if this was so, many a clever and dexterous knave would escape from the consequences of fraud: (1991) 4 Bom.C.R. 556 (D.B.).

In case of serious enough charges like that of a spouse's mental disorder and of fraud, from mere statements in an affidavit, which may in a given case deserve acceptance, the factum of mental disorder cannot be found out; evidence of medical treatment and of other persons who had ordinarily occasions to be in the company of the spouse should ordinarily be insisted upon: 1983 Hindu L.R. 692 (Bom.).

If a victim of fraud is in a position, by due diligence, to discover the truth, held, fraud is not proved; it cannot be a case of suggestio falsi or suppressio veri: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 376: 1976 U.J. (S.C.) 15: (1976) 2 S.C.R. 722: (1976) 1 S.C.C. 311: I.L.R. (1976) Karn. 1051.

Once an executant admits his signatures on the agreement of sale, the onus shifts to him to prove that the agreement was got executed from him by deception or fraud: (1991-2) 100 Punj.L.R. 92.

The striking general similarity between admitted signatures and the signature on the disputed document is a very telling test in deciding whether the signature on the disputed document is genuine. If a document is a forged one, one would expect that such a document would try to avoid alterations as much as possible and it would also try to avoid initialling as much as possible in as much as the more there is initialiing the more is the risk of detection of the forgery. So the fact that there are alterations and those purport to bear initials of the party indicates that the document is genuine: 64 Cal.W.N. 1067: 1960 Cal.L.J. 190: A.I.R. 1961 Cal. 300. See also S. 67.

Where in an action for recovery of compensation on an insurance contract the charge of fraud is levelled, held, the Court has to be careful in assessing the charge; if it is dispelled prima facie, it is not permissible to expect the exonerated party to remove every vestige of suspicion by evidence right up to its hilt; a preponderance of probabilities remains the measuring rod, albeit with a slightly heavier onus on the seemingly guilty party: A.I.R. 1992 Bom. 341.

68. Will—Proof of.—(See also S. 68, Note 9 and Ss. 101-104, Note 107). A Will has to be proved like any other document; the proof need not amount to mathematical certainty but it is suffice if there is the satisfaction of a prudent mind; one of the attesting witnesses must be examined if he is alive and subject to the Court process; allegations of fraud, undue influence, coercion, etc., have to be proved by persons alleging them. However, despite absence of such pleas, the Will may well be shrouded by mystery or circumstances creating doubt about its execution, in which case it is for the beneficiary to remove the doubts and clear the judicial conscience by suitable evidence; the onus probandi to prove the Will lies upon him who propounds it; it has to be proved that the Will is the last Will of a free person, having a sound disposing mind and memory, and competent to make it: (1989) 1 Hindu L.R. 125 (P.&H.).

From various judicial verdicts the position which emerges for holding proper execution of the Will is that:— (a) the testator must have a disposing mind free from all extraneous influences with sound mental state; (b) the testator is presumed to be sane having a mental capacity to make a valid Will until contrary is proved; (c) the Will should be executed in accordance with the provisions of the Act as incorporated in S. 63 of the Succession Act, 1925 read with S. 67 and S. 68 of the Evidence Act. In other words, the testator should have signed or affixed his mark to the Will in the presence of the two witnesses who are required to see the testator signing or affixing his mark on the Will and each of the witnesses should sign the Will in the presence of the testator; (d) the onus of proof of the Will is on the propounder or beneficiary of the Will; (e) the existence of suspicious circumstances make the onus of proof very heavy and such circumstances are required to be removed by the propounder before the document is accepted as a last Will of the testator; (f) the mode of proving the Will does not ordinarily differ from that of proving any other document except the special circumstances as incorporated in S. 63 of the 1925 Act; and in order to ascertain the free disposing mind free from extraneous considerations, the whole of the attending circumstances in a particular case are required to be taken note of: A.I.R. 1995 P.&H. 201 (D.B.).

The onus to prove a Will lies on its propounder; in the absence of suspicious circumstances surrounding its execution, the proof of the testator's testamentary capacity and signatures as required by law, held, is sufficient discharge of the onus; but in case of suspicious circumstances, the propounder is further required to explain them to the Court's satisfaction before the Will can be accepted as genuine; but the onus to prove undue influence, fraud or coercion would lie on the person alleging it; however, if there were circumstances giving rise to doubts, the propounder will have to satisfy the Court's conscience by clearing them: (1978) 91 Mad. L.W. 210.

Improbabilities in the Will—Testimony as to execution of documents cannot be considered independently of the attendant circumstances: (1967) 12 Law Rep. 92 (Mys.). See also S. 3, Note 68, supra.

Attestation of Will—Proof required—There is no requirement that attesting witnesses should identify each other: I.L.R. (1965) 1 All. 483: A.I.R. 1966 All. 570.

The deposition of an attestor of a Will that he saw the testator signing the Will when he himself, other attestors, the testator and the scribe were present at the time of the Will's execution and that he also signed the Will as an attestor, held, a mere omission on his part to say that the testator saw him attesting the Will is not fatal to the Will's proof: (1990) 1 Hindu L.R. 68 (Mad.).

When attestors to the Will were deposing in the Court four years after the attestation, held, minor discrepancies in their evidence are not unusual; they will not really affect their credibility: A.I.R. 1982 Cal. 599 (D.B.).

Where there were two varying signatures on the Will with different pens and inks, not satisfactorily explained, and the handwriting expert's opinion was also not consistent, held, the Will could not be said to have been proved as genuine: A.I.R. 1991 Ori. 289.

69. Residence—Proof of.—Residence at a certain place is a state of thing; to prove its existence, presumption by itself signifies very little. A tribunal of fact requires a degree of probability commensurate with the occasion. The question of residence or non-residence is a question of fact, not of inference but of positive proof. The landlord cannot prove the negative only by his statement; the tenant is required to prove the positive; the burden at once shifts to the tenant to show where he was residing during the relevant period: A.I.R. 1980 Del. 110: 1980 Rajdhani L.R. 423.

An electoral roll is a stronger piece of evidence for proving residence: (1984) 2 Bom.C.R. 671.

70. Religion—Proof of.—As held in 40 Mad.L.W. 502: 67 M.L.J. 389, an entry in a death register is no evidence to prove the religion of the deceased: (1987) 100 Mad. L.W. 895.

To determine the religion of a person, the assessment of his near relatives about the religion he practised is an important factor; thus, where in an election petition the petitioner's maternal uncle deposed about the petitioner's religion, held, his evidence could not be discarded as that of an interested witness; but it would be reasonable to consider it with great caution while seeking its corroboration from independent sources: A.I.R. 1986 Ori. 255.

71. Proof in matrimonial matters.—(See also Ss. 101-104). The standard of proof required in divorce cases under the Divorce Act, 1869, is that "the Judge should be satisfied beyond any reasonable doubt as to the commission of the matrimonial offence": 1984 Hindu L.R. 552: A.I.R. 1985 P.&H. 111 (F.B.).

But the burden of proof in proceedings under the Divorce Act, 1869, is as in a civil, and not in a criminal case; it should be proved by preponderance of probability, not beyond reasonable doubt; besides, graver the charge, the greater should be the degree of proof required to satisfy the Court: I.L.R. (1980) 2 Karn. 1444 (D.B.).

Matrimonial case—Principles: A.I.R. 1969 Mad. 235.

In a matrimonial dispute when the relations between the spouses have become bitter there is bound to be some exaggeration in their respective versions by the spouses. Therefore, the matrimonial offence must be established to the satisfaction of the Court beyond reasonable doubt, and, though not as a matter of law, as a rule of prudence, independent corroboration of the version of the parties is sought. Such corroboration, however, need not be of direct testimony; it may be obtained from the conduct of the parties and the surrounding circumstances: (1959) 61 Bom.L.R. 1549: I.L.R. (1960) Bom. 365: A.I.R. 1960 Bom. 418.

Matters of civil nature are decided on preponderance of probabilities; the burden of proof is not discharged as conclusively as in a criminal trial. To seek corroboration to a fact alleged by a spouse about healthy or unhealthy character of their intimate marital relations, known only to the spouses themselves and not to any other soul, would amount to shutting one's eyes to the reality: A.I.R. 1985 Guj. 121: 1984 Guj.L.H. 939: (1985-1) 26 Guj.L.R. 119.

Spouses only witnesses in action for restitution of conjugal rights—Corroborative evidence of general character having probative value is evidence: (1967) 2 Mys.L.J. 185: 11 Law Rep. 486: A.I.R. 1968 Mys. 115.

Matrimonial causes are in the nature of a civil dispute; the petitioner, thus, need not prove the allegations beyond reasonable doubt and its decision should depend on the preponderance of probability; a criminal trial involves liberty of the subject which cannot be taken away on mere preponderance of probabilities: (1990) 1 Hindu L.R. 373 (Ker.) (D.B.); 1982 Hindu L.R. 413 (Karn.) (D.B.).

Divorce case—Standard of proof should be such that applicant must satisfy Court beyond reasonable doubt as to commission of matrimonial offence: 1969 Pat.L.J.R. 278.

The burden of proving matrimonial offences is no higher than in civil proceedings; a fact can be established by preponderance of probability: 1978 Mah.L.J. 598; 1978 Hindu L.R. 304 (Del.); 1980 Hindu L.R. 441 (Bom.). Grave allegations of cruel treatment, desertion and sodomy in the petition, it is settled law, cannot be directed to be proved by an affidavit: (1987) 2 Hindu L.R. 670 (Karn.) (D.B.).

The principle of pleadings and proof do apply to matrimonial causes; evidence of the witnesses recorded in such causes cannot be subjected to unnatural and surmisic dissection: (1986) 2 Hindu L.R. 213 (Madh. Pra.).

Bigamy—Proof of second marriage—Evidence, held, not enough: 1969 Cr.L.J. 858: A.I.R. 1969 Assam 90.

Divorce—Adultery—Standard of proof—Law in England and India—Burden of proof—Post-suit adultery—Evidentiary value of: A.I.R. 1970 Cal. 38.

In a case like dissolution of marriage under Divorce Act, 1869, on the grave charge of adultery, the Court must record the evidence as contemplated under O. 18, R. 5 of the Code of Civil Procedure; it should not render its judgment merely on proof by affidavit; a decree of divorce based on such evidence is illegal: A.I.R. 1985 Karn. 135: I.L.R. (1984) 2 Karn. 1101: (1987) 2 Hindu L.R. 658 (S.B.).

The standard of proof required in matrimonial offences like adultery or cruelty, held, is not the proof beyond reasonable doubt but by balance of probabilities: 1979 Hindu L.R. 570 (Del.) (D.B.).

Direct evidence on an act of adultery is very rarely available or, in other words, so extremely difficult to obtain, that insistence of it by Courts, may amount to a denial of legitimate protection of marital rights. In fact, proof by ocular evidence would normally be required to be corroborated by circumstantial evidence. To lay down in general rules or to attempt to define what circumstance would be sufficient for inferring the fact of adultery, is well-nigh impossible and each case must depend on its own peculiar and particular facts and circumstances. But one thing is certain that evidence must travel beyond establishing mere suspicion and the possibility to commit adultery and evidence must be such, as to satisfy the conscience of the Court, that adultery must have taken place. If the factum of adultery is sought to be proved by circumstantial evidence, the evidence should be such as would be incompatible with innocence of the party charged: (1986) 2 Hindu L.R. 412 (Cal.) (D.B.); 1981 Hindu L.R. 371: A.I.R. 1980 Cal. 374 (D.B.) [A.I.R. 1974 Cal. 61 and A.I.R. 1970 Cal. 38 held no longer good law in view of A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 1534].

Adultery can very rarely, if ever, be proved by direct evidence of witnesses who saw parties in flagrante delicto—In most cases evidence must be circumstantial—Unrelated person found alone with young wife after midnight in her bed room, in actual physical juxtaposition—Unless there is some explanation for this which is compatible with innocent interpretation, only interpretation must be that two were committing act of adultery together: A.I.R. 1967 Mad. 85.

Adultery—Proof of—Evidence required must satisfy definition of 'proved' in the section: 32 Cut.L.T. 827.

The fundamental rule in which evidence of adultery or unchastity is to be viewed is that it need not be proved by direct evidence; not in one case out of a hundred that the parties are surprised and caught at the act; almost in every case the offence is fairly inferred from the proven circumstances; this is the only mode to protect marital rights: (1972) 1 Cut.W.R. 237.

The standard of proof of adultery in a petition for divorce is not as strict as in criminal cases; the proof beyond reasonable doubt is not necessary: 1982 B.L.J.R. 372: A.I.R. 1982 Pat. 213.

Charge of unchastity—Nature of proof: A.I.R. 1964 Assam 106.

The allegation of adultery must be reasonably proved, which means reasonable proof, or to borrow from S. 3, such proof which a prudent man ought to accept: A.I.R. 1989 Cal. 128: (1988) 2 Hindu L.R. 760: (1988) 2 Cal.H.N. 241: (1989) 1 Hindu L.R. 456: (1988) 93 Cal.W.N. 165: (1989) 1 D.M.C. 322: (1988) 2 Cal.L.J. 294 (S.B.); A.I.R. 1959 J.&K. 72.

To prove adultery in a divorce case under the Indian Divorce Act, 1869, it is necessary to establish all the necessary requirements to connect the erring spouse having illicit connection with the opposite sex; suspicion, howsoever strong, is no evidence; the party concerned has to lead cogent evidence to prove the matrimonial offence: (1989) 1 Hindu L.R. 575: (1989) 1 D.M.C. 277 (Madh. Pra.).

In the ordinary social circumstances, a man would not like to make statements against his wife of prolonged desertion and continued illicit intimacy with another man if they had no basis or foundation in truth; such allegations of the husband do not necessarily need corroboration (case under Hindu Marriage Act): (1986) 1 Hindu L.R. 591 (Del.).

Merely because a woman had gone away with another man to another town and was away from her parental and matrimonial house does not necessarily and conclusively establish an adulterous relationship between them; something more is required to show that their relationship had reached a point where adultery could be safely inferred (case under Hindu Marriage Act): (1986) 1 Hindu L.R. 93 (Guj.).

In a case for divorce for adultery under the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955, the testimony of a disinterested witness that he had seen the respondents sleeping together during night times is sufficient to prove adultery: A.I.R. 1981 Andh. Pra. 269: (1981) 1 An.L.T. 510: (1981) 2 A.P.L.J. 134 (D.B.).

Husband's petition for dissolution of marriage—Grounds of wife's adultery and desertion—Both respondents remaining ex parte—Petitioner examining himself alone—No corroboration—His evidence held sufficient for relief sought for: A.I.R. 1970 Mad. 91.

Accusation of adultery—Establishment of —Evidence by spouse—Corroboration necessary—Statements of adulteress recorded in Government Maternity Home and Rescue Home registers can be used for corroboration: (1964) 2 Cr.L.J. 686: A.I.R. 1964 Mys. 280.

Hindu Marriage Act, 1955, S. 17(1)(i)—Adultery—Proof—Mere fact that some male relation writes improper letters to a married woman, does not necessarily prove that there was illicit relationship between writer of the letters and the married woman who received them: A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 581.

Adultery—Wife leading an adulterous life—given birth to an illegitimate child consequent to her illicit connection—held, decree for divorce to be maintained: (1986) 1 Hindu L.R. 382 (Madh. Pra.); (1987) 1 Hindu L.R. 311 (P.&H.).

Simply because a man and a married woman were found talking with each other in the Arhar field, no inference can be drawn that they had developed an illicit connection among themselves. In villages men and women of the agricultural class do visit fields covered by Arhar and talk with each other. Unless, therefore, some definite talk of theirs showing amorous relations is indicated in the evidence it would be futile to draw an inference of an illicit connection: 1967 All.W.R. (H.C.) 352: 1967 All.Cr.R. 252.

Where the slide taken by the Medical Officer containing a smear of the discharge from the penis of the person accused of adultery was shown to have contained spermatazoa and it was also proved that there was a whitish discharge known as leucorrhoea from the vagina of the woman, held, that the evidence was not conclusive proof that the two were caught 'in flagranti delicto' in the very act of coitus: I.L.R. 8 Luck. 301: A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 148.

Neither S. 10 of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955, which enumerates the grounds for judicial separation nor S. 23 which governs the Court's jurisdiction to pass the decree require the petitioner to prove his case beyond a reasonable doubt; S. 23 empowers the Court to pass the decree if it is 'satisfied' on matters mentioned therein; matrimonial proceedings being essentially of a civil nature, the word 'satisfied' must mean 'satisfied on a preponderance of probabilities' and not 'satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt'; S. 23 does not alter the standard of proof in civil cases: the charge of cruelty, thus, need not be proved 'beyond reasonable doubt': A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 1534: (1975) 2 S.C.C. 326.

It is not always possible in matrimonial matters to get absolute corroborating or contradicting evidence in affairs concerning family members; they are to be decided on the basis of preponderance of evidence; thus, where divorce was claimed for mental cruelty, the Court should weigh the entire evidence: (1991) 1 Hindu L.R. 231 (Him. Pra.) (D.B.).

It is always difficult for a female to adduce evidence of ill-treatment at her husband's residence, particularly when it is far away from her parents' residence; her husband's neighbours would naturally not come forward to depose in her favour; thus, rather than discard her evidence for want of corroboration from an independent source, the Court should consider it in the light of surrounding circumstances; and if consistent therewith it may safely be relied upon: 1984 Hindu L.R. 728 (Bom.).

Raw social realities and not fine spun legal niceties make the law. It is, therefore, necessary to lift the veil and look at the conspectus of factors governing matrimonial relations in order to discern the naked truth; ill-treatment due to not bringing sufficient dowry is not an unusual practice: A.I.R. 1984 N.O.C. 131 (Del.).

The standard of proof of cruelty as a matrimonial offence is not one of beyond reasonable doubt; a slight corroboration is sufficient to uphold the testimony of the wife or husband: (1986) 1 Hindu L.R. 686 (Cal.).

The test for proof of cruelty is preponderance of evidence on conflicting probabilities; nevertheless, evidence has to be led: (1987) 1 Hindu L.R. 69 (P.&H.).

Cruelty may be inferred from the totality of facts, the parties' matrimonial relations and interactions in their daily life as disclosed in the evidence: (1987) 1 Hindu L.R. 264 (Cal.) (D.B.).

Where the point to be determined was whether the wife had a just ground to refuse to live with the husband contemplated under S. 125 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, held, the evidence of cruelty propounded by the wife as a just ground is not required to be proved beyond all reasonable doubt: (1986) 1 Hindu L.R. 645 (Raj.).

The Hindu Marriage Act, 1955—Petition for divorce on ground of cruelty—held, a witness to the many incidents of quarrelling cannot be disbelieved merely because he had not witnessed personally one of such incidents: (1986) 2 Hindu L.R. 282 (Madh. Pra.).

Petition for restitution of conjugal rights —On settlement the wife went to her husband's house but two days thereafter she again complained of maltreatment and asked for decision of the petition—the husband also alleging that the wife was not prepared to live with him—with out recording the parties' evidence in support of their respective applications, the trial Court dismissed the husband's main petition for restitution, held, the trial Court should have allowed the parties to lead evidence; in its absence, it could not be held that the wife was not treated properly during her two days' stay at her husband's house—case remanded: (1987) 2 Hindu L.R. 244 (P.&H.).

When the husband deposed that the spouses had lived together only for a month, held, the instances of cruelty pleaded and deposed to by him did not, in the particular case, warrant the finding of cruelty of such nature as to measure up to the requisite standard to justify divorce: (1986) 1 Hindu L.R. 89 (P.&H.).

In a case under S. 13(1)(ia) of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955, the wife's evidence that her husband used to beat her and had committed theft from her parents' house, held, could not be disbelieved merely because she had not lodged any report with Police: A.I.R. 1984 N.O.C. 187 (Del.).

Where in a divorce case on the ground of cruelty under the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955 (1) the husband's father, old and respectable, deposed about the incident wherein the wife had accused the husband of having illicit relations with his brother's wife, held, he would not have so deposed in open Court disgracing his family unless it was true; his statement deserved to be believed; (2) the husband's colleague corroborated the husband's version that one day, at dinner, the wife in the presence of the witness had accused the husband of having illicit relations with his brother's wife, held, the evidence could not be discarded for want of pleadings on the incident even when the wife had denied having known or met the witness: A.I.R. 1989 P.&H. 310: (1989) 95 Punj.L.R. 553 (D.B.).

Where in a divorce case on the ground of cruelty under S. 13 of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955, the wife in her written statement had admitted that she had lodged a report with the Police and a constable appeared as a witness with the original report and having testified that it was made by the wife, produced its copy but was not at all cross-examined nor any objection was raised to its admissibility, held, the report was admissible: 1982 Hindu L.R. 30 (P.&H.) (D.B.).

72. Proof of marriage.—(See also Ss. 101-104). Entries in the electoral rolls do not conclusively prove that a couple residing in the same house is legally wedded: 1979 Bom. C.R. 110: (1980) 2 Mah.L.R. 242.

Where there is no clear documentary evidence whatsoever of a marriage (a second marriage in this case), the oral evidence recorded should not be viewed disjointedly; the effort should be to search for agreement in material details from a combined reading of the evidence: (1987) 2 Hindu L.R. 557 (Karn.) (D.B.).

Normally, when a person sets up a marriage between him and another, it would necessarily connote that he is pleading the existence of a valid marriage. Therefore, every circumstance which would render it other than valid will have to be shown not to exist. This may appear to be a rigid rule though it is often a fairly workable rule. Even if one does not go to this extent, it is safe to hold that only in a case where evidence goes to show that a marriage has in fact taken place but a party challenges that marriage on the ground of some alleged infirmity attaching to it that he can be called upon to establish his imputation of infirmity. But this rule surely cannot apply to a case where even the first step, namely, the proof of the factum of marriage is not satisfied. In the instant case, the parties are Indian Christians and are governed in matters of matrimony by the provisions of the Indian Christian Marriage Act. This Act requires a marriage to be performed in particular form and a register of marriages to be maintained, etc. The first defendant in her evidence stated that the marriage between her and the deceased took place in a Church of which she could not mention the name and that some thing was written down in some register. But no such register was called to support this version. The lower appellate Court was, therefore, right in holding that the factum of marriage was not established: (1964) 2 An.W.R. 136.

Marriage alleged to have been celebrated according to Hindu rites — Proof of ceremonies: A.I.R. 1970 Tripura 30.

See also 1977 Cur.L.J. (Civ.) 228; A.I.R. 1973 Ker. 250.

73. Proof of legitimacy of child.—(See also S. 112). A child born during lawful wedlock attracts the initial presumption of legitimacy; this rule of law is, however, rebuttable by showing non-access between the parties at any time when the child could have been conceived. But once access is proved, no evidence can be allowed to show that the child is not the husband's child; it is immaterial how soon after marriage the child is born, and even though the ordinary period of gestation is 280 days. The section is based on the maxim pater est quem nuptiae demonstrant (father is he whom the nuptials indicate). If, however, non-access is established, as in the present case where the wife conceded: "I have no physical relation of husband and wife with the petitioner before my marriage", the presumption of legitimacy is rebutted: (1987) 1 Hindu L.R. 384 (Del.).

Where the spouses' respective place were nearby and the fact in issue was whether the child born to the wife was illegitimate, held, the decision does not depend on whether the parties had in fact met at the time when the child could have been begotten but whether the parties had no access to each other at any such time; it is for the husband to prove non-access; otherwise the presumption is that the child was their legitimate child: 1983 Hindu L.R. 605 (All.); (1989) 2 Hindu L.R. 157 (All.).

Where the husband had made out that he had neither the opportunity nor access to his wife to be the father of the child born to her, held, she had a voluntary sexual intercourse with a man other than her husband: 1983 Hindu L.R. 536 (Madh. Pra.).

It is settled that the Muslim Law of acknowledgment of parentage with its legitimatising effect is not attracted to cases where a child's illegitimacy has been proved and established by reason of the marriage of his parents having been disproved; the doctrine applies only to such cases where the marriage itself or the exact time of its occurrence with reference to the legitimacy of the acknowledged child is not proved as distinguished from disproved; the doctrine, thus, applies only to cases of uncertainty as to legitimacy: (1992-2) 110 Mad.L.W. 81 (D.B.).

Where in a petition under S. 12 of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955, for the wife being pregnant from a third person at the time of marriage and the birth of the child at her parents' place 6 months after the marriage and the child's death on the 8th day of its birth there, with the wife alleging the child to be premature and the husband saying it was full grown, held, the condition of the child was within the wife's special knowledge; she failed to discharge the burden to show that the child was premature as both her pleading as well as her examination-in-chief did not contain even a whisper about the child's condition; the child's death for want of medical help and mother's milk together with the child's burial in the house itself was a telltale; the husband's case against the wife stood established: (1982) 2 Bom.C.R. 202.

To determine a child's paternity, its mother is the best witness: (1985) 60 Cut.L.T. 414.

While the blood grouping test may not be a positive test to establish a child's paternity, but it can certainly show that the child is not of that particular person: 1978 W.L.N. (U.C.) 71 (Raj.).

Determination of paternity between parties—Party refusing to give blood—Adverse inference cannot be drawn: A.I.R. 1968 Bom. 388.

Where legitimacy of the child was proved: (1987) 1 Hindu L.R. 226 (P.&H.).

74. Genuineness/proof of sale.—(See also Ss. 101-104). Non-payment of consideration and non-transfer of possession, held, by itself is not relevant for deciding about the genuineness of the sale of land: 1978 All.L.J. 291.

Where the landlord in his petition had specifically averred that he had purchased the property by a registered sale deed and the respondent had become his tenant by operation of law and this was specifically denied by the respondent, held, it was not necessary for him to prove the sale deed: (1994-1) 106 Punj.L.R. 347.

Where the purchaser had produced the letter of revocation as also the certificate of its posting, but not the acknowledgement receipt and the seller denied having received the letter of revocation, held, the contract of sale subsisted; it did not stand revoked: A.I.R. 1985 Ker. 262.

4. "May presume."—Whenever it is provided by this Act that the Court may presume a fact, it may either regard such fact as proved, unless and until it is disproved, or may call for proof of it.

"Shall presume."—Whenever it is directed by this Act that the Court shall presume a fact, it shall regard such fact as proved, unless and until it is disproved.

"Conclusive proof."—When one fact is declared by this Act to be conclusive proof of another, the Court shall, on proof of the one fact, regard the other as proved, and shall not allow evidence to be given for the purpose of disproving it.

75. Miscellaneous.—There is no presumption in law that the space between two properties is a common property of both the parties: (1991-1) 107 Mad.L.W. 371.

Though the practice of keeping a 'Log-Book' in the form of loose sheets stapled together requires improvement, held, it does not mean the sheets produced are not genuine: A.I.R. 1989 S.C. 364: (1989) 1 S.C.C. 374: 1989 Cr.L.J. 991.

Claim for non-delivery of consignment not disputed but claim contested—Evidence properly weighed and rejected—Reasonable damages also could not be given: A.I.R. 1965 Pat. 367.

The expression 'unless the contrary is proved' in S. 118 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, contemplates looking into the preponderance of probabilities as also the entire 'circumstances of the particular case'; whether the contrary, that is the absence of consideration, has been proved by the defendant depends upon not only whether the Court believes that the consideration does not exist, but also whether it considers the non-existence of consideration so probable that a reasonable man ought, under the circumstances, to act upon the supposition that the consideration does not exist. [A.I.R. 1949 Bom. 257; A.I.R. 1973 Ker. 210; A.I.R. 1935 All. 509; A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 130; A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 498 and (1911) 21 M.L.J. 1031, Dissent. from; A.I.R. 1973 Andh. Pra. 103, Overruled]: A.I.R. 1987 Andh. Pra. 139: (1987) 1 An.L.T. 1 (F.B.).

Section 4—Notes.

[See also notes under Ss. 112-114.]

The rules of presumption are deduced from enlightened human knowledge and experience; they are drawn from the connection, relation and coincidence of facts and circumstances: A.I.R. 1986 S.C. 1099: (1986) 2 S.C.C. 486.

The general rule under the Act is that the burden of proving negligence in a case of accident lies on the party who alleges it but that party is certainly entitled to take advantage of presumptions to lighten that burden. Such presumptions as laid down in S. 4 are of three types: (i) permissive presumptions or presumptions of fact; (ii) compelling presumptions or presumptions of law (rebuttable); and (iii) irrebuttable presumptions of law or 'conclusive proof'. Cls. (i), (ii) and (iii) are indicated in Cls. (1), (2) and (3), respectively. 'Presumptions of facts' are inferences of certain set patterns drawn from common experience and observation, constitution of human mind, springs of human action, usages and habits of society and ordinary course of human affairs. S. 114, a general section, deals with presumptions of this kind. The Court is not bound to draw a presumption of facts; it has to exercise its discretion in each case. Thus, even in an action in torts, if the defendant adduces no rebutting evidence but offers reasonable explanation, equally consistent with the presence as well as absence of negligence, the presumptions or inferences based on res ipsa loquitur will cease to exist; the burden of proving the affirmative, will still lie with the plaintiff; and it will be for the Court to determine at the time of judgment whether the proven or undisputed facts, as a whole, disclosed negligence: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 1848.

May presume—Meanings. See A.I.R. 1967 Bom. 382.

The import of expression 'may presume' is that the Court may either regard the fact in question as proved, unless and until it is disproved, or may call for proof of it: 1995 Cr.L.J. 2472 (Ori.).

The presumptions under the Act are only inferences which a logical and reasonable mind normally draws; the facts and circumstances leading to different inferences are indicated in Ss. 79 to 90-A. Whenever the law permits a presumption, the Court may by reason of S. 4 raise it for the proof of the fact; a presumption may be raised if permissible under one provision and not under another; thus, if a presumption is not available under S. 90-A(1) but available under S. 90-A(2) or any other provision, the Court may draw it. Similarly, a presumption available under S. 90 may be raised by the Court even after coming to the conclusion that it is not available under S. 90-A: A.I.R. 1980 All. 385 (F.B.).

A presumption in itself is no evidence; it only makes out a prima facie case for the party concerned; it is a rule concerning evidence; it indicates the person on whom the burden of proof lies. If the presumption is conclusive, it obviates the production of any other evidence, whether in support or in opposition. In case of a rebuttable presumption, the other party may produce evidence, fairly and reasonably tending to show that the real fact is not as presumed; the purpose of presumption is then over; then only the evidence of the parties will determine the true nature of the presumed fact: A.I.R. 1986 S.C. 1099: (1986) 2 S.C.C. 486.

Presumptive and conclusive proofs are basically different; while conclusive proof raises a conclusive presumption, presumptive proof raises a conditional rebuttable presumption. If a fact is deemed to be proved irrespective of the existence or non-existence of other facts possessing probative force in the contrary direction raises a conclusive presumption, the law accepts the fact as conclusively proved. Presumptive or conditional proof, on the other hand, is acceptance of certain facts which on all probabilities the law assumed to have taken place; it is only conditional proof accepted so long as there exist no other facts amounting to its disproof; that is called rebuttable presumption: (1989) 1 Hindu L.R. 558 (Ker.).

The expression 'may presume' in S. 4 implies vesting of discretion in the Court to presume or refuse to presume a fact; if the Court finds that it is a fit case for raising the presumption, the presumed fact stands proved unless and until disproved by the other side; but if the Court refuses to exercise its discretion, it may call upon the parties to prove the fact by leading evidence. But the expression 'shall presume' leaves no discretion with the Court; it is a legislative command to the Court to raise the presumption and regard the fact as proved unless and until it is disproved; the parties need not formally prove the fact (a document in this case): A.I.R. 1993 Pat. 129: (1993) 2 Pat.L.J.R. 28: (1993) 2 B.L.J. 289: 1993 B.B.C.J. 355 (D.B.).

Once a document has been exhibited without any objection, it cannot be objected to at a later stage. Thus, where documents, 80 and 73 years old respectively, were exhibited without objection in the trial Court but the lower appellate Court rejected them in absence of the proof of their execution and attestation, held, in view of the fact that the two documents were registered and signed or thumb-impressed by the vendors and the witnesses, the lower appellate Court erred in holding that presumption of their due execution or genuineness by virtue of Ss. 90 and 90-A could not be raised. S. 90 is a solution to the difficulty in proving documents more than 20 years old by witnesses; bringing necessary evidence of their execution and attestation was impossible; besides raising presumption under S. 90 is discretionary; even if the Court could not raise the presumption under S. 90, it could do so under Ss. 4 and 14; S. 60 of the Registration Act also provides for raising the presumption of execution and correctness of the contents of a duly registered document: A.I.R. 1988 All. 57: (1988) 14 All.L.R. 174.

Under S. 4, it is open to a Court in India upon proof of a marriage either to regard as proved the subsistence of that marriage on a later date, unless and until it should be disproved, or else to call for proof of it, using the discretion entrusted to the Court by the first clause of S. 4 in a judicial manner according to the circumstances of the case: A.I.R. 1941 P.C. 11; I.L.R. (1942) 2 Cal. 299: (1941-42) 46 Cal.W.N. 729: A.I.R. 1943 Cal. 76.

In cases for restitution of conjugal rights, once celebration of the marriage is proved, the Court shall presume everything necessary, including the performance of essential ceremonies, to validate the marriage. The positive proof of essential ceremonies required in criminal prosecutions as laid down in A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 1564; A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 614 and A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 1153 cannot be imported in a civil proceeding for restitution of conjugal rights unless their performance is specifically denied either in pleadings or in evidence: A.I.R. 1987 Cal. 213: (1986) 2 Cal.H.N. 386: (1987) 2 D.M.C. 442: (1986-87) 91 Cal.W.N. 456 (D.B.).

A presumption of fact is a rule that a fact otherwise doubtful may be inferred from a fact which is proved. Such a presumption is not an irrebuttable one and in each particular case it will have to be examined whether it should be raised and whether there is anything in rebuttal of the same: I.L.R. (1958) Punj. 800.

Prevention of Corruption Act—Scope of the section and applicability: A.I.R. 1958 S.C. 61—Presumption: A.I.R. 1959 Mad. 166: 1959 Cr.L.J. 484—Hindu Joint family—Self acquisition—Proof: A.I.R. 1958 Pat. 115.

In case of homicide, the initial burden is on the prosecution to prove the guilt beyond doubt and the accused would be presumed to be innocent. But if the accused takes the plea of insanity he has to prove existence of such circumstances to bring the case within exception because Court will presume absence of such circumstances under S. 105 read with the definition of 'shall presume' in S. 4. [A.I.R. 1956 Nag. 187, Overruled]: A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 1563: (1964) 2 Cr.L.J. 472.

Entries in record of rights—S. 65 creating only rebuttable presumption—Section overriding heading portion or preamble, if in conflict with it—Interpretation harmonious with meaning of S. 20—Determination of questions of title—Compensation Commissioner competent to hold enquiries under S. 20: I.L.R. (1960) 10 Raj. 930.

Presumption — Maintenance of unmarried daughter—No presumption from age and health of daughter about capacity to earn and to maintain: A.I.R. 1969 Punj. 285.

Where in a suit for recovery of price for the goods supplied, the defendant contended that he had received the goods not from the plaintiff but from another firm, held, if defendant's plea was correct, his account books must contain the supporting entries; his non-production of books and production of only stray letters and a bill amounted to his failure to produce the best evidence; the Court raised the presumption that if that evidence had been produced, it would have gone against the defendant: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 977: (1980) 3 S.C.R. 22: 1980 (Supp.) S.C.C. 1.

In a case, even when an advocate who came into the witness-box, to prove the notice sent through him, the postal envelope which had been returned unserved had already been opened and a portion of the notice was found torn. The folding did not appear to be deeper and in the size it was folded, it could not be put into the envelope. Further, the envelope was found opened with the help of a knife so that the notice could not have been torn while opening the envelope. A copy of the notice was also not filed into Court. Under these circumstances, it was held that the notice actually sent by post must have been different from the one produced before Court and that the real one must have contained some matter detrimental to the party seeking to prove the same: 1969 B.L.J.R. 593: 1969 Pat.L.J.R. 156.

Under S. 105, read with the term 'shall presume' as defined in S. 4, the Court shall regard the absence of circumstances which bring the accused within exceptions as proved unless, after considering the materials on record, it believes that the circumstances existed or their existence was so probable that a prudent man ought, under the circumstances, to act upon the supposition that they did exist: A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 660: 1980 Cr.L.J. 459: (1980) 2 S.C.C. 218.

The use of the expression 'shall presume' indicates a presumption in law: (1971) 1 Cut.W.R. 784.

The very expression 'shall presume' used in S. 4 carries the irresistible implications that the presumption is liable to be rebutted by evidence; thus, notwithstanding the presumption, the Competent Authority under the Urban Land (Ceiling and Regulation) Act, 1976, can proceed even in respect of land recorded in the revenue or land records as agricultural so as to satisfy itself whether revenue records still represent the land's true character on the appointed day to warrant its exclusion from the Act's operation; the Competent Authority can enquire as to whether there are materials to rebut the presumption: A.I.R. 1988 Cal. 8: (1987) 2 Cal.H.N. 461: (1987-88) 92 Cal.W.N. 492 (D.B.).

For the purpose of the words 'unless the contrary is proved', in S. 118 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, it is permissible to look into the preponderance of probabilities and the entire 'circumstances of the particular case'. The Court, in view of Ss. 3, 4, 101 to 104 of the Evidence Act while deciding whether the contrary, namely, the absence of consideration, has been proved by the defendant, shall have to consider not only whether the Court believes that there was no consideration but also whether the non-existence of consideration is so probable that a reasonable man ought, under the circumstances, to act upon the supposition that there is no consideration. [A.I.R. 1949 Bom. 257; A.I.R. 1973 Ker. 210; A.I.R. 1935 All. 509; A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 130; A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 498 and (1911) 21 M.L.J. 1013, Dissent. from; A.I.R. 1973 Andh. Pra. 103, Overruled]: A.I.R. 1987 Andh. Pra. 139: (1987) 1 An.L.T. 1 (F.B.); A.I.R. 1959 Raj. 1 (F.B.).

The words 'conclusive evidence' are not defined but the definition of 'evidence' in S. 3, and 'conclusive proof' in S. 4 of the Evidence Act show that by declaring certain facts to be conclusive proof of another, an artificial probative effect is given by the law to certain facts and no evidence is allowed to be produced with a view to combating that effect. These cases generally occur when it is again the policy of Government or the interests of society that a matter may be further open to dispute. Illustrations of it can be had from various enactments: 1956 All.L.J. 276: A.I.R. 1956 All. 520.

Admission — Conclusive proof: A.I.R. 1970 Bom. 312.

'Conclusive proof' and 'conclusive evidence'—No difference between two expressions: A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 151.

The statement in an order of the Court is conclusive of what happened before the Presiding Officer of that Court: 1961 M.P.L.J. 769: 1961 Jab.L.J. 158: A.I.R. 1961 Madh. Pra. 108.

It is a general thought not a conclusive presumption that a document is executed on the date it bears: A.I.R. 1916 P.C. 238.

A certificate issued by the Director, Central Food Laboratory under the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954 is final and conclusive proof of the facts stated therein. Under S. 4 of the Evidence Act, Court cannot allow evidence to be given for disproving anything which is declared by the statute as conclusive. [1988 Cr.L.J. 898: (1987) 2 Ker.L.T. 867 (F.B.); (1991) 2 Ker.L.T. 23, Rel. on]: 1994 Cr.L.J. 3421 (Ker.) (D.B.).

The Registrar's endorsement that the document was signed by the executant after fully understanding it, held, cannot be a conclusive proof of its execution if circumstances of its execution are suspicious. [A.I.R. 1918 Oudh 120, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1985 All. 160: 1985 All.C.J. 345.

S. 112 lays down that a child born during the continuance of a valid marriage is conclusive proof of his being legitimate "unless it can be shown that the parties to the marriage had no access to each other at any time when" the child could have been begotten; as laid down in para 3 of S. 4, "the Court shall, on proof of the one fact, regard the other as proved and shall not allow evidence to be given for the purpose of disproving it". The Court, thus, could not have admitted evidence to show that the child born on 2-8-1980 was not his legitimate child because the couple in fact had no sexual intercourse on the night in between the 28/29-12-1979; the very fact that the husband and the wife stayed together in the matrimonial home for about 15 years, were still young, and there was nothing to prevent the sexual intercourse on that wintry night when they were meeting after many months; that is enough to have access and opportunity for marital intercourse: A.I.R. 1984 All. 129: (1983) 9 All.L.R. 675: 1984 Hindu L.R. 199. See also S. 3, Note 73, supra.

Land unfit for actual enjoyment in usual mode—Presumption may be made that plaintiff's previous possession continued until contrary is proved—This, being presumption of fact, is by no means conclusive—Whether it should be applied or not depends upon facts of each case: A.I.R. 1941 P.C. 11.

Where in a suit on a promissory note, the plaintiff contended to save limitation that she bona fide believed that the defendant was entitled to the moratorium under the T.N. Indebted Agriculturists (Temporary Relief) Acts of 1975 as well as of 1976, held, the defendant was an agriculturist under those Acts but for assessment of agricultural income-tax leads to the conclusive presumption that the plaintiff's plea for refraining from instituting the suit was sufficient to make her sue within time: (1988-1) 101 Mad.L.W. 269.

CHAPTER II

OF THE RELEVANCY OF FACTS

5. Evidence may be given of facts in issue and relevant facts.—Evidence may be given in any suit or proceeding of the existence or non-existence of every fact in issue and of such other facts as are hereinafter declared to be relevant, and of no others.

Explanation.—This section shall not enable any person to give evidence of a fact which he is disentitled to prove by any provision of the law for the time being in force relating to civil procedure[1].

1. See now the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908 (5 of 1908).

Section 5—Notes.

Facts include the factum probandum or the principal fact to be proved and the factum probans or the evidentiary fact from which the principal fact follows immediately or by inference. Facts may be either facts in issue which are the principal matters in dispute or relevant facts which are evidentiary and which directly or by inference prove or disprove the 'facts in issue': A.I.R. 1957 Andhra 130 (F.B.) [Overruled on another point in A.I.R. 1960 S.C. 990]. Act does not lay down rules as to the weight of evidence; it only deals with admissibility (Field, 6th Ed., 64). In determining the relevancy or otherwise of any evidence, the Court cannot consider matters beyond the purview of the Evidence Act: 12 All.L.J. 285: 15 Cr.L.J. 429.

'Facts'—Meaning of—'Facts' which were not before it—Include evidentiary facts: A.I.R. 1957 Andhra 130 (F.B.) [Overruled on another point in A.I.R. 1960 S.C. 990].

Suit for profits against son of lambardar—Evidence as to the difficulty of collecting rent and difficulty in finding other lambardar on the death of the original lambardar is admissible: A.I.R. 1928 All. 166: 107 I.C. 702.

Ss. 5, 16 and 34.—A bank used to keep at the end of each day its cash box in sealed condition in the Police station house. One morning the box was found missing and on investigation was found in a field with its hasp broken and contents removed. In a suit by the bank against Government for recovery of Rs. 46, 946-7-0, the Government did not admit that the box contained that amount and pleaded that the contents were not verified by the Police. The bank tendered in evidence its cash book and the detailed books of accounts showing what the amounts on hand from day to day were. The evidence on the part of the plaintiff established that this amount was put into the box, as was the usual custom for a long time, and the box was sent to the police thana with a clerk and a peon of the bank. Held, the evidence was admissible and there was no difficulty in holding that the amount was in fact in the box: 1958 M.P.L.J. 694: A.I.R. 1959 Madh. Pra. 77.

Where findings have been arrived on irrelevant evidence, held, same ought not to be allowed to stand: A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 660.

The application bearing the signature of the plaintiff stating the fact that the partnership between the plaintiff and the defendant was dissolved in a certain year could be used by the defendant as evidence against the plaintiff but the order passed on that application by the Income-tax Officer could not be so used: (1958) 60 Bom.L.R. 203: A.I.R. 1959 Bom. 528.

Where no objection was taken to the admissibility of a document either before the arbitrator or before the High Court in the proceedings taken to set aside the award, held, no objection to the admissibility could be allowed to be raised in the appeal before the Supreme Court: A.I.R. 1959 S.C. 488: 1959 S.C.A. 477: (1959) 1 S.C.R. (Supp.) 922.

Case decided—Decision of questions under Evidence Act—Decision on admissibility—Not a case decided and hence, not open to revision: (1963) 4 Guj.L.R. 1032: A.I.R. 1963 Guj. 241.

Admissibility of a document is one thing and its probative value quite another—these two aspects cannot be combined. A document may be admissible and yet may not carry any conviction and the weight of its probative value may be nil. However, in the case of a document prepared under a statute which requires certain conditions to be

Illustrations

(a) A is tried for the murder of B by beating him with a club with the intention of causing his death.

At A's trial the following facts are in issue:—

A's beating B with the club;

A's causing B's death by such beating;

A's intention to cause B's death.

(b) A suitor does not bring with him, and have in readiness for production at the first hearing of the case, a bond on which he relies. This section does not enable him to produce the bond or prove its contents at a subsequent stage of the proceedings, otherwise than in accordance with the conditions prescribed by the Code of Civil Procedure[1].

fulfilled, as where a report is given by a responsible officer, based on evidence of witnesses and documents and has a statutory flavour in that it is given not merely by an administrative officer but under the authority of a statute, its probative value would indeed be very high so as to be entitled to great weight: A.I.R. 1983 S.C. 684: (1983) 3 S.C.C. 118.

Report of Court of Enquiry appointed under R. 75 of Indian Aircraft Rules—S. 35 of Evidence Act not applicable—Report admissible under Ss. 5, 7 and 9—Proof of report: A.I.R. 1965 Cal. 252.

Tape-recordings — Not inadmissible on ground of their being tampered with: A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 72. See also S. 3, Note 11, supra and S. 7.

Insufficiently stamped promissory note is inadmissible for any purpose: I.L.R. (1964) 16 Assam 54: A.I.R. 1964 Assam 138.

Plaintiff challenging existence, genuineness and validity of arbitration agreement—As regards quid probandum plaintiff has right to prove above fact in issue and facts relevant to it: A.I.R. 1968 Madh. Pra. 33.

Partnership deed for extracting mica from mines ought to be registered—Deed registered outside the district where mines are situated — Not admissible in evidence — Terms in such deed incorporated in a subsequent deed properly registered can be looked into: I.L.R. (1963) 13 Raj. 943: A.I.R. 1963 Raj. 241.

The Evidence Act prohibits the employment of any kind of evidence not specifically authorised by the Act itself. It is, therefore, unsound and not correct to say that the principle of exclusion adopted by the Evidence Act shall not be applied so as to exclude matters which may be essential for the ascertainment of truth: 1962 B.L.J.R. 323: A.I.R. 1962 Pat. 420.

An acknowledgment of a registered letter generally contains two postal seals—one the postal seal of the Post Office from which the letter was despatched and the other the postal seal of the post office which delivered the letter. Where the document contains only one seal, the document cannot be held to be genuine: 25 Cut.L.T. 169.

Where the fact in issue is the particular time when an appointee filled up a particular post, held, that person's evidence thereon would be direct evidence within the meaning of S. 60; on that evidence being challenged, he would have to produce other evidence like the order of his appointment, if in writing; if he does not do that, it would be for the Court to determine on appreciation of evidence whether he should be believed; but his oral evidence is undeniably relevant and admissible: A.I.R. 1971 Ker. 193: 1971 Ker.L.T. 19: 1971 Ker.L.J. 177: 1971 M.L.J. (Cr.) 89.

Relevant facts—Facts known to Judge—Court cannot import into case any fact which is observed by itself as that would be introducing evidence not tested by cross-examination: (1968-69) 73 Cal.W.N. 32.

Evidence—Personal knowledge of Judge: (1968) 1 M.L.J. 9

Information gathered as a result of illegal search and seizure—Admissibility in evidence: A.I.R. 1969 Del. 91. See also S. 3, Note 14.

Alienation by father—Recital in sale deed that property was the self-acquisition of vendor—Lower Courts finding that the property was joint family property and father alienated it for consideration and for legal necessity and antecedent debts—Conclusion that he transferred the same as karta of family held not contrary to law—It was open to Courts of facts to examine entire evidence on record and come to a conclusion whether it was joint family property despite recital to the contrary in sale deed: 34 Cut.L.T. 1305: I.L.R. (1968) Cut. 802: A.I.R. 1969 Ori. 134. See also S. 3, Note 49, supra.

It is true that in judging the acceptability of an evidence the absence of contrary evidence is also a factor to be taken into consideration, but the falsity of even an unrebutted evidence may be so patent or the evidence may be so unworthy of credence or so unsatisfactory that the Court cannot regard the fact which is sought to be proved by such evidence as having been proved. An evidence may be destroyed or, it may be said, sufficiently rebutted by its inconsistencies, its improbabilities and its inherent defects and thus ceased to be a fit basis for a finding. For the rejection of such evidence no evidence in opposition is necessary: I.L.R. (1965) 1 All. 483: A.I.R. 1965 All. 570.

Evidence of conversion of a member of scheduled caste to Buddhism may be corroborated by evidence of his conduct subsequent to conversion. Thus, the signing by such member alongwith others a declaration to the effect that he had embraced Buddhism and that he, therefore, ceased to be a member of scheduled caste, the issuing of a wedding invitation of his daughter on which the picture of Lord Buddha is inscribed, and the installation of image of Buddha by him in Shiva temple situate near his house would be strong pieces of corroborative evidence of the fact that he ceased to be Hindu and was converted to Buddhism: A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 1179.

In considering evidence in a case of right of easement of light and air, the Court can take notice of well known facts (without insisting upon evidence) such as, the breeze comes from the west and the blocking of a window in that direction would substantively reduce the amount of air in the room and that doors have to be kept closed for consideration of privacy: 1958 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 31.

There must be specific provision in the Evidence Act before facts can be treated as relevant and facts must also be proved as laid down in the Evidence Act. Facts which are not properly proved cannot be considered by the Judge and cannot form the basis of a judgment. It is only those facts which are declared to be relevant and duly proved, which can be the basis of a judgment as provided by S. 165 of the Evidence Act: (1962) 3 Guj.L.R. 107: (1962) 2 Cr.L.J. 55: A.I.R. 1962 Guj. 214.

Murder by poisoning—Facts to be established by prosecution—Facts are not invariable criteria of proof by direct evidence: (1965) 1 Cr.L.J. 321: A.I.R. 1965 Ori. 38.

A cross-complaint made by the accused before the Police is nothing but a former statement of the accused and can be used to corroborate or contradict the accused only if the accused gives evidence in Court. It may also be used as an admission of the accused but not by the accused in his favour in view of S. 21, Evidence Act. Hence, where an uncertified copy of such a cross-complaint is produced by the accused himself through a defence witness and the accused has not given any evidence in Court, the document is inadmissible in evidence under the provisions of Ss. 21, 145 and 157. If the complaint is treated as a public document then under S. 65(f) an uncertified copy would not be admissible but if it is not a public document, the original being available secondary evidence would not be admissible under S. 62. It is the duty of the Court to disallow the evidence which is not relevant under the provisions of the Evidence Act: (1963) 1 Cr.L.J. 355: (1963) 4 Guj.L.R. 448.

Accused having injuries when produced before Police immediately after occurrence—Medical evidence showing that they were not self-inflicted—Failure of prosecution to offer any explanation regarding those injuries—Version of accused that they sustained injuries at time of occurrence held highly probable—Further, as prosecution evidence itself indicated that accused could not have used the revolver alleged to have been used by him, case against him held stood falsified: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1479: A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 1281.

Charge under S. 302, Penal Code (1860)—Failure on part of prosecution to give explanation about injuries on accused, thereby part of occurrence remaining shrouded in mystery—Accused is entitled to acquittal: (1968) 34 Cut.L.T. 187.

The motive for the commission of the offence, however strong, by itself is not sufficient to establish the guilt of the accused. It is only one of the links in the chain of circumstances and if the other circumstances connecting the accused with the commission of the offence are proved, then the existence of motive assumes importance: (1969) 18 Law Rep. 412 (Mys.). See also S. 8, Note 2, infra.

Criminal trial — Motive — Proof of, is not always necessary: A.I.R. 1969 Tripura 53.

Criminal trial — Motive — Positive evidence against accused clear, cogent and reliable—Question of motive has no importance: 1968 Cr.L.J. 811 (All.).

The exchange of abuses, generally speaking, does not appear to be a rare occurrence, but it is not uncommon for the class of people like Jats to commit offences like murder for such or similar motives: 1961 All.Cr.R. 323: (1961) 63 Punj.L.R. 632.

Evidence of witnesses not convincing—It is fruitless task to search for motives which might have actuated them to come forward and give such evidence: 1959 An.L.T. 884: (1961) 1 Cr.L.J. 218: A.I.R. 1961 Andh. Pra. 70.

The motive on the part of the appellant, his absconding from the village for four days, his extra judicial confession and recoveries including the blood-stained Gundasa borrowed by him a couple of days before the occurrence alongwith the medical evidence constitute sufficient evidence to compel the inference of the accused being responsible for the murder of his wife: 1969 Cr.L.J. 1186 (Punj.)

Where the positive evidence against the accused is clear, cogent and reliable, the question of motive is of no importance: 1956 Cr.L.J. 827: (S.) A.I.R. 1956 S.C. 460.

Evidence of motive. See 1958 M.L.J. (Cr.) 412: 1958 Ker.L.J. 181.

Absence of motive for committing murder—Inference: 1963 All.L.J. 977.

Though direct positive evidence of consent will be very satisfactory, that does not mean the Court is to totally put aside the inference flowing from probabilities and the normal course of conduct and actings of parties for a long period. The contention that proof of knowledge is not proof of consent is not, therefore, acceptable: (1968) 2 M.L.J. 233: (1968) 81 Mad.L.W. 531.

Assessment proceeding under Income-tax Act—Assessees failure to establish that certain credits in name of others did not constitute concealed income—Penalty proceeding against assessee for concealment of income—Failure of assessee to establish his claim in assessment proceeding does not mean that department on which onus lies in penalty proceeding has established the concealment: A.I.R. 1970 Ori. 38.

Suit by mother on behalf of minor son claiming a share in property of a Sudra Joint family—Claim made on the basis that the minor son was the illegitimate són of the deceased member—Woman deposing that she was concubine of the deceased in his continuous and exclusive keeping at the time of birth of her son—Testimony of the woman alone without corroboration is not sufficient for holding that she was such a concubine: A.I.R. 1964 Pat. 353.

Where the question was whether the letting of certain premises was for the immoral purpose of carrying on prostitution and running a brothel, the facts: (1) that the lessor herself was a woman of the town, (2) that the defendant (lessee) was also a woman of the town and a prostitute, (3) that the general reputation of the particular house was one of ill-fame and a brothel, and finally (4) that the locality where the premises were situate was the notorious quarters of the City where it was said in evidence that all the houses in the street were brothels, were all relevant and compelling facts and cogent circumstances leading to the only possible conclusion that the letting was for immoral purposes of prostitution and for keeping a brothel. The evidence of a family physician on a point which turns on the reputation of the locality and of the persons concerned is of great weight and cannot be lightly dismissed. Knowing the inmates of a brothel by name is not necessarily the only qualification to speak on the fact whether a particular house is a brothel or not. The evidence of reputation of a house by a person who resides in a part of the very same house as a shop-keeper saying what type of people visits such house is not only admissible but cogent and relevant. His incapacity to name the prostitutes or their paramours does not discredit the testimony of such a witness. An independent and responsible witness, who lived in the vicinity of the premises ever since his boyhood, is entitled to speak of the reputation of the premises as quarters for prostitution and brothel keeping. His evidence cannot be considered as unsatisfactory merely because it was only once he actually went inside the house: A.I.R. 1958 Cal. 713: (1957-58) 62 Cal.W.N. 258.

Entries in account books regularly kept in the course of business—Entry in A's account books of certain payment made to B—Relevancy and value of—Absence of corresponding entry in B's account books regarding receipt of such payment—Non existence of such entry though not relevant under S. 34 is relevant under Ss. 5 and 11 and can be proved by B's account books: (1964) 3 S.C.R. 297: A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 1850.

Habitual offender or dangerous character—Proof—Mere suspicion cannot amount to proof—In case of evidence of general repute prosecution-evidence despite defence-evidence in rebuttal may be accepted if defence-evidence is not fit to be acted upon or if prosecution-evidence is supported by evidence of specific instances of commission of offences or by evidence of previous convictions: 1966 All.W.R. (H.C) 729.

Liability of karta to back accounting—Specific allegation has to be made and proved before accounts can be reopened: A.I.R. 1967 Andh. Pra. 247.

Joint family breaking of—Division of property for convenience—If proof of severance of joint status: A.I.R. 1967 Ori. 139.

Under Proviso 6 any fact is probable which shows in what manner language of document is related to fact existing at the time of executing it: (1965-66) 70 Cal.W.N. 982.

Where the distinct charge in the evidence of reputation from the witness-box was: (1) that the defendant was a prostitute and carried on prostitution; and (2) that she took the house on rent to run a brothel there that is the prima facie case. Where she does not come herself nor calls any witness to deny those serious allegations of fact, whether the judge should believe one witness or another or one case or another in such a context of facts is not then a question of prima facie case. It is then a question of the weight of evidence and its credibility. The very fact that the defendant neither came to the box herself nor called any witness to contradict evidence given on oath against her shows that these facts cannot be denied. What was prima facie against her became conclusive proof by her failure to deny: A.I.R. 1958 Cal. 713: (1957-58) 62 Cal.W.N. 258.

The opinion of the Legal Remembrancer given to the Government would be inadmissible in evidence. Nor can it constitute proof on the facts stated therein: A.I.R. 1958 Manipur 7.

It is not open to a Court on a Tribunal determining a matter judicially to insist on a particular mode of proving that matter and to exclude all other modes of proof, unless there is a law requiring it to do so. It may certainly draw such inference from the non-production of a particular kind of proof as the circumstances justify but it cannot say that no other kind of proof, whatever its probative value may be, will be entertained by it. This will particularly be so when it is not within the power of the person concerned to obtain the proof that he is directed to produce: 1969 All.L.J. 652.

Land acquisition proceedings—Market value of land—Reference by appellate Court after conclusion of arguments to documents which are not part of record is not permissible—They should be admitted as fresh evidence and parties given opportunity to rebut them: (1969) 1 S.C.J. 344: A.I.R. 1969 S.C. 255.

There has to be legal evidence for hearing a finding of fact. At least the witness must say that he has personal knowledge about the facts about which he is giving evidence. If the witness has no personal knowledge or any means of such knowledge about the facts deposed to by him, his testimony would not be evidence under any principle of law: (1969) 71 Punj.L.R. 68: 1969 Ren.C.R. 682.

Where in application for temporary injunction the question was whether a director of a company was removed, a bare allegation in an affidavit that he was so removed, was not sufficient to prove the fact of removal especially when there was no allegation of service of a notice of a resolution for removal. Notice of a resolution to remove a director is necessary under S. 284 of the Companies Act: (1968) 1 Comp.L.J. 311: 39 Comp. Cas. 223: (1965-66) 70 Cal.W.N. 805.

6. Relevancy of facts forming part of same transaction.—Facts which, though not in issue, are so connected with a fact in issue as to form part of the same transaction, are relevant, whether they occurred at the same time and place or at different times and places.

(a) A is accused of the murder of B by beating him. Whatever was said or done by A or B or the by-standers at the beating, or so shortly before or after it as to form part of the transaction, is a relevant fact.

(b) A is accused of waging war against the [1][Government of India] by taking part in an armed insurrection in which property is destroyed, troops are attacked and goals are broken open. The occurrence of these facts is relevant, as forming part of the general transaction, though A may not have been present at all of them.

(c) A sues B for a libel contained in a letter forming part of a correspondence. Letters between the parties relating to the subject out of which the libel arose, and forming part of the correspondence in which it is contained, are relevant facts, though they do not contain the libel itself.

(d) The question is, whether certain goods ordered from B were delivered to A. The goods were delivered to several intermediate persons successively. Each delivery is a relevant fact.

Section 6—Notes.

Principles of sections relating to relevancy of facts are mere rules of logic: 1914 M.W.N. 931. The evidence about the fact which is also connected with the same transaction, cannot be said to be inadmissible or irrelevant. There is no provision of law which lays down that evidence can be led only in respect of that matter which is the subject-matter of the charge and of no other matter, even though it is relevant to substantiate the charge: 1957 All.W.R. (H.C.) 293: 1957 All.L.J. 141.

The word 'transaction' referred in S. 6 has not been defined but it can be equated to a crime so far as a criminal case is concerned. Each essential ingredient of that crime will be a fact in issue and those facts which are connected with the fact in issue forming part of the same transaction would be relevant as res gestae: 1989 Cr.L.J. 2238 (Him. Pra.) (D.B.); 1992 Cr.L.J. 2415 (Him. Pra.) (D.B.).

In order to constitute 'same transaction', the series of acts should be connected together and in this respect the proximity of time assumes significance: I.L.R. (1973) 2 Del. 479.

S. 6 read with its Illus. (a) shows that spontaneous statements made during the transaction are admissible as res gestae; they are relevant only if the person making them had seen the actual occurrence and uttered them simultaneously with the incident or so soon thereafter as to make it reasonably certain that he was still under the stress of the excitement caused by his having seen the incident and his statements formed part of the transaction. The by-stander's declaration must relate only to that which came under their observation. Remarks made by persons other than the eye-witnesses are only hearsay; if the transaction had come to its end, statements made thereafter would be irrelevant. [A.I.R. 1951 Ori. 53; 1975 Cr.L.J. 110, Rel. on]: 1985 Ker.L.T. 122; 1992 Cr.L.J. 575 (Ker.) (D.B.). Spontaneous statements made during the incident are admissible as res gestae; but all spontaneous statements in some way connected with the transaction are not admissible; only facts connected with the fact in issue as part of the transaction are admissible. [A.I.R. 1945 Lah. 46; A.I.R. 1951 Ori. 53; A.I.R. 1963 J.&K. 37, Foll.]: 1974 M.P.L.J. 357.

S. 6 permits proof of collateral statements which are so connected with the fact in issue as to be a part of the same transaction; whether it is so or not is to be decided on the circumstances of each case. The principle is that it should be so intimately connected with the fact in issue as to be a spontaneous utterance inspired by the occasion's excitement and without there being any opportunity for deliberate fabrication of the statement; such a statement, part of res gestae, does not narrate a past event; it is the event itself speaking through persons: 1970 M.P.L.J. 976.

S. 3 defines 'fact' as anything capable of being perceived by the senses; Illus. (c) shows 'that a man said certain words is a fact'. 'Statements' can be excluded from the purview of S. 11 by a very restricted interpretation which need not be followed; if the Legislature intended to exclude all statements from the purview of the word 'fact', there was no need for Illus. (a) in S. 6 which makes it unambiguously clear that a statement made by the deceased shortly before or after his murder, is a relevant fact in certain circumstances; there may be statements which are inadmissible under S. 32 but admissible under S. 6; at any rate S. 6 is not controlled by S. 32; if the scope of S. 6 cannot be whittled down like that, the scope of S. 11 cannot be curtailed either by dragging it under S. 31. Nothing in S. 11 suggests that it is controlled by any other section; rather its language indicates that the provision is an exception to the other general provisions: (1992) 1 Ker.L.J. 491: 1992 Cr.L.J. 2860 (F.B.).

A witness' earlier statement about the time and place of the incident is quite relevant as also a very important piece of evidence; it is admissible as res gestae under S. 6 as also under S. 157: (1986) 2 Karn.L.J. 417 (D.B.).

Narration concerning a prior event, if can be statement, under S. 6, Illus. (a). See 1985 Cr.L.J. 1711: 1985 Ker.L.J. 122; 1985 Ker.L.J. 172: I.L.R. (1985) 1 Ker. 846: 1985 M.L.J. (Cr.) 108.

The place where a murder was committed was occupied by a number of persons, apart from the deceased and the eye-witnesses. These persons came up immediately after the murder and they were informed by the eye-witnesses as to who the two accused had been. These persons were not produced as witnesses in the case. Their non-production was explained upon the hypothesis that they did not actually see the culprits. Held, that assuming that these persons did not actually see the accused, their evidence was material not with a view to prove the actual 'fact' of murder, which was in issue, but to prove the 'relevant fact', namely, that just after the event the eye-witnesses disclosed the names of the accused to those who came—this relevant fact having been so connected with the fact in issue in view of S. 6, Illus. (a), Evidence Act, as to have necessitated the giving of evidence of that relevant fact itself as required by S. 5 of that Act: 1955 Cr.L.J. 892: A.I.R. 1955 All. 328.

The essence of the doctrine of res gestae in evidence is that the facts which though are not in issue are so connected with the fact in issue as to form part of the same transaction and thereby become relevant like fact in issue: A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 709. See also 1972 All.L.J. 744.

Declarations in order that they might be admissible as res gestae should be contemporaneous with the transaction in issue, that is, the interval should not be such as to give time or opportunity for fabrication and they should not amount to a mere narrative of a past occurrence. They are admitted when they appear to have been made under the immediate influence of some principal transaction relevant to the issue and are so connected with it as to characterise or explain it. The bare statement of a complainant made sometime after the occurrence is not admissible in evidence: 1941 O.W.N. 1290: A.I.R. 1940 Oudh 130.

Even the statements of by-standers witnessing a transaction are relevant if they are made during the transaction or so shortly before or after it as to constitute a single transaction; they are res gestae having been made contemporaneously with the fact; they should not have been made after such an interval as to afford an occasion for fabrication: (1993) 2 Ker.L.J. 387 (D.B.).

Where the witness was standing near the place of occurrence when the shooting took place as a by-stander, a statement made by him shortly after the occurrence is a relevant fact. Statement made by a by-stander while still under the influence of the principal transaction is admissible as res gestae: 1956 Madh.B.L.J. 27: A.I.R. 1956 Madh. Bh. 170.

The word 'by-standers' in Illus. (a) of S. 6 means the persons who are present at the time of the beating and not the persons who gather on the spot after the beating. The remarks made by persons other than the eye-witnesses could only be hearsay, because they must have picked up the news from others: (1944) 46 Punj.L.R. 353: A.I.R. 1945 Lah. 46.

In some cases the distinction between a declaration which is admissible as part of the transaction and a declaration which is admissible as a complaint is also treated as a part of the transaction. There is general agreement that the declaration must be substantially contemporaneous with the fact. If it is separated from the fact by an interval which however slight, allows of fabrication, it cannot be treated as substantially contemporaneous with it. It may be admissible under S. 157 of the Evidence Act but not as part of res gestae: 1951 All.L.J. 149.

Witness learning about murder of deceased going to the spot and there seeing the body being removed by persons—His statement that he learnt that the deceased has been murdered by the accused or that he was told by the various witnesses that the accused had murdered the deceased and had run away, held, is inadmissible in evidence because they do not form part of res gestae: (1953) 55 Punj.L.R. 221: A.I.R. 1953 Punj. 218.

S. 6 of the Evidence Act and the succeeding sections embody the rule of admission of evidence relating to what is commonly known as res gestae. Acts or declarations accompanying the transaction or the facts in issue are treated as part of the res gestae and admitted as evidence. They are, roughly speaking, exceptions to the hearsay rule. The obvious ground of admission of such evidence as is referred to in S. 6 is the spontaneity and immediacy of the act or declaration in question. The facts deposed to must form part of the transaction.

S. 6 appears to provide for proof of statements which are more or less of a collateral nature, not the principal fact but the subsidiary ones which are so connected with the facts in issue as to form part of the same transaction are relevant: 1958 Cr.L.J. 1170: A.I.R. 1958 Cal. 482.

The doctrine of res gestae is an exception to the hearsay rule. Facts which may be proved as part of res gestae must be facts other than those in issue and must also form part of that very transaction and be thus connected with the facts in issue. In view of the fact that a statement in order to be a part of res gestae, must have been made substantially contemporaneously with the act or immediately after it, the interval between the act and the statement assumes significance. In no case, the statement should be in the nature of a mere declaration or narration of a past event. Thus, statement made by the prosecutrix after the rape narrating the incident, held, could not form part of the transaction constituting rape, which was a fact in issue; it was more of a narration of past event notwithstanding its close proximity in time: 1989 Cr.L.J. 2238 (Him. Pra.) (D.B.); 1992 Cr.L.J. 2415 (Him. Pra.) (D.B.).

A declaration made subsequent to the occurrence is admissible if it could be validly assumed that the exciting influence was still at work; whether the declaration is so connected with the fact in issue as to form part of the same transaction is to be decided on consideration of all surrounding circumstances. Thus, where the shopowner immediately rushed to the Police Station and there was no room to assume that his declaration was not contemporaneous or that the interval could allow fabrication, held, the requirements of S. 6 were satisfied; the conditions for admissibility of such statements are proximity of time, proximity of the Police Station and continuity of the action: (1984) 1 An.W.R. 290; 1984 M.L.J. (Cr.) 159: 1984 Cr.L.J. 674: (1983) 2 An.L.T. 374: (1984) 1 A.P.L.J. 38.

Where the first information report, as per the informant, was based on information conveyed by the accused himself, held, the accused's admission is not only relevant as res gestae but also a most important circumstance against the accused: (1992) 3 S.C.C. 106.

Utterances by the accused that he had killed someone, held, are not relevant under S. 6, in the absence of the material as to at what time he committed the crime and how long after the commission of the act he disclosed this fact: 1993 Cr.L.J. 2701 (Ori.) (D.B.).

Statement made to Police—Admissibility of. See 50 I.C. 487: 17 All.L.J. 760. Evidence of woman raped—Res gestae. See 4 L.L.J. 491; A.I.R. 1921 Lah. 258. See also S. 7.

Where a woman raped made a statement to her relative shortly after and committed suicide about 3 days after the occurrence, such statement is not admissible under S. 6: 1930 M.W.N. 702.

In a case of rape, a statement made by the complainant immediately after the occurrence to another woman is admissible, not as evidence of the truth of the charge alleged but as corroborating the credibility of the complainant and of the evidence of the consistency of her conduct: 43 I.C. 443: 19 Cr.L.J. 155 (F.B.). See also A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 132: 124

I.C. 175 (Statement by the girl to the mother that she was bitten by a leech to be used only to contradict the statement made by the girl). Unless a statement by the girl to her father and the offence under S. 376, I.P. Code, form res gestae, such statement is not of much value: A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 337: 127 I.C. 862.

Where a lady teacher had narrated the incident in respect of the Head Master's attempt to outrage her modesty to her three colleagues on the very next day, held, even though it was not res gestae and, hence, inadmissible under S. 6, but when corroborated by the three witnesses was clearly admissible under S. 157: A.I.R. 1985 S.C. 1268.

Where soon after the attempted rape, the prosecutrix, weeping and wearing blood stained clothes, on being asked by her mother and another, made a statement to them, held, her statement is admissible under S. 6 and S. 8, Illus. (j): 1989 M.P.L.J. 243.

Where a minor married abducted girl stated to her uncle, soon after her recovery that the accused ran away with her ornaments, held, same is admissible as res gestae under S. 6: 1972 Cr.L.J. 57 (All.).

Hearsay evidence — Statement of bystanders—Admissibility: 34 Punj. Re. (Cr.) 1914: 27 I.C. 664. Hearsay statement to be admissible as substantive evidence of the truth of the facts stated therein must themselves be part of the transaction. The statements as seen from Illus. (a) in S. 6 of the Evidence Act must be of a person who has seen the actual occurrence and who uttered the same simultaneously with the incident or soon after it so as to make it reasonably certain that the speaker is still under the stress of excitement caused by his having seen the incident. Where the transaction is a single incident, a statement made by a person who was perceiving the statement simultaneously with the occurrence of the incident may be said to be part of the transaction inasmuch as it is the result of a spontaneous psychological reaction through perception. While the spontaneity of the statement is no doubt the guarantee of its truth, the reason for its admissibility under S. 6 of the Evidence Act is that it is a part of a transaction and not merely because it is spontaneous. If the statement is to be admissible, it is not enough that it is made spontaneously, but it must be made out that the person who made the statement had himself seen the incident or occurrence and that the statement was made almost simultaneously with the occurrence: A.I.R. 1951 Ori. 53: I.L.R. (1950) Cut. 509.

Ss. 6 and 32 (1)—Injuries inflicted by the accused on the person of the deceased resulting in fracture of his ribs—Deceased when questioned, soon after, stating that it was the accused who inflicted injuries—Doctor's evidence establishing that the injuries to the ribs were a contributing factor to the death.

Statement of the deceased is relevant under S. 32 (1) of the Act as it was one made by a person who subsequently died and obviously related to the circumstances of the transaction which ultimately resulted in his death—It is also admissible under S. 6 of the Act as it was made by the deceased very shortly after he sustained the injuries: I.L.R. (1964) 16 Assam 67: (1964) 1 Cr.L.J. 393: A.I.R. 1964 Assam 53.

Evidence as to other offences would be relevant and admissible if there is a nexus between the offence charged with the other offence or the two acts form part of the same transaction so as to fall within S. 6. The accused was charged under S. 302, Penal Code, with murder. According to the prosecution case, in the morning of the day of the incident a threat had been given by the accused that he would finish off the deceased and also finish himself off. The Sessions Judge in his charge to the jury referred to the prosecution evidence regarding the attempt by the accused to inflict serious injuries on himself. Held, that the evidence as to the manner in which, according to the prosecution, the injuries came to be sustained by the accused must be held to be so closely connected with the offence charged against him as to form part of the evidence upon which the offence charged was sought to be proved. Therefore, the Sessions Judge was right when he referred to that evidence to the jury on the ground that it was a part of the same transaction, and there was no misdirection: I.L.R. (1961) Bom. 183: (1960) 62 Bom.L.R. 857: A.I.R. 1961 Bom. 114.

Statements of witnesses that when they rushed up, they saw the accused with gandasa in his hand and on interrogation he told them that deceased (wife) had abused him, had tried to catch hold of his neck and had even threatened to kill him—Statement of accused is in his favour and not covered by S. 6 as it cannot be treated as res gestae—

Statements of witnesses are inadmissible in evidence: 1960 All.L.J. 721: 1960 All.W.R. (H.C.) 556: 1960 All.Cr.R. 355.

Where some witnesses saw the accused grappling with the deceased having a dagger in his hand and soon after the occurrence, a dagger was recovered in pursuance of disclosure by the accused, held, the recovery of the dagger formed part of the same transaction: 1989 Cr.L.J. 2486 (J.&K.) (D.B.).

The principle underlying the rule of corroboration is that he, who's evidence is consistence, deserves to be believed. Therefore, where a witness does not support the case of the prosecution at the trial there can be no question of using any earlier statement made by him in favour of the prosecution for purposes of corroboration.

In a trial for murder the wife of the accused had informed the head constable that the accused committed murder and ran away. This statement appeared to have been made sometime after the incident in answer to a query and was not spontaneous. At the trial she became hostile. On the point whether the statement to the police constable could be used to corroborate the evidence of the police constable. Held, that her statement to the police constable was not admissible either under S. 6 or under S. 157 of the Evidence Act for corroboration: 1970 M.P.L.J. 976.

Statement of the deceased made to the witnesses, neither spontaneous nor contemporaneous, but made in answer to a query after some time of the occurrence, when the witnesses reached the spot, held, the statements of those witnesses could not be considered as res gestae: 1990 Cr.L.J. 2763 (Madh. Pra.) (D.B.).

Where the accused gives a spontaneous explanation right at the moment when the crime is committed, the explanation becomes res gestae within the meaning of S. 6. Even if such a statement is of doubtful admissibility in a case of corruption because the investigation could be said to have started before the statement was made it should be admissible, especially when it is an exculpatory statement as the conduct of the accused under S. 8. Inasmuch as in cases under S. 109, Cr.P. Code, evidence, that at the moment the accused was apprehended he gave unsatisfactory answers and did not disclose his name but gave a fictitious name, is not shut out as inadmissible under S. 162 of the Cr.P. Code, there is no reason why that evidence should be shut out in other cases: 1959 Cr.L.J. 924: A.I.R. 1959 All. 483. Question of reputation—Relevancy: I.L.R. 32 Pat. 276: A.I.R. 1954 Pat. 84.

The cries and curses of the deceased lady, while in flames, that she had been burnt by her father-in-law and brother-in-law, held, are so connected with the criminal act as to form part of the same transaction; they are relevant under S. 6: 1983 Raj.L.W. 723 (D.B.). See also 1993 Cr.L.J. 3709 (All.) (D.B.).

Where just after hearing sound of gunfire, the witness reached the spot, his niece told him that the accused had shot his wife, held, same is admissible under S. 6 and the further statement that when he went inside the house he saw the accused threatening every one with a pistol that they should get away otherwise he would kill them like the deceased, is also admissible under S. 6: 1993 Cr.L.J. 1736 (All.) (D.B.).

Where the prosecution case was that immediately after the deceased-wife's cries were heard from inside the room, her children started crying from outside, uttering words indicating that their mother was either being killed or had been killed, held, the witnesses' evidence about what the children had then said or did is admissible under S. 6: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 778: 1974 Cr.L.J. 664: (1974) 4 S.C.C. 193. See also I.L.R. (1980) 2 Karn. 829 (D.B.).

Where a witness who was present in the room when the accused set his wife on fire by pouring kerosene oil, was found immediately thereafter running in the bazar and crying for help and shouting that the accused had set his wife on fire, held, same could be safely classified as a fact so connected with the fact in issue (viz., accused having poured kerosene oil on his wife and setting her on fire), as to form part of the same transaction. Thus, the statements of those witnesses, who had seen the said witness running and shouting for help, were clearly relevant under S. 6: 1992 Cr.L.J. 2415 (Him. Pra.).

In a suit on a promissory note executed by a pardanashin lady where it is established by evidence that the promissory note was taken by the husband of the lady inside the house and was brought back after obtaining the signature and the husband stated that the signature on the note was his wife's, the statement so made is admissible in evidence to prove the signature of the lady on the promissory note: (1960) 1 M.L.J. 142 [Obiter].

Ss. 6, 8, 11, 14—Printing and possession of infringing material at one place—Inference: 1963 All.L.J. 930: (1965) 1 Cr.L.J. 530: A.I.R. 1965 All. 206.

Statements made by the workers of the factory to the Factory Inspector at the time of inspection about the person-in-charge of the factory, held, is admissible under S. 6 as proof of identity: 1981 All.W.C. 247.

A deed of adoption is not irrelevant to the decision of an issue of adoption. In the majority of cases, as in the instant case, execution of a deed of adoption forms a part of the transaction of adoption itself, and is relevant under S. 6 of the Evidence Act. Apart from it, it is the record of the fact of adoption and can be used to corroborate the testimony of witnesses in Court. Further, as the deed contains the statement of the adoptive mother who being dead could not be called to the witness box and the statement relates to the relationship by adoption it is also admissible under sub-S. (5) of S. 32 of the Evidence Act: (1961) 63 Bom.L.R. 726: I.L.R. (1960) Bom. 847: A.I.R. 1962 Bom. 175.

Where on refusal of the alleged father to pay for maintenance of the illegitimate child, the mother convened a panchayat wherein the father was ordered to pay some money and paddy to the child, held, in a suit for maintenance of the said child, the conduct of the mother and the alleged father and the panchayatdars, is a relevant factor: 1993 Cr.L.J. 767 (Karn.).

Agreement by Hindu father on behalf of minor son to purchase property—Agreement reduced to writing—Suit for rescission of contract—Defendant pleading that contract was also on behalf of the entire joint family—Plea amounts to variation or addition to terms of agreement—Not within proviso (6)—Defence, held, barred by S. 92: (1966) 68 Bom.L.R. 891.

'Bona fide'—While construing word 'bona fide' Court has to see that premises are required both reasonably and bona fide—Bona fides may be proved like any other fact in issue or relevant fact: (1966) 79 Mad.L.W. 612.

Ss. 6, 8 and 7—Offence under S. 165-A, Penal Code — Trap laid — Conversation between accused and complainant tape-recorded—Amount handed over to complainant—Voices of complainant and accused identified — Contemporaneous dialogue between them held formed part of res gestae and was relevant under S. 8—Further, like a photograph of a relevant incident a contemporaneous tape-record of a relevant conversation was admissible under S. 7: (1967) 3 S.C.R. 720: A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 147.

Ss. 6, 137, 3 and 155—Impeaching credit of witness — Omission by opponent to put material and essential case in cross-examination—Veracity of opponent's version of the case ought to be taken into account—Omission to do so vitiates appreciation of evidence: 1968 Ker.L.J. 103: I.L.R. (1968) 1 Ker. 129: A.I.R. 1968 Ker. 282.

Section 7—Notes.

Where the accused takes the defence founded on an alibi, reasoning from probabilities cannot take the place of evidence: A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 509: 128 I.C. 351.

Scope and applicability: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1584: A.I.R. 1968 Bom. 400.

Police officer asking accused whether he knew of certain dacoity—Accused taking officer to grain bin and producing ornaments—Conduct of accused even if not covered by S. 27 is covered by Ss. 7, 8 and 9: 1965 All.L.J. 344.

A contemporaneous tape-record of a relevant conversation is a relevant fact, and is admissible under S. 7 of the Evidence Act. The manner and mode of its proof and the use thereof in a trial is a matter of detail and it can be used for the purpose of confronting a witness with his earlier tape-recorded statements. It may also be legitimately used for the purpose of shaking the credit of a witness.

For a use of an earlier tape-recorded statement the identification of the taped voices is a crucial matter and indeed such proper

(a) The question is, whether A robbed B.

The facts that, shortly before the robbery, B went to a fair with money in his possession, and that he showed it, or mentioned the fact that he had it, to third persons, are relevant.

(b) The question is whether A murdered B.

Marks on the ground, produced by a struggle at or near the place where the murder was committed, are relevant facts.

(c) The question is, whether A poisoned B.

The state of B's health before the symptoms ascribed to poison, and habits of B, known to A, which afforded an opportunity for the administration of poison, are relevant facts.

identification is the sine qua non for the use of the earlier tape-recording. Where the voice is denied by the alleged maker thereof, a comparison of the same becomes inevitable and the proper identification of voices must be proved by a competent witness. The recording of the voice of a witness for the purpose of comparison with an identification of his earlier recorded voice can, therefore, be allowed by the Court and such comparison is neither expressly nor impliedly prohibited under any statute: (1969) 71 Punj.L.R. 519: 1969 Cr.L.J. 1422: A.I.R. 1969 Punj. 350. See also (1977) 79 Bom.L.R. 217 (D.B.).

Tape-recorded conversation is admissible provided (i) the conversation is relevant; (ii) the voice is identified; and (iii) the accuracy of the tape recorded conversation is proved by eliminating the possibility of erasures. A contemporaneous tape-record of a relevant conversation is relevant and admissible. It is also comparable to a photograph of an incident: A.I.R. 1973 S.C. 157: (1972) 2 S.C.W.R. 776: (1973) 1 S.C.C. 471.

Where evidence is a tape-recorded statement, certain safeguards have to be taken; no possibility of tampering is to be left open. It is well known that a tape-recorded statement may be tampered with by re-recording and suitable deletions and manipulations: A.I.R. 1974 Raj. 79: 1973 Raj.L.W. 409.

On admission of a tape-recorded transcript in evidence, it is essential to prove the conversation; if one of the conversationist has denied his voice, there is no better way than to compare his purported tape-recorded voice with his voice tape-recorded in the Court's presence. For proving a tape-recorded statement, identification of the taped voices is crucial matter; such proper identification indeed is the sine qua non; proper identification of voices must be proved by a competent witness; the Court may allow such comparison and identification: 1978 L.L.J. 61.

A tape-recorded conversation is, no doubt, comparable to a photograph; it is admissible provided the recorded conversation is relevant, the voice has been identified and the accuracy of conversation is proved by eliminating possibility of erasing the recorded tape. But where in a divorce proceeding under the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955, for the wife's mental disorder, the husband produced a tape-recorded conversation wherein the wife had admitted about her ailment, but there was not even a remote reference to this recorded conversation in the petition and the husband had nowhere explained either in the petition or in his statement the circumstances and the manner in which this conversation had been recorded and none except himself had proved that the recorded female voice was that of the wife nor was her voice compared by recording it in the Court nor the husband could tell the durations of or different intervening intervals between the recording of the conversation, held, the tape could not be used as evidence; the wife's statement therein could neither be used as her admission of her mental ailment nor for shaking her veracity during her cross-examination in terms of S. 145: A.I.R. 1985 P.&H. 128: (1985) 1 Hindu L.R. 378. See also S. 3, Note 11, supra.

The process of tape-recording offers an accurate method of string and later reproducing sounds. The imprint on the magnetic tape is the direct effect of the relevant sounds. Like a photograph of a relevant incident, a contemporaneous tape-record of a relevant conversation is a relevant fact and is admissible under S. 7 of the Evidence Act. Thus, if a statement is relevant, an accurate tape record of the statement is also relevant and admissible. The time and place and accuracy of the recording must be proved by a competent witness and the voice must be properly identified. One of the features of magnetic tape recording is the ability to erase and re-use the recording medium. Because of this facility of erasure and re-use the evidence must be received with caution. The Court must be satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the record has not been tampered with. The fact that the tape-recording was done without the knowledge of the person concerned is not of itself an objection to its admissibility in evidence. The Court cannot accept the inculpatory part and reject the exculpatory part of the accused's answers under S. 342 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

8. Motive, preparation and previous or subsequent conduct.—Any fact is relevant which shows or constitutes a motive or preparation for any fact in issue or relevant fact.

Where in a bribery case the police set up a trap by concealing a microphone of a tape recorder and recorded the conversation between the accused and the police decoy witness to whom the bribe was offered, by hiding themselves in an adjoining inner room, it could not be said that the statements made by the accused or the decoy witness were made to police officers as to bar the tape recorded statements from being used as evidence, under S. 162, Cr.P. Code. Nor in such a case can protection be claimed against the use of the statements, under Art. 20(3) of the Constitution of India as it cannot be said that the accused was compelled to be a witness against himself. He was free to talk or not to talk. There was no element of duress, coercion or compulsion. His statements were not extracted from him in an oppressive manner or by force or against his wishes: (1967) 3 S.C.R. 720: A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 147.

Where the transcript of conversations recorded on a tape or the tape itself is not produced in the trial Court or before the lower appellate Court, held, such conversations cannot be allowed to be adduced as additional evidence in the second appellate Court: A.I.R. 1974 Raj. 79: 1973 Raj.L.W. 409.

Ss. 7 and 45—Evidence that there were foot-prints at or near a scene of offence or that the foot-prints came from a particular place or led to a particular place, is relevant evidence under S. 7 and statements as to these facts made by person skilled in identifying foot-prints are not excluded by S. 45. The words 'science' or 'art' in S. 45 are to be construed widely. The amendment relating to finger impressions is made to meet particular decisions which had been given by the Courts. The amendment does not operate to limit the wide meanings which should be given to the expression, 'science' or 'art'. Whether a particular tracker called upon to assist is or is not an expert in this act or science is a matter to be decided by the Judge or Magistrate. But if it is established to the satisfaction of the Court that the tracker is a person capable of distinguishing and identifying foot-prints, there is no reason why his evidence should not be given consideration: A.I.R. 1942 Sind 11: I.L.R. (1941) Kar. 525.

In case of death by poisoning the prosecution must establish: (1) the death was caused by poisoning; (2) the accused had the poison in his possession; and (3) that the accused had the opportunity at the time to administer poison to the deceased; in the absence of evidence to unhesitatingly hold that the poison causing the deceased's death must have been administered by the accused, a conviction under S. 302 of the Indian Penal Code cannot be sustained: (1971) 2 Cut.W.R. 53.

Statement of persons as to cause of his death or as to any circumstances of the transaction which resulted in his death—Conviction based on identification: 1967 Ker.L.T. 466.

Where to prove residence at the suit premises, letters addressed for such premises, were produced without examining the senders thereof, held, it could not be said that the letters held no evidentiary value; their contents having no bearing upon the question under consideration, their contents need not be proved by producing their writer as a witness: (1984) 2 Bom.C.R. 671.

Section 8—Synopsis.

1. Scope.
2. Motive.
3. Evidence of conduct.

1. Scope.—Evidence of character, conduct and state of mind is admissible under Ss. 8, 14 and 32: 1980 M.P.L.J. 300 (D.B.).

The conduct of any party, or of any agent to any party, to any suit or proceeding, in reference to such suit or proceeding, or in reference to any fact in issue therein or relevant thereto, and the conduct of any person an offence against whom is the subject of any proceeding, is relevant, if such conduct influences or is influenced by any fact in issue or relevant fact, and whether it was previous or subsequent thereto.

Explanation 1.—The word "conduct" in this section does not include statements, unless those statements accompany and explain acts other than statements, but this explanation is not to affect the relevancy of statements under any other section of this Act.

Explanation 2.—When the conduct of any person is relevant, any statement made to him or in his presence and hearing, which affects such conduct, is relevant.

(a) A is tried for the murder of B.

The facts that A murdered C, that B knew that A had murdered C, and that B had tried to had extort money from A by threatening to make his knowledge public, are relevant.

(b) A sues B upon a bond for the payment of money. B denies the making of the bond.

The fact that, at the time when the bond was alleged to be made, B required money for a particular purpose is relevant.

The admissibility of statements alleged to be made by persons who are not available to give evidence on account of circumstances set out in S. 32, is not circumscribed by that section. If a statement made by a person, since deceased, is admissible under a provision other than S. 32, it can be admitted though it does not fall within the provisions contained in S. 32.

A complaint in writing made to the police by a person who dies some time thereafter, expressing apprehension of death at the hands of a certain person is admissible in evidence under Ss. 32 (1) and S. 8 of the Evidence Act, when the person whose conduct is the source of the apprehension, is charged with the offence of murder of the person making the complaint. The statement is admissible as relating to "the circumstances of the transaction which resulted in his death", within S. 32 (1). The fact that the deceased had made a complaint to the police against the accused charging him with serious offences may also be admitted as showing a motive under S. 8: 1960 Cr.L.J. 894: A.I.R. 1960 Bom. 290.

A false explanation offered soon after the commission of the offence apparently designed to give to the facts an appearance to the accused's advantage is admissible not only under S. 8 but is also of considerable importance: 1972 Cr.L.J. 1342.

The statements made by a victim of a rape to other witnesses regarding the offence are admissible in evidence as evidence of conduct as indicated by Illus. (j) to S. 8, Evidence Act: 1956 An.W.R. 572.

Evidence referring to threats given by accused to deceased is admissible under the section. The threats given by the accused constitute a motive and explain his antecedent conduct. The presence of motive is relevant under the section as it goes to show the mens rea of a crime. It is circumstantial evidence against an accused person. Motive, preparation and opportunity, are mental acts covered by this section: A.I.R. 1970 Goa 96.

Evidence even of the conduct of a deceased conspirator, is not admissible under S. 8 of the Evidence Act on the very terms of S. 8. The evidence of conduct admissible under S. 8 of the Evidence Act is of conduct of a person who is a party to the action: A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 747: 1957 Cr.L.J. 1325.

Accused pointing out stolen property—Recovery from place accessible to others—Presumption : A.I.R. 1958 Mad. 384: 1958 Cr.L.J. 1042.

Statement of witness recorded by Police after detention in Police lock-up—It is not

(c) A is tried for the murder of B by poison.

The fact that, before the death of B, A procured poison similar to that which was administered to B, is relevant.

(d) The question is, whether a certain document is the will of A.

The facts that, not long before the date of the alleged will, A made inquiry into matters to which the provisions of the alleged will relate that he consulted vakils in reference to making the will, and that he caused drafts or other wills to be prepared of which he did not approve, are relevant.

(e) A is accused of a crime.

The facts that, either before or at the time, of, or after the alleged crime, A provided evidence which would tend to give to the facts of the case an appearance, favourable to himself, or that he destroyed or concealed evidence, or prevented the presence or procured the absence of persons who might have been witnesses, or suborned persons to give false evidence respecting it, are relevant.

(f) The question is, whether A robbed B.

The facts that, after B was robbed, C said in A's presence—"the police are coming to look for the man who robbed B," and that immediately afterwards A ran away, are relevant.

(g) The question is, whether A owes B rupees 10,000.

The facts that A asked C to lend him money, and that D said to C in A's presence and hearing—"I advise you not to trust A, for he owes B 10,000 rupees," and that A went away without making any answer, are relevant facts.

(Notes) 309: (1961) 1 Cr.L.J. 270: A.I.R. 1961 Madh. Pra. 45.

Where the accused after stabbing the deceased went to the police station and made a confession and inter alia stated that he would show the place where the deceased fell and the tree where the dagger and the stick were kept. Held, that the statement was admissible under S. 27. Even otherwise, inasmuch as the conduct of the accused immediately, after the death of the deceased was relevant under S. 8 of the Evidence Act that conduct was admissible. What is admissible under S. 8 of the Evidence Act is the conduct of the accused and the statement which affected or influenced that conduct: (1963) 1 Cr.L.J. 142: A.I.R. 1963 Andh. Pra. 87.

(h) The question is, whether A committed a crime.

The fact that A absconded after receiving a letter warning him that inquiry was being made for the criminal and the contents of the letter, are relevant.

(i) A is accused of a crime.

The facts that after the commission of the alleged crime, he absconded, or was in possession of property or the proceeds of property acquired by the crime, or attempted to conceal things which were or might have been used in committing it, are relevant.

(j) The question is, whether A was ravished.

The facts that, shortly after the alleged rape, she made a complaint relating to the crime, the circumstances under which, and the terms in which,the complaint was made, are relevant.

The fact that, without making a complaint, she said that she had been ravished is not relevant as conduct under this section, though it may be relevant, as a dying declaration under section 32, clause (1), or as corroborative evidence under section 157.

(k) The question is, whether A was robbed.

The fact that, soon after the alleged robbery, he made a complaint relating to the offence, the circumstances under which, and the terms in which, the complaint was made, are relevant.

The fact that he said he had been robbed, without making any complaint, is not relevant, as conduct under this section, though it may be relevant, as a dying declaration under section 32, clause (1,) or as corroborative evidence under section 157.

Ss. 8 and 157—Applicability—Unnatural offence—Statement by girl victim to mother 16 hours after occurrence after persistent questioning—Not admissible in evidence to corroborate her evidence at the trial: I.L.R (1960) 10 Raj. 250.

Ss. 8 and 27—Scope—Event if 'information' under S. 27 is inadmissible, facts discovered therein are admissible under S. 8: 1969 All.Cr.R. 556: 1970 All.L.J. 149: 1969 All.W.R. (H.C.) 865.

Two types of statements may be proved under S. 27: (i) where the statement leading to the discovery is a bare expression of knowledge; (ii) where the person in custody imparts not only knowledge, but takes the responsibility for the earlier possession of the article, at an earlier stage. If, where the former kind of statement is made, the place of concealment of the article is accessible to others and is not in the exclusive possession or control of the accused, it can be plausibly urged that he had somehow learnt of the existence of the article there and has no more connection with it. In the second type, the place may be accessible to others; but the man says—'I have kept it', and, therefore, at one stage he had the article in his possession. If it is an incriminating article, he is only explaining. Ss. 8 and 27 are not mutually exclusive. A statement of the second type is admissible under S. 27 and also relevant under S. 8 as conduct. It shows that the person has been in possession of the incriminating article. Held, as the statement led to the discovery of the dhariya concealed in his haystack and since he had himself placed it, the fact of that place being accessible to others was of no consequence: 1961 Jab.L.J. 1317: 1962 M.P.L.J. 414: (1962) 2 Cr.L.J. 694 (D.B.).

The conduct of a woman who has been raped is relevant only if she lodges a complaint. If she does not make a statement with a view to make a complaint, then that statement will not be admissible in evidence. Where the raped girl, when questioned immediately after the occurrence by her mother and other persons, made statements to the effect that she had been ravished by the appellant, the alleged statements are not in the nature of a complaint by raped girl to witnesses in answer to questions put to her and hence are not admissible in evidence under S. 8 as evidence of conduct. Even if it be held that those statements were admissible under S. 8, they could not be used as the basis for conviction of the appellant under S. 376, Penal Code. They cannot be received as substantive evidence of the facts alleged in the case. They can be used only as evidence of the credibility of the testimony of the complainant, namely, the girl about the facts alleged. Where the ravished girl soon after the occurrence commits suicide by setting fire to her body ultimately resulting in her death, the statements cannot be admissible under S. 32(1), as the rape on the girl cannot be said to be the cause of her death or transaction resulting in her death. It might have been the motive which led her to set fire to her body. The case is not covered by S. 32, Illus. (a): 1961 B.L.J.R. 83: (1961) 2 Cr.L.J. 137: 1960 Pat.L.R. 193.

Rape case — Victim's statement to her mother about incident—If admissible: 1969 M.P.W.R. 890: 1970 M.P.L.J. 242: 1969 Jab.L.J. 992.

2. Motive.—Proof of motive is not substantive but only corroborative evidence: 1983 Cr.L.J. 694 (Raj.).

If motive is proved or established, it affords a key or pointer to scan the evidence in the case in that perspective and as a satisfactory circumstance of corroboration. It is a very relevant and important aspect, to highlight the intention of the accused and the approach to be made in appreciating the totality of the circumstances, including the evidence disclosed in the case: 1995 Cr.L.J. 2634 (S.C.).

Motive is not evidence; it only supports the version of the crime and makes probable the commission of the offence. Motive is of importance in cases based on circumstantial evidence; motive is a very relevant and strong link in the chain of circumstances. But non-proof of motive is no reason to disbelieve an otherwise convincing and trustworthy evidence. Success or failure of the prosecution case is not dependent upon the proof or non-proof of the accused's motive: (1992-1) 40 B.L.J.R. 436 (D.B.); 1980 Cr.L.J. 71 (Punj.).

Sometimes motive plays an important role and becomes a compelling force to commit a crime and, therefore, motive behind the crime is a relevant factor for which evidence may be adduced. A motive is something which prompts a person to form an opinion or intention to do certain illegal act or even a legal act but with illegal means with a view to achieve that intention. In a case where there is clear proof of motive for the commission of the crime it affords added support to the finding of the Court that the accused was guilty for the offence charged with. But it has to be remembered that the absence of proof of motive does not render the evidence bearing on the guilt of the accused nonetheless untrustworthy or unreliable because most often it is only the perpetrator of the crime alone who knows as to what circumstances prompted him to a certain course of action leading to the commission of the crime: A.I.R. 1994 S.C. 2420: 1994 Cr.L.J. 3271.

Proof of motive is not necessary: 1985 Cr.L.J. 52 (Ori.); 1985 Cr.L.J. 1633 (Ori.).

Motive is a double-edged weapon; by itself it cannot lead to the only conclusion that the accused alone was responsible for committing the offence: 1979 Bom.C.R. 721 (D.B.).

Motive is a double-edged weapon; it can both be a ground to commit the offence as well as an equally good reason to implicate the innocent: I.L.R. (1979) 2 Del. 373: 1979 Cr.L.J. 1159 (D.B.).

It is not necessary for the prosecution to prove by any affirmative evidence the motive which impelled the offender to commit murder: 1956 Pat.L.R. 434.

The Court need not consider the question of motive if it is satisfied that other evidence is acceptable: A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 1656: 1971 M.L.J. (Cr.) 43.

Motive under S. 8 is undoubtedly relevant but its having been established is no substitute for proof of the offence charged; motive is relevant only for judging the probability of the prosecution case: (1989-2) 37 B.L.J.R. 8 (D.B.).

It is well settled that where direct evidence of the assault is worthy of credence and belief, the question of motive becomes more or less academic and wholly irrelevant. Motive is sometimes clear and can be proved; sometimes it is shrouded in mystery and very difficult to locate: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 2499: (1976) 4 S.C.C. 362.

It cannot be contended that even if its witnesses are truthful, the prosecution must fail because motive is difficult to find; in fact, it is not incumbent on the prosecution to prove the motive; often, motive is indicated to heighten the probability of the offence having been committed by the person impelled by such motive: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 1740.

Motive being a mental attitude is often difficult of proof. People do often commit grave crimes from the most inadequate motives. So absence of proof of motive or an adequate motive is not fatal to the prosecution case even in a case depending solely on circumstantial evidence. If the circumstances otherwise establish guilt, inability to prove motive or an adequate motive is not an impediment to a conviction: I.L.R. (1963) 2 Ker. 26: (1963) 2 Cr.L.J. 458.

Where there is positive proof of the man having committed a crime, there is no need to prove motive or previous ill-will; but existence and non-existence of motive often forms an important factor for assessing the guilt or innocence of the accused: A.I.R. 1971 Mad. 194: 1970 Mad.L.W. (Cr.) 239: (1971) 2 M.L.J. 53: 1971 Cr.L.J. 615 (D.B.); I.L.R. (1972) Cut. 600 (D.B.).

Motive, however, adequate cannot sustain a conviction; if evidence against the accused is, clear, cogent and reliable, the absence of proof of motive is of no consequence. Besides, the prosecution is not bound to prove motive. What is more important is to see whether the evidence was clear and convincing and could be acted upon. [1975 Cr.L.J. 66 (S.C.); 1981 Cr.L.J. 714 (S.C.), Rel. on]: (1982) 54 Cut.L.T. 321.

Per Crump, J.—A motive is that which moves a man to do a particular act. Whether the belief which produces the state of mind is true or false, the motive remains the same and the truth or falsity of the belief is not really in question: 62 I.C. 545: (1920) 22 Bom.L.R. 1274.

Where an offence is alleged to have been committed for a particular motive, the Court has to inquire whether the pattern of the crime fits in with the motive: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 1740.

The question of sufficiency or otherwise of motive is a matter depending on the psychology of the individual concerned. Some people may act on the impulse of a motive apparently trivial in character and may commit grave crimes, while others, entertaining the strongest feelings of anger and hatred, may refrain from committing such crimes by falling a victim to such feelings: 1959 Ker.L.T. 167: I.L.R. (1959) Ker. 319.

Motive may not by itself be the proof of guilt; but it is relevant as it makes the prosecution story probable: 1974 Punj.L.J. (Cr.) 338: 1975 Cr.L.J. 132; 1979 W.L.N. (U.C.) 252 (Raj.) (D.B.); 1974 Punj.L.J. (Cr.) 364 (D.B.); 1974 Punj.L.J. (Cr.) 271; A.I.R. 1957 Andh. Pra. 758: 1957 M.L.J. (Cr.) 421; A.I.R. 1968 Mad. 117: 1968 Cr.L.J. 493.

It is not always easy to prove the motive or the immediate cause; the motive is often locked up in the offender's heart; if proved, the motive and the immediate cause does lend additional support to the Court's finding of guilt; but the absence of clear proof of the motive or immediate cause for the incident does not necessarily lead to the contrary conclusion: 1977 Raj.L.W. 212 (D.B.).

The proof of motive satisfies the judicial mind about the likelihood of the accused being author of the crime; its absence only calls deeper forensic search but cannot undo the effect of otherwise sufficient evidence. Often shrouded in mystery, motives are subjective, submerged and not amenable to easy proof. A clear proof of motive lends additional support to the Court's findings that the accused was guilty; but the absence of its clear proof does not necessarily lead to the contrary conclusion. Failure to discover an impelling motive does not reflect upon the credibility of a proved reliable witness: 1977 Raj.L.W. 107 (D.B.); 1993 Cr.L.J. 1656 (S.C.); A.I.R. 1973 S.C. 2622.

Motive can never supply want of reliable evidence of the offence: I.L.R. 7 Lah. 84: A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 88. The prosecution is entitled to call evidence in support of an alleged motive, however improbable it may be and nonetheless so because such evidence may suggest that the accused have committed some crime other than that with which they are charged. If such evidence is given with a view to showing that they are persons likely to have committed the offence with which they are charged the evidence would be inadmissible; but it would be admissible to establish the motive for the offence with which they are charged: A.I.R. 1946 P.C. 187: (1946) 2 M.L.J. 297 (P.C.): (1945-46) 51 Cal.W.N. 200.

Motive or malice in prosecution even if established cannot affect validity of investigation and prosecute if it is otherwise regular: 1968 Cr.L.J. 493: A.I.R. 1968 Mad. 117.

Evidence of prior incidents which took place a fortnight ago between the accused and the deceased is admissible where they by themselves and in conjunction with other facts make the existence of the facts in issue probable and they show motive on the part of the accused to act in the manner in which he is alleged to have acted: 1958 Cr.L.J. 1170: A.I.R. 1958 Cal. 482.

The evidence of the motive in the assassin's mind is very often not within the reach of others; it may not even be known to the victim. A crime may even be committed without premeditation or preplanning or even on the spur of the moment: A.I.R. 1989 S.C. 733.

The prosecution is not bound to prove motive; for, known only to the perpetrator of the crime, it may not be known to others; on the motive being proved, the Court has to consider whether it was adequate to impel him to commit the offence: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 1021: 1981 Cr.L.J. 714: (1981) 2 S.C.C. 300.

Prosecution is not bound to prove motive of any offence in as much as motive is known only to the perpetrator of the crime and may not be known to others. It does not, therefore, follow that if motive is not proved, the evidence of any witness becomes automatically unreliable: 1995 Cr.L.J. 2998 (Ori.) (D.B.).

If the crime could be otherwise established, mere absence of a strong enough motive for committing such an unnatural crime as patricide, held, could be of no assistance to the accused: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 1193.

Motive is not a decisive test for criminal character of human acts; an unlawful act will not become lawful even if done with a good motive; and a lawful act will not become unlawful even if done with a bad motive. A man is not punished under the penal law for having a guilty mind; he is punished only for his unlawful actions; the law judges a man by his actions, and not by the motions of his mind. The absence of proof of motive is of no consequence where cogent and reliable evidence as to the accused's guilt is available. Motive need not be the immediate objective of a murder nor is it an ingredient of the offence: (1992) 2 Ker.L.J. 529 (D.B.).

Once there is the clinching evidence of the seriously injured complainant duly corroborated by other attendant evidence, held, inadequacy of motive loses all its significance: (1990-2) 31 Guj.L.R. 1215 (D.B.).

Penal Code, 1860, S. 302 — Motive for crime: (1963) 3 S.C.R. 281: A.I.R. 1956 S.C. 1322.

In the absence of clear and cogent evidence pointing to the accused's guilt, the proof of motive, however adequate, cannot sustain his conviction: 1982 Cr.L.J. 534 (Ori.).

Cumulative effect of circumstances may irresistibly prove guilt; circumstantial evidence of conclusive character unerringly pointing to guilt at times may be more reliable than direct evidence; but the absence of motive would be a strong circumstance favouring the accused: 1973 Cr.L.J. 723.

True, motive is of no consequence if the evidence against an accused is clear and cogent; but absence of the proof of motive should put the Court on its guard to examine the prosecution evidence with great care: 1985 Cr.L.J. 580.

The prosecution's failure to establish the accused's motive does not mean that the entire prosecution case had to be thrown overboard; it only casts a duty on the Court to scrutinize other evidence, particularly of the eye-witnesses, with greater care: A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 118: (1975) 3 S.C.C. 266.

In the absence of a clear proof of motive, the Court should thoroughly scrutinize other evidence having bearing on the accused's guilt: (1979) 48 Cut.L.T. 111 (D.B.).

Failure to prove a motive does not necessarily mean absence of motive. If there was really no motive and the crime was completely motiveless then that circumstance can be taken into account along with the evidence of prior insanity: I.L.R. (1955) Nag. 722: A.I.R. 1956 Nag. 187; 1975 W.L.N. 373 (Raj.) (D.B.). While the prosecution is not bound to prove the motive of an occurrence, it is necessary for the Court to consider the matter carefully when, in fact, the prosecution suggests a motive: A.I.R. 1958 Cal. 118.

Undoubtedly, motive has an important significance in evidence; but motive is always locked up in the accused's mind which is sometimes difficult to unlock. Persons do not act wholly without motive; failure to discover the motive does not mean its non-existence; the failure to prove motive is not fatal; when facts are clear, non-proof of motive is immaterial; it does not break the link in the chain of circumstances connecting the accused with the crime; nor does it militate against the prosecution case: A.I.R. 1992 S.C. 1175: (1992) 3 S.C.C. 43.

The prosecution is not required to establish motive against each and every accused: 1980 Cr.L.R. (Bom.) 437.

Enmity is a double-edged weapon; motive has no importance in such a case: 1993 Cr.L.J. 2574 (Mad.) (D.B.).

In the case of a husband murdering his own wife, there may be many considerations to be looked into; it is very difficult in a given case to know the exact motive: A.I.R. 1983 S.C. 1091: 1983 Cr.L.J. 1444.

In a case of the wife's murder by the husband where there is no motive, held, the Court should examine the prosecution evidence with great care and caution: 1985 Cr.L.J. 575. See also 1973 Cr.L.J. 829 (Him. Pra.) (D.B.).

Where the murder was a sequal to a very silly quarrel between the accused and the deceased over getting water from the tap, held, absence or even insufficiency of motive is not of much significance if direct evidence of murder is available: 1976 Cr.L.J. 1409 (Del.) (D.B.).

Where a son's murdering his father was attributed to the son's desire that his father should transfer land in his name, held, the deceased's will bequeathing the lands to the son was sufficient to dislodge the motive; the contention that the will was likely to be changed, in the absence of evidence of the son not having good relations with his father, was a figment of imagination: A.I.R. 1988 S.C. 1705.

Where during the pendency of their trial under Ss. 363, 366 and 376 of the Indian Penal Code, for kidnapping and committing rape on the prosecutrix and while on bail, the accused murdered the prosecutrix, held, the overwhelming oral and documentary evidence clearly established their strong motive to murder the deceased: A.I.R. 1992 S.C. 891.

Where the circumstantial evidence made it clear that the accused had an eye on the deceased's property and had illicit relations with his wife, and the accused and the deceased were not on good terms as the accused was claiming a part of the land in the deceased's possession, held, the accused had a strong motive to commit the murder as by eliminating the deceased, he could get the property as well as the woman: A.I.R. 1991 S.C. 342.

Where the Courts below had found that there were serious misunderstandings between the deceased and the accused because of the accused's illicit relations with the deceased's wife, held, the accused had a probable motive but the motive by itself was no proof of conspiracy: A.I.R. 1993 S.C. 2618: 1993 All.L.J. 1273: (1993) 2 U.J. (S.C.) 632.

Where eyewitnesses stated that while leaving the dead body the assailants had shouted that they had killed the "Police agent" and proclaimed "red salute" to Naxalbari, held, the motive that impelled the accused to murder the deceased was that they suspected him to be a Police agent: A.I.R. 1978 S.C. 383: 1978 U.J. (S.C.) 123: (1978) 2 S.C.C. 382.

The deceased's refusal to comply with persistent requests and the possibility of the land going out of accused's reach, held, is not an inadequate motive; numerous crimes have been perpetrated for less adequate reasons: A.I.R. 1973 S.C. 55: (1973) 3 S.C.C. 219.

Where from her 'complaint' made a month before her murder against her husband to the Police that he was not providing household expenses and when demanded he would assault her with fist blows, an unchallenged statement proved by the Police Inspector, held, the prosecution had clearly established the husband's motive: (1985) 1 Bom.C.R. 559 (D.B.).

Where a father gave the land standing in his own name to the accused but subsequently he got it mutated in the name of his other son, held, it constituted a strong motive for the murder: 1985 Cr.L.J. 1416 (Raj.).

Where the accused desiring to have a modern wife was carrying on matrimonial correspondence with exchange of photos in 1971, as established by documents and oral evidence, and he murdered his wife and children in 1973, held, the defence could not contend that there was no motive for the accused to finish off his family in 1973: 1985 Cr.L.J. 602 (Raj.).

Mere statement by the accused, a truck driver, to another driver that he would kill the truck-owner, held, does not indicate any motive for him to kill the owner: 1990 Cr.L.J. 77 (All.) (D.B.).

Where the accused and the deceased had old election disputes between them followed by pendency of disputes regarding passage of sullage water under S. 107 read with S. 151 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, held, it could not be said that it was a weak motive for murdering the deceased: A.I.R. 1992 S.C. 214: 1992 Cr.L.J. 293.

Death due to consuming liquor brought in bottle from accused—Nothing to show how accused got poison nor opportunity to administer poison—In absence of motive, conviction not justified: 1994 Cr.L.J. 814 (Andh. Pra.) (D.B.).

Complaint by deceased widow, some days prior to her murder that she apprehended trouble from accused in her sowing operation—Prosecution case not that making of complaint was cause of her murder—Complaint held not admissible under S. 8 showing motive—Held, however, that previous litigation between deceased and accused formed motive for the murder: (1970) 72 Bom.L.R. 405: 1970 Mah.L.J. 634: A.I.R. 1970 Bom. 438.

Where deceased and his brothers had inherited certain property but the accused persons got the lands recorded in their names, in respect of which cases were pending before the Revenue Courts and Criminal Courts and deceased used to do pairvi in those cases, held, accused persons had strong motive in assaulting the deceased: A.I.R. 1995 S.C. 375.

3. Evidence of conduct.—Under S. 8, Evidence Act, conduct is admissible irrespective of the fact whether the conduct was or was not the result of inducement offered by the Police: 1956 Madh.B.L.J. 1447: A.I.R. 1957 Madh. Bh. 33.

The purpose of a criminal trial is not to enquire into the accused's conduct but to determine whether he is guilty of the offence; obviously, only that piece of conduct would be inculpatory for which the accused has no reasonable explanation: (1972) 2 Sim.L.J. 349.

Previous attempts to commit the offence and preparation to commit it are closely allied; attempts are a step further and nearer to the commission of the offence though both fall short; their probative value manifestly rests on the presumption that the intention to commit the offence was there in the accused's mind and it persisted until power and opportunity came his way to execute it; such evidence is admissible both under S. 8 and S. 14: (1971) 2 M.L.J. 53: A.I.R. 1971 Mad. 194.

As to evidence of conduct and surrounding circumstances, see I.L.R. 22 Cal. 406: 24 W.R. 176; I.L.R. 7 All. 385; 25 Sind L.R. 55: A.I.R. 1927 Sind 28; A.I.R. 1937 Sind 293; 35 Cal.W.N. 705: I.L.R. 59 Cal. 40: A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 236; 161 I.C. 885: A.I.R. 1936 Pesh. 72.

The explanation of any admission or conduct must come from the party itself, if alive and able to depose; the Court should not form an explanation of its own not offered by the party; that should lead to an adverse inference against the party: A.I.R. 1971 All. 29 (D.B.).

Subsequent conduct — Relevancy. See A.I.R. 1958 Madh. Pra. 246; (1958) 2 W.L.R. 110. 'Conduct' may in certain circumstances include statements as well as acts but in doing so it still retains the difference between an act and a statement. A statement must consist of words, whether they be spoken or written, or spelled out as would be done by a mute person on his fingers; and words would not always be statements. Acts, however, exclude words and cannot be translated into words. So where an accused takes certain articles belonging to the deceased from various places and hands them over to the Police, he cannot be said to be making a statement; much less making a statement amounting to a confession. To such case S. 8 applies: I.L.R. (1941) All. 280: A.I.R. 1941 All. 145; A.I.R. 1941 Oudh 359.

Tenant whether contractual or statutory—On facts, held that tenant was not statutory tenant on date of his death and that the tenancy was heritable—Conduct of landlord's Mukhtar in accepting rent, etc., after determination of tenancy, held, was evidence of continuation of tenancy: 1965 Cur.L.J. 393 (Punj.).

Copies of the tenant's income-tax returns to prove payment of rent, held, are not admissible under S. 3: 1979 U.P. (R.C.C.) 78.

Where the fact in issue was whether the suit properties were private or trust properties, held, returns filed under S. 59 of the Bihar Hindu Religious Trusts Act, 1950, might be admissible in evidence, but they cannot themselves be the conduct under S. 8. Mere conduct is no admission, as defined in S. 17 for making it eligible to be used as admission under S. 21: 1973 B.L.J.R. 509: A.I.R. 1974 Pat. 95 (D.B.).

Though the principle that the factum of adoption and the authority to adopt may be proved by circumstantial evidence alone, like conduct, repute and recognition, etc., but the consideration that evidence naturally gets lost with the lapse of time would not justify acceptance of oral testimony, inherently improbable or instrinsically defective. Scant direct evidence may, in a fit case, be supplemented by convincing circumstantial evidence; but if direct evidence does not inspire confidence and as well appears to be definitely untrue, it cannot be accepted on consideration that no better evidence remained available for lapse of time; it is the paucity and not falsity of direct evidence which may be supplemented; and the inference as to the existence of the authority to adopt may be drawn by a long course of conduct characterised by uniformity and consistency: A.I.R. 1971 All. 29 (D.B.).

Evidence of conduct — Relevancy. See Hindu Law — Adoption: A.I.R. 1958 Bom. 270: (1958) 60 Bom.L.R. 605.

A lawyer's statement showing his conduct in giving a particular advice to his client, held, is not the client's conduct: A.I.R. 1987 Cal. 115.

Settlement entries—Presumption of correctness attaches to them—They are also evidence of conduct of persons at whose instance the entries were made: I.L.R. (1961) Cut. 635.

Post Settlement Inam granted in lieu of service to ancestors of grantees—Evidence about origin and nature of grant not available—Admission by ancestors of grantees in documents executed by them in favour of plaintiff is strong evidence regarding existence of occupancy rights: I.L.R. (1963) Cut. 146.

Where in a proceeding for divorce under the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955, on the ground of cruelty, the husband, noticing something wrong in the relations between his wife and her dharambhai took no action against them but merely reported it to his mother, who spoke to his wife and her mother, held, it is not an unnatural conduct; a decent husband would not make a row on such things; reactions differ according to the class to which the parties belong. A husband, an educated and respectable doctor, would not make a hue and cry about such conduct of his wife even if he resented it most deeply. His entire version appears to be quite consistent and natural: (1990) 1 Bom.C.R. 715: (1990) 2 Hindu L.R. 67.

Where the truck driver, after the accident, went to the Police Station and stated that he was driving the truck, a cyclist was injured and people had collected and he had rushed to the Police Station, held, though the confessional part of his statement could not be considered admissible evidence because of S. 25, the fact of the driver having gone to and given information about the accident at the Police Station, was admissible under S. 8 as his conduct: (1990-2) 31 Guj.L.R. 785: 1990 Cr.L.J. 2500.

Charge of forgery of sale deed—Statements made by accused before Registrar—Admissibility of: 1933 M.W.N. 96. Absence of entries in account book is a relevant fact: A.I.R. 1924 Nag. 22: 76 I.C. 327.

Agent acting nefariously, presumption from: 80 I.C. 969: A.I.R. 1924 Sind 105.

Where the accused (a woman) is on her trial for making a false charge of rape, the fact that she made certain allegations which she related in the course of an enquiry which she sought and demanded is relevant: A.I.R. 1935 Nag. 69.

A dying declaration by a deceased person made in the form of signs and gestures in answer to questions put to him is admissible evidence: A.I.R. 1936 Bom. 372: I.L.R. (1937) Bom. 68. See also 1971 Cr.L.J. 1764 (Punj.) (D.B.).

Evidence even of the conduct of a deceased conspirator, is not admissible under S. 8 of the Evidence Act on the very terms of S. 8. The evidence of conduct admissible under S. 8 of the Act is of conduct of a person who is a party to the action: A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 747.

Conduct in general of each individual co-conspirator, irrespective of the time to which it relates, held, is admissible under S. 8: (1978) 2 Cal.L.J. 214. Conduct of an approver. See (1978) 5 Cr.L.T. 228 (Punj.) (D.B.).

A missing information given by the accused at the Police Station and entered in the General Diary can be used as a circumstance proving the conduct of the accused, where it destroys the presumption of his innocence.

The General Diary entry is not the first information report at all. A first information report has to answer certain tests, namely, that it must relate to a cognizable offence. A report that somebody is missing is not an information relating to the commission of a cognizable offence under S. 154, Cr.P. Code. Then also it has to be signed by the person giving it. The General Diary Entry about the missing report has not been signed by the person giving it. Every report to the Police is not a first information report. Nor is the entry hit by S. 162, Cr.P. Code: (1962) 2 Cr.L.J. 354: A.I.R. 1952 Cal. 504.

The accused was charged with the murder of his wife who was missing for some time. A photograph of a dead body recovered by the Police was published in a newspaper. The dead body was later on identified as that of the wife. Soon after the photograph was published, the accused was the first to speak to B about it (the photograph) and told him 'People are saying that the photograph is that of S (his wife), please go and see'. The accused appeared to be in a disturbed state of mind and tried to go away from the office taking leave. Held, that the statement made to B came under para. 2 of S. 8, as showing the conduct and the relevant fact, and was an incriminating circumstance against the accused. The particular statement accompanied and exclaimed acts showing his reaction of a disturbed mind on the publication of the photograph in the newspaper and the suggestion that such photograph was that of his dead wife S. S. 157, had no application to the statement at all as in the instant case, there was no question of corroboration. The statement was admissible even under S. 21 as admission: (1962) 2 Cr.L.J. 354: A.I.R. 1962 Cal. 504.

Wife accused of murdering husband—Statement by wife in committal Court that she was sleeping with her husband on the night in question and upon other accused knocking at the door she opened the door and upon entering the room these persons murdered her husband by strangulating him and afterwards took the body outside the room—Her statement in the morning to the brothers of the deceased when questioned by them, that she did not know the whereabouts of her husband—The statement to brother, held, not admissible in evidence, as it was a statement which did not accompany and explain an act other than the statement—The conduct of the wife was not the conduct expected of an affectionate wife—'Conduct' in S. 8 according to the Explanation does not include statements unless these statements accompany and explain acts other than statements. The conduct of wife would not warrant the inference that she committed the murder: (1961) 2 Guj.L.R. 582: (1962) 1 Cr.L.J. 26: A.I.R. 1962 Guj. 1.

Case of murder purely based on circumstantial evidence — Motive for crime is of importance—Motive alleged by prosecution may mislead and vitiate appreciation of evidence if that is relied on before other evidence is discussed and appreciated: 1961 Ker.L.T. 201.

Victim of acid throwing giving out names of accused and his companions immediately after the attack at the earliest opportunity before there was opportunity of being tutored—Evidence must be given due weight: I.L.R. (1962) Cut. 303.

Illus. (i).—Gun belonging to deceased taken away by accused in course of commission of crime — Accused making general statement that he had kept gun in his village—Statement relevant under section: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 520: A.I.R. 1965 Ori. 175.

Accused giving information to Police Head Constable in presence of Panchas that he would show the stolen goods—He further taking them to cowdung hill and from there taking out stolen articles—This done on very next day after commission of offence—This evidence being evidence of conduct of the accused was admissible under S. 8—It was also admissible under S. 27: 1969 Cr.L.J. 471: A.I.R. 1969 Guj. 100.

S. 27 does not deal with the accused's conduct or acts; they are admissible under S. 8. The accused's conduct, in response to a Police Officer's question even if it is not 'information supplied by the accused which relates distinctly to the fact thereby discovered' as contemplated by S. 27 is admissible as the 'effect of a relevant fact' under S. 7, and 'as conduct' with reference to a relevant fact under S. 3 or even as part of a set of facts necessary to explain a relevant fact or tending to establish the identity of anything under S. 9; it is not a confession which necessarily must be a statement; the modern tendency is to admit, and not to exclude, pieces of evidence if reasonably and legally possible: (1971) 1 Cut.W.R. 351.

A statement not partaking the character of a confession envisaged by S. 27 would not be admissible because of S. 162 of the Code of Criminal Procedure; however, the accused's going to a place and causing recovery of some clothes, etc. is admissible as his conduct under S. 8: 1992 All.L.J. 588: 1992 Cr.L.J. 1755 (D.B.).

Statements are not synonymous with conduct; only those statements which accompany and explain acts other than statements can be regarded as 'conduct': 1972 All.L.J. 744.

Circumstantial evidence against accused — Conduct of accused incompatible with innocence — Absence of explanation and false explanation regarding facts proved — Offence can reasonably be held to be proved: I.L.R. (1963) 2 Ker. 26: (1963) 2 Cr.L.J. 458.

Conduct of witness that after having seen the accused beating victim, he went to the relation of the victim and reported the same to him, held, cannot be said to be unnatural: 1974 W.L.N. (U.C.) 118 (Raj.) (D.B.).

Res gestae.—See also S. 6, supra. Cunliffe, J. S. 8 embodies in a statutory form, the rule of evidence that the testimony of res gestae is always allowable when it goes to the root of the matter concerning the commission of the crime. It is controlled and circumscribed by S. 27 of the Act: I.L.R. 63 Cal. 1053: A.I.R. 1936 Cal. 316. See also A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 200.

The statements of woman raped by neighbours are inadmissible under S. 6 but admissible as a complaint under S. 8: 4 Lah.L.J. 491: A.I.R. 1921 Lah. 258. As to statements of a raped girl, to persons immediately after occurrence, see 82 I.C.142: A.I.R. 1925 Nag. 74; A.I.R. 1926 Pat. 58. See also 4 M.L.J. 491.

Naturally, on finding a young girl in a pool of blood her parents or relations or occupants of the house might succumb to the grief and speak nothing; their first endeavour would be to try to save her life rather than to rush to the Police Station to lodge the report; the omission to report the matter to the police immediately, held, is not suspicious: (1991) 4 Bom.C.R. 536.

The statements made by a victim in a rape case to other witnesses regarding the offence are admissible in evidence of conduct as indicated by Illus. (j) to S. 8, Evidence Act: 1956 An.W.R. 572. Rape—No direct evidence—Child victim not making any statement—Statement of mother as regards answers given by child in reply to questions put to her not admissible: A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 84: 120 I.C. 539.

Where soon after the attempted rape, the prosecutrix, weeping and wearing blood-stained clothes, on being asked by her mother and another, made a statement to them, held, her statement is admissible under S. 6 and S. 8(j): 1989 M.P.L.J. 243.

S. 8 does not render a statement by a woman raped admissible in evidence when there is nothing to corroborate or confirm the same: 32 Cr.L.J. 751: A.I.R. 1921 Mad. 233 (2).

In a case of rape the statement made by the complainant immediately after the occurrence to her mother is legally admissible and relevant as evidence of conduct under S. 8. It is also admissible as corroboration of the evidence of the complainant in Court under S. 157. What weight is to be attached to such statement is, of course, different matter. In some cases its weight may be nil, but in other cases, where corroboration is not essential to conviction, conduct of this kind may be more than enough in itself to justify acceptance of the complainant's story. This depends upon the facts of each case: (1963) 1 Cr.L.J. 310: 29 Cut.L.T. 540: A.I.R. 1963 Ori. 58. See also 1990 Cr.L.J. 1129 (Madh. Pra.) (D.B.).

Offence under S. 376, Penal Code—Raped girl aged four years crying and disclosing name of accused—Evidence of commission of offence on her private parts — Also evidence of stains of blood and semen on clothes of accused—Held, that all the circumstances put together would necessarily lead to the only conclusion that it was the accused who had committed the offence and hence the order of acquittal should be set aside. Though evidence of statements made to her mother by the girl could not be given, evidence of her and the mother's conduct was relevant under second part of S. 8. Further, the mere absence of semen on the clothing of the girl or in the vaginal swab or, the request of the girl's father to the Doctor to give anti-tetanus injection to her, did not mean that rape was not committed: (1965) 67 Bom.L.R. 16: A.I.R. 1965 Bom. 154.

Prosecutrix, a six years old girl, narrating the incident of rape to her mother shortly after the occurrence — Held, the statement could be received in evidence under S. 8 since it constituted subsequent conduct of the victim: 1989 Cr.L.J. 2238 (Him. Pra.) (D.B.).

Statement by person robbed immediately after robbery and assault is admissible as part of the res gestae: I.L.R. 6 Pat. 747: A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 162.

Statement to Police Officer and complaint in his presence — Admissibility — The evidence of Police Officer and the complainant as to the pointing out of the various places by the accused was a confession of his guilt made while he was in the custody of the Police Officer and inadmissible under Ss. 25 and 26. The evidence could not be treated as evidence of conduct, apart from the accompanying statements under S. 8 of the Act: 20 Cr.L.J. 681: (1919) 21 Bom.L.R. 724; 11 O.W.N. 1383: A.I.R. 1935 Oudh 1.

If an accused accompanies a Police Officer and points out the spot where the stolen property is concealed, it amounts to conduct, proof of which is admissible under S. 8: 35 I.C. 962: 17 Cr.L.J. 402: I.L.R. (1936) Nag. 78: A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 200; I.L.R. 63 Cal. 1063: A.I.R. 1936 Cal. 316; A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 220: I.L.R. (1937) Nag. 268 (Conversation between accused and Police at time of search leading to discovery of incriminating article is admissible). But the mere fact that the accused pointed out the several places of incidents narrated by the approver is not admissible as evidence of conduct: A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 794.

An information is not distinctly connected with the fact discovered or its portion which merely explains the thing discovered, being not admissible under S. 27, cannot be proved; if the thing concealed not known to the Police is discovered by such information, it would lend assurance that the information was true. No witness with whom some material fact, like a weapon or stolen property or other incriminating article, is not hidden, or sold or kept, unknown to the Police, can be said to be discovered as a consequence of the information furnished by the accused. These examples are only illustrative, not exhaustive. What makes the information leading to the discovery of the witness admissible is the discovery from him of the thing sold to him or hidden or kept with him which the Police otherwise did not know; a witness cannot be said to be 'discovered' if nothing is found or recovered from him as a consequence of the information; the information which merely disclosed the witness's identity is not admissible under S. 27; but here the evidence of the Investigating Officer and the panchas that the accused had taken them to a shopkeeper who sells daggers and pointed him out, as corroborated by the shopkeeper himself, would be admissible under S. 8 of the Evidence Act as conduct of the accused: A.I.R. 1972 S.C. 975: 1972 Cr.L.J. 606.

There is a clear distinction between the conduct of an accused admissible under S. 8 and his statement to a Police Officer during investigation which is hit by S. 152 of the Code of Criminal Procedure; S. 162 excludes the accused's statement to a Police Officer during investigation but not his conduct when confronted or questioned by a Police Officer during the investigation. Thus, evidence of the circumstance, simpliciter, that the accused had led a Police Officer and pointed out the place where stolen articles or weapons were found hidden is admissible as his conduct under S. 8, whether or not any statement made by the accused contemporaneously with or antecedent to such conduct falls under S. 27: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 400.

The accused's conduct in leading the Police to the place and bringing out the stolen articles from underneath the earth, held, is relevant under S. 8: (1981) 52 Cut.L.T. 126: 1981 Cr.L.J. 1452. See also (1977) 1 Cut.W.R. 351; 1975 Cr.L.J. 1560 (Ori.) (D.B.); (1974) 40 Cut.L.T. 491; 1973 Cut.L.R. (Cr.) 413; (1971) 1 Cut.W.R. 351.

Where the accused's statement was not recorded but he led the Police to a tank and brought out stolen articles from it, held, it amounts to the accused's conduct relevant under S. 8, though as his statement, it is not admissible under S. 27; the evidence of recovery not being contradicted, it could not be contended that the accused merely knew about the articles being there in the tank. [1979 Cr.L.J. 329 (S.C.), Foll.]: 1984 Cr.L.J. 518. See also 1972 Cr.L.J. 815 (All.) (D.B.).

An accused's act, as distinguished from his statement, in pointing out case property is admissible under S. 8 as evidence of conduct; non-recovery does not materially affect the account of the incident, for recovery is only a corroborative piece of evidence; if other direct or substantial evidence is on record, want of such corroboration cannot weaken the prosecution: 1973 Cr.L.J. 481.

That human blood was found on the dress worn by the accused is an incriminating circumstance, particularly when the dress is recovered at the accuseds' instance: (1994) 1 Ker.L.J. 136 (D.B.).

Where the accused had merely taken out the axe from beneath his cot and there was nothing to show that he concealed it at a place known to him alone and no one else, and the accused had not even made any statement under S. 27 relating to its recovery, held, the production of the weapon is not admissible either under S. 8 or S. 27: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 1262. See also 1972 All.Cr.R. 125 (D.B.).

Conduct of accused.—Hearsay evidence which does not explain the accused's conduct, held, is not admissible even under S. 8: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 898: 1974 Cr.L.J. 751: (1974) 4 S.C.C. 611.

The conduct of an accused soon after an incident, plays an important part in the determination of the guilt and is a corroborative piece of evidence: 1953 Cr.L.J. 217: A.I.R. 1953 Bhopal 1. Where the evidence against a person charged with an offence under S. 147, I.P. Code, is open to doubt, his conduct, some time after the occurrence cannot be taken to be evidence under S. 8 and cannot be used against him in the case: 54 I.C. 775: 21 Cr.L.J. 167. As to evidence of conduct of character, see 97 I.C. 1041: A.I.R. 1927 Sind 28.

As to evidence of subsequent conduct, see also 5 W.R. (Cr.) 28: I.L.R. 9 All. 528 at 568.

Production of the deceased's watch by the accused before the Police, held, can be taken as a conduct against him alongwith other evidence, even though the disclosure statement does not reveal the authorship of the concealment: 1994 Cr.L.J. 555 (Ker.) (D.B.). See also 1993 Cr.L.J. 3151 (Ker.) (D.B.); 1994 Cr.L.J. 162 (Ker.) (D.B.).

The conduct of a person who has had no part in a crime and has not been called as a witness cannot be brought under S. 8 as being a relevant fact constituting motive or preparation: A.I.R. 1935 Nag. 81: 17 Nag.L.J. 274. Illus. (e) to S. 8 apply only if it could be shown that the act of the person providing evidence would have the effect of giving an appearance favourable to himself: A.I.R. 1957 Him. Pra. 52: 1957 Cr.L.J. 1254; 1972 Cr.L.J. 1342 (S.C.); (1975) 2 Cr.L.T. 119 (Him. Pra.).

A husband is expected to protect his wife; but where he left the house after setting her to fire and was arrested the next day, held, this conduct was consistent with his guilt: (1985) 1 Bom.C.R. 559 (D.B.).

Antecedent and posterior conduct of the accused showing that he was sane and normal prior to, and after the commission of, offence, held, his plea of insanity must fail: 1994 Cr.L.J. 1173 (Ker.) (D.B.).

Where the deceased was murdered in his bedroom by an axe blow on his neck and evidence showed that the accused, his wife, had put the villagers on a false track by telling them that the deceased had gone away from the village and had not returned, held, her conduct was clearly admissible under S. 8 as part of res gestae as an evidence of conduct immediately after the occurrence: A.I.R. 1987 S.C. 1572: (1987) 3 S.C.C. 227.

The accused-wife's silence after the disappearance of her husband, her not reporting his disappearance to the Police even after about one month, and thereafter recovery of his dead body from the house, held, are sufficient circumstances to draw a presumption of guilt against her: 1975 Raj.L.W. 341 (D.B.).

Where the accused brought the deceased's children to the Police Station and confessed his guilt, held, it would be admissible only as conduct under S. 8, and not otherwise: 1979 W.L.N. (U.C.) 252 (Raj.) (D.B.).

The surrender of an accused before the Police with least possible delay is not a circumstance going against him: 1985 Cr.L.J. 1373.

A criminal trial is not an enquiry into the accused's conduct; the initial burden always lies on the prosecution, specially in a case of circumstantial evidence, to complete the chain of events which may lead to an irresistible inference of the accused's guilt and to negative every hypothesis suggesting his innocence. Only such conduct which destroys the presumption of his innocence can be accepted as evidence against the accused: (1973) 3 Sim.L.J. 413.

Where the accused, after the offence, went to the Police Patil carrying a sickle and wearing a cap, a banian and a dhoti, all bloodstained, narrated the occurrence to the Patil and took him, alongwith another person, to the spot and showed them the dead body, with numerous injuries, held, the accused's conduct immediately after the occurrence, as deposed to by the Patil, is relevant under S. 8: (1972) 2 Mys.L.J. 6.

The refund of the defrauded money by the accused to complainant's mother justified the inference of guilt: (1972) 2 Sim.L.J. 335.

The accused's immediate reactions in a bribery trap case to the complainant's illegal overture or action in inserting unwanted something in the accused's pocket which the accused did not throw out and was caught there or immediately thereafter with the money in his pocket, held, is admissible as evidence of his conduct under S. 8: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 449: (1976) 1 S.C.C. 644: (1976) 3 S.C.R. 119.

At the time when the accused was called upon to produce the money which had been received as bribe from a person, the accused hesitated and he was trembling and perspiring. Held, that the conduct of the accused under such circumstances was a relevant factor which should be taken into consideration by the Court: A.I.R. 1960 Mys. 111: 1960 Cr.L.J. 934. Admissibility of statements accompanying acts. See I.L.R. 3 Bom. 12 at 17; I.L.R. 14 Bom. 260; 10 Beng.L.R. App. 2; (1902) 4 Bom.L.R. 284. See also A.I.R. 1941 Oudh 359 (Admissibility of voluntary statements to Police by accused subsequent to the first information report.)

What the conspirators did, that is to say, their conduct, is relevant under S. 8 and it is immaterial whether the conduct on which the prosecution relies was previous or subsequent to carrying out of the object of the conspiracy: 1941 O.W.N. 133: A.I.R. 1941 Oudh 130.

Expl. (1).—What is relevant under S. 8 is the particular act upon the statement, and the statement and the act must be so blended together as to form a part of a thing observed by the witnesses and sought to be proved. Otherwise the statements are inadmissible: 29 Nag.L.R. 251: A.I.R. 1933 Nag. 136. Accused while going out after taking the alleged bribe being halted, making statement—Statement, held, not admissible under S. 8: 1954 Cr.L.J. 230: A.I.R. 1954 S.C. 15.

Witness not disclosing names of the accused persons to the villagers, held, it only shows that the accused were not previously known to him: A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 1814.

Expl. (2).—An informer's statement to the Police that he purchased opium from the accused is not admissible unless it was made in the presence of the accused: 12 Cr.L.J. 479: 4 Bur.L.T. 222.

But the finding of marked coins on the accused and opium on the informer are circumstances from which it may be inferred that the accused sold the opium: 12 I.C. 87.

What is admissible in evidence under S. 8 of the Evidence Act is the conduct of a person and his statement which affects or influences that conduct. Even silence may in certain circumstances amount to conduct, but it must be a positive silence which can conclusively be taken to be conduct: I.L.R. (1950) Cut. 509: A.I.R. 1951 Ori. 53.

Right from the time the mother of the deceased was appraised that her daughter was found to be missing she openly gave out that she suspected foul play and that her fear was that the accused, her son-in-law, must have got her done to death. She repeated this even in the presence of the accused, but on hearing the accusation he not only did not protest but abruptly left the house and thereafter avoided his mother-in-law even when sent for. Held, that the silence observed by the accused when the accusation was made and what he did on hearing that would be relevant material to be taken into account alongwith other circumstances: 1959 Ker.L.T. 167: I.L.R. (1959) Ker. 319.

The statement made by the Police Officer to the complainant in the presence of the accused that he (the accused) was going to show the various places connected with the theft was not admissible under S. 8, Expl. (2), because such a statement could not be said to affect the conduct of the accused: 52 I.C. 601: (1919) 21 Bom.L.R. 724.

The conduct of an accused, previous or subsequent to commission of an offence is evidence against him, if relevant. It is relevant if it influences or is influenced by any fact in issue or relevant fact. But where the fact in issue is commission of dacoity and relevant fact is possession of stolen property by accused suspicious conduct of keeping concealed a sum of money and of pointing out the place where it is kept concealed, in the absence of any thing to show that the property is stolen property, is not influenced by any fact in issue or relevant fact: 1954 Cr.L.J. 793: A.I.R. 1954 Kutch 20.

Where D and V were co-accused in a case under S. 161, I.P.Code, V alleged to have taken the bribe on behalf of D and as per his instructions, the conduct of V in not being able to offer explanation to his taking the amount when questioned immediately, after the event, was suspicious and his explanation in his statement under S. 342, Cr.P.Code, was unsatisfactory and D was convicted of the offence on those grounds. Held, the conduct of the co-accused R in evidence at the trial is relevant for and against himself if such conduct influences or is influenced by any fact in issue or relevant fact whether it was previous or subsequent thereto (S. 8 of Evidence Act).

But if it is not relevant against D, there is no indication in S. 342 of the Cr.P.Code that the answers given by one accused can be used against his co-accused. S. 30 of Evidence Act is the only exception to the general rule that the confession is evidence against the confessor alone and not against the co-accused. The statement, under S. 342, Cr.P. Code by R cannot be taken into consideration to find if D was guilty of the offence: A.I.R. 1951 Simla 14.

First information report as evidence of conduct: I.L.R. 64 Cal. 237: 99 I.C. 227. Accusation by woman against man for attempt to ravish—Statements by her to witnesses—Silence of accused—Relevancy: A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 127.

Illus. (a).—In a trial of the accused woman for the murder of her brother-in-law the facts that the relations between the deceased and the accused were strained, that the deceased threatened to expose the accused to her husband when he returned from outstation that the deceased was beaten five days before his murder by poisoning by the accused's paramour are relevant under S. 8, showing motive or preparation: A.I.R. 1959 Him. Pra. 3.

Absconding—Whether proof of guilt.—Absconding is no doubt a relevant piece of evidence but its value would always depend on the circumstances of each case; the Courts are normally disinclined to attach much importance to absconding and treat it as a very small item; it is scarcely taken as a determining link in completing the chain of circumstantial evidence which must admit of no other reasonable hypothesis than that of the accused's guilt: A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 1050: 1971 Cr.L.J. 913; 1976 Cr.L.J. 1629 (J.&K.) (D.B.).

Absconding by itself is no proof of guilt or guilty mind; even an innocent person, falsely suspected of a grave crime, may be moved by the instinct of self-preservation and run away to avoid arrest: (1984) 58 Cut.L.T. 211; A.I.R. 1972 S.C. 110. Absconding is a weak link in the chain of circumstances and is not conclusive either of guilt or a guilty conscience: 1988 Cr.L.J. 1884 (Ori.) (D.B.).

Though abscondence evidence is relevant, it is not of much evidentiary value. Even innocent men when accused of serious offences are likely to run away from the arm of law: (1965) 1 Cr.L.J. 565: A.I.R. 1965 Mys. 128.

Even innocent persons may, when suspected of grave crimes, be tempted to evade arrest; such is the instinct of self-preservation in average human beings. Absconding is not, in itself, indicative of a guilty mind: A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 1871: 1971 M.L.J. (Cr.) 336; A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 1050: 1971 Cr.L.J. 913.

The prosecution cannot benefit from merely the suspicious circumstance of the accused not surrendering or being untraceable for nearly a year. [(1969) 3 S.C.C. 741, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 1193.

Where the accused who is alleged to have committed murder, remained absconding till the time he surrendered himself in the Court, it is no doubt a circumstance against the accused. However, that by itself leads to nothing. Sometimes even those who are innocent abscond only due to fear. Everything, therefore, depends on the reliability of the eye-witnesses of the occurrence: 1963 All.L.J. 977.

For being an 'absconder', the accused need not have run away from his home; it is sufficient if he hides himself, even in his own home, to evade the process of law: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 76: (1976) 1 S.C.C. 181.

Though the mere fact that an accused person has absconded will not necessarily fix him with guilt, the fact is undoubtedly a piece of relevant evidence against him: (1933) 35 Punj.L.R. 740; 1980 Cr.L.R. 437 (Bom.).

In order that the Court can legitimately draw the inference that the subsequent conduct of an accused was that of guilty person and not of an innocent man, there must be proper material placed before the Court. Where all that the prosecution has placed before the Court are two bold statements, both made by Police Sub-Inspector: (1) that the accused was not in the village on the day soon after the incident when the Police went there; and (2) that Police Sub-Inspector had sent about four constables in search of the accused to some villages, that evidence is wholly insufficient to lead to the inference that the accused was absconding since the date of the incident. In order to lead to that inference, the investigating Police Officer must lay before the Court further evidence to show that continuous watch was kept at the house of the accused concerned, and that a watch was also kept by him of the places which the accused frequented, including his place of work, but the accused did not turn up at all at any of those places during a certain period of time. In the absence of such evidence no inference can be drawn that the accused was absconding and his subsequent conduct was that of a guilty person: (1970) 72 Bom.L.R. 405: 1970 Mah.L.J. 634: A.I.R. 1970 Bom. 438.

Accused absconding from village after commission of offence—Fact of asbsconding is relevant: A.I.R. 1970 Ori. 54.

Absconding—Can be relevant as explaining subsequent conduct under S. 8: 1969 Cr.L.J. 1393: A.I.R. 1969 Goa 116.

That the accused remained absent from their normal residence and remained concealed elsewhere after the occurrence testifies to their guilty mind: (1983) 23 Del.L.T. 338.

Accused escaped from Police custody—This mere conduct is no reason to conclude that he was guilty of the offence charged with: 1974 B.L.J.R. 642.

Mens rea.—The appellant, as a registration clerk in Post Office, was given a permanent advance for purchase of stamps. He was caught redhanded affixing a previously used stamp. As a result of check shortly after, it was discovered that there was a shortage in the advance money as to which the appellant could give no explanation. Originally, the appellant was charged under Ss. 262, 263 and 409, Penal Code. On the objection by the appellant, at the concluding stage of the trial, charges under Ss. 262 and 263 were struck out. It was contended that in view of the charge under Ss. 262 and 263 having been struck out, the evidence in the case that the appellant was found affixing a used stamp on a cover should be left out of consideration. Held, that the evidence as to the appellant having been found using a previously used stamp was relevant as proving mens rea relating to the offence under S. 409. If that evidence was believed then it furnished unmistakable evidence of mens rea. The fact that the appellant was no longer charged with any offence either under S. 262 or under S. 263, Penal Code, could not affect the admissibility of this evidence. In this view, the case against the accused under S. 409, Penal Code was proved beyond all reasonable doubt: A.I.R. 1955 Cal. 608: 1955 Cr.L.J. 1578.

Where the accused who is charged under S. 411, I.P. Code, for dishonestly receiving a bullock knowing it to be stolen property, states to the Police that he purchased it from a certain person and produces in support of his statement a receipt which is found not to include the bullock and as to which there is evidence that he made an attempt to get it altered, the conduct of the accused can be taken into account to prove his guilty knowledge: (1933) 35 Punj.L.R. 738: A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 695.

In criminal proceedings a man's character is often a matter of importance in explaining his conduct and in judging his innocence or criminality. Many acts of an accused person would be suspicious or free from all suspicion when the character of the person by whom they are done is known. Even on the question of punishment an accused is allowed to prove general good character. Thus, where the allegation against the accused was that he was acting in pursuance of

9. Facts necessary to explain or introduce relevant facts.—Facts necessary to explain or introduce a fact in issue or relevant fact, or which support or rebut an inference suggested by a fact in issue or relevant fact, or which establish the identity of anything or person whose identity is relevant, or fix the time or place at which any fact in issue or relevant fact happened, or which show the relation of parties by whom any such fact was transacted, are relevant in so far as they are necessary for that purpose.

(a) The question is, whether a given document is the will of A.

The state of A's property and of his family at the date of the alleged will may be relevant facts.

(b) A sues B for a libel imputing disgraceful conduct to A; B affirms that the matter alleged to be libellous is true.

The position and relations of the parties at the time when the libel was published may be relevant facts as introductory to the facts in issue.

The particulars of a dispute between A and B about a matter unconnected with the alleged libel are irrelevant, though the fact that there was a dispute may be relevant if it affected the relations between A and B.

the policy of the Ittehadul-Muslimeen, that his state of mind was to exterminate the Hinduism, held, that the accused was entitled to lead evidence to show that he did not possess that state of mind: 1954 S.C.R. 475: A.I.R. 1954 S.C. 51; 1980 M.P.L.J. 300 (D.B.).

Construction of document.—Where the terms of the document (ancient grant) are unambiguous, it is not open to the Court to say that the document means something else than what it clearly says, merely because the parties have gone on for a long time so understanding it. In a case of ambiguity, however, the Court can uphold that construction of a deed which justifies a long usage; but where there is no ambiguity the Court will not accept an erroneous interpretation though consistent with usage so as to sanction a manifest breach of trust: 1954 B.L.J.R. 381: A.I.R. 1954 Pat. 586.

Ss. 8 and 32.—A statement of a person believed but not proved to be dead is no doubt not admissible under S. 32 but the document, however, is admissible under S. 8, to a limited extent, to show the conduct of the party. It, however, is not a direct proof of the facts contained in it: (1938) 40 P.L.R. J.&K. 1.

Where the deceased had made a complaint to the Police shortly before his death, stating that he apprehended danger to his life at the hands of certain persons, held, it is admissible under S. 8, whether or not it is admissible under S. 32(1). It is evidence of the conduct of a person, an offence against whom was the subject of the trial: I.L.R. (1938) 1 Cal. 290: A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 51.

Statement of persons deceased inadmissible under S. 32—Evidence of it offered as evidence of that person's conduct and not to prove that statement as the statement of a deceased person is admissible: (1954) 1 M.L.J. 194: A.I.R. 1954 Mad. 215.

1. Scope of section.—(See also Notes under Ss. 5, 14 and 15). Ss. 9 and 11 read alongwith S. 21 justify a Court in admitting into evidence all previous statements made by the accused bearing on the question of his guilt whether made to a Police Officer or to a third party if the statement is relevant to the fact in the issue. These sections are not controlled by the Cr.P. Code: 73 I.C. 963: 4 Pat.L.T. 381.

(c) A is accused of a crime.

The fact that, soon after the commission of the crime, A absconded from his house, is relevant, under section 8, as conduct subsequent to and affected by facts in issue.

The fact that at the time when he left home he had sudden and urgent business at the place to which he went, is relevant, as tending to explain the fact that he left home suddenly.

The details of the business on which he left are not relevant, except in so far as they are necessary to show that the business was sudden and urgent.

(d) A sues B for inducing C to break a contract of service made by him with A, C, on leaving A's service, says, to A—"I am leaving you because B has made me a better offer". This statement is a relevant fact as explanatory of C's conduct, which is relevant as a fact in issue.

(e) A, accused of theft, is seen to give the stolen property to B, who is seen to give it to A's wife. B says as he delivers it—"A says you are to hide this". B's statement is relevant as explanatory of a fact which is part of the transaction.

(f) A is tried for a riot and is proved to have marched at the head of a mob. The cries of the mob are relevant as explanatory of the nature of the transaction.

In assessing the value of land the evidence of the value of comparable hereditament is relevant and admissible. But the value of such evidence or the weight of such evidence would depend upon the circumstances of each case. When there is direct evidence of the value of the particular hereditament the evidence of value furnished by a comparable hereditament would be very unimportant but when there is no such direct evidence it would be important: A.I.R. 1959 Cal. 413.

Assessment of market value—Evidence—Sale between two private parties in nature of willing purchaser and willing vendor in open market and land in it also very close to suit lands—Held, sale deed could be accepted as sound basis for assessing market value of suit lands: (1968) 1 An. W.R. 348.

Where to prove residence at the suit premises, letters addressed at such premises were produced without examining the senders thereof, held, it could not be said that the letters held no evidentiary value; their contents having no bearing upon the question under consideration, their contents need not be proved by producing their writer as a witness: (1984) 2 Bom.C.R. 671.

If after the commission of a crime, a person, whose name is mentioned as a participator in the crime, absconds, his conduct implies that he is concerned in the crime. Anything, therefore, which tends to explain his conduct and furnishes motive other than a guilty conscience, is relevant under S. 9: 62 I.C. 545: (1920) 22 Bom.L.R. 1274. The absconding or disappearance of the accused after the offence, without any plausible explanation therefor, is a circumstance against him; but no conviction can be based thereon unless there is other evidence to connect the accused with the crime when his absconding may serve as corroborative evidence; facts tending to explain the absconding are relevant under S. 9, Evidence Act, Illus. (c). [A.I.R. 1930 Oudh 324, Foll.]: 1971 Cr.L.J. 1656 (Raj.). See also S. 8, Note 3, supra.

As to recitals of boundaries in documents between strangers to suit, see (1925-26) 30 Cal.W.N. 761: A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 948; I.L.R. 8 Lah. 657: A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 448. See also notes under S. 13, infra. Court judgments about comparable land is relevant in determining compensation in land acquisition cases. [A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 2403, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1982 N.O.C. 165 (Del.). Every kind of evidence, whether it is an offer, an agreement to sell, a sale, an award by a Collector or a judgment of the Court in respect of adjacent land, held, is relevant for determining the value of acquired land: I.L.R. (1979) 1 Del. 545 (D.B.).

'In so far as they are necessary for that purpose'—Facts as referred to in section, introduced in evidence are useful only for the purpose in question and no other: (1967) 69 Bom. L.R. 808: 1968 Cr. L.J. 1584: A.I.R. 1968 Bom. 400.

In a case of sedition, the copy of the accused's letter to the press is admissible under Ss. 9 and 14, but it is necessary to prove that such a letter was sent before it could be admitted: (1928) 30 Bom.L.R. 314: A.I.R. 1928 Bom. 77. In an offence of conspiracy to commit dacoity, evidence as to previous association of accused for criminal purposes is admissible under S. 9 but not under S. 11: I.L.R. 54 Bom. 524: A.I.R. 1930 Bom. 157. As to the admissibility of evidence of assessment of neighbouring land to determine the letting of a piece of land, see A.I.R. 1940 Cal. 47: (1939-40) 44 Cal.W.N. 165: I.L.R. (1940) 1 Cal. 168. Proceedings under S. 488, Cr.P. Code—Evidence of blood group test when question of paternity is in issue: 1957 M.L.J. (Cr.) 822. A statement of the deceased as to some matter other than the cause and/or the circumstances of his death made two days prior to his death is inadmissible and the fact that the object of introducing this piece of evidence was to furnish a background or indeed a motive for the crime cannot excuse the reception of inadmissible evidence: A.I.R. 1955 Cal. 559: 1953 Cr.L.J. 1358.

S. 27 does not deal with the accused's conduct or acts which are admissible under S. 8. The accused's conduct, in response to a Police Officer's question even if it is not 'information supplied by the accused which relates distinctly to the fact thereby discovered' as contemplated by S. 27 is also admissible as the 'effect of a relevant fact' under S. 7, and 'as conduct' with reference to a relevant fact under S. 3 or even as part of a set of facts necessary to explain a relevant fact or tending to establish the identity of anything under S. 9; the modern tendency is to admit, and not to exclude, pieces of evidence if reasonably and legally possible: (1971) 1 Cut.W.R. 351.

During investigation, identification of the properties or persons involved in the offence may be necessary; recognition, a conscious reminder and a positive representation, involves statements, express or implied. A hint, a tip, a glance, a wave, a nudge, a touch, a sign and other gestures may indicate identity; they constitute implied representations of convincing credibility; when communicated from the core of evidence regarding identity and an identification parade, they are intended to establish the accused's identity from an assembly of persons. [A.I.R. 1955 S.C. 104; A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 1527; A.I.R. 1970 S.C. 1619; A.I.R. 1936 P.C. 253; A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 447 and A.I.R. 1972 S.C. 283, Rel. on]: 1985 Ker.L.T. 62.

The impression about the general appearance of the thing is exceedingly common; a workman has it of his tools and most people have it of their dress, jewellery and other things they are frequently seeing, handling or using. Undoubtedly animals and things may be identified by those familiar with them. Observation teaches that such identification may be safely relied upon. But at the same time, a witness would not be able to formulate his reasons for the identification since it is based upon general untranslatable impressions of the mind: 1958 M.L.J. (Cr.) 341: I.L.R. (1957) Mys. 177: A.I.R. 1958 Mys. 150.

The accused was convicted only on the basis of his having been identified from his voice by a prosecution witness. The prosecution witness had not seen the accused. The plea of alibi of the accused was rejected on the ground that the Kotwari book had some torn pages at the end. The entries had been in the register in a serial and chronological order.

Held, that the criterion of recognising people merely from their voice cannot be a sure test of identification as it may prove dangerous as also deceptive on most occasions. The Courts below were not justified in relying on the method of identification from a vocal test. Under the law the Kotwar is required to maintain a register of persons who visit the village. Those entries have been made in the said register in a serial and chronological order. Merely because some pages are torn, the evidentiary value of the said register is not in any way minimised. The Courts had committed an error of law in relying on the prosecution evidence which failed to establish the identity of the accused and in rejecting the defence supported by official record kept in the regular course of business: 1958 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 135.

Superimposed photograph of deceased over skeleton of human body to prove that skeleton was of deceased is admissible to prove the identity of skeleton.

Held, that a superimposed photograph of the deceased over the skeleton of a human body (skull) recovered of a tank was admitted under S. 9 to prove the fact that the skeleton was that of the deceased.

Held also, that even if this photograph was not admissible in evidence the verdict of the jury and the conviction of the accused under S. 302 could not be set aside because there was very cogent other evidence to prove the identity of the skeleton: (1963) 2 S.C.R. (Supp.) 852: A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 1074.

Photograph, use of in evidence—Question of parentage of person in issue—Similarity in likeness of person admitted and person disputed—Photograph cannot be used to establish parentage: 1962 B.L.J.R. 323: A.I.R. 1962 Pat. 420.

S. 22 of the Terrorist and Disruptive Activities (Prevention) Act, 1987 provides that evidence of the identification of a proclaimed offender in a terrorist case by witnesses on the basis of his photograph shall have the same value as evidence based on a test identification parade, held, were that so, it might result in gross injustice to the detriment of the proclaimed offender; S. 22 accordingly struck down: 1995 Cr.L.J. 3139 (S.C.).

The evidence of an identifier himself at the trial that he identified the accused or incriminating articles before the Police is admissible in evidence by way of corroboration of his identification at the trial.

Identification proceedings are held before the Magistrate to enable the Court to judge the value of the evidence of the witnesses identifying the accused or the article. There are so many factors that enter in judging the value of the evidence of a witness and identification proceedings may throw a light on the credit to be given to the evidence of the witness: I.L.R. (1961) 11 Raj. 299: A.I.R. 1962 Raj. 3.

Statement made to a Police Officer is inadmissible in evidence under S. 162 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. A statement made to a Police Officer regarding investigation is also within the mischief of S. 162. If, however, the identification parade is conducted under the exclusive direction and supervision of Panch witnesses, the statement involved even by implication in the process of recognition and identification will be outside the purview of S. 162. Under the guise of conducting an identification parade, it is not the province of a Magistrate to record "other statements which have a bearing in establishing the guilt of the accused except in accordance with S. 164 of the Code". He is not expected and he cannot interrogate witnesses to elicit any other fact or call them to make any statement beyond mere identification. Those statements if recorded, would be clearly inadmissible in evidence. The present direction of the Chief Judicial Magistrate is not covered by any statutory provisions. The case is still at the investigation stage. The powers of Court at this stage do not extend to give directions either to the prosecution or to the defence regarding the conduct of the investigation or the shaping of the defence. It is the statement of witnesses in Court that constitute substantive evidence. The sworn testimony of a witness in Court as to the identity of a person requires corroboration which is provided by an earlier identification parade. This is a relevant fact under S. 9 of the Evidence Act. When there is no substantive evidence as to the identity of the accused, the earlier identification parade is no longer of any assistance to the prosecution. An identification parade on its own force does not constitute substantive evidence. [A.I.R. 1955 S.C. 104; A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 1527; A.I.R. 1970 S.C. 1619; A.I.R. 1936 P.C. 253; A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 447 and A.I.R. 1972 S.C. 283, Rel. on]: 1985 Ker.L.T. 62.

Applicability—Pointing out by a person to Investigating Officer, apprehended persons as culprits is tantamount to statement made to Police Officer and is sufficient to attract S. 162—But it does not exclude evidence which such person himself may have to give in regard to his mental act of identification by way of corroboration of his identification of accused at trial: 1968 All Cr.R. 224.

The test identification parade conducted by a Police Officer alone attracts the operation of S. 162, Cr.P. Code which makes that evidence inadmissible: 1960 Ker.L.T. 965.

Statement of witness recorded in derogation of S. 164, Cr.P. Code is not admissible under S. 9, Evidence Act—Memorandum of condition of house by Magistrate and his evidence thereon is admissible under S. 9, Evidence Act: A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 1527. See also 1974 Raj.L.W. 192.

Where the property to be identified was not scaled at the time of the recovery, little value can be attached to the test identification proceeding. But even a total failure to hold a test identification proceeding would not make inadmissible the evidence of identification in Court: 1960 Raj.L.W. 411: I.L.R. (1960) 10 Raj. 921: (1961) 1 Cr.L.J. 310: A.I.R. 1961 Raj. 35.

No hard and fast rule can be laid down that oral evidence of identification ought never to be accepted without corroboration. Where the circumstances in the case disclosed any necessity for it, it should be sought for. The evidence of identity must be thoroughly scrutinized, giving benefit of all doubt to the accused, but, if, after a thorough scrutiny, there appears to be nothing on record to suspect the testimony of the identification witnesses, the Court ought not to feel shy of basing a conviction on such evidence alone because of the bare possibility that there could be honest though mistaken, identification: 1960 M.P.C. 216: 1960 Jab.L.J. 356: 1960 M.P.L.J. 299.

Test identification ordered—If violates fundamental rights: (1961) 2 Cr.L.J. 462: A.I.R. 1961 Cal. 531.

Identification—Suspect in dacoity case—Identification—Suspect arrested in connection with some other offence under Arms Act, in this case — Normal precautions should be taken: 1969 Cr.L.J. 680 (All.).

Identification—Accused arrested during dark night—Witnesses failing to identify in Court — Failure cannot be considered as material—To consider such failure as natural is curious reasoning and unsupportable in law: 1969 Pat.L.J.R. 21.

Procedure under S. 202 (1), Cr.P. Code, is to be adopted where it is necessary to put up person named as accused for identification: A.I.R. 1969 All. 591.

To test the assertions of identifying witness it becomes necessary to pay attention to the following circumstances: (a) whether the witness was a stranger to the accused. How intimate was his knowledge and whether the circumstances under which he first observed him were such as to permit a lasting impression on his mind ? (b) whether the accused had any marked personality or any special peculiarities which at the time of the witness's first observation impressed themselves upon him? (c) whether the length of time which had elapsed between the date of the incident and the date when he was first asked to identify him was not such as to totally affect or considerably dim his original impression ? (d) whether any incident had happened subsequently which had affected, altered or replaced his original impression ? (e) whether the circumstances under which the witness was first asked to identify the accused were such that it could fairly be said that the resemblance between the original impression and the accused was sufficient to base a judgment, not of resemblance, but of identity ? the test identification must, therefore, be conducted under circumstances free from police influence, by independent persons, when the accused is mixed with a sufficient number of persons of like physical appearance. The Court must, therefore, consider what a man placed in the position of the identifying witness could fairly and reasonably be expected to recollect: 1960 M.P.C. 216: 1960 Jab.L.J. 356: 1960 M.P.L.J. 299.

Identification evidence—Defence witness stating that the accused have been frequently visiting village of complainant in connection with his cane business and he was known to complainant and his witnesses from before the occurrence—Nothing on record for rejecting it as untrue—Mere fact that the witness was confined in jail for a trial under Arms Act would not affect his credibility—Identification evidence, held, valueless: 1969 All.Cr.R. 240: 1969 All.W.R. (H.C.) 369.

A statement by the brother of a kidnapped woman that the woman denounced the accused as one of the abductors is admissible under S. 9 as explaining the circumstances of the arrest of the accused and also for the purpose of establishing his identity: A.I.R. 1944 Sind 38. Admissibility of judgment to prove identity. See I.L.R. 18 All. 98. As to comparison of thumb-marks to prove identity, see (1895-96) 1 Cal.W.N. 33; (1904-5) 9 Cal.W.N. 520: I.L.R. 32 Cal. 759. Evidence of identification of accused: 28 O.C. 258: A.I.R. 1926 Oudh 36. Identification proceedings being facts which establish the identity of the accused persons, are themselves relevant under S. 9. [A.I.R. 1944 Sind 38; A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 546; A.I.R. 1930 Oudh 455: 92 I.C. 167 and A.I.R. 1942 Lah. 59, Foll.; A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 641, Diss. from]: A.I.R. 1949 East Punj. 361: (1949) 51 Punj.L.R. 215.

Hearsay evidence is admissible only for certain purposes like when it introduces or explains a conduct or action of the witness before the Court; it cannot be used to examine its truth or otherwise but to establish its connection with the conduct of the witness. Thus, where a boy of seven years, had informed the witnesses that he had seen accused going in a certain direction whereupon they went in that direction to search the accused, and the boy is not examined, this hearsay is admissible for the limited purpose of explaining why the witnesses had gone in that particular direction: 1971 M.P.L.J. 829.

2. Identification in Court.—It is the identification of an accused by a witness in the Court of Sessions or before the Committing Magistrate in the presence of the accused that can be substantive evidence of identification. If that is wanting in a case, the mere fact that in a previous test identification parade he was able to identify him and he admitted this fact during his deposition in Court would not make it substantive evidence. Such a piece of evidence would be very weak: I.L.R. (1956) Cut. 195: A.I.R. 1956 Ori. 177.

The test identification parade only gives some guarantee of truth of identification in Court but ultimately it is identification in Court of the accused persons that should weigh with the Court. Whether there was opportunity for the witness to see the accused at the time of incident, whether they could remember by face the accused persons and whether they could identify them by such memory in Court is the relevant consideration: 1994 Cr.L.J. 1042 (Karn.) (D.B.).

Identification in Court nearly after one year of dacoity, without proof of any special feature in appearance of accused—Evidence of witnesses found artificial and unreliable in cases of co-accused—Accused entitled to benefit of doubt: 1965 All.L.J. 166.

Consistent identification of an accused by an eyewitness, both at the test parade and the trial, may safely be accepted, unless circumstances indicated that the witness has probably made a mistake; when the identification in the Court is not supported by an earlier test parade, it is unsafe to act on that evidence but for the exceptional circumstances like the accused's adequate descriptive particulars earlier given by the witness which corroborate the identification: I.L.R. (1975) Cut. 1384: 1977 Cr.L.J. 319 (D.B.).

The substantive evidence is the statement of the witness in the Court; the object of the test identification is to test the substantive evidence; the safe rule is that the sworn testimony of witness as to the accused's identity in the Court, as a general rule, requires corroboration in the form of an earlier identification: (1971) 2 S.C.W.R. 446: A.I.R. 1972 S.C. 283. See also (1978) 46 Cut.L.T. 496; 1988 Cr.L.J. 264 (Pat.) [1953 B.L.J.R. 703 held no longer good law in view of A.I.R. 1972 S.C. 283].

Identification for the first time during trial is inherently of a very weak character which loses much of its value without prior test identification parade: 1995 Cr.L.J. 2255 (Ori.) (D.B.).

Where a witness, stranger to the accused, identifies him before the Court for the first time, the Court will not ordinarily accept such identification as conclusive; it is to lend assurance to the other testimony of the witnesses; if the accused were identified by the witness soon after their arrest and it did not suffer from any infirmity, the evidence given before the Court stands corroborated. But if the evidence before the Court is itself shaky, the test identification would be of no avail: A.I.R. 1991 S.C. 1468: (1991) 3 S.C.C. 434.

The idea of holding a test identification parade is to test the veracity of the witness about his capacity to identify an unknown person whom the witness may have seen once; in cases where no test identification parade is held, it will be wholly unsafe to rely on his bare testimony about the identification of the accused for the first time in the Court: 1980 All.Cr.R. 142. See also 1982 Cr.L.J. 94 (Ker.) (D.B.).

The evidence of mere identification at the trial for the first time is from its very nature inherently of a weak character. The evidence in order to carry conviction should ordinarily clarify as to how and under what circumstances he came to pick out the particular accused and the details of the part which the accused played in the crime in question with reasonable particularity. The purpose of a prior test identification, therefore, seems to be to test and strengthen the trustworthiness of that evidence. It is accordingly considered a safe rule of prudence to generally look for corroboration of the sworn testimony of witness in Court as to the identity of the accused who are strangers to them, in the form of earlier identification proceedings: A.I.R. 1970 S.C. 1321: 1970 Cr.L.J. 1149.

Where no prior test identification parade was held and the witness identified the accused for the first time in the Court, held, such evidence as to the accused's identity is worthless: 1983 Cr.L.J. 1854 (Cal.); 1982 Raj.L.W. 669 (D.B.); (1982) 53 Cut.L.T. 342; A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 1382: (1980) 2 S.C.C. 665; A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 1127; 1994 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 34 (Raj.) (D.B.).

Without a prior test identification parade, the identification by a witness of the accused not known to the witness, held, is of no value: (1984) 57 Cut.L.T. 27; 1982 All.L.J. 871; A.I.R. 1955 Tripura 19: 1955 Cr.L.J. 1292.

Description of the accused given by the witness in her statement recorded under S. 161, Cr.P.Code entirely different from the one given later—She was not knowing the accused previously and no identification parade was conducted—Held, his identification for the first time in the Court was of no value: 1994 Cr.L.J. 509 (Raj.) (D.B.).

Identification of an accused in the Court alone is not of much evidentiary value; no conviction can ordinarily be based on it. Besides, if the accused offers a reasonable and proper explanation, it is then for the prosecution to affirmatively prove it to be false. In a criminal trial, the accused need not produce defence evidence; he can prove his version by the prosecution witnesses' admissions or the prosecution's documents. The Court should probe and consider the materials relied upon by the defence; it should not draw adverse inferences against the accused for non-production of defence evidence; the prosecution cannot derive any strength or support from weakness of the defence: 1979 Sim.L.C. 262: (1979) 6 Cr.L.T. 18: 1979 Cr.L.J. 1176 (Him. Pra.). See also 1980 All.Cr.R. 185.

Where a crowd of hooligans killed certain persons and the written statement given by witness to the Police did not fully describe the culprits and the prosecution failed to collect sufficient evidence to link the appellants to the particulars of the culprits given in the said written statement and further Investigating Officer did not resort to test identification parades of appellants and it was only in the Court that the witness recognised the appellants as culprits, held, appellants could not be convicted on the basis of such an evidence. [A.I.R. 1970 S.C. 1321; A.I.R. 1978 S.C. 1204; A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 1127, Foll.]: 1995 Cr.L.J. 1116 (Del.) (D.B.).

Identification during the trial is substantive evidence; the test identification parade is only a corroborative evidence. Thus, where the prosecutrix gave the accused's name in the F.I.R., identified him during the trial but failed to do so in the test identification, held, this fact alone was not sufficient to impair an otherwise truthful testimony: 1991 M.P.L.J. 69.

We may presume that the witnesses have correctly identified the accused, but the distance between 'may presume' and 'must presume' is long. In a criminal trial, the prosecution must adduce sufficient evidence to infer that the accused must be presumed to have committed the crime; any infirmity in the identification made for the first time before the Court cannot be set right by such presumption alone. It is high time for the Police and other investigating agencies to realise the necessity of the prior test identification because the accused usually state that they had already been seen by the witnesses, should not stand in their way in arranging such parades: (1972) 2 Sim.L.J. 349.

The evidence of a witness in the Court about the accused's participation in the occurrence is substantive evidence when the accused was not known to the witness prior to the occurrence; the Court, as a rule of prudence, looks for some good corroborative evidence which may come from various circumstantial factors; one of them being the evidence of test identification; it may be of some other kind as well: 1982 All.Cr.R. 326: 1982 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 177.

Identification in an identification parade can be used only as corroboration of identification in the Court; if the accused is not identified in the Court, his identification in the parade is of no use: (1983-84) 88 Cal.W.N. 922 (D.B.). See also 1979 B.L.J.R. 404 (It must also be stated before the Court that the person identified at the parade was who committed the crime).

In case of total strangers, it is not safe to place implicit reliance on the evidence of witnesses who had just a fleeting glimpse of the accused identified or had no particular reason to remember him where the identification is made for the first time in the Court, and more so if the accused had since changed their appearance: A.I.R. 1992 S.C. 2100: 1992 Cr.L.J. 3454.

Where the victim, not knowing the accused earlier, gave no description of the accused in the F.I.R. and no test identification parade took place, and it was only in the Court after four months of the occurrence that the victim identified the accused, held, such identification was no evidence against the accused: A.I.R. 1983 S.C. 367: (1983) 1 S.C.C. 143: 1983 Cr.L.J. 689; 1993 Cr.L.J. 2364 (Mad.) (Identification by the prosecutrix of the accused, not known to her previously, for the first time in Court, after more than three months, held, was of no value). See also 1994 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 399 (Ori.).

Where an accused, wholly unknown to the witnesses, was arrested several years after the offence and there being no test identification, he was identified for the first time in the Court eleven years after the incident, held, such identification could not be relied upon; witnesses could not have recalled the accused's face after eleven years: 1985 Bih.L.T. (Rep.) 82 (D.B.). See also 1992 Cr.L.J. 3987: 1992 All.L.J. 1187.

Under S. 9, facts which establish the identity of a relevant thing or person are relevant in so far as they are necessary for that purpose; identification parades are not substantive evidence; these are helpful to the investigating officer who can satisfy himself of the bona fides of the prosecution witness and also corroborate the testimony of the witness in the Court. Thus, where a witness who had identified the accused in the test identification parade, but was not examined in the Court, the evidence of test identification will have no value; no purpose will be served by examining the Magistrate who had conducted the identification parade; it will only be a hearsay evidence and a waste of public time and public money. [1980 Ker.L.T. (S.N.) 54; 19 All.L.J. 947, Rel. on]: 1982 Ker.L.T. 287.

Where the witness admitted that he was seeing the accused for the first time in the Court $3^1/_2$ years after the theft and that the Police had shown the accused to the witness in the Court prior to his statement, held, evidence of the witness could not be relied upon as to the accused's identification: 1979 Bom.C.R. 30.

Where a witness had described particularly distinguishing features, like being one-eyed or with an amputated leg or hand or being a cripple, of the accused before the Investigating Officer but no test identification parade could be held for want of persons similar to the accused, the identification of the accused by the identifying witness in the Court, even though subjective evidence, could be relied upon, but not if none of the witnesses had described such features during the investigation but had identified the accused in the Court after about 7 years: 1992 All.L.J. 1187: 1992 Cr.L.J. 3987.

Identification in Court long after the incident is of little value in a case where the wrong-doers are strangers and unknown to the victims at the time of the incident. Corroboration by an identification parade to be held soon after the arrest of the suspected persons and other circumstances which do not give an opportunity to the witnesses to see the accused before the parade is held, is expected in such a case: 1953 Raj.L.W. 228.

Where the report of the test identification parade was not proved by the Magistrate conducting it but there was nothing to show that any witness had made a wrong identification or identified persons other than the accused, held, the identification in the Court cannot be called in question; in the background of the identifying witnesses having acquaintance with the accused, the identification in the Court cannot be faulted: (1994) 1 Ker.L.J. 136 (D.B.).

Ocular witnesses having an opportunity to notice special features of the accused and identifying them in the Court after a long lapse of time, held, is sufficient to establish the accused's identity: 1985 Cr.L.J. 1621 (Del.).

Where a prosecution witness categorically stated that he did not know the accused person in question from before but he stated that a man of his stature and age was with the other accused persons and he was armed with a hand-grenade and it was he, who had thrown hand-grenade on the deceased and the said witness identified said accused in the Court, but the Magistrate recorded that witness did not identify accused in the first round, held, it was not a case of total non-identification and, therefore, the importance of the identification made by the accused in the Court could not be minimised: 1994 Cr.L.J. 2952 (Raj.) (D.B.).

The substantive evidence of a witness is his statement in Court; but the purpose of test identification is to test that evidence and the safe rule is that the sworn testimony of witness in Court as to the identity of the accused who are strangers to the witnesses, requires corroboration which should be in the form of an earlier identification proceeding: A.I.R. 1960 S.C. 1340.

It was urged for the appellant on the basis of the observations of the Supreme Court in A.I.R. 1960 S.C. 1340 that since the appellant was a stranger to M (P.W. 1) his identification at the trial, without his being corroborated by an earlier test identification, should not have been relied upon.

Held, that it was not being laid down as invariable rule that an identification by a witness at the trial would not be of much evidentiary value without his being corroborated in that respect by his having identified the person at an earlier test identification parade. There could be exceptions to the rule where the Court was satisfied that the evidence of a particular witness was such that it could safely rely on it without precaution of an earlier identification proceeding. In this case a test identification would have been not of such consequence as corroborative evidence since the P.W. 1 had occasion to see the appellant just after the assault when he was being accused of being the assailant: 1962 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 70.

As observed in A.I.R. 1960 S.C. 1340, the statement of a witness in the Court uncorroborated by an earlier identification parade can be relied upon in those exceptional cases where it is considered reliable; a fortiori the statement in Court of a reliable identifying witness, corroborated by an earlier identification proceeding, can sustain the conviction of the accused so identified: A.I.R. 1971 Manipur 43. See also A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 1050.

Though the identification of the accused in the identification parade before a Magistrate during investigation is a relevant fact; but not having been led in the Court during the course of trial, held, it is not substantive evidence; it is only corroborative evidence: (1972) 38 Cut.L.T. 294.

In a case under the Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985, the departmental witnesses who recognised accused in Court did not know accused before the raid and just had a transitory glimpse of the accused during raid. Further, no test identification parade was held. Held, Identification of accused by the departmental witnesses had no significance. Accused was entitled to acquittal. [(1991) M.P.W.N. 104; 1983 Cr.L.J. 1276 (S.C.); 1979 Cr.L.J. 919 (S.C.) and 1990 Cr.L.J. 1510 (S.C.), Rel. on]: 1994 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 381 (Madh. Pra.).

3. Test identification parade—(a) Object of.—The evidence of identification figures a good deal in both criminal and civil matters. Evidence of fact is factual and pertains to observance. If one has earlier known the accused, the question left is merely of the witness's credibility; but if the accused is a stranger, the fact of identity becomes hazardous; it is well said that even if witness's veracity is above suspicion, his evidence of identity based on personal impression should be approached with considerable caution; much really depends upon the opportunity that the witness had of forming his impression, the length of time the perception lasted, and other circumstances. The memory may be faulty; its tricks, conscious or unconscious, may also warp the vision. A witness may have formed his own impression but still, if he were to compare that impression with that of others, who had also seen, his impression may get mixed up with what the others tell him; so viable is the mind that in the end he can very well adopt the others' impressions to have been truly formed by him and to swear about it in all earnestness; again, calm minds view a thing better than the emotionally stirred persons; the question of eyesight, colour and moon blindness and other defects, is also there; of all evidence of fact, the evidence of the identification of a stranger is perhaps the most elusive; the Courts generally agree that such evidence should be approached with considerable caution: 1978 Raj.L.W. 239 (D.B.). See also 1973 W.L.N. 934 (Raj.) (Facial recognition of a person is dependent on the particular quality of the memory).

A test identification is designed to furnish evidence to corroborate the evidence which the witness concerned tenders before the Court: I.L.R. (1960) 2 All. 488: (1961) 1 Cr.L.J. 340: A.I.R. 1961 All. 153.

Test identification parades are held by the Police in the course of their investigation for the purposes of enabling witnesses to identify the properties which are the subject-matter of the offence or to identify the persons who are concerned in the offences. They are not held merely for the purpose of identifying property or persons irrespective of their connection with the offence. Whether the Police Officers interrogate the identifying witnesses or the Panch witnesses who are procured by the Police do so, the identifying witnesses are explained the purpose of holding these parades and are asked to identify the properties which are the subject-matter of the offence or the persons who are concerned in the offence: 1955 S.C.J. 129: (1953) 1 S.C.R. 903: A.I.R. 1955 S.C. 104; 1978 Raj.Cr.C. 18. Per Desai, J. The whole object behind an identification proceeding is to find out whether the suspect is the real offender or not: 1953 Cr. L.J. 848: A.I.R. 1953 All. 385.

It is well settled that identification in the Court is legal evidence and identification in the test parade has only corroborative value; the test identification parade has a dual purpose: (i) to give assurance to the investigation that it was proceeding on the right lines, and (ii) to test the veracity of the witnesses identifying the accused in the Court: (1987) 35 B.L.J.R. 340 (D.B.); 1978 B.L.J. 381.

Identification is one of the vexatious questions of criminal jurisprudence; in all cases of personal identification, there is abundant material to put to the witnesses in the cross-examination, depending on variable inconsistent factors like eyesight, facial or bodily peculiarities, the possibility of a duplication of those peculiarities in other persons, the identifier's ability to describe accurately the distinguished mannerisms of the accused and other persons of similar build, the ability to retain a clear mental vision of the person seen, the length of time between the occurrence and the test identification parade, the possibility of external influences (photographs, newspapers, descriptions, conversations with other witnesses, etc.), as well as the actual conditions under which the identification parade is conducted: (1978) 1 Karn.L.J. 30: 1978 Cr.L.J. 462: I.L.R. (1978) Karn. 133.

The identification by the witnesses during the trial is primary and substantive evidence; an identification parade belongs to the stage of investigation by the Police and is not primary or substantive evidence. Like any other evidence procured during the investigation, a test identification parade and its result can be utilised either for corroboration or contradiction: 1979 Chand. L.R. (Cr.) 39: (1979) 6 Cr.L.T. 151: 1979 Sim.L.C. 363 (Him.Pra.) (D.B.).

Identification parades are ordinarily held at the instance of the investigating officer; they belong to the investigation stage and provide assurance of the investigation being on the right lines; they should be held at the earliest possible opportunity which also tends to minimise the chances of the fading of memory by long lapse of time. But of much more vital importance is the effectiveness of the necessary precautions so that the identifying witnesses get no opportunity before the parade of seeing the accused to be identified or other unfair aid or assistance: (1971) 2 S.C.W.R. 446: A.I.R. 1972 S.C. 283; A.I.R. 1958 All. 746.

Identification parade is meant to find out whether or not the suspect is the real offender; though such parade is not by itself substantive evidence, it furnishes evidence to corroborate the concerned witnesses's testimony before the Court about the accused's identity; in case the accused are not known previously to the witnesses, an identification parade is a must; otherwise, it is not necessary: 1992 M.P.L.J. 775 (D.B.); 1978 Raj.Cr.C. 126.

Normally the use of an identification parade is that the identifying witness identifies a particular suspect and testifies to his role in the incident: (1984) 2 Bom.C.R. 615 (D.B.).

Identification at test parades is not substantive evidence; it is only to be used as corroboration; an identification parade cannot, thus, improve the prosecution case: A.I.R. 1973 S.C. 2190.

Identification parades have been common over a very long time; the object of placing a suspect in a line up with others for identification is to find out whether he is the perpetrator of the crime; all the more necessary when his name is not mentioned by the purported eye-witnesses who claim that, even if not knowing him earlier, they could recall his features in sufficient details to identify him if they happened to see him. A test identification in such cases is in the interest of both the prosecution and the accused; it enables the investigating officer to fill up the gap regarding the culprits' identity and saves the accused from the sudden risk of being identified by them in the dock. A test identification parade is, thus, a workable way of testing the memory and veracity of witnesses; it has worked well in actual practice: A.I.R. 1978 S.C. 1204: (1978) 3 S.C.C. 86: 1978 Cr.L.J. 1137; (1984) 2 Bom.C.R. 615 (D.B.).

Identification tests do not constitute substantive evidence; they are primarily meant for helping the investigating agency with an assurance that it is proceeding on the right lines: A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 1050: 1971 Cr.L.J. 913. See also 1992 Cr.L.J. 3251 (Him. Pra.) (D.B.).

The evidence given by a witness in the Court is substantive evidence; if the accused is not previously known to the witness, the accused's identification soon after his arrest is of vital importance; it assures the investigating agency that investigation is on the right lines and furnishes corroboration of the substantive evidence of identification; it is of great importance both for the investigating agency and for the accused and a fortiori for the proper administration of justice that identification parade is held without avoidable and unreasonable delay after the accused's arrest and that all necessary precautions and safeguards therefor are effectively taken. It is also fair to the witness, a stranger to the accused, as it reduces the chances of his memory fading if he is to identify the accused at the earliest possible opportunity after the offence: (1971) 2 S.C.C. 715: 1972 Cr.L.J. 15: (1972) 1 S.C.R. 627: A.I.R. 1972 S.C. 102; 1980 Raj.L.W. 341 (D.B.); 1977 Cr.L.J. 1788 (D.B.).

The object of a test identification parade under S. 9 is to test the capacity of a witness to identify an unknown person whom the witness may have seen only once; where a witness identifies in the Court an accused, not known to him, for the first time, held, his evidence is absolutely valueless: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 1127: (1979) 2 S.C.J. 373: (1979) 3 S.C.C. 319. See also 1993 Cr.L.J. 2364 (Mad.).

The evidence of test identification is not the only type of evidence to confirm the evidence of the accused's identification tendered in the Court; his identity can also be fixed by circumstantial evidence: 1974 Cr.L.J. 674: (1974) 4 S.C.C. 213: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 791.

The test identification parade is meant to test the witnesses' power of recollection; it belongs to, and is part of, the realm of investigation, admissible under S. 9; but its value depends on the promptitude with which the suspects are put up for test identification. An unexplained and unreasonable delay itself detracts from its credibility: A.I.R. 1988 S.C. 345: (1988) 1 S.C.C. 14: 1988 Cr.L.J. 422.

The evidence of test identification parade is meant to corroborate the witnesses's substantive evidence in the Court; the witness has not merely to prove that he had identified the accused at the identification parade but also that the accused had committed the offence: 1979 B.L.J. 395: 1980 Bih.Cr.C. 15: 1979 B.L.J.R. 404: 1979 B.B.C.J. (H.C.) 544; (1981) 52 Cut.L.T. 512.

Identification—Criminal trial—Identification proceedings, conduct of—Test identification proceeding not reliable—They cannot corroborate evidence of identification witnesses: 1965 All. L.J. 197.

The evidence of test identification, admissible under S. 9, is, at best, only corroborative; by itself, it has no independent value: 1974 Cr.L.J. 674: (1974) 4 S.C.C. 213: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 791.

A.I.R. 1970 S.C. 1321, cited in Note 2, supra, did not lay down a rule of universal application about the identification evidence being a very weak type of evidence; where the witness correctly identifies the accused at a test identification parade held by a Magistrate after all essential formalities and necessary precautions, and also identifies the accused in the Court, the evidence of identification can be believed unless the evidence suffers from some other infirmity; the evidence of identification becomes even stronger if the witness had seen the accused not for a few minutes but for some length of time and in broad day light, when he could note the accused's features more carefully: A.I.R. 1978 S.C. 1770: 1978 All.L.J. 1156.

It is true that human memory is fallible and it is some times difficult to identify a person not very well known whom one sees with a rather different appearance at the time of identification proceedings. But this does not necessarily cause any infirmity in the evidentiary value of the witnesses who do, in spite of this difficulty, find it possible to identify the accused; nor is the value of the identification minimised because of the time gap between the occurrence and the identification proceedings. If the accused cannot be put up for identification for sometime after the occurrence the prosecution obviously suffers inasmuch as it becomes more and more difficult for the witnesses to identify persons who were not known to them at all and who were seen by them for the first time at the time of occurrence. But if in spite of fading memory and the effect of seeing the accused in a different appearance and the long gap between the time of the occurrence and holding of identification proceedings, the witnesses do identify the accused, there should be no justification whatsoever for discarding their evidence. The evidence of the identification has to be judged on the basis of various facts and circumstances of the particular case and it is not possible to lay down hard and fast rule as to when a particular identification should or should not be accepted. Where the accused were arrested after about 8 months of the commission of dacoity and identification proceedings were arranged within $2^1/_2$ months of their arrest, held, that the evidence furnished by the identification could not be discarded merely because the identification proceedings took place months after the commission of the offence: (1964) 1 Cr. L.J. 378: A.I.R. 1964 All. 139. See also 1975 Raj.L.W. 469: I.L.R. (1975) Raj. 1087 (D.B.).

Identification—Accused not shown to identifiers before parade—Exact number of slips concealing marks on his face not available—Accused identified by witnesses whose evidence was found reliable—Conviction maintained: 1965 All.L.J. 166.

Evidence of identification proceedings must not be rejected on the sole ground that the accused person was on bail. The value to be attached to an identification parade depends upon circumstances of each case. The main considerations before the Court are whether the identification parade was conducted in a fair manner, and whether witnesses in fact saw the accused between the commission of the offence and identification parade.

When an accused person is on bail and he is to be put up for identification, the responsibility for keeping himself away from prosecution witnesses lies mainly upon him. The responsibility of the accused is all the greater in a case, where he gives an undertaking to keep himself in Court till the day of identification. In such cases the prosecution cannot do much for keeping the accused away from prosecution witnesses: 1959 All.W.R. (H.C.) 410: 1959 All.Cr. R. 326: 1959 All.L.J. 548.

An application for conducting an identification parade after the accused had been committed to the Sessions Court and enlarged on bail, held, being belated, it was rightly rejected: 1981 All.Cr.R. 151: 1981 All.W.C. 268: 1981 All.Cr.C. 232.

Inordinate delay in taking the arrested accused to the Police station throws doubt on the test identification's fairness. See 1982 All.Cr.R. 200: 1982 All.W.C. 329: 1982 All.L.J. 1061.

Where an accused was apprehended not by the Police but by one of the eye-witnesses and was put to T.I. parade long after his arrest, held, the accused would be entitled to the benefit of doubt as the possibility of other eye-witnesses being tutored by the eye-witness apprehending the accused could not be ruled out. See 1979 Raj. Cr.C. 39; 1992 Cr.L.J. 1491 (Raj.) (Accused as well as Police Officials present at the Police Station for photograph and the identification parade held more than one month after arrest—No conviction could be based on such identification).

In the absence of a valid explanation for the delay in holding the identification parade and in the face of unreliable evidence regarding the accused's identity, held, the accused was entitled to acquittal: A.I.R. 1991 S.C. 1938. See also 1992 Cr.L.J. 1256 (Ori.); 1992 Cr.L.J. 3251 (Him. Pra.) (D.B.).

But where the accused were put on test identification within 24 hours of their arrest, the identification cannot be rejected merely on the ground that it was not possible for them to identify the accused after a lapse of a period of three months: A.I.R. 1994 S.C. 739: 1994 Cr.L.J. 922.

The value of test identification depends on two most important factors: (i) the person identifying the accused had no opportunity of seeing him after the occurrence; and (ii) the witness had made no mistake; a test identification conducted long after the accused's arrest is of little value; there is every possibility of a mistake by the witness if the identification proceedings are held after an inordinate delay; thus, an identification parade conducted 11 days after the accused's arrest with no convincing explanation for the intervening days, held, the identification had no evidentiary value: A.I.R. 1971 Raj. 184: I.L.R. (1970) 20 Raj. 439: 1971 Cr.L.J. 974. See also 1980 All.L.J. 370; (1978) 46 Cut.L.T. 260. It is unsafe to rely on the evidence of a test identification parade conducted 13 months after the accused's arrest: 1983 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 202; 1992 Cr.L.J. 1136 (Cal.) (D.B.); 1992 Cr.L.J. 2271 (Ori.) (Delay of $3^1/_2$ months in holding parade held to be fatal); 1992 Cr.L.J. 1150 (Madh. Pra.) (Identification parade held after 57 days of arrest without any explanation for the same, had no evidentiary value); 1992 Cr.L.J. 3819 (All.) (D.B.) (Delay of 2 months).

In assessing the value of the test identification parades, one of the vital factors is whether the identification parade was held within a reasonable time after the accused's arrest and, if not so, whether there is convincing explanation from the prosecution for delay in conducting the test parade. Thus, where identification parade was conducted after about 25 days of the arrest with no explanation for the delay, held, it cannot be relied on: 1977 Raj.L.W. 178. See also 1959 M.P.L.J. 862: 1959 Jab.L.J. 576; 1977 Cr.L.R. 143 (Mah.) (D.B.); (1977) 43 Cut.L.T. 38; 1994 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 105 (Ori.).

When there was a delay of four months in holding the identification parade and the witnesses had, neither in the F.I.R. nor in their statements before the Police, given any descriptive particulars of the accused, held, it is not safe to act upon such identification: A.I.R. 1987 S.C. 1222; A.I.R. 1988 S.C. 345: 1988 Cr.L.J. 422.

An identification parade conducted after a long delay from the date of the accused's arrest with no explanation for the delay, held, the parade would be of no help to the prosecution. [1977 Cr.L.R. 316 (Mah.), Rel. on]: 1981 M.P.L.J. 755.

The whole purpose of holding an identification parade is defeated and its value almost completely lost if there is a long lapse of time between the date of arrest of the accused and the date of identification parade. What delay is inordinate is a question which must be answered by reference to all the circumstances of the case. The nature of the offence, the state of mind of the witness at the particular time when the offence was committed, terror, excitment, etc., and the duration in which the witness had the opportunity to see the accused are facts to be particularly taken into account. The reason for rejecting the evidence of identification on the ground of inordinate delay is that ordinarily the human mind does not register an impression of a face seen only once for a brief moment, for a long time thereafter unless that face has some special features or peculiarities which help to fix its memory on the mind of the witness.

In a trial under S. 376, Penal Code, it may be said that the girl of 15 years who rendered herself easily accessible to five persons within 24 hours and did not complain to person to whom she had occasion and opportunity to complain must have become acquainted with the accused persons, because they were in physical contact with her during coition when she had intercourse with them during day time. But the inordinate delay of one and a half months from the date of offence together with the facts that the first identification parade proved abortive and on the second occasion, the girl was seated in the courtyard while accused persons were seated in the verandah in front of her, would take away all the evidentiary value of the identification parade: 1962 Jab. L.J. 825: 1962 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 325: (1963) 1 Cr. L.J. 686.

Where the delay was of about three months in holding the identification parade, the Investigating Officer was not cross-examined about the reason for the delay, held, the prosecution's burden to establish the guilt cannot be carried so far as to require it to lead evidence to rebut all possible defences; the validity of the parade cannot be challenged if the Magistrate had held that parade and the investigating officer was not cross-examined about the delay or other irregularities: 1972 S.C.D. 1119: (1973) 3 S.C.C. 896: A.I.R. 1972 S.C. 2478.

Where a test identification parade held after long delay was not relied upon by the prosecution, held, the accused is not thereby prejudiced in any way; it is not substantive evidence and could be used only to corroborate other evidence: 1971 S.C.D. 62: 1971 Cr.L.J. 921: A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 1058.

Where an identification parade was held more than six months after the arrest with no plausible explanation for the inordinate delay and the other co-accused had been acquitted, held, a conviction based on such identification evidence is liable to be set aside: A.I.R. 1992 S.C. 1032: 1992 Cr.L.J. 1122.

Where in a case of dacoity, the question was whether it was erroneous to reject the evidence of identification which was held about 12 months after the occurrence of the incidence, only on the ground of unexplained delay, held, the identification could not safely be relied upon and was thus rightly rejected: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 1188.

It is not a rule of law that after a long lapse, witnesses would not be able to identify the accused seen by them committing the dacoity during the night; but the Courts have to be extremely cautious while appraising such evidence: A.I.R. 1972 S.C. 3: 1972 Cr.L.J. 1: 1972 M.L.J. (Cr.) 205. See also 1981 Bom.C.R. 798; 1977 Raj.Cr.C. 344 (No universal measure of time after which the evidence of identification would be necessarily disbelieved).

But where it was a case of dacoity committed in broad daylight for sufficiently a long time, held, delay of about six weeks in holding identification parade was not fatal: 1993 Cr.L.J. 3719 (All.) (D.B.).

The performance of a witness at a test identification as recorded in the identification memo can be used only for the purpose of corroborating his testimony in Court which alone is substantive evidence in the case. If the evidence given in Court by him cannot be implicitly relied, the absence of corroborative evidence in the shape of identification memo is wholly immaterial: 1965 All.L.J. 478: 1965 All.W.R. (H.C.) 811: 1965 All.Cr.R. 543.

Prosecution case depending upon identification evidence—Committing Magistrate should examine identifying witnesses: 1964 All.W.R. (H.C.) 6: 1966 Cr.L.J. 200.

(b) Need for holding.—General principles emerging from the Court's decisions are: (i) test identification evidence is universally accepted as very weak; (ii) the statement of a witness before Court, as a general rule, is substantive evidence; (iii) test identification after long lapse of time is not of much value as human beings cannot remember the accused's features and the identifying witnesses are likely to commit mistakes; (iv) substantive evidence in the Court may be corroborated by the accused's prior test identification by an unknown witness in an identification parade held by a Magistrate after observing all essential formalities and necessary precautions; (v) the identifying witnesses should give out details of the part the accused played, his features, his stature as also whether he is fat or thin or whether he is black or fair or any identification mark; (vi) the evidence of identification becomes more weighty where the witness had an opportunity of seeing the accused not for a few minutes but for some length of time in broad daylight. But if the witness, while picking out the accused at the test parade, does not disclose the accused's specific part in the offence (dacoity), that will not render his evidence of identification inadmissible; and (vii) if identification evidence is reliable, trustworthy and inspires confidence and is also corroborated by other materials on the record, such qualitatively rich evidence prevails over quantitatively poor evidence: (1988) 36 B.L.J.R. 720 (D.B.).

The accused persons may or may not have legal right to claim for test identification and the holding of test identification may or may not be a rule of law, but it is a rule of prudence. Test identification parade should be held, especially when the accused persons definitely assert that they were unknown to the prosecution witnesses either by name or by face and they requested the authorities concerned to have the test identification parade held. The non-holding of a test identification parade though may not be a ground to vitiate the trial, is undoubtedly a very important feature in considering the credibility of the witnesses on the point of identification: 1954 B.L.J.R. 23: A.I.R. 1954 Pat. 483. Although the accused has no right to claim identification if the prosecution turns down his request for identification, it runs the risk of the veracity of the eye-witnesses being challenged on that ground. The prosecution will be exposing the claim of such witnesses to the criticism that the test of identification was shirked because the witnesses would not have been able to stand that test. Unless therefore, the prosecution can nullify that criticism, there would be an element of doubt attaching to the testimony of those witnesses of which the benefit should go to the accused: A.I.R. 1955 All. 671: 1955 Cr.L.J. 1547; 1973 All.Cr.R. 307. Per Sankar Sarang, J.—It cannot be said that on account of absence of identification proceedings, the entire sworn testimony of witnesses should be discarded. Per Desai, J.—The above observation should be taken as modified by the rule of caution or prudence that there must be corroboration. At the same time, it must not be thought that identification proceedings are required in order to supply material to the accused for challenging the evidence of the witnesses: 1953 Cr.L.J. 848: A.I.R. 1953 All. 385. By its very nature test identification proceedings may be considered to form part of investigation, but once a case has been challaned the investigation is over and if the prosecution desires to complete or undertake some portion of the investigation, it can do so only with the approval of the Court who is seized of the case. It would be wrong on principle to call investigation of a case independently of the Court when it has taken cognizance of it. Where, therefore, a Sub-divisional Magistrate who is holding the inquiry does not consider it necessary to order a fresh test identification parade on the request of the prosecution, it is not competent for the District Magistrate to interfere in his discretion by issuing a direction to the contrary. [(1947) 2 M.L.J. 252, Rel. on]: 1956 Raj. L.W. 15: I.L.R. (1955) 5 Raj. 769.

Though an accused cannot ask for the identification parade as of right, all the same by refusing to accept such request in an appropriate case, the prosecution runs the risk of losing the case; an accused has no statutory right to ask for an identification parade and it is only by way of prudence that the Investigating Officer is expected to concede to the accused's request so as to assist the Court in arriving at the truth: 1982 Raj.L.W. 319; 1974 Cr.L.J. 240 (Punj.).

The request of the accused, a stranger to the prosecution witnesses, for test identification parade, held, must always be allowed; it is only by the test identification that the veracity of the eye-witnesses can be checked; by turning down the request, the prosecution would run the risk of the eye-witnesses's veracity being challenged; and it would not be proper to place much reliance on the identification evidence given in the Court: 1979 All.Cr.R. 385: 1979 All.Cr.C. 250: 1979 All.L.J. 1160.

No rule of law requires that a witness's oral testimony should be corroborated by evidence of identification which is itself a weak type of evidence; nevertheless, if the accused had at the earliest asked for the parade which was opposed by the prosecution, held, the Court may acquit the accused: A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 175: (1975) 2 S.C.R. 622.

Where the accused requested for a test identification saying that the eyewitnesses did not know him and would not be able to identify him but the Magistrate found from the case diary that the witnesses had previously known the accused, held, the request was properly rejected: 1981 All.Cr.R. 379: 1981 All.W.C. 736: 1982 All.L.J. 21.

Failure to put up arrested persons for identification, where accused themselves do not claim identification, is not fatal to prosecution's case: 1968 All.W.R. (H.C.) 344: 1968 All.Cr.R. 224.

It is not the right of an accused to claim identification and duty of the Court to direct one if the same is claimed before the Court begins to record the prosecution evidence, identification proceedings are held only during the course of investigation as it is for the investigating agency to satisfy itself as to whether a certain witness had at all seen the suspects put up for identification before him and whether he will be in a position to support the prosecution case against the suspect in Court. Reliance can be placed on identification proceedings only by way of contradiction or corroboration of the evidence in Court when he states whether or not a particular person was seen by him at the time of commission of the crime. While the investigation is in progress, the witness can only point out the omission on the part of the investigating authority to hold an identification parade, which if refused, entitles the accused to challenge the veracity of the witnesses on that ground at the trial. The fact that the accused alleging that the witnesses could not identify them claimed to be put up for identification and the opportunity was denied to them would raise a doubt about the veracity of those witnesses but is not by itself sufficient to hold that the witnesses are liars and that they should not be believed. In a case, where the investigating authority not only refused to comply with the accused's request to arrange an identification parade but also omitted to examine any of the witnesses of a certain village at which a dacoity was allegedly planned by the accused and such witnesses had also sworn to affidavits that no such incident occurred and that they did not also participate in the raid, it was held that the totality of the above circumstances did raise a benefit of doubt in favour of the accused: 1968 Cr.L.J. 9: A.I.R. 1968 All. 28.

The accused cannot compel the prosecution to hold their identification during the investigation, and there is no law or procedure under which the Magistrate could pass such an order. But if such a prayer is made by the accused and the prosecution opposes such a request, by so doing it exposes the witnesses of identification to a genuine criticism that they would probably not be able to identify the offenders correctly if the parade was held. Under such circumstances, therefore, it is desirable that the identification parade of the culprits should be held if so desired by the offenders. Where the culprits, though they initially refused identification, subsequently made a request that they should be identified, and the request was refused for no valid reasons, and the Court identification was made long afterwards, it was held that the identification evidence in Court could not be relied on, unless it was corroborated: (1965) 1 Cr.L.J. 466: A.I.R. 1965 Punj. 146.

As observed by Supreme Court in (1971) 2 S.C.R. 917: A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 363, the absence of test identification is not necessarily fatal: A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 1814: 1975 Cr.L.J. 1553: (1975) 4 S.C.C. 580. See also A.I.R. 1971 Madh. Pra. 116; 1989 Cr.L.J. 2362 (Ker.); 1993 Cr.L.J. 1608 (Bom.).

The absence of test identification is not always fatal; if the accused is well-known by sight to the witnesses, his identification would be waste of time; but if asserted by the prosecution that the witnesses already knew the accused and thereby identification not being held, and it transpires during the trial that the accused was not previously known to the witnesses, the prosecution runs the risk to lose; if in doubt, especially when the accused says that the eye-witnesses did not know him previously, the identification parade should be held: A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 363: 1971 Cr.L.J. 305: (1971) 2 S.C.J. 285: 1971 All.W.R. 692: 1971 M.L.J. (Cr.) 692.

The prosecution need not conduct an identification parade where the accused are arrested at the spot; it is for the accused, if they feel that the witnesses would not be able to identify them, to request for the identification parade: A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 708: 1971 Cr.L.J. 642. See also 1988 Cr.L.J. 319; 1993 Cr.L.J. 1800 (S.C.); A.I.R. 1967 All. 447.

Prosecution witnesses deposing that they know the accused as resident of their locality from before the occurrence of offence—Witnesses not cross-examined on the point—Accused later praying for identification by witnesses in identification parades—Omission to conduct such identification parade—Held, no adverse inference could be drawn: 1967 All. L.J. 252: 1967 Cr. L.J. 1579: A.I.R. 1967 All. 543.

Where the witness had known the accused even before he saw the accused at the occurrence and the accused did not contend that he was not previously known to the witness, held, the identification parade was not required to be conducted: 1972 Cr.L.J. 1342.

Absence of test identification parade is not material when the accused could be sufficiently identified beyond reasonable doubt by the witnesses: 1973 Cr.L.J. 526 (Gau.) (D.B.).

Test identification parade — Suspects known to eye-witness—Test identification parade is a farce and hence unreliable: (1964) 2 Cr.L.J. 585: A.I.R. 1964 Tripura 54; A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 274: 1975 Cr.L.J. 290: (1975) 3 S.C.C. 407.

Where overwhelming evidence on the record showed that the accused was chased and arrested and most of the witnesses had identified him, held, it could not be contended that for want of identification parade, his identification by the witnesses could not be relied upon; the test identification parade in such a case would have been a farce; admittedly many had seen him under arrest and if they had identified him in the parade, the argument would have been that he was seen soon after his arrest and, therefore, his identification was of no value at all; the accused's test identification parade was, thus, not at all necessary: (1987) 35 B.L.J.R. 127 (D.B.). Where the accused was in the hospital and there was cogent evidence regarding the part played by him in commission of offence, held, non-conducting of identification parade was not fatal: 1994 Cr.L.J. 37 (Andh. Pra.).

Where though the accused were not previously known to the witnesses, they were not put up for test identification, held, it was

Where though the accused were not previously known to the witnesses, they were not put up for test identification, held, it was a serious lacuna in the prosecution's case: 1980 All.Cr.R. 299; 1992 Cr.L.J. 1959 (Del.) (Where the accused not named in the F.I.R. and living faraway was neither arrested at spot nor was known to witnesses previously, held, failure to hold identification parade was fatal).

Where the accused declined to participate in the test identification parade, although held on the very next day of his arrest, held, an adverse inference may legitimately be drawn against him unless there is material to show that he was, while in custody, shown to the complainant; and in that case his substantive identification by the witness in the Court would have no probative value. (N.O.C.) 28 (Del.) (Refusal by accused to take part in identification parade).

Identification of washerman's mark on the clothes found near the dead body by the washerman before Magistrate is sufficient proof—Test identification is not essential. [1972 Cr.L.J. 11 (S.C.), Rel. on]: 1975 Cr.L.J. 354.

Case of dacoity — Statement by identifying witnesses about the precise part played by different accused in the offence is not necessary—It is enough if a person identified is shown to have taken part in the dacoity—No hard and fast rule for evaluating identity evidence can be laid down in such cases, each case depends on its facts and circumstances: (1964) 66 Punj.L.R. 173.

Merely because the witnesses, while picking out the accused at the test identification parade, said nothing about the specific part played by him in the crime, held, that would not render the evidence of such identification inadmissible: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 2207: (1976) 3 S.C.C. 454: 1976 Cr.L.J. 1723: (1976) 3 S.C.R. 929.

Principles regarding identification parades. See 1962 M.P.L.J. 352: (1962) 2 Cr.L.J. 682.

If inferences are drawn on mere possibilities, then there is a possibility in every case, of an accused being shown to the witnesses before they are put for identification. But a judicial finding is not based on such surmises. S. 3 defines when a fact may be said to have been proved. The circumstances in the case must be such that a prudent man would act on the supposition that a particular fact exists and it is only then that the Court would hold that the fact has been proved: (1964) 1 Cr.L.J. 378: A.I.R. 1964 All. 139.

The evidence of identification of the accused cannot be accepted unless the Court is satisfied that the identifying witnesses had no opportunity to see the accused after their arrest; if such a possibility could not be ruled out altogether because the witnesses and the accused were present in the Court premises for hours together, held, the identifying witnesses' evidence could not be relied upon: 1977 Raj.L.W. 178.

Where the identifying witness, an admitted acquaintance of the accused, stated having gone to the Police Station seven or eight times when the accused were in the lock-up and the conviction was not based on his but on the testimony of eye-witnesses, held, the contention that the identifying witness might have been seeing the accused in the lock-up is of no value: A.I.R. 1993 S.C. 1243: 1993 Cr.L.J. 169.

Prosecution witnesses having opportunity to see the accused before proceedings for identification were held—Identification of accused by such witnesses cannot be said to have been made out unaided and beyond doubt: I.L.R. (1963) Andh. Pra. 349: (1964) 2 An.L.T. 77: (1964) 2 Cr. L.J. 78.

Where the accused in a robbery case had declined to participate in a test identification parade on the ground that he had been taken to and shown to the lady complainant soon after his arrest by the Police and the other witness who identified the accused did not know him and had seen the accused for less than a minute while scaling over the boundary wall 21 months earlier and could describe the accused only in a general way, held, no implicit reliance could be placed on such testimony; conviction set aside: 1994 Cr.L.J. 3442 (Del.).

Once it is established that faces of some of the accused while in judicial custody had dishonestly been shown to the witnesses before identification parade, held, it is difficult to believe that the investigation did not do the same qua other accused who were also present there and then; benefit of doubt also given to such other accused: 1978 All.Cr.R. 65: 1978 Cr.L.J. 381: 1978 All.L.J. 13.

Where all necessary precautions to conceal the accused's identity had been taken but there was no formal entry of the accused having been brought to the Police Station, held, it was not by itself sufficient to contend that the accused had been shown to the witnesses and the identification parade had no value: 1978 Cr.L.J. 324: 1978 All.Cr.R. 100.

The persons required to identify the accused should have had no opportunity of seeing him after the offence and before the identification; and no mistakes are made by them or the mistakes made are negligible. [1974 Cr.L.J. 674 (S.C.) and 1973 Cr.L.J. 926 (S.C.), Rel. on]: (1981) 52 Cut.L.T. 512: 1982 Cr.L.J. 500.

Accused is not to prove his plea of having already been shown to witnesses, beyond reasonable doubt; it is enough if it is shown to be reasonably probable: 1980 All.L.J. 674.

Ability of witness to identify should be tested without showing him the suspect, or his photograph, or furnishing him data for identification—Showing photograph prior to identification makes identification worthless: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1124: A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 938: (1968) 2 S.C.R. 624.

Showing of photographs to seek information as to person or persons who may have committed crime is not objectionable—Value of only subsequent identification by witness is impaired: I.L.R. (1962) Andh. Pra. 96: (1963) 2 Cr.L.J. 121: A.I.R. 1963 Andh. Pra. 314. See also 1994 Cr.L.J. 1042 (Karn.) (D.B.).

Witness alleging to have seen accused two months before identification parade at Police Station—This fact cannot by itself be a reason for discarding his evidence unless there is proof that accused had been shown to him by police: 1960 M.P.C. 216: 1960 Jab.L.J. 356: 1960 M.P.L.J. 299.

Held, that one witness of identification was good as far as it went, as he had ample opportunity of making the observation and had no motive of speaking falsehood; but that by itself could not support the conviction because the test identification had been held by the Sessions Judge to have been held without sufficient precautions: 1962 M.P.L.J. 352: (1962) 2 Cr.L.J. 682: 1962 Jab.L.J. 901 (D.B.).

It is true that the evidence about identification of a person by the timbre of his voice depending upon subtle variations in the over-tones when the person recognising is not familiar with the person recognised may be somewhat risky in a criminal trial.

But where the accused is intimately known to witness and for more than a fortnight before the date of the offence he had met the accused on several occasions in connection with the dispute, it cannot be said that identification of the assailant by the witness from what he heard and observed was so improbable that the Supreme Court would be justified in disagreeing with the opinion of the Court which saw the witness and formed its opinion as to his credibility and of the High Court which considered the evidence against the appellant and accepted the testimony: (1964) 3 S.C.R. 992: A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 712.

There is no inflexible rule that in no case can the evidence of a witness who has identified the assailant through his voice form foundation of a conviction. The question whether such evidence is or is not sufficient to support the conviction must depend upon the facts and circumstances of the case. The weight to be attached to such evidence must depend upon a multitude of factors and circumstances, the question being whether the degree of conviction in the mind of the Court is such as to render it acceptable and trustworthy. [(1925-26) 30 Cal.W.N. 166 and A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 925 and A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 407, Disting.].

Held, that the instant case was not a case in which the evidence of identification could be kept aside on the mere ground that what enabled the witness to identify the assailants was the fact that she heard their voices. The Court was not prepared to discard her testimony on that extremely slender foundation when the numerous other features of the prosecution case offered such great support to her story: 1966 Cr.L.J. 1155: A.I.R. 1966 Mys. 248.

Identification of accused by voice—Accused close relation of identifier—Identification can be relied on: (1961) 3 Orissa J.D. 110.

Where the witnesses who identified the voice were close neighbours of the accused, charged for committing murder of his daughter in an attempt to have sexual intercourse with her, held, as those witnesses would naturally have close familiarity with his voice, identification by voice could be relied on: 1992 Cr.L.J. 1644 (Ker.) (D.B.).

When the voice of a person is familiar to the hearer, the identification of such person by voice is dependable: 1978 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 138 (Cal.) (D.B.). See also (1974) 76 Punj.L.R. 84. However see 1988 Cr.L.J. 508 (Pat.) (Identification by voice is a weak type of evidence).

Per Anna Chandy, J.—Identification by voice is a risky thing and a person cannot be deprived of his life by relying on such an unsafe test.

Per Govinda Menon, J.—It is never safe to rely on the identification of a person by his voice alone: 1963 Ker. L.J. 369: 1964 M.L.J. (Cr.) 347: (1964) 1 Cr. L.J. 493; 1972 Cr.L.J. 177 (Pat.) (D.B.); 1981 Cr.L.J. 1060 (Ori.). See also A.I.R. 1954 Tripura 11. But see 1954 Madh.B.L.J. (H.C.R.) 1548; 1955 Madh.B.L.J. (H.C.R.) 75.

Where no precautions necessary to ensure reliability of identification at test parade was taken, no reliance can be placed on the test identification parades, or the identification later on before the Magistrate or the Sessions Court, and the evidence in that respect must be excluded from consideration, while judging the guilt of the appellants: A.I.R. 1958 Tripura 40: 1958 Cr.L.J. 1549.

Identification parade before Magistrate—Accused not identified by witnesses—Identification of accused by them before Court is of little value: A.I.R. 1960 Ker. 238.

The purpose of test identification is to test the evidence in Court. The safe rule is that the sworn testimony of the witnesses in Court as to the identity of the accused who are strangers to the witnesses, generally speaking requires corroboration which should be in the form of an earlier identification proceeding. There may, however, be exception to this rule where the Court is satisfied that the evidence of a particular witness is such that it can safely rely on it without the precaution of an earlier identification proceeding. In such circumstances identification evidence should always be examined with great care. The identifying witnesses never knew the accused from before and the accused were strangers to them. The occurrence took place in dark night. Torchlights were flashed and the witnesses identified the accused. The accused persons had no distinctive marks in their appearance to fix their features indelibly upon the minds of the witnesses. The F.I.R. also did not contain any description of any of the accused persons. In prosecution of accused persons for offence of dacoity, held, that no reliance could be placed on the evidence of such identifying witnesses: I.L.R. (1963) Cut. 762: (1964) 1 Cr. L.J. 210: A.I.R. 1964 Ori. 37.

Appreciation of evidence—Eye-witnesses — Sessions trial — Dacoity cases — Identification evidence — Prosecution adducing identification evidence in Sessions Court—Non-examination of such eye-witnesses in committing Magistrate's Court—No ground for disbelieving them: I.L.R. (1963) 1 All. 585: (1963) 1 Cr. L.J. 404: A.I.R. 1963 All. 161 (F.B.); (1962) 2 Cr.L.J. 411 (All.).

S. 207-A, Cr.P.Code, does not lessen the degree of proof—Identifying witness not examined in committing Court—Evidence of such witness not to be accepted: (1961) 2 Cr.L.J. 744: A.I.R. 1961 All. 612.

Ordinarily, the person identifying the assailants at the identification parade must himself give evidence; if he does not do so and leaves it to the officer holding the identification parade to depose, it would deprive the defence of an opportunity to cross-examine the identifier as to whether the witness had an opportunity to see the accused; the evidence of test identification at the highest is a corroborative piece of evidence; if the legal evidence of the witness is suffering from serious infirmity, his evidence of test identification parade cannot improve the situation: A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 135: (1976) 2 S.C.W.R. 266: (1977) 1 S.C.C. 707.

Where at least two of the witnesses emphatically claimed from the very beginning to have noticed the culprit whom they had in fact described and could identify him, held, holding of a test identification parade was absolutely necessary; such a parade having been held within two days of his arrest by a Judicial Magistrate with all necessary precautions and arrangements, evidence of the test identification was of considerable importance; the accused was aware of that evidence from the very date; and if he wanted to demolish it, he could, but did not, do so by effective cross-examination of the witnesses and/or by examining his own witnesses in rebuttal; it is, thus, futile for him to contend that this important piece of evidence should be rejected merely because the prosecution led no evidence of the accused being kept 'ba parda'. [A.I.R. 1962 Raj. 78 (F.B.), Approved]: A.I.R. 1978 S.C. 1204.

Where a witness of the accused's identification, being deaf and dumb, could not be examined in the Court, held, no useful purpose would be served by the testimony of the Magistrate, who had conducted the test identification parade, about the witness having identified the accused: 1982 Cr.L.J. 94: 1982 Ker.L.T. 287.

Test identification — Witnesses whose performance at test identification parade is 66% or more—Evidence could be relied and utilised for purposes of proving identity—Witness whose performance is 33% or less—Not reliable. [A.I.R. 1960 S.C. 1340, Rel. on]: 1979 All.W.C. 488: 1979 All.W.R. 363: 1979 All.Cr.C. 219 (D.B.).

Where the accused was identified by the victim's servant in the test identification parade but he was not examined as a witness, held, the servant's evidence of identification is of no avail: 1987 Pat.L.J.R. 211 (D.B.).

Memorandum of identification—Not a record of evidence of a witness—Presumption under S. 80 not available—Statement in identification memo, recorded by Magistrate under S. 164, Cr. P. Code, not evidence within S. 3: 1963 All. L.J. 61: (1963) 2 Cr. L.J. 1: A.I.R. 1963 All. 308.

A Magistrate recording a confession under S. 164 of the Code of Criminal Procedure or holding an identification parade does so as a matter of duty and discretion; he does not act as a Court; and where the identification memo prepared by the Magistrate had been lost and identification was sought to be proved by its copy prepared by the Investigating Officer, held, it could not be so proved; it had to be proved by the Magistrate from the original: 1974 Raj.L.W. 192.

The purpose of identification test is to test the memory and veracity of a witness who claims to identify an accused person as the participant or one of the participants in a crime. Such identification test may be needed in a case of dacoity, assembling of persons for the purpose of committing dacoity, riot and any other offence, the participants in which were not known to the witnesses from before and could not be apprehended at the spot. It may be quite easy for a witness to identify an accused in the dock and say that he was the person who had committed or had participated in the commission of the crime. Therefore, for the purpose of testing the memory and veracity of the witnesses identification parades are held in jail and the witnesses are asked to pick out the culprits from the group of persons in which suspects as well as other persons are mixed. If, on the other hand, an alleged culprit has been arrested at the spot, his culpability will depend on the veracity of witnesses who would say that he had committed the offence. It is not necessary to put up such arrested person for identification at an identification parade. There may be cases in which the accused himself may claim identification test in order to support his plea of non-participation in the crime. In such a case, the Court may consider the request of the accused on its merits and may in a suitable case require the prosecution to hold an identification parade. If, however, no request is made by the accused or where a request has been made by the accused but is considered by the Court to be devoid of merits, it will not be necessary to hold an identification test, and the failure of the prosecution to put up the accused for identification test will not be deemed to be fatal weakness in the prosecution case: A.I.R. 1967 All. 447.

The rule that results of test identification parades, separated by too long intervals of time should not be considered together ought to apply only to exclude later test identification parades and not earlier ones when the memory is fresher. In exceptional cases evidence of identification by a single witness may suffice. But, the general rule of practice and prudence in dacoity cases is that a single satisfactory identification should not be acted upon. The correct way of showing that the evidence of identification is above board and reliable is that investigation authorities should try to gather from witnesses the particulars about the features and the actions of the persons seen. It may be that in some cases the features cannot be properly described by witnesses. This is likely to be so when there is no special feature in the appearance of an accused person. Nevertheless, the Investigating Officer must try to obtain descriptions from the identifying witnesses and say that they are unable to give any description if that is the position in a case. The printed form used for the memorandum of a test identification parade contains a note at the end showing that the Magistrate conducting a test parade should ask the witnesses participating in the parade about the particular action in which they saw a particular suspect whom they identify. This direction is invariably overlooked by Magistrates conducting test identification proceedings. The test identification proceedings would be more useful, if, instead of containing descriptions of minute marks on the bodies of the suspects, they contained the statements of the identifying witnesses about the particular actions in which particular suspects were seen. This would help to make the test identification proceedings more reliable guides and more effective tests of truthful identifications: 1966 Cr.L.J. 1369: A.I.R. 1966 All. 607.

In a case where the accused is apprehended or caught redhanded in the presence of a number of persons who are produced by the prosecution as witnesses in the case, the question of identification does not and cannot arise.

Where the accused never demanded that the witnesses should be made to identify him or was it his case that they did not know him from before no such application was ever made on his behalf, nor was any such suggestion made in the Courts below, more over in the first information report lodged by the complainant, the name of the accused as well as his place of residence, were clearly mentioned.

Held, the accused was known to the complainant and the witnesses: 1966 All.Cr.R. 354: 1966 All.W.R. (H.C.) 584.

Identification parade conducted by Police Official instead of a Judicial Magistrate—Statements made therein by witnesses are hit by S. 162 and are not admissible in evidence: 1967 Cr.L.J. 746: A.I.R. 1967 Goa 60.

Ss. 9 and 3.—The evidence of identification must satisfy the test of being 'proved' as contained in S. 3; if the accompanying statement made at the time of identification renders the accused's recognition at the occurrence improbable, it cannot be excluded from the process of assessing his guilt; the purpose of such evidence is to indicate the witness's state of mind; the statement will be in issue or relevant for a reason quite apart from its truth or falsity: 1980 All.Cr.R. 313.

Accused pleading that he was known to identifying witnesses from before occurrence and that he was shown to them—No inherent inconsistency between the pleas—Two pleas are not destructive of each other—Employment of improper and unfair methods for helping or ensuring identification does not exclude possibility that the person put up for identification was known to witnesses from before occurrence — No evidence on record to show that accused was shown to witnesses—But plea that he was known from before occurrence supported by reliable evidence—That evidence cannot be rejected on ground that the accused also stated that he had been shown to witnesses: 1969 All.Cr. R. 240: 1969 All W.R. (H.C.) 369.

The whole idea of a test identification parade is that witnesses who claim to have seen the culprits at the time of the occurrence are to identify them from the midst of other persons without any aid or any other source. The identification test is usually adopted during the investigation of a crime by the Police, when the witnesses are interrogated for the first time and state that they had seen some persons committing the crime but do not know their names and would be able to identify them if they would see them again. The identification test is a check upon their veracity. These proceedings are in the nature of tests and the Courts regard them as record of facts which establish the identity of any thing or person. The facts are to be proved according to law, and in the absence of such proof the identification proceedings are valueless. The fact if proved can be used both for purposes of corroboration as well as for contradiction.

The standard of judging the identification evidence of the persons arrested on the spot would be quite different from the general identification normally held of the culprits arrested long after the crime. In the latter case the witnesses are required to identify the accused whom they saw committing the crime. Proper identification would depend on numerous factors such as one's power of observation, distance, time and light, etc. The result would also be affected if the identification was held long after the incident but in the case of arrest on the spot, the identification would be directed mainly to test the credibility of the witnesses who actually helped or effected the arrest. In such a case, the attention of the witness would be solely concentrated on the person arrested: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1320: A.I.R. 1968 All. 333.

Eye-witnesses of the same family or distantly related to each other—Necessity of corroboration: 1968 Cr.L.J. 218: A.I.R. 1968 All. 49.

Precautions for concealing the identity of accused prior to parade—Contention that Police must prove that all precautions were taken was held not accepted in view of the wideness of the proposition—Accused was moved from one place to another by train—Objection at the appellate stage that he was exposed to the gaze of witnesses—No objection made earlier—Investigating Officer not cross-examined on the question of precaution—Held, on the facts, that the accused could not challenge the identification parade: (1966) 68 Bom. L.R. 941: 1968 Cr.L.J. 453: A.I.R. 1968 Bom. 127.

Value of evidence obtained by test identification parade as corroborative evidence of identification in Court is very great indeed. But that is so only when test identification parades are held in the manner and under conditions which preclude even faint possibility of collusion or machination during investigation. If the identification parades are held in the Police Court's precincts, it amounts to violation of reasonable guarantees against any collusion: 1968 Cr.L.J. 40.

The identification evidence in Court is substantive evidence, and unless any intrinsic infirmity appears in the evidence of the deponents, their evidence in Court should be accepted.

Ornaments can be properly identified without any identity marks on them. Therefore, when the inmates of the house hold have identified the ornaments in Court, there is no reason to reject their evidence merely because the ornaments were being used on ceremonial occasions, or had no identification marks: 1968 Cr.L.J. 201: I.L.R. (1967) Cut. 980: A.I.R. 1968 Ori. 20.

Identification parade — Joint identification parade for two occurrences on different dates — Result of parade should be discarded: 34 Cut.L.T. 215: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1251.

Charge of cheating — Only evidence against accused that he wrote some of invoices and took to complainant but no representation made by him to induce complainant to part with funds—Held, if charge of conspiracy had been made, that evidence might have been relevant but as no such charge was made, charge of cheating had to be made out on good and proper evidence: (1968) 2 S.C.W.R. 598: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1469: A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 1267.

There is no provision in Cr. P. Code, for a suspect being put to identification first before he is prosecuted or asked to stand trial in a Court, where he is not named in the first information report. Even when a person is put up for identification proceedings before he is prosecuted for an offence, the evidence which can be relied upon against him for his conviction is that given in Court.

The earlier identification of the accused merely corroborates the evidence which is given in the Court. A witness will, therefore, not be treated unreliable or his evidence discarded merely because the accused was not put up for identification. All what will happen in such a case will be that the evidence given in Court, corroboration by the earlier identification proceedings not being available, will be examined a little more closely to find out its reliability even without that corroboration.

Where a constable ascertaining the names of the accused at the incident spot, mentions those names in the first information report filed by him, but in the Court, he, without naming the accused, points out towards them as the offenders, and the constable's statement is corroborated by two others to whom the accused are known, it cannot be said that the constable should have put up the accused for identification: 1968 All.W.R. (H.C.) 788: 1968 All.Cr. R. 489.

An accused's identity may as well be established by circumstantial evidence: 1985 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 39 (Cal.).

No positive rule can be laid down as to whether identification test is necessary in every case. It must be decided on facts of each case whether want of identification test had any material bearing. In a case under Ss. 399 and 402, Indian Penal Code, when the prosecution evidence leaves no manner of doubt as to the correctness of the fact that a number of persons were arrested at the spot and those persons who were thus arrested remained in confinement throughout thereafter and if this evidence has been found to be convincing by the Courts below, in the absence of any overriding consideration the Court will not be justified in disagreeing with the view, thus taken in revisional jurisdiction: 1969 Cr.L.J. 833 (All.).

The identification proceedings conducted before submission of a charge-sheet against an accused is merely a step in the process of investigation of a crime. When witnesses claim that they had marked the features of an accused during the commission of a crime, the prosecution has to ascertain whether the said claim is correct or incorrect. It is merely for this purpose that the investigating agency puts up an accused at a test identification parade. If the witnesses fail to identify an accused at the test identification parade and there is no other evidence connecting the accused with the crime, the officer-in-charge of the Police Station or the Investigating Officer has to release the accused under S. 169, Cr.P.Code and submit a final report under S. 173(1), Cr.P.Code. Identification of an accused at a test identification parade is not a substantive piece of evidence and consequently, identification proceedings are not subject to directions by a Court. The substantive evidence against an accused is only his identification by the witnesses in Court and the record of the test identification proceedings can be utilised only for the purpose of corroborating or contradicting the witnesses who identify the accused in Court.

The holding of a test identification parade is merely a step in the investigation of a crime and it is entirely up to the investigating agency to decide as to whether it would hold a test identification parade or not and if it decides to do so, the venue for it: 1968 All.Cr. R. 561: 1968 All. W.R. (H.C.) 855: 1970 Cr.L.J. 78.

True test identification parade is a step in investigation, but it is the identification made in the Court which is evidence. In a case of circumstantial evidence, the test identification parade assumes importance particularly if conducted within a reasonable time after the offence; a test identification parade conducted after a long delay may make it possible for the witnesses to have an opportunity to see the culprits and, thus, is of little value. [1985 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 79 (Del.), Reversed]: A.I.R. 1993 S.C. 2618: (1993) 2 U.J. (S.C.) 632.

Where even though the complainant made no mention of the prominent mark like deep cleft in the middle of the chin of the accused in the first information report nor any of the witnesses identifying the accused made mention of the mark during the various stages of the trial and the Magistrate, holding the identification parade failed to conceal the mark, identification of the accused at the parade could not be implicitly relied upon and the accused was entitled to the benefit of doubt. If the complainant or any of the identifying witnesses had identified the accused at the time of occurrence, by reason of the mark, it was to be expected that mention thereof would have been made in the complaint or the deposition of witnesses: 1970 All.W.R. (H.C.) 23: 1970 All.W.R. 28.

Finding that deceased died of gun shot wound, common case of the parties that there was only one gun at time of occurrence and that gun belonged to and was held by accused on the spot. Held, that the wound was caused by the gun held by the accused and that it was not necessary for prosecution to further establish that injuries caused by gun shot were from the gun held by accused: I.L.R. (1969) Cut. 33: 1970 Cr.L.J. 931.

Facts which establish the identity of an accused person are relevant under S. 9. As a general rule, the substantive evidence of a witness is a statement made in Court. The evidence of mere identification of the accused person at the trial for the first time is from its very nature inherently of a weak character. The evidence in order to carry conviction should ordinarily clarify as to how and under what circumstances he came to pick out the particular accused person and the details of the part which the accused played in the crime in question with reasonable particularity. The purpose of a prior test identification, therefore, is to test and strengthen the trustworthiness of that evidence. It is accordingly considered a safe rule of prudence to generally look for corroboration of the sworn testimony of witnesses in Court as to the identity of the accused who are strangers to them, in the form of earlier identification proceeding. There may, however, be exception to this general rule, when, for example, the Court is impressed by a particular witness, on whose testimony it can safely rely, without such or other corroboration. The identification parades belong to the investigation stage. They are generally held during the course of investigation with the primary object of enabling the witnesses to identify persons concerned in the offence, who were not previously known to them. This serves to satisfy the Investigating Officers of the bona fides of the prosecution witnesses and also to furnish evidence to corroborate their testimony in Court. Identification proceedings in their legal effect amount simply to this: that certain persons are brought to jail or some other place and make statements either express or implied that certain individuals whom they point out are persons whom they recognise as having been concerned in the crime. They do not constitute substantive evidence. These parades are essentially governed by S. 162, Cr. P.Code.

Held, on facts, that the test identification parades in the case could not be considered to provide safe and trustworthy evidence on which the conviction of accused could be sustained: 1970 Cr.L.J. 1149: A.I.R. 1970 S.C. 1321. See also 1988 Cr.L.J. 780 (Del.) (Dock identification without any supporting evidence has been considered as a suspect).

Test identification proceedings are not falsified on assumption that investigating authorities necessarily resort to unfair means and dishonesty—Criminal trial—Investigation by Police: 1965 All.L.J. 166.

Recovery of gun under Arms Act—Recovered article not sealed nor link evidence to identify arms adduced — Evidence of recovery may be accepted—Para. 142 (1), Police Regulations, is not mandatory: 1964 All.L.J. 621: (1965) 1 Cr.L.J. 667: A.I.R. 1965 All. 260.

Identification of property—Recovery of articles subject-matter of a dacoity—Articles recovered, common articles easily available in the market—Fact that the articles recovered are common-articles does not render them incapable of identification—Whether the articles recovered were those that were stolen or not, depends upon the circumstances of the case always: (1964) 66 Punj.L.R. 173.

It is well known that evidence about the identity of, particularly a previously unknown person, is deceptive, and has sometimes led to miscarriage of justice: A.I.R. 1973 S.C. 337: 1972 Cr.L.J. 1254: (1972) 3 S.C.C. 639: (1973) 1 S.C.R. 291.

In cases where the accused are not known to witnesses the value of prior identification need hardly be emphasised. There may be a case where the Court places an explicit reliance upon a witness and his identification in Court itself is not of much value unless it is corroborated by prior identification in a parade. The substantive evidence is the statement of the witness made in Court: (1972) 2 Sim.L.J. 349.

No adverse presumption could be drawn against accused when in identification parade held in Court, witnesses admitting in cross-examination that they did not know accused or only knew him by face. The Court cannot rely on the identification of accused by witnesses: 1981 Cr.L.J. 512: 19 Del.L.T. 244.

Test identification—Value and importance of—Precautions to be taken by Police—Precaution of ba parda (under proper cover) with corresponding routine entries in Police dairy or in jail warrant—Insistence by Courts on observance, if essential: I.L.R. (1961) 11 Raj. 1010: (1962) 1 Cr.L.J. 461: A.I.R. 1962 Raj. 78 (F.B.).

The rule of approach to the evidence of identification is that normally the result of the proceedings in which a particular accused was put up must alone be taken into consideration. But other identification proceedings in which the particular accused was not put up for identification and other accused were put up are relevant in so far as inference may be drawn against the power or observation of the witnesses. The inference may be drawn from those identification proceedings when they were held prior to the identification proceeding relating to the particular accused or simultaneously with or shortly after it. But no conclusion can be drawn from these other identification proceedings if they were held long afterwards: I.L.R. (1958) 1 All. 151: (1961) 1 Cr.L.J. 22: A.I.R. 1961 All. 50.

Every test identification of suspects should be held with only one suspect mixed up with nine or ten innocent persons, the innocent persons being changed every time a fresh suspect is put up for identification: I.L.R. (1960) 2 All. 488: (1961) 1 Cr.L.J. 340: A.I.R. 1961 All. 153.

Evidence of identification—Identification parade—Purpose and value of—Who can Pra. 225.

Evidence of identification—Duty of Magistrate—Failure to hold test identification parade—Whether affects evidence of identification in Court: (1964) 6 O.J.D. 12.

Though the arranging by the Police of an identification parade to be conducted by Panch witnesses instead of by a Magistrate where one is available, cannot be approved of as a matter of prudence, and though, such identification may, in the circumstances of particular case, be held as infirm and unsafe of reliance, the evidence cannot be struck down as inadmissible unless a Police Officer is present at the time when witnesses identify. The statements involved in the process of such identification would be statements made by the identifying witnesses to the Panch witnesses, so that such statements would be outside the purview of S. 162, Cr.P. Code, provided the process of identification was carried out under the exclusive direction and supervision of the Panch witnesses and the Police had completely obliterated themselves from the parade: 1962 M.P.L.J. 1064: 1962 Jab.L.J. 876: (1963) 1 Cr.L.J. 433: A.I.R. 1963 Madh. Pra. 106.

Test identification parades are not to be held in mechanical or routine fashion. While they constitute valuable corroboration they are also a safeguard for the accused persons. The Magistrates are called upon to hold such parades so that the parades which take place during the investigation of the offences by the Police, may be beyond all suspicion and free from influence by the Police. Instructions are given to them in judgments of High Courts to aid them in such work and they are bound to follow them. The Magistrates must, therefore, see that the proceedings are conducted very fairly and in accordance with instructions given by the decisions of the High Courts, and that the memo of the parades correctly and fully record what took place.

Magistrate in Union territory of Manipur enjoined to follow instructions laid down in A.I.R. 1957 Manipur 21.

Held, that even though there were irregularities in the identification parades since none of the accused raised any objections either before or during or after the parade, and as the victim had sufficient opportunity to see the accused in the course of commission of offence, the identification of accused was true: (1963) 2 Cr.L.J. 562 (Manipur).

It is the duty of the prosecution to show that from the time of the arrest of an accused person to the time of his admission into the jail, precautions were taken to ensure that he was not seen by any outsider. Once evidence has been led to show this, the burden shifts on the accused to show otherwise. The law does not require the accused to do so affirmatively; it is sufficient if he can succeed in creating a reasonable doubt in the mind of the Court.

Any person can conduct a test identification, but Magistrates are preferred. His identification memo is a record of the statement which the identifier expressly or impliedly made before him. The statement is a former statement of the identifier and in Court is usable not only for contradicting him under S. 145 or S. 155 but for corroborating him under S. 157, except that if it was made before the Police it would be hit by S. 162, Cr.P.Code and would therefore, not be admissible for purposes of corroboration. If the person holding the identification is a Magistrate of the first class, or one of the second class specially empowered, S. 164, Cr.P.Code applies and his identification memo is admissible in evidence under S. 80 without proof. But if other Magistrate or private persons held it, they must be called in evidence to prove their memo. Where S. 164, Cr.P.Code, operates the proceedings are independent even of the territorial jurisdiction of the Magistrate concerned. Normally, the result of identification proceedings in which a particular accused is put up must alone be taken into consideration in deciding the value of identification of a particular witness with respect to that accused; other test identifications, provided they were held within a short period of test under consideration, can be taken into account solely for judging the memory and power to observation of the witness concerned: I.L.R. (1960) 2 All 488: (1961) 1 Cr.L.J. 340: A.I.R. 1961 All. 153.

The substantive evidence of a witness is his statement in Court, but the purpose of test identification is to test that evidence and the safe rule is that the sworn testimony of witnesses in Court as to the identity of the accused who are strangers to the witnesses, requires corroboration which should be in the form of an earlier identification proceeding. Where in a murder charge against several accused under S. 302 read with S. 34, Penal Code, an identification parade consisting of 46 persons in which there were 7 suspects, and an eye-witness while picking out 9 persons, made 3 correct identifications and made 6 mistakes, no reliance could be placed on such an identification by the witness even though he was disinterested and it could not be used as corroboration of the evidence of another interested eye-witness. Where any eye-witness failed to pick out an accused both in the identification parade as well as in the Committing Magistrate's Court, it would be entirely incorrect to rely upon his belated identification in the Sessions Court: 1960 Cr.L.J. 1681: A.I.R. 1960 S.C. 1340. See also 1988 Cr.L.J. 264 (Pat.).

If the witnesses do not give the name of any accused, it is necessary to hold a test identification parade. Where, however, a witness gives the name of an accused as one whom he has identified, ordinarily, no test identification parade is necessary. But if any accused holds out a challenge and says that he will not be identified by the witnesses, or makes a prayer that he should be put upon a test identification parade, such a parade must always be held in order to meet the challenge. There must, however, be one exception. If the accused is arrested on the spot and if he is in custody from that time up to the date of his trial, there can be no question at all about his identity. If a parade is held, it will be only a test of the memory of the witness or witnesses concerned. It cannot possibly be a factor of any importance on the question identification because the accused all the time remained in jail: 1960 B.L.J.R. 511: 1960 Cr.L.J. 1650: A.I.R. 1960 Pat. 582.

Where, in a murder case, an inference could legitimately be drawn that after the arrest of the accused he was not properly dealt with, the possibility of his having been shown over to the witnesses before the identification proceedings could not be excluded and no incriminating or stolen article was recovered from his possession.

Held, that under the circumstances the evidence of identification could not be safely relied upon and the accused would be entitled to an acquittal: 1959 All.W.R. (H.C.) 500: 1959 All.Cr.R. 418: 1959 All.L.J. 694.

Human experiences and commonsense considerations warrant, that it is dangerous and risky to formulate and act upon any rule of thumb in the matter of appraising the effects of delay in identification. The proper course to be followed in such a case is that Judges and Magistrates in dealing with such a question should avoid uncritical over credulity as also unnecessary scepticism and should bring to bear judicial maturity and consider and weigh the circumstances and facts of individual cases and proceed to decide them on a consideration of the individual peculiarities of the cases in the light of experience as to human affairs and the building rules of prudence enunciated in the leading cases but without treating them as rigid, mathematical formula. The Court's approach to the cases should be prudent, intelligent and pragmatic and not mechanical wooden or unnecessary doctrinnaire. To lay down a hard and fast rule, with regard to the period of time which may elapse between the commission of a crime and the identification of the culprits, would be to impose an arbitrary rule, which neither commonsense nor the statute law of evidence can or would justify. If there were such a rule, it would be the easiest thing for a culprit to avoid his arrest for a certain period of time and then turn up with confidence that he can go with impunity because of the lapse of the requisite period of time. In this view of the law, delay by itself cannot justify the rejection of the identification evidence irrespective of the facts and the circumstances of the case. A satisfactory evidence of identification in Court corroborated by an equally satisfactory evidence of identification at a prior parade can be corroborated and given strength by proof of the possession of property by the accused sometime after the commission of the crime: 1966 Cr.L.J. 1332: A.I.R. 1966 Raj. 241.

Witnesses omitting to give description of the offenders during investigation—Subsequent identification of accused by such witnesses—Identification cannot be said to be not reliable therefor: 1966 Cr.L.J. 1332: A.I.R. 1966 Raj. 241.

(c) Precautions to be taken.—No presumption attaches to identification proceedings conducted by Magistrate and it is for the prosecution to prove affirmatively that every possible precaution was taken to ensure fair identification and the proceedings were not only fairly conducted but were correctly recorded. It is necessary that the accused persons whom it may be necessary to put up for identification should be warned at the time of their arrest that it may be necessary to put them up for identification and that they should keep their faces covered and to take them to the Police Station in that state. In the Police Station the lock-up in which they are kept should be covered with a purda so that no one is able to see their faces. When they are taken to Court or to Jail their faces should be kept covered. In Jail also no outsider should be allowed to see their faces. All these precautions should not only be taken but should be proved to have been taken. That these precautions were taken should be recorded in official records like the general diary of the Police Station and the Jail register and they should be produced in Court. In the absence of such evidence no value can be attached to the identification of an accused person made by a witness: 1954 Cr.L.J. 1819: A.I.R. 1954 Vindh. Pra. 42; A.I.R. 1955 Tripura 19: 1955 Cr. L.J. 1292. But see contra. It is not correct to say that the lock-up should be covered with a purdah so that no one should see the faces of the prisoners. All that is required is that every precaution should be taken that the public have no opportunity of seeing the suspects while they are in the lock-up as otherwise the parades would become meaningless, for the witnesses might get some clue as regards the identity even before the proceedings commenced and they should be kept out of the view of the witnesses: 1956 An.L.T. 833: 1956 An.W.R. 788.

The elaborate rules on the conduct of identification parade are not merely mechanical devices, but are calculated to guarantee against the wrong men being pointed out. It is the duty of the prosecution to establish beyond any doubt that the witnesses who identified the accused before the identification parade had seen him at the time of occurrence and they did not know him from before, also they did not see him at any time after the occurrence and before the identification parade. If this is not done, the accused is entitled to contend that his case has been gravely pre-judiced and he is entitled to benefit of all or any of short-comings of the prosecution on this score. (Principles to be observed and precautions to be taken at the time of conducting of identification parade stated): A.I.R. 1957 Manipur 21: 1957 Cr.L.J. 870.

Per Desai, J.—An ideal identification proceeding is that which is held in the same conditions in which the offenders were seen by the witnesses: 1953 Cr.L.J. 848: A.I.R. 1953 All. 385.

It is the prosecution's duty to produce before the Court all evidence to convince it that the identification parade was conducted in a fool proof manner, leaving no doubt about its honesty, integrity and safety: (1984) 2 Bom.C.R. 615 (D.B.); 1980 All.L.J. 664.

. The law laid down by the Supreme Court and R. 236 of the Bihar Police Manual, 1978 (Vol. 1), requires very strict conditions for holding fair and impartial test identification parades so that innocent persons may not be falsely implicated; the identifying witnesses must not have any opportunity to see the suspect after the commission of the crime and abundant precautions should be taken for the same; the parade should be conducted either by a Magistrate or another responsible officer and the Investigating Officer should in no case be present at the parade: 1985 Bih.L.T. (Rep.) 129 (D.B.).

When persons who are already known to the accused and are to be identified are mixed up with the identifying witnesses, held, the identification is clearly vitiated. Value of identification parade depends on the effectiveness and the precautions taken against the identifying witness having an opportunity of seeing the persons to be identified before they are paraded with others and also against the identifying witness being provided by the investigating authority with other unfair aid or assistance so as to facilitate the identification of the concerned accused: (1991) 2 S.C.J. 618.

Where innocent persons mixed in the identification parade are wearing different type of clothes than the suspect, held, the evidence of identification will not be of much value: 1979 All.Cr.R. 371.

Merely because the accused was mixed with persons not similarly dressed by itself is not sufficient to justify the inference that the identifying witnesses must have seen the accused before the parade: (1976) 42 Cut.L.T. 228.

Where several suspects are to be put up for identification, held, a single parade would constitute a fundamental wrong; separate parades should be held for each suspect with its results recorded on a separate sheet; and same innocent persons should not be mixed up as dummies in each parade: 1982 All.Cr.R. 200: 1982 All.W.C. 329: 1982 All.L.J. 1061.

The most elementary precautions in an identification parade are that dummies similar in appearance, height, age, etc., to the suspect should be arrayed in the parade; thus, where the witness had described the offender as having a clean shaven head with a tuft and apart from the suspect, none other had such a head, held, the parade was only a farce: 1985 Cr.L.J. 191.

The Investigating Officer has to ensure that the accused sought to be identified by the witnesses is not seen by them; the accused must be kept in such circumstances that he is not exposed to the witnesses' view: 1982 Cr.L.J. 2056 (Bom.).

In identification parades, it is always better to have as large a number of persons mixed up with the accused as possible. But no hard and fast rule can be laid down and if five times the number of accused persons are mixed with them, it cannot be said that there is any flaw in the identification proceedings: 1952 All.L.J. 568: A.I.R. 1953 All. 314; A.I.R. 1960 All. 50: (1961) 1 Cr.L.J. 22: I.L.R. (1958) 1 All. 151 (D.B.). (Ratio of 9 or 10 to 1 would be proper).

The proper way to hold identification is to put up each suspect separately for identification mixed with in any case, not less than nine or ten. While no categorical observation that the ratio of 7 to 1 in the case of one or two suspects ipso facto destroys the results of identification can be made there can be no hesitation in holding that it considerably diminishes the value of identification and unless the investigation is absolutely above board, it would not be prudent to place any reliance on such identification. A graduated scale of the number of under-trials to be mixed with the suspects would be most desirable: I.L.R. (1958) 1 All. 151: (1961) 1 Cr.L.J. 22: A.I.R. 1961 All. 50 (D.B.).

The proportion of outsiders with the number of the persons to be identified must be sufficiently large to eliminate the chance of the accused being picked up by chance. Where the witnesses were asked to identify 6 persons out of a line of 13. Held, that the chances were all in favour of the witnesses picking up the accused in view of their number being almost equal to the number of outsiders and the Court could not rely much on the identification parade: A.I.R. 1953 Sau. 4: 1955 Cr.L.J. 31.

It cannot be overemphasized that the accused should be paraded with a fairly large number of persons of similar age, height, stature, etc., so as to eliminate the possibility of his being picked up or identified by chance; in a fair identification parade the proportion of the suspects to the undertrials should be as 5:1 or 4:1; where such proportion was 4:10, held, the identification test parade was not fair: 1977 Raj.L.W. 178: 1978 Cr.L.J. 269.

Identifying parade—Proportion of outsiders to be mixed with suspects should be fair. (Proportion of 1:5 held fair): 1953 All.L.J. 94: A.I.R. 1953 All. 123.

Proportion of outsiders with suspects should be 3 to 1: 1953 Cr.L.J. 610: A.I.R. 1953 Madh. Bh. 87.

Per Desai, J.—Where several suspects are put up for identification the proper way to hold identification proceedings is to put up each suspect separately for identification mixed with as large number of innocent men as possible, in any case not less than nine or ten. Care must be taken to see that the same innocent men are not mixed with each of the suspects: 1953 Cr.L.J. 848: A.I.R. 1953 All. 385.

It cannot be laid down as a general rule that wherever more than one suspect is put up in an identification parade, the identification made in such a proceeding should be held invalid. The chief thing which should be done is that as many persons as possible should be mingled with the prisoners so that the witnesses might pick out the real offenders without any extraneous aid. Each case must be decided on its particular facts and no hard and fast rules could be laid down in such a matter. If three or four suspects are mixed up with only four or five under-trial prisoners or innocent persons, the chances of a witness identifying the suspects are greater even if he were not sure of the identity of the real offender and the idea underlying the identification parade frustrated. On other hand, if two suspects are mingled with a large number of other persons, the same result would not follow: 1956 An.L.T. 833: 1956 An. W.R. 788.

It is better if a large number of under-trials are mixed up with the accused intended for identification. However, one cannot expect the same ratio between the accused put for identification and the persons mixed with them in a case where the number of accused is large as in the case where the number of accused is one or two. There is greater probability of a single accused being identified by chance if he is mixed up only with two or three other persons. There is much less probability when the number of accused is large and they are mixed up with say 20 or 25 other persons. Therefore, simply because a number of accused had been mixed up only with 22 other persons cannot lead to the conclusion that the identification has been by mere accident: 1958 Raj.L.W. 527.

The accused and two other persons who were put up for identification had their ears bored. At this identification parade although twenty-five men were mixed, amongst those who were mixed there were only ten persons who had their ears bored. No steps were taken to cover up the bored ears so that the witnesses had really to pick out three men, out of thirteen, held, that in view of the small number of under-trials with bored ears who were mixed at the parade the assurance which flows from the mixing of a larger number was not available in this case: 1958 Cr.L.J. 966: A.I.R. 1958 All. 616.

The evidence of identification to carry conviction should ordinarily clarify as to how and under what circumstances the witness came to pick out the particular accused and details of his part in the offence with reasonable particularity; the object of prior test identification, therefore, is to test and strengthen the trustworthiness of that evidence; it is accordingly a safe rule of prudence to seek corroboration of the sworn testimony of the identifying witnesses in the Court: 1979 Chand. L.R. (Cr.) 58 (Him. Pra.) (D.B.).

(d) Duty of Magistrate.—When a witness makes a statement in Court the Magistrate is expected either to record it wholly in his own hand or to record at least, the substance of it in his own hand. The statement is read over to the witness there and then when what the witness has stated is fresh in the memory of the Magistrate and he can correct it. Where a Magistrate conducts a proceeding like an identification proceeding it is incumbent on him to note down the result of the proceeding in his own hand so that not only he but the Court also can be certain that the result has been recorded correctly. Where the Magistrate who conducted the identification proceeding did not take the trouble of filling in the memorandum with his own hand but dictated it to his clerk, who might have committed mistake in entering the result and the memorandum is not read over in the presence of the suspects after it has been recorded and there is no opportunity for correcting any errors which he might have made in writing it, the identification is of no value. A.I.R. 1954 Vindh. Pra. 42: 1954 Cr.L.J. 1819.

The conduct of identification proceedings requires attention to a number of details. The Magistrate has to make sure that at least persons not of too dissimilar appearance or build or height are paraded with each suspect separately. He has to examine the marks likely to affect identification of the suspect and to arrive at a decision as to what marks are so distinctive that they are likely to affect identification in the case of each suspect. It is fundamentally wrong to falsify identification proceedings by passing excessive number of slips or concealing parts of the bodies of the participants to such an extent that no honest or truthful identification can possibly take place. Where the test identification proceedings have not been shown to be sufficiently regular to be considered reliable, they cannot serve the purpose of corroborating the evidence of identification given by the witness in Court. It is true that the manner in which any irregularities affected the identification by witnesses in jail could have been brought out by cross-examining the witness who actually participated in those proceedings. But, where proceedings are actually proved from the statement of Magistrate who conducted the proceedings, to be irregular and uncertain no presumption of their regularity can arise or save proceedings from becoming totally unreliable: 1965 All.W.R. (H.C.) 437: 1965 All. Cr.R. 282: 1965 All.L.J. 197.

Where the Magistrate did not make any note, in the identification memo of the distinctive marks of the accused, held, that any competent Magistrate having experience of identification proceedings would have made a note about it if he had really paid attention to it. The defects in the conduct of the identification proceedings reduced the value of the identification: 1955 All.L.J. 330: A.I.R. 1955 All. 138.

Where the evidence against an accused person is said to be the evidence of identification alone, the person in question should not be enlarged on bail before the identification proceedings are held. It is open to the Magistrate to accelerate the proceedings of identification. It is further open to him to postpone the grant of bail and to take up the application for bail after the proceedings of identification have been conducted. But simply because an accused person gives an undertaking that he will not raise the plea that the witnesses had the occasion to see him before the identification proceedings are conducted, it is not open to any Magistrate to grant bail to the accused. An undertaking of that nature never acts as an estoppel and what the Magistrates in such a case have to consider is whether prudence requires that bail should be granted at that stage. If bail is granted, the risk of the accused person being seen by the witnesses before the identification proceedings are held cannot be eliminated. And if that risk is there, the identification proceedings are reduced to an absolute farce: 1956 Cr.L.J. 181: A.I.R. 1956 All. 122.

(e) Identification in parade—Value of.— (See also Note 3(b), supra and Note 6, infra). The essence of identification evidence is that at its best it is the recognition of a stranger's face seen momentarily during the stress and excitement of an incident in torchlight or under artificial light after a lapse of several days or months as the case may be and the identifier claims that he carried that image all that time in his mind and when he went to the identification parade the image in his mind corresponded with the features of a suspect in the parade whom he accordingly picked out. It can, therefore, be accepted only if the Court is satisfied: (1) that the witness had atleast a fair, if not good opportunity of seeing the dacoits, which naturally raises the question of sufficiency of light and proximity of the witness to the offenders; (2) that the identification parade was held within a reasonable time of the incident; (3) that the witness has reliable powers of observation to be judged from the facts that the parade was not made too easy for him to pick out the suspect and that he did not commit so many mistakes that it would create doubt in the mind of a reasonable man; (4) that the statement of the witness that he did not know the suspect from before is believable; and (5) that the witnesses were not given an opportunity to see the accused after their arrest, and that the investigation conducted in the case inspires confidence. The evidence of identification at its best is a weak type of proof, for the chances of mistake are far greater in this type of evidence than where the witness deposes about facts within his knowledge. Where the investigation inspires confidence and the witness was fairly tested before he picked out the suspect, the demands of prudence are satisfied and the Court feeling re-assured rejects the possibility of a coincidence, which becomes remote. But where the investigation is tainted, the performance of the witness cannot be accepted at its face value for the reasonable possibility of external aid being given to the witness cannot be eliminated: I.L.R. (1958) 1 All. 151: A.I.R. 1961 All. 50: (1961) 1 Cr.L.J. 22. See also 1989 Cr.L.J. 2106 (Pat.) (The crucial requirement is the satisfaction of Court).

Generally, the safe rule is that the sworn testimony of a witness in Court about the identity of the accused not known to the witness requires corroboration from an earlier test identification; but in the absence of substantive evidence about the accused being one of the dacoits, held, the test indentification parade is of no assistance to the prosecution: A.I.R. 1972 S.C. 283.

Identity of accused person is of no evidentiary value unless corroborated by the witness having pointed him out in an identification parade with precautions taken against collusion, inadvertent mistake, and intentional or accidental prompting. The elaborate rules on the conduct of identification parades are not merely mechanical rituals but are calculated to guarantee against the wrong men being pointed out. The impression that witness who has seen the offender at the time of the crime, and who apparently has no personal motive to make any intentional mistake should be implicitly believed when he points out the accused in the dock, is most unsafe: 1954 Cr.L.J. 401: A.I.R. 1954 Vindh. Pra. 6.

The fact of the identification in a parade is by itself not substantive evidence but is admissible under S. 9 of the Evidence Act and provides a strong corroboration to the identification made in Court: 1953 Raj.L.W. 228.

Identification is an act of the mind and the primary evidence of what was passing in the mind of a man is his testimony in the Court. The entire statement of the witnesses as a part of the act of identification or as explanatory of it is admissible in evidence. The statement made at the parade and recorded by the Magistrate in column No. 10 was so closely connected with the act of identification that it has to be admitted as the part of the very act of identification itself. Where the question for determination is whether the witness had the power of observation and recollection, any circumstance or fact bearing on it would be relevant when the identity of the suspect is in issue: 1980 All.Cr.R. 313.

Per Desai and Sankar Saran, JJ.—The evidence of a witness against an accused is the direct statement made in Court that he was one of the offenders. His earlier identification of him is simply a corroboration of the evidence given by him in Court. The identification has by itself no independent value: 1953 Cr. L.J. 848: A.I.R. 1953 All. 385.

Accused known to witnesses—Accused seen by witnesses, leading a mob out to commit murder—Identification parade—Identification memo not produced—Held, that the mere fact that there was no memorandum produced would not show in this particular case that the accused were not identified at the time of the commission of the offence: I.L.R. (1954) Punj. 649: A.I.R. 1954 Punj. 37.

There are certain principles which a Court has to bear in mind in deciding whether the identifying witnesses are worth relying upon or not. Among other things, what the Court of law has to see can be catalogued as follows: (1) the number of wrong persons picked out by the identifying witnesses; (2) consistency of the identification made at different times; (3) sufficiency of number of men on parade; and (4) number of wrong identifications. Apart from what is stated, the other facts which should weigh with the Judge in scrutinising the identifying evidence is whether the witnesses had known the accused and whether they were close enough to the accused about the time of the alleged occurrence and whether the accused had taken some prominent part which impressed the witnesses in the matter of identification: 1953 Cr.L.J. 692: A.I.R. 1953 Bhopal 8.

Normally, the result of identification proceedings in which a particular accused was put must also be taken into consideration in deciding whether the identification was good. It is upon the basis of it that it must be held whether identification is good and reliable or fit to be discarded. Other identification proceedings in which the particular accused was not put up for identification and other accused were put up, are immaterial except in so far as inference may be drawn against the power of observation of the witnesses. The inference may be drawn from these other identification proceedings when they were held either prior to the identification proceeding relating to the particular accused or simultaneously with or shortly after it. But no conclusion can be drawn from those other identification proceedings if they were held long afterwards, because by the lapse of time a witness may lose that freshness of impression which he might have retained at the time when the proceeding connected with the particular accused was held. Therefore, identification proceedings held long after the particular proceeding with which the Court is concerned should not be taken into consideration in weighing the evidence of identification with regard to particular accused: 1952 All. L.J. 568: A.I.R. 1953 All 314. This case was followed in 1957 Cr.L.J. 113 (All.) and A.I.R. 1960 All. 50 (D.B.).

Quality, and not quantity, is the real criteria; if there is only one witness who alone had an opportunity to see the accused, his evidence has to be subjected to strict scrutiny and careful examination; if thereafter his evidence inspires confidence and rings true, it should not be discarded for being quantitatively insufficient: (1988) 36 B.L.J.R. 720 (D.B.). However see A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 1392. See also S. 134.

It cannot be said that the number of witnesses who failed to identify an accused should be set off against those who did identify him, so that if an accused was identified by two, but not by two others, he should be deemed to have been identified by none; because a witness should be judged on the strength of what he himself has seen and not on the inability of somebody else to see it: 1957 Cr.L.J. 1378: A.I.R. 1957 All. 809.

It is not unusual for witnesses to make mistakes of identity when a large number of persons are concerned in committing a crime; in any event it is a question of fact to be decided in each case and is not a question of law: A.I.R. 1960 S.C. 289: 1960 Cr.L.J. 424. If at least two out of five witnesses identify accused, held, conviction can be based on such identification: 1994 Cr.L.J. 37 (Andh. Pra.).

Per Desai, J.—The weight to be attached to the identification of a suspect by a witness should ordinarily not depend upon his failure to identify suspects. It follows that it should not depend upon the mistake committed by him, i.e., upon the number of innocent men picked out by him as other offenders: 1953 Cr.L.J. 848: A.I.R. 1953 All. 385.

Where a person identifies one suspect correctly but commits several mistakes that identification should not be accepted and the evidence of that witness should be discarded. To hold otherwise would be to ignore the rule of prudence and caution completely and would be quite contrary to the definition of the word 'proved' as given in S. 3: 1957 Cr.L.J. 113 (All.).

At an identification parade there is always a possibility of mistaken identifications. When the assailants and the person assaulted came close together, it is no doubt possible that the assailants may be recognised, but in an assault at the dead of night in intermittent light with large number of persons being amongst those who were assaulting and with the natural fear and confusion that the presence of dacoits creates in the hearts of men and women persons would not be in a position to so carefully notice the feature of those who were assaulting them as to enable reliance to be placed upon their identification after a period of eight months, particularly when upon a total view of their picking out at two identifications it is seen that they picked out an equal number of suspects and non-suspects: 1958 Cr.L.J. 996: A.I.R. 1958 All. 616.

Where the accused was identified by most of the witnesses in the test identification parade, held, a few defects in the test parade do not justify rejection of the identifying witness's evidence of the accused having committed the offence: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 1831: 1979 Cr.L.R. 499.

When all but one witness had correctly identified the accused in the identification parade, held, the mere fact that one witness identified a wrong person instead of the accused, is no ground for rejecting the evidence of those who had rightly identified the accused: 1974 S.C.C. (Cr.) 760: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 2267.

Where in an identification parade the witness picked up three persons correctly and committed one mistake, held, his performance is good and his testimony can be accepted; a witness need not be able to identify all the suspects: 1979 All.Cr.R. 460: 1980 All.Cr.C. 61: 1979 All.L.J. 1151.

According to the six identifying witnesses they had last seen the accused during the course of the commission of a dacoity at which firing was taking place and did not see him again till a year later. Still all of them identified him and not one of them made mistake. Held, that the whole identification became suspicious: 1954 Cr.L.J. 1762: A.I.R. 1954 All. 795. The fact that every one of the identifying witnesses was not able to identify every one of the accused in the case does not detract from the evidence of those witnesses who identified particular accused: 1958 Raj.L.W. 527. Correct identification by three out of four persons held sufficient to bring home the guilt to the accused: 1954 Cr.L.J. 1762: A.I.R. 1954 All. 795.

Identification by one out of four persons held not sufficient for conviction: 1954 Cr.L.J. 1762: A.I.R. 1954 All. 795.

No hard and fast rule can be laid down that in every case of dacoity, if there is identification by only one witness, that identification should never be accepted. Every instance of identification in circumstances which usually accompany a case for dacoity has to be judged on the facts of that particular case presented by the prosecution and if after a careful scrutiny there is the slightest hesitation in the mind of the Court that there was possibility of a mistaken identification or that the statement of the sole witness was influenced by some other cause, the accused, in view of the matter, is entitled, as a matter of course, to the benefit of a reasonable doubt: 1955 B.L.J.R. 428: A.I.R. 1956 Pat. 39.

Accused identified by only one witness—Identification held not sufficient to corroborate the statement made by an accomplice before his death: 1960 All.L.J. 567: 1960 All.W.R. (H.C.) 431: (1961) 1 Cr.L.J. 591.

Solitary evidence of identification—Cannot be relied upon for conviction: 1979 All.Cr.R. 390 (D.B). See also 1977 B.B.C.J. (H.C.) 84: 1977 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 30 (Pat.) (Sole witness—Not safe to convict an accused); 1992 Cr.L.J. 863 (Ori.).

Where witnesses who were admittedly present at the place of occurrence and had seen the accused failed to give any description of the accused persons, but nevertheless they identified accused during identification parade, held, their evidence could not be disbelieved particularly when it inspired confidence and their statements found corroboration from the earlier identification parade: 1994 Cr.L.J. 3531 (Raj.).

The accused were unknown to the witnesses before the occurrence. Though there was bright moonlight, these witnesses had the opportunity of seeing these fleeing strangers for a very short time. These accused persons also had no distinctive appearance or infirmities which would fix their features indelibly upon the minds of these witnesses. The first information report and the dying declaration did not contain even a description of accused. The identification parade had been held practically 15 months after the date of occurrence. Held, that in these circumstances it would be unsafe to rest the conviction of the accused upon the identification evidence: 1959 M.L.J. (Cr.) 994: I.L.R. (1959) Mad. 1032: (1960) 1 M.L.J. 12.

Where in a dacoity case it was contended that it was not possible for witnesses to identify the accused persons as it was a dark night and accused were in muffled faces, but the witnesses specifically stated that all the lights in the temple were on and they identified accused in the light and though the accused were in muffled faces but in the scuffle the clothes on their face came down and subsequently witnesses identified accused in the identification parade, held, the evidence of witnesses could be relied upon: 1994 Cr.L.J. 3531 (Raj.).

Where direct evidence of identity of the accused who have been moving about under assumed names and are total strangers, comprises of (i) a first time identification in the Court after a lapse of considerable time or (ii) identification at a test parade, held, it is not safe to place implicit reliance on the evidence of witnesses who had just a fleeting glimpse or no particular reason to remember the accused: A.I.R. 1992 S.C. 2100: (1992) 3 S.C.C. 700.

It is not necessary to take into consideration the mistakes committed by the witnesses at other identification parades unless any of the witnesses has made a palpably large number of mistakes at all other identification parades: 1954 Cr. L.J. 1439: A.I.R. 1954 All. 684.

Where moles and marks on the accused's face were covered with paper as also the faces of some other persons and they were joined in the test identification, held, such paper make up rendered the parade wholly unreliable; the prosecution having failed to eliminate the possibility of the accused being shown to the witnesses before the parade, it is not safe to convict the accused: A.I.R. 1992 S.C. 601: 1992 Cr.L.J. 524.

The fact that the accused had not protested cannot be brushed aside in adjudging the truthfulness of his contention that the witnesses were known to him before the test identification parade and more so when the parade had taken place much after the date when he is alleged to have been shown: 1980 All.Cr.R. 313.

Where of the three accused in a murder and attempt to murder case one had absconded and the other was acquitted for want of evidence against him, the star prosecution witness was the deceased's wife who had also been attacked and inflicted sharp incised wounds on her cheek and neck with a daranti, a sharp edged weapon, with which her husband had been murdered only a few moments earlier in the drawing room and her testimony by and large tallied with her statement to the Police which constituted the F.I.R. and she had also identified the accused and no reason was shown to doubt her testimony which was found to be straight forward and free from any embellishments, held, some innocuous omissions in the F.I.R. would not show that she was not a wholly reliable witness; merely because she was admitted, and remained, in hospital for treatment and the application for identification parade was moved a few days thereafter stating therein that the accused had been asked to keep his face muffled up but he declined to join the parade on the ground of having already been shown to the witness would detract from the veracity of her testimony when no suggestion was made in cross-examination of his having been so shown to the witness nor was it shown by him that he was not kept in muffled face: 1995 Cr.L.J. 1618 (Del.) (D.B.).

Accused confined into two jails at P and J—Witnesses identifying accused at P jail—Only some of them sent to J for identification—Evidence of witnesses who did not go to J held should not be discarded—Evidence of other witnesses who had gone to both places held could not be ruled out on the ground that they stood in company of former—Identification at J held was quite irrelevant in judging results of identification P: 1953 Cr.L.J. 848: A.I.R. 1953 All. 385.

Per Desai, J.—If the identification appears to have been induced by any suggestion or other means, the Court should not hesitate to quash any conviction which follows, particularly when justice depends upon the identification of the accused: 1953 Cr.L.J. 848: A.I.R. 1953 All. 385.

Identification held on a day previous to his arrest, as the accused was in judicial custody in connection with some other case, held, is not in accordance with law: 1977 Raj.Cr.C. 238.

Each of the accused was correctly and consistently pointed out by at least four of the eye-witnesses of the crime. These witnesses had also pointed out the accused before the Court and sworn that they saw them taking part in the dacoity. The witnesses further declared that they had never seen these persons before the dacoity and the identification parade. There was bright moonlight and the robbers and their victims had seen each other from very close quarters. Held, that the eye-witnesses had every chance of marking features of the accused. Accordingly, the evidence on the test identification was deserving of very high value: A.I.R. 1956 All. 163: 1956 All.L.J. 206.

Where four identification parades were held by the Magistrate on one and the same date in the jail in which each of the four accused was put up for identification separately, the evidentiary value of a witness against all the accused should be judged in the light of the cumulative result of all the four parades and not of the particular parade in which he may identify a particular accused, because all the four tests were held on one and the same date: 1957 Cr.L.J. 1378: A.I.R. 1957 All. 809.

Where a witness without any adequate reason is not sent to the subsequent parades, it is a circumstance which throws doubt upon his power of observation and memory: 1957 Cr.L.J. 113 (All.).

Where identity of the accused was established: (1992-1) 40 B.L.J.R. 436 (D.B.); (1992-1) 40 B.L.J.R. 49 (D.B.); (1991-1) 39 B.L.J.R. 587; (1991-2) 39 B.L.J.R. 1000 (D.B.); (1990-1) 38 B.L.J.R. 676 (S.C.); 1989 M.P.L.J. 497 (D.B.); 1984 Cr.L.J. 445; 1983 Raj.L.W. 395; 1983 Raj.L.W. 397 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 1831; 1979 All.Cr.R. 284; A.I.R. 1973 S.C. 1200.

Violent mob spearheaded by party at 20/25 men attacking Police party from behind with bombs—Held, that circumstances were such that persons in spearhead could be identified by members of Police party: (1965) 1 Cr.L.J. 160: A.I.R. 1965 Cal. 89.

4. Covering of identification marks.—The Court is under a duty to see that justice is not defeated by the prosecution witnesses being deprived of an opportunity of seeing the face of the accused or as much of it as is necessary for identifying him. The right of the accused to dress in any manner that he likes or to cover his face or marks on it is subject to the right of the prosecution witnesses to see so much of his face as is necessary for their being able to identify him. An accused can claim the right to go to the Court wearing a mask, but certainly he cannot claim this right in order to prevent the prosecution witnesses being able to identify him. If an accused has prominent marks on his face so that he may be identified by any person, though he has never seen him before, merely on the basis of the information that he has such and such marks, it may be necessary to cover the marks so that if the person identifies him it cannot be contended that he identified him because he was informed of the marks. The Court must be assured that the identification is genuine, i.e., is based only upon the recollection that the witness has the features of the person committing the crime. But this covering of marks should be within reasonable limits and should not be carried on to such an extent as to disfigure the face or to make its identification practically impossible or extremely difficult. The covering of marks should not be allowed to defeat the very object of identification. This is essentially a question of credibility of the witnesses and it is always better to face this question than to prevent all identification by completely disguising the face. No question of testing the credibility of a prosecution witness arises at the stage when he identifies the accused during his examination-in-chief; therefore, at that stage the accused has no right to subject to him to any test. While he is examined-in-chief, he is under the control of the State counsel and the accused has no right to interfere with the examination-in-chief and cannot direct the manner in which he should be asked to identify him. He cannot require the Magistrate to have an identification parade or to collect men to stand with him. It is only when the witness is being cross-examined that he can put questions to test the truth of his statement that he had identified him only on account of seeing him committing the crime and not on the basis of having seen him somewhere else or on the information that he had such and such marks. Held, that if the accused covered his two scars with pieces of paper of not more than 1" × 1" dimensions, it would not amount to a disguise and would not prevent his identification by the witnesses who had seen him committing the crime with which he had been charged. He should not be permitted to disguise or conceal his face in any other manner. There could be no objection to his bringing a number of men to stand near him in the Court-room, but he had no right to any assistance from the Court in collecting the men or in having their faces similarly covered with pieces of paper. Courts were open, the public or anyone could go inside a Court-room provided there was a space and he did not cause any disturbance or interruption in the proceeding going on in the Court: 1959 All.L.J. 252: 1959 Cr.L.J. 934: A.I.R. 1959 All. 504.

Only those marks which are prominent or noteworthy that they are likely to be recognised by a verbal description should be covered by slips of paper. If a suspect has a large number of prominent marks on his face, the marks should not be covered at all. Small-pox marks are usually so large in number that any attempt at concealing them with slips of paper would make the face totally unrecognizable. So the Magistrate should be sure that a number of innocent men in the parade bear similar pox marks. So also no concealment of bored ears is required and all that is necessary is that the Magistrate should make sure that the parade contains a number of innocent men with similarly bored ears. If the Magistrate comes to entertain good cause for the belief that in order to avoid recognition a bearded criminal after committing the crime got himself shaved or vice versa, it is open to him to defer the identification of the clean shaven suspect until he has grown a beard of the appropriate size, or to get the bearded suspect shaved. No violation of Art. 20(3) of the Constitution occurs if the Magistrate does so: I.L.R. (1960) 2 All. 488: (1961) 1 Cr.L.J. 340: A.I.R. 1961 All 153.

A correct identification consists in forming an accurate opinion as to identity after comparing the image which persists in the mind of a witness with the image actually seen at the time of the test identification. A test identification parade is a scientific experiment conducted in order to ascertain whether the evidence of identity to be given in Court by a witness is sufficiently reliable to form a basis of conviction for offence. In the process of identification of a face, certain parts of the face, such as the nose, the chin, the mouth, the eyebrows, often serve to indicate and fix those characteristics upon the mind which distinguish the face from others and enable its correct identification. If these very characteristics are concealed or given a false appearance the identification cannot be reliable: 1965 All.L.J. 166.

Where during the identification proceedings prominent parts of the face, like nose and chin are covered by slips, to hide distinctive marks, the appearance of the face is bound to be altered and the identification proceedings must necessarily be falsified and no convictions can be based upon identifications made in such proceedings: 1964 All.L.J. 866.

Where the accused had brown eyes and none with such brown eyes were mixed in the parade, held, even a hint about the colour of his eyes, given by some one interested in his identification, would be sufficient to pick him out from the parade; such identification is of no value: A.I.R. 1973 S.C. 1200: (1973) 3 S.C.C. 55: 1973 Cr.L.J. 926.

5. Identification of property.—No presumption attaches to identification proceedings to property. It is for the prosecution to establish affirmatively that every necessary precaution was taken to ensure fair identification. The most essential requirement is that the witnesses should not have had an opportunity of seeing the property after its recovery and before its identification before the Magistrate. For that purpose it is necessary to seal the property as soon as it is recovered and to keep it in a sealed condition till it is produced before the Magistrate. The Police Officers who take the sealed bundles to the thana after recovery and who take it to the Magistrate for identification proceedings should be examined to prove that sealed bundles were not tampered with in any way. The sealed bundles should be opened in the presence of the Magistrate conducting the identification proceedings and he should depose about it. The property to be mixed with the property to be identified should also be sealed some days before witnesses are called and the bundle containing it should also be opened in the presence of the Magistrate who should testify about it in Court. Further, the result of identification as well as the fact whether the property mixed was similar to the property identified should be entered in the memorandum by the Magistrate in his own hand: 1954 Cr.L.J. 1819: A.I.R. 1954 Vindh. Pra. 42.

Suit regarding land—Identification of land—Survey plot number is important—No mention or wrong mention of khata number makes a difference: A.I.R. 1965 Pat. 279.

Accused and articles not known to witnesses alone are put up for identification—The knowns are never put up for identification—Statements of witnesses who recognised them are judged from other circumstances: 1962 All.L.J. 748: I.L.R. (1962) 2 All. 843: (1964) 1 Cr.L.J. 78 (S.C.).

The rule of law laid down in Lalla Singh's appeal Cr. App. No. 291 of 1958, dated 15th December, 1959 (All.) is not applicable to the identification of property. In the identification of property frequently only two or three similar articles are mixed and although it is desirable that a larger number of similar articles should be mixed, still the identification of property is not disbelieved if the witnesses are credible and they have been subjected to a fair test, merely because the similar articles mixed were only two or three in number. This is only to illustrate that the identification of property stands on a different footing than the identification of person: I.L.R. (1961) 2 All. 32: 1961 All.L.J. 402: A.I.R. 1961 All. 614; I.L.R. (1971) 21 Raj. 52.

Identification of an article at the trial is substantive evidence and its identification at the time of test identification is only a corroborative piece of evidence: 1977 W.L.N. 227 (Raj.) (D.B.).

Identification of stolen articles — Test identification chart — Articles with which stolen articles were mixed up indicated—Non-mention of their number in the chart, held, was mere omission and did not make test identification unreliable in any way: 1960 B.L.J.R. 268: I.L.R. 39 Pat. 361.

Where witnesses identify the articles of their own daily use, it can be relied upon even without special identification marks thereon: 1981 Jab.L.J. 183: 1981 M.P.L.J. 457.

Facts establishing identify of things—Incriminatory article of common use—Rape case — Dhoti with blood-stains recovered from house of accused—No evidence to show that it belonged to accused or was put on by him when he took away the girl—Identification of dhoti is of no use: 1966 Cr.L.J. 318: 1966 All.W.R. (H.C.) 208: 1966 All. Cr.R. 132.

If the recovered stolen article to be identified at the identification parade possess a distinctive mark, the identification is insufficient to prove the charge. Where the hanslis on the body of girl, who is a victim of rape, possessed a distinctive mark and if the witnesses could identify it by that distinctive mark, it could not lead to the conclusion that the witnesses identified the article because they had seen it earlier on the body of the victim and not because they had been able to identify it by that special mark: 1966 Cr.L.J. 318: 1966 All.W.R. (H.C.) 208: 1966 All.Cr.R. 132.

Where a lady witness identified her stolen ornaments and silk sarees before the trial Court which was sought to be assailed for want of prior test identification, held, it is common knowledge that ladies have an uncanny sense of identifying their own belongings, particularly articles of personal use in the family; the objection has no merit: A.I.R. 1983 S.C. 446: (1983) 1 S.C.C. 330.

Where gold and silver ornaments belonging to her parents are identified by none else than the daughter herself, such identification cannot be brushed aside merely on the ground of delay of about four months; the daughter knew which ornaments belonged to her father and which to her mother and she identified the same without hesitation both at the parade and in the Court. [(1967) 43 Cut.L.T. 38, Foll.]: (1981) 52 Cut.L.T. 126: 1981 Cr.L.J. 1452 (D.B.).

For conviction under S. 411 prosecution must prove that the articles recovered are stolen property—In the absence of distinguishing marks, no absolute inference could be drawn from the mere similarity of articles—Hence, accused should be given benefit of doubt: 1966 All.W.R. (H.C.) 481.

Prosecution must prove that article recovered was stolen article and this could be done only by mixing recovered article with articles of similar description at time of identification parade—Held, on facts that identification proceedings were a farce: 1966 All.Cr.R. 338.

To identify articles, the law requires mixing of similar articles, and not identical articles; two persons are never identical though it is possible to have machine made identical article but in such a case even the real owner cannot identity his lost article; the articles are required to be similar in the same sense as similar persons are mixed up with the accused in the test identification but there should be no prominent marks on the articles about which the identifying witness could be given a clue to identify it even if it does not belong to him: 1980 Cr.L.J. 571 (All.). See also 1977 W.L.N. 379 (Raj.).

The established position of law is that the evidence of Test Identification Parade cannot form the basis of conviction. That evidence is not a substantive piece of evidence. The purpose of T.I. Parade is to test the statement of the witness made in Court which constitutes substantive evidence. Where there is no such substantive evidence at all as to the identity of the stolen properties, the earlier identification parade cannot be of any assistance to the prosecution especially when there has been inordinate delay in holding the test identification: (1978) 46 Cut.L.T. 260.

Identification of alleged stolen property—Articles recovered such as are commonly used by villagers—Identification held valueless: 1954 Cr.L.J. 1819: A.I.R. 1954 Vindh. Pra. 42. See also 1977 B.B.C.J. (H.C.) 84.

Test identification of the articles wherein same type of articles were not mixed up but ink marks were put on the articles to be identified, held, cannot be relied on: (1976) 1 M.P.W.N. 267; 1983 M.P.W.N. 233; 1988 J.L.J. 505 (D.B.); 1992 Cr.L.J. 1150 (Madh. Pra.).

Statement as to recovery of the robbed property, held, has to be corroborated by an earlier test identification. [1979 Cr.L.J. 919 (S.C.); A.I.R. 1972 S.C. 283, Rel. on]: 1982 All.Cr.R. 165.

Identification of articles found in possession of accused alleged to have been in dacoity—Chits attached to articles—No chits on other articles mixed with those put up for identification — Articles of very ordinary type of every day use — No reliance, held, could be placed on such identification: 1952 All.L.J. 568: 1953 Cr.L.J. 705: A.I.R. 1953 All. 314. Women may identify their necklaces even without marks of identification if they are whole and unbroken, but they can never identify a piece of a necklace or ordinary type if it is made into several pieces each piece about 2 inches in length: I.L.R. (1957) Cut. 680: 24 Cut.L.T. 1: A.I.R. 1958 Ori. 51.

Where the complainant in a case of robbery had described his stolen watch as of H.M.T. make but the watch of H.M.T. make recovered from the accused was of 'citizen' brand, held, the identity of watch recovered from the accused as being the stolen property is not established beyond reasonable doubt; such watches are commonly available in the market: 1985 Cr.L.J. 1700.

Watches recovered from accused given on superdari to identifying witnesses by Magistrate after identification before him—Non-production of Magistrate takes the wind out of the prosecution sails: (1983) 23 Del.L.T. 178: 1983 Rajdhani L.R. 146.

The contention that the identification of articles (recovered from dacoits) in Court cannot be believed because they were not put forth for identification under S. 9 which applies both to the identification of person and property, is not acceptable for the identification in Court assumes more importance. [A.I.R. 1950 All. 180 and A I.R. 1945 Pat. 161, Disting.]: 1959 Cr.L.J. 947: A.I.R. 1959 Andh. Pra. 387.

Money cannot be subjected to a test identification parade. [1978 Cr.L.J. 634 (All.), Foll.]: (1983) 23 Del.L.T. 178: 1983 Rajdhani L.R. 146.

Mere recovery of money in a bribery case, divorced from the circumstances of its payment, is not sufficient to convict the accused when other substantive evidence is not reliable. [I.L.R. (1974) 2 Del. 400, Reversed]: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 1408.

6. Value of identification.—(See also Note 3(b) and Note 3(e), supra). Statement of witnesses in F.I.R. and before police and identification before Magistrate who held test identification parade, is not substantive evidence and no conviction could be based on such evidence—Evidence against accused must be evidence given by witness in witness-box: 1969 Pat.L.J.R. 21.

Where the description of a tall stout man with moustaches fitted three of the accused said to be the actual assailants, held, that the description was not particular description of any accused who was one of the accused to whom this description fitted in. The descriptions given were not such distinctive descriptions which might go a long way in supporting the identification of witnesses: 1955 All.L.J. 330: A.I.R. 1955 All. 138.

Whether a witness points out a suspect standing before him as the criminal or he placed his finger on the person as the criminal identified by him, held, is one and the same thing: 1992 Mah.L.J. 1106 (D.B.).

Even making allowance for the increase in the distance in tropical countries, the distance of moonlight recognition cannot go from 12 yards or 17 yards to 45 yards and 52 yards. Held, in the nature of this case and with due regard to the shadows of the cashewnut forest wherein the scene of stabbing was situated, identification of the accused at a distance of 45 and 52 yards did not appear to be possible. So even if the witness was speaking the truth when he said that he saw two persons attacking the deceased and then removing him, it was not possible to accept his identification of those persons as accused: 1963 M.L.J. (Cr.) 194: 1962 Ker.L.T. 120: (1963) 1 Cr.L.J. 175: A.I.R. 1963 Ker. 54.

When the witness who knew the accused for a long time saw him running past her when the moon was just set and she was enjoined by her mistress also accused as abetter to keep quiet and she identified the accused for the first time in the Committing Magistrate's Court. Held, that she could not be treated as an accomplice (accessory after the fact) as her silence till then was satisfactorily explained and when all the facts were known; she testified to the identity of the murderer and named him in Court of Committing Magistrate, her evidence may be held faultless and reliable. Having known him for long she could properly identify as he was running past her in the open roof: A.I.R. 1952 Him. Pra. 81: 1952 Cr.L.J. 1720; (1971) 1 Cut.W.R. 351. See also 1979 All.Cr.C. 498; 1974 Cr.L.J. 1212 (Ori.) (One can recognise a known person even in star light).

Where a witness had actually caught hold of the axe in the accused's hand and both tried to snatch it from each other, held, his evidence could not be treated as incredible merely because no test identification parade was held: A.I.R. 1971 Madh. Pra. 116: 1971 M.P.L.J. 64: 1971 Cr.L.J. 814: 1971 Jab.L.J. 165. See also 1992 Cr.L.J. 3251 (Him. Pra.) (D.B.).

Where the accused had no previous acquaintance with the witnesses and the occurrence happened on a dark night, held, in the absence of cogent evidence that the witnesses, due to visibility at the place of occurrence and proximity to the assilants had a clear vision of the role of each of the accused so that their features could get impressed in their mind to enable them to recollect and identify the assailants even after a long lapse of time, it would be hazardous to conclude that the accused were the real assailants, especially when the identification parade was found to be not properly conducted: A.I.R. 1991 S.C. 1468.

Where all the accused were known as they belonged to the same village and also bore animus against the deceased and the occurrence had taken place towards the February end in an open field at about 5.30 p.m., held, it could not be so dark as to make the identification impossible: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 2073.

Where rural witnesses deposed that they had seen the accused assaulting the deceased necessarily implies that there was sufficient visibility for them to recognise the assailants; in villages, people are well known to each other and can identify persons even from a distance in dark nights by their gait, stature and manner of movement: (1983) 55 Cut.L.T. 312.

Evidence as to identification—Weight to be attached: (1958) 2 M.L.J. (S.C.)113: A.I.R. 1958 S.C. 350.

'Statement of persons as to cause of his death or as to any circumstances of the transaction which resulted in his death'—Conviction based on identification: 1967 Ker.L.T. 466.

Witnesses identifying accused after a period of four months without committing single mistake—This by itself is a suspicious circumstance—Evidence, held, inadmissible: 1960 All.L.J. 414: 1960 All.W.R. (H.C.) 275: 1960 All. Cr.R. 193.

Fleat importance is attached to the evidence of identification in dacoity cases where dacoits are not arrested on the spot. Evidence of identification should be entirely above board and should command confidence—Investigating Officer getting accused photographed after arrest and before they were sent to jail—Evidence of identification becomes suspicious and cannot be relied upon: 1960 All.L.J. 414: 1960 All.W.R. (H.C.) 275: 1960 All.Cr.R. 193.

In a murder case involving several accused, holding of identification parade by the Investigating Officer for his 'personal satisfaction' without any attempt to get a Magistrate to hold a test identification is a grievous error of judgment on the part of the Investigating Officer. A conviction in a capital case cannot be based on the subjective satisfaction of the Investigating Officer but on evidence which satisfies certain well-recognised objective tests: 1960 Cr. L.J. 1402: A.I.R. 1960 Andh. Pra. 545.

Conviction can not be based on identification by a person who on his own admission was drunk: 1957 All.W.R. (H.C.) 802: 1957 All. L.J. 718.

The accused were unknown to the witnesses before the occurrence. Though there was bright moonlight, these witnesses had the opportunity of seeing these fleeing strangers for a very short time. These accused persons also had no distinctive appearance or infirmities which would fix their features indelibly upon the minds of these witnesses. The first information report and the dying declaration did not contain even a description of these accused. The identification parade had been held practically 15 months after the date of occurrence. Held, that in these circumstances, it would be unsafe to rest the conviction of the accused upon the identification evidence: 1959 M.L.J. (Cr.) 994: I.L.R. (1959) Mad. 1032: (1960) 1 M.L.J. 12: A.I.R. 1960 Mad. 125.

It is no doubt true that what a witness actually says about his having seen a particular witness at the time of incident in Court is the evidence regarding identification, but where the witness has an opportunity of seeing a particular accused at the trial and even earlier this identification loses much of its significance: 1959 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 150.

Villagers, not living in electrified villages, are accustomed to seeing things in the lantern light, their eyesight is conditioned; their power of seeing is not diminished because they witnessed the incident in the lantern, and not electric light; besides, identification poses no serious problem where the accused were also known to the witnesses: A.I.R. 1983 S.C. 957: 1983 Cr.L.J. 1457: (1983) 3 S.C.C. 470.

Merely because the fatal blow was given by one of the accused cannot negative the infirmities of the general nature affecting the veracity of the identification evidence; the benefit of a doubtful identification should also accrue to him equally if others had been acquitted on that very ground: A.I.R. 1992 S.C. 1871: 1992 Cr.L.J. 3140: (1992) 2 S.C.C. 455.

Where because of threat from the accused, the deceased slept with his family, with the lantern on, on the village chaupal platform, the scene of occurrence, where three shots were fired, and the eyewitness, sleeping a few feet away sustained a gun shot injury, held, he could identify the accused without any difficulty; the burning lantern was produced before the Investigating Officer the moment he came to the scene; besides, the assailants used torches which enabled the witness to recognise the accused: A.I.R. 1978 S.C. 1605.

In a case of dacoity, where the only evidence is of identification, the question of light is of paramount importance. This should be approached in a careful and judicious manner and not in an unintelligent and wooden manner: (1961) 2 Cr.L.J. 744: A.I.R. 1961 All. 612.

While appreciating the identification evidence question of light and opportunity for identification assumes importance: 1982 All.Cr.R. 200: 1982 All.W.C. 329: 1982 All.L.J. 1061. See also 1980 All.L.J. 664 (Lantern burning in the room—No bright light—Dacoits covering their heads—Not basis for conviction); 1964 All.L.J. 866 (Midnight—Identification inside house too difficult and improbable); 1992 Cr.L.J. 3819 (All.) (D.B.) (Not sufficient light at the time when dacoity was committed—Identification unworthy of acceptance).

Where at least one eyewitness could reasonably be expected to have known some of the accused as residents of closeby villages and his co-students, held, his feigned ignorance of prior familiarity with their identity becomes irreconcilable with the incidents of ordinary human intercourse; the omission to disclose their identity in the F.I.R. raises a reasonable doubt about the accused's complicity: A.I.R. 1988 S.C. 345: 1988 Cr.L.J. 422: (1988) 1 S.C.C. 14: 1988 All.W.C. 374.

Where the suspects were already shown to the complainant before the identification parade, the evidence of identification can hardly be relied on: A.I.R. 1958 Tripura 40: 1958 Cr.L.J. 1549. But where an accused has been identified both at the identification parade and at the trial, held, the identification can be safely accepted. See 1977 Cr.L.J. 319 (Ori.) (D.B.).

Normally the result of identification proceedings in which a particular accused is put up must alone be taken into consideration in deciding the value of identification of a particular witness with respect to that accused. Other test identifications in which the accused in question was not put up may be taken into consideration for appraising the power of observation of witnesses only if those tests were held so soon after the test in which the particular accused was put up, that the intervening period may reasonably be said not to make any difference to the memory of the witnesses: 1958 All.W.R. (H.C.) 542: 1958 All.L.J. 431: 1958 All.Cr.R. 344.

The rule that the result of performance of each witness in different parades should be taken into account to judge him therefrom is not of universal application; the result of only those parades can be taken into account which are held simultaneously or within a few days of each other; there is no rule that the result of a parade held early should be rejected because the witness had made mistakes in the parades held several months thereafter; however, if the witness gives a much improved performance in subsequent parades, the result of the earlier may be taken into account: 1978 All.Cr.R. 146.

Failure to identify accused by eye-witnesses—Creates doubts about presence of accused: 1953 All.L.J. 720: A.I.R. 1953 All. 652.

Identification by seeing the back is at best a treacherous one: 1957 All.L.J. 718.

Where the entire case depends mainly on the identification in the test identification parade as well as before the trial Court and both the trial and the appellate Courts having assessed the evidence in the proper perspective attached much importance to the evidence of identification in finding the accused guilty, held, the Supreme Court will not interfere: A.I.R. 1990 S.C. 1180: 1990 Cr.L.J. 1183.

In a big riot by hundreds of persons, it is very easy even to mistake one person for another and implicate honestly really innocent persons and even to mistake persons seen elsewhere as having been seen in the riot: 1958 Cr.L.J. 97: A.I.R. 1958 Tripura 1.

Five out of eight persons identifying accused, but victims of dacoity failed to identify him, held, such an identification was unreliable: 1992 Cr.L.J. 3819 (All.) (D.B.).

Identification of accused by ocular witness at Police station—Weight of—Hit by

S. 162, Cr.P.Code — Identification is of no consequence: 1982 Cr.L.J. 1656 (Del.).

Mere mention of the accused's names before the Investigation Officer in statements under S. 161 of the Code of Criminal Procedure or during the trial is of no avail if their names were not mentioned in the F.I.R. and no test identification parade was held. [1977 Cr.L.J. 1788 (All.), Foll.]: 1982 All.W.C. 173: 1982 All.Cr.R. 131: 1982 All.L.J. 498. See also 1982 Cr.L.J. 2056 (Bom.).

Where the accused has been named and identified by only partisan witnesses, but not by the independent witnesses, it would not be safe to base the conviction on the testimony of the former: 1957 Cr.L.J. 1378: A.I.R. 1957 All. 809.

Identification made at night, and that too during an occurrence like dacoity, when blows are struck and people are terrorized, is regarded generally of very little value; as is so often said, such evidence is unreliable; it should, therefore, be approached in a careful and judicious, and not in an unintelligent and wooden manner; it should be entirely above board and command confidence: 1978 Raj.L.W. 239 (D.B.).

The only burning lantern in the house was alleged to have been overturned by the dacoits while entering the house for committing dacoity at mid-night. The identifying witnesses who were inside the house were not able to give any features of the dacoits or describe what any particular dacoit was doing and their evidence was also inconsistent with medical evidence. One of the identifying witnesses was not in a position even to see the looted house from the place where he was standing. Held, that the identification inside the house was too difficult and improbable and the identification evidence was worthless. When the lantern was overturned by the dacoits while entering the house, the witnesses inside the house could not be said to have seen the dacoits well enough. If the visibility had been good inside, the witnesses could not have given a version inconsistent with medical evidence: 1964 All.L.J. 866.

Where in case of dacoity the witnesses had mentioned features of the accused and identified them in the identification parade and money was also recovered at the instance of the accused, held, accused's participation in the crime was established: 1992 Cr.L.J. 1256 (Ori.).

Where an identification parade was conducted three and a half months after the dacoity and none of the identifying witnesses had in their earlier statement given description or identification mark or other particulars about the stature or colour or stoutness or thinness of the dacoits, held, the evidence was not sufficient to convict the accused: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 1392.

Where in a case of bus dacoity, though none of the witnesses had acquaintance with, or had seen the accused earlier, but all of them had, even without any margin of error, identified the accused, held, it creates a lurking suspicion whether the identifying witnesses were identifying the accused put up in the parade because of the fetters on their legs: A.I.R. 1993 S.C. 931: 1993 Cr.L.J. 193.

Where dacoity was committed in the afternoon but the informants raised no hue and cry, there was admitted enemity between the informants and the accused and the identifying witnesses were inimical or on unfriendly terms with the identified dacoits, their co-villagers; moreover, neither precautions had been taken to conceal the accused's faces nor did the identifying witnesses disclosed as to how had they occasion to see the dacoits earlier and no local witnesses were examined, held, the trial Court should have insisted on the identifying witnesses' competence to recognise the accused: (1985-86) 90 Cal.W.N. 106.

Where in a case of dacoity and house breaking by night, the accused persons as well as the stolen articles were identified and there was no possibility of accused having been shown before the identification parade, held, their conviction on the basis of evidence of identifying witness was proper: 1995 Cr.L.J. 3178 (Ori.).

In considering the identification in a dacoity case, the existence of hostility in the form of mutual grudge or animosity cannot be wholly excluded from consideration as the same may influence an honest witness whose mind is always prepared to receive the suggestion that the act was of nobody else but that of his enemy. An honest witness can be a victim of false perception if his mind is labouring under some misconception that his enemy alone was likely to assablt and rob him of his belongings. The absence of such mental condition may afford a plausible ground to believe the witness's senses: A.I.R.

10. Things said or done by conspirator in reference to common design.— Where there is reasonable ground to believe that two or more persons have conspired together to commit an offence or an actionable wrong, anything said, done or written by any one of such persons in reference to their common intention, after the time when such intention was first entertained by any one of them, is a relevant fact as against each of the persons believed to be so conspiring, as well for the purpose of proving the existence of the conspiracy as for the purpose of showing that any such person was a party to it.

Reasonable ground exists for believing that A has joined in a conspiracy to wage war against the [1][Government of India.]

The facts that B procured arms in Europe for the purpose of the conspiracy, C collected money in Calcutta for a like object, D persuaded persons to join the conspiracy in Bombay, E published writings advocating the object in view at Agra, and F transmitted from Delhi to G at Kabul the money which C had collected at Calcutta, and the contents of a letter written by H given an account of the conspiracy, are each relevant, both to prove the existence of the conspiracy and to prove A's complicity in it, although he may have been ignorant of all of them, and although the persons by whom they were done were strangers to him, and although they may have taken place before he joined the conspiracy or after he left it.

1956 Pat. 39. The claim of identification by a witness who was terror-stricken due to the sudden attack by the dacoits and by the blows that he received should not be lightly brushed aside on the sole ground that he had reasons to be afraid and that he entertained fear of his safety. Fear, terror and pain are likely to produce mistakes on their own account, but it has to be judged in all such cases whether those were sufficient to create a condition which was equivalent to a morbid state. It has to be examined whether the witness was a victim of terror and his state of mind was wholly unsettled and unbalanced: A.I.R. 1956 Pat. 39. It is no doubt very difficult for a person who has seen a dacoit during dacoity to give detailed description unless he has conspicuous distinguishing marks. Normally only a general description is possible. Simply because any particular distinguishing marks are not deposed to by the witnesses it cannot be said that the identification is not reliable. One may form a general picture of a particular person in his mind and might be able to identify him when he is put up before him, but it is very difficult for persons, specially villagers and young boys, to be able to give detailed description of the persons whom they have seen for a short time during the commission of a dacoity. That does not, however, mean that those persons when placed before them cannot be identified by them: 1958 Raj.L.W. 527.

Where it was contended that the dead body, in an advance stage of decomposition, was not identifiable but the medical officer who had conducted the autopsy was not questioned about it and on the other hand, he had, from the marks of injuries on the dead body definitely opined about the cause of death; clearly, the decomposition was not so advanced as to defy identification; besides the clothes and shoes, found on the dead body, were also identified by some witnesses as being worn by the deceased on the day of his disappearance, held, the contention must be rejected: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 2055: 1976 Cr.L.J. 1578: (1976) 2 S.C.C. 812.

Section 10—Synopsis.

1. Scope of English and Indian Law.
2. Evidence of conspiracy.

1. Scope of English and Indian Law.— S. 10 is wider than the English Law. As soon as it is shown with regard to an individual conspirator that he was privy with the combination and its objects and adopted the acts already performed, he as a conspirator becomes bound by the antecedent and consequent acts of his fellow conspirator: 28 I.C. 738: I.L.R. 37 Cal. 467: (1909-10) 14 Cal.W.N. 1114.

The section renders admissible in cases of conspiracy such evidence which is not ordinarily admissible under the English or Indian Law. The first thing for the prosecution in a case of conspiracy is to give satisfactory evidence to show a common purpose. The existence of the assent of minds which is involved in a conspiracy may be and from the secrecy of the crime usually, must be, inferred from the proof of facts and circumstances which taken together apparently indicate that they are merely part of a complete whole: A.I.R. 1939 All. 567.

There is a considerable inconsistency between S. 10 and the Illustration thereto: I.L.R. 37 Cal. 467: (1909-10) 14 Cal.W.N. 1114.

The principle underlying S. 10 is that a conspirator is an agent of his associates in carrying out the object of the conspiracy. His acts and declarations are, therefore, admissible against the other conspirators on the same principle as the acts and declarations of an agent are receivable against his principal. Prima facie proof of conspiracy and of the accused's connection with it must be given before giving evidence of the act, declaration or writing of a conspirator. It is not necessary that it should be established by direct evidence that the accused and the person whose acts, statements or writings are sought to be given in evidence against the prisoner entered into a formal consultation or agreement to commit offence as in a case of conspiracy direct evidence is seldom available. It may be proved by the surrounding circumstances or by the antecedent or subsequent conduct of the accused: A.I.R. 1958 Mad. 368. It is not necessary to establish by direct evidence that the accused persons did enter into an agreement to commit an offence to attract the operation of S. 10 against the accused: I.L.R. 37 Cal. 467; A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 97. The object of S. 10 is merely to ensure that one person shall not be made responsible for the acts or deeds of another until some bond in the nature of agency has been established between them and the acts, words or writing of another which it is proposed to attribute vicariously to the person charged must be in furtherance of the common design and after such design was entertained: 11 Pat.L.T. 45: A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 145 (F.B.); 1930 M.W.N. 1264.

Under S. 10, once the conspiracy to commit an illegal act is proved, the act of one conspirator becomes the act of others: A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 439: 1980 Cr.L.J. 386.

In cases of criminal conspiracy, S. 10 permits that the evidence of what one conspirator did or said or wrote in reference to their common intention is relevant evidence against other conspirators as well: A.I.R. 1988 Ker. 1: 1988 Cr.L.J. 107: (1987) 1 Ker.L.T. 928.

In cases of conspiracy better evidence than acts and statements of co-conspirators in pursuance of the conspiracy is hardly ever available: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 898.

S. 10 mainly has two parts: (i) there should be a reasonable ground to believe that two or more persons have conspired to commit an offence or an actionable wrong; it is only on this condition precedent being satisfied that the second part comes into operation; the first part evidently has reference to S. 120-A of the Indian Penal Code which inter alia provides "when two or more persons agree to do, or cause to be done." There is a further safeguard under the proviso to S. 120-A that no agreement except an agreement to commit an offence shall amount as such to criminal conspiracy. It is, thus, necessary that a prima facie case of conspiracy has to be established before S.10 is attracted; and (ii) anything said, done or written by any one of such persons in reference to the common intention after the time such intention was first entertained by any one of them is a relevant fact against each of the other persons believed to be so conspiring for proving existence of the conspiracy as also that any such person was party to it; clearly the second part permits the use of evidence which otherwise was inadmissible; an exception has been carved out in the section. The second part operates only when the first part of the section has clearly been established: A.I.R. 1988 S.C. 1883: 1989 Cr.L.J. 1.

S. 10 means this: if two persons conspire together to commit an offence each is regarded as being the agent of the other and just as the principal is liable for the acts of the agent, so each conspirator is liable for what is done by his fellow conspirator in furtherance of the common intention which they had both entertained. First, you must find that there was a conspiracy, and, secondly, that the person to whom the doctrine is to apply should have joined the conspiracy before they can be made liable for anything said or done by others: (1929) 31 Bom.L.R. 515; A.I.R. 1944 Sind 1 (F.B.).

A general conspiracy is different from a number of separate conspiracies having a similar general purpose; when different groups of persons co-operate towards their separate ends, without any privity with each other, each combination constitutes a separate conspiracy: I.L.R. (1978) 1 Del. 327 (D.B.).

It is well settled that conspiratorial agreements are a matter of inference from the circumstances; it is seldom that direct evidence would be available; conspirators rarely proclaim about the conspiracy in advance. As repeatedly held, the gist of the crime of conspiracy is that two or more persons combine, confederate and agree together to carry out the object of conspiracy. The external act of 'conspiracy' is concert whereby mutual consent to a common purpose is exchanged; it is sufficient if the combination exists and is unlawful for it is the combination itself which is mischievous; and under S. 10, each conspirator is regarded as an agent of the other and is liable for what is done or said by the other conspirator: (1985) 1 Bom.C.R. 609.

A formal agreement for formation of a criminal conspiracy is not required; a mutual purpose or concurrence of sentiment and co-operative conduct in a criminal enterprise is sufficient which may be proved by direct or circumstantial agreement or by both; because of the secret nature of conspiracies, direct evidence may not even be available: 1979 Raj.L.W. 192.

It is difficult to get direct evidence of criminal conspiracy; different accused play their assigned roles at different stages and different places; new faces may join and old faces may drop out but the conspiracy continues unless broken up. That is why S. 10 embodies a special rule of relevance permitting the prosecution to lead evidence of isolated acts and omissions of different persons to establish conspiracy and complicity of different persons therein even if they had not met; to that extent, the section is based on the principle of agency and identity of interest between co-conspirators. [1970 Cr.L.J. 9 (S.C.) and 1957 Cr.L.J. 1325, Rel. on]: 1977 Cr.L.J. 1243 (Pat.).

Once a reasonable ground to believe that several persons have conspired to commit an offence exists, the acts and declarations of a particular person in reference to the common intention are relevant facts although that person may not so much as even know of the existence of many others engaged in the conspiracy or were utter strangers to him. A trial Judge may admit evidence under S. 10 of the Evidence Act where he has a reasonable ground to believe as is postulated yet he may reject it, if at a later stage of the trial that ground of belief is displaced by further evidence. It is not the true view that in a conspiracy charge, evidence once admitted remains admissible evidence whatever new aspect the case may assume whether in the original or in the appellate Court. The words 'in reference to their common intention' are words of wide import and if the acts and declarations of which evidence is given in the case can reasonably be said to have reference to the object of the conspiracy, they will be good evidence not only against the maker but also against others who are believed to be so conspiring: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 713: A.I.R. 1965 Cal. 598.

The section lays down that when concert and connection between the persons charged as conspirators have been sufficiently established, their statements, acts or declaration, in reference to their common intention, are admissible as evidence against the others; the rule is based on the principle that identity of interest exists between parties to the conspiracy; once concerted action is proved, the agency contemplated in S. 10 comes into operation making one conspirator an agent of the other: 1978 Ker.L.T. 963. See also 1970 U.J. (S.C.) 928.

Two matters, in relation to which the evidence of the type mentioned in S. 10 of the Evidence Act is made admissible are—(1) whether any conspiracy as alleged exists or not, and (2) whether and if so, which of the accused or which of the persons named as conspirators is or is not a member thereof. The main part of the section permits the use of anything said, done or written by anyone of the persons as against others for the proof of both or either of the points mentioned above subject to the stated condition that whatever is said, done or written has reference to the common intention of the conspirators. But before any such thing said, done or written can be admitted under S. 10, there must first be a reasonable ground to believe that any two or more of the persons named as conspirators have conspired together to commit an offence or a wrong by entertaining a common intention to do so.

The condition precedent to the admissibility of acts or words of one person against the other is that such acts or words have reference to the common intention. The probative value of these acts and words in the eyes of a Court is the assurance or guarantee of the truth which known and observed human conduct stamps these acts with; the said evaluation of human conduct is the very basis of the rule. The common intention survives or subsists so long as the conspiracy subsists. Once the conspiracy comes to an end either because its object has already been achieved or for any other reason the bond or the vinculum that would exist between one member and another member of the conspiracy and between the conspiracy as a whole and each one of those members ceases to exist. It has also been stated in some of the cases that S. 10 of the Evidence Act imports into criminal law the civil law idea of agency. Criminal conspiracy being regarded as a partnership with an illegal object just as during the subsistence of the partnership and in relation to the business of the partnership each partner is regarded by law as the agent of every other partner so as to bind the others by his acts and deeds in relation to the business acts and deeds of one conspirator are available for use against others only in so far as he acts as a conspirator in relation to the common intention of all the conspirators for the purpose of carrying out the conspiracy. As Lord Wright points out, it is receivable in evidence because it is a step in the proof of the conspiracy: 1967 M.L.J. (Cr.) 72: (1966) 8 Law Rep. 110.

The condition precedent for the application of S. 10 is that there should exist a reasonable ground to believe that two or more persons have conspired together to commit an offence; actual proof of conspiracy is not required; even some prima facie evidence leading to the reasonable belief is sufficient; and conspiracy need not be proved by direct evidence; it may be proved from the surrounding circumstances and the accused's conduct: 1981 All.L.J. 991; I.L.R. (1971) 2 Cal. 308; I.L.R. (1974) 1 Cal. 599; I.L.R. (1972) 1 Del. 536; 1989 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 4 (Cal.).

An accused, a co-conspirator, voluntarily appearing as a defence witness, like any other witness, is subject to cross-examination; evidence brought out in the cross-examination incriminating his co-accused can be used against the co-accused; the co-accused so incriminated no doubt has the right to cross-examine the defence witness, but the evidence on the record would be relevant under S. 10: 1972 Cr.L.J. 1277: A.I.R. 1973 S.C. 450.

(Conspirator turning approver—Admissibility and value of his evidence). S. 10 is intended to admit in evidence all communications between the different conspirators while the conspiracy was going on with reference to the carrying out of the conspiracy. The statements made or acts done by others before the accused joined the conspiracy are equally relevant and admissible and any statement made by one conspirator to another indicating in any way the complicity of a third conspirator is a relevant fact and such statement may be admitted. Whether it should be believed or not is another question. Similarly, documents in the possession of a conspirator are admissible against co-conspirators in certain circumstances: 1958 Cr.L.J. 906: A.I.R. 1958 Mad. 368. The terms of S. 10 are very wide and apply to acts done in connection with the conspiracy and under the section an act done by third persons may in certain circumstances be treated actually as evidence of the existence of the conspiracy; as for instance when an act is done or something is said in the presence of the persons implicated. But mere statements of third parties made in the absence of the persons implicated form a class by themselves which, standing alone, have no probative value. The section does not permit attaching of any weight to mere statements of this kind made in the absence of the accused persons, and independent evidence required as corroboration of such statements must be something very much more than the evidence which may ordinarily be regarded as corroborating the evidence of an accomplice; it may be direct or circumstantial evidence; but it must be evidence which, standing alone, would be properly treated as evidence for a jury of a proved intention so that there would be evidence apart from the statements of the alleged fellow conspirators incriminating the persons charged. The evidence must be the proof of intention and not merely proof of a possible motive for the intention: A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 497.

The words of S. 10 are not capable of being widely construed so as to include a statement made by one conspirator in the absence of the other with reference to past acts done in the actual course of carrying out the conspiracy, after it has been completed. The words 'common intention' signify a common intention existing at the time when the thing was said, done or written by one of them. Things said, done or written while the conspiracy was on foot, are relevant as evidence of the common intention once reasonable ground has been shown to believe in the existence. But it would be a very different matter to hold that any narrative or statement or confession made to a third party after the common intention or conspiracy was no longer operating and had ceased to exist is admissible against the other party. There is then no common intention of the conspirators to which the statement can have reference. Such statement is, therefore, inadmissible in evidence against co-conspirator. A.I.R. 1940 P.C. 170, followed in A.I.R. 1954 Ori. 23; A.I.R. 1956 Pat. 404; A.I.R. 1957 Bom. 226; A.I.R. 1941 Oudh 130; A.I.R. 1944 Mad. 302 (Letter written after failure of plot to carry out common intention not admissible).

Under S. 10, a statement made by one conspirator may be admissible against the other conspirators if it merely shows the existence of a conspiracy although it may not have been made with a view to furthering the object of the conspiracy as is the rule under the English law. The section, however, presupposes the existence of a conspiracy at the time the statement is made and does not contemplate confessional statements made after the conspiracy has come to an end and some of the conspirators have already been apprehended and are being or about to be prosecuted. Hence, a statement by a conspirator made after the conspiracy has come to an end is not admissible under S. 10: I.L.R. 25 Pat. 47: A.I.R. 1947 Pat. 90.

Voluntary statement made immediately after arrest, held, is undoubtedly admissible against its maker; but it also provides a strong link in the chain of circumstances relating to the conspiracy, and also against the other accused on trial: (1987) 35 B.L.J.R. 127 (D.B.).

The common intention is the intention existing at the time when the thing was said, done or written; anything said, done or written by one of them after the common intention or conspiracy is no longer operating, is not admissible against the co-conspirators: 1978 Ker.L.T. 963.

When S. 10 refers to the common intention of the conspirators, it refers to the common intention in the future not to common intention in the past: A.I.R. 1939 Sind 185. See 46 Cr.L.J. 667: (1944) 1 M.L.J. 91.

Anything said, done or written by one of co-conspirators must be in reference to the common intention and it is difficult to say, once the object of criminal conspiracy is carried out that any common intention existed with reference to the criminal conspiracy. Where the confessional statements made by accused are made after the object of criminal conspiracy is carried out, the confessional statements refer to past events and can have no reference to any common intention animating the co-conspirators: A.I.R. 1957 Bom. 226; 1989 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 4 (Cal.).

A statement made by an absconding co-accused was made the basis by framing a charge against the accused under S. 120-B, Penal Code. The statement was made long after the period of alleged conspiracy was over and the purpose of the conspiracy had terminated. Held, the statement, although made by way of description of past events that happened during the period of conspiracy was a narrative or a statement made to a third party after the common intention or conspiracy was no longer operating and had ceased to exist. Such statement was inadmissible in evidence against any party other than the maker of the statement: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 443 (Cal.).

Where from the dying declaration made by a person, who is alleged to have been murdered, it appears that there was clearly a conspiracy to wrongly implicate a particular person, the Court, before it would rely on the evidence of witnesses who have so conspired, and who have had such an influence over the deceased making a dying declaration that they could have induced him to make a particular dying declaration to suit their purpose, must have some other evidence before it which would enable it to distinguish the true from the false: 39 Cr.L.J. 545: A.I.R. 1938 Sind 94.

2. Evidence of conspiracy.—Possession of seditious literature by one member is evidence against the others for finding out of the object of the association, even where such possession was obtained or such essays written before the association was formed or before other members joined the association: I.L.R. 46 Cal. 215: (1918-19) 23 Cal.W.N. 193. As to evidence of conspiracy, see also I.L.R. 30 Cal. 983; I.L.R. (1939) All. 736; (1899-1900) 4 Cal.W.N. 528; I.L.R. 25 Bom. 230; I.L.R. 28 Cal. 797; 7 Beng.L.R. 63 and 9 Beng.L.R. 36 App. 2; A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 369; A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 97.

The 16 accused in a case of conspiracy under S. 121-A were convicted on the evidence of documents and letters seized from them and proved to be in the handwriting of some of the accused by the Police witnesses who conducted the raids and searches and others of the Police force who had been kidnapped by the party accused. Held, the handwriting of the different accused proved by the prosecution witnesses acquainted with it is relevant under S. 47 of the Evidence Act; although the witnesses happen to be policemen that alone is not sufficient to set aside their evidence as to the identification of the handwriting. In a case of conspiracy (S. 121-A, I.P. Code), it is always difficult to secure outside and independent evidence. It can be proved by the conduct of the accused. The documents, letters, circulars, etc., are relevant under S. 10 of the Evidence Act to prove the existence of the conspiracy and to prove the complicity of the different accused in it. When a letter is found with a conspirator and its writer and addressee are known, it is admissible against the conspirators. Conspiracy can also be inferred from beliefs, associations, activities of the accused and even from the statements of the accused in Court. Statements, acts and declarations of a conspirator in reference to their common intention are admissible against others. Evidence of conspiracy makes statement of a conspirator, evidence against co-conspirators. The possession of a document creates an inference that the possessor is aware of its contents. To establish conspiracy the agreement may be inferred from circumstances raising a presumption of common concerted plan to carry out the unlawful design: A.I.R. 1952 Manipur 4.

Ciphers or cipher lists discovered at searches could not be treated as acts, words or deeds, of any particular person, but the fact that they existed and that the names and addresses of a number of persons who are alleged to be parties to a conspiracy as charged are mentioned in them, the fact that they are in peculiar forms, such as is not likely to be used for any lawful purpose, taken alongwith other matter brought out in evidence may give rise to a legitimate inference that the ciphers were prepared in connection with some unlawful purpose requiring secrecy; and in the absence of evidence that the matters appearing from the secret documents are associated with some legitimate or lawful purpose, the ciphers are themselves material for inferring that the names, addresses and other matters appearing in the ciphers are connected with the furtherance of the objects of the conspiracy and as such evidence under S. 10: A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 99 (S.B.). See also A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 145.

The finding of closed covers relating to the conspiracy in possession of one of the conspirators is relevant against the others under S. 10: 17 Punj. Re. (Cr.) 1915: 28 I.C. 738.

Confession of co-accused implicating co-conspirators—Admissibility: 106 I.C. 721: I.L.R. 2 Luck. 631. Whenever evidence is sought to be let in under S. 10, the accused is entitled to insist on strict compliance with its provisions, namely, proof of reasonable ground for belief that the persons named have conspired together: I.L.R. 42 Cal. 957: (1914-15) 19 Cal.W.N. 676. On a charge of conspiracy, particular facts are proved to show that one or more of the accused took part in it, after general evidence of the existence of conspiracy is first given: I.L.R. 42 Cal. 957: (1914-15) 19 Cal.W.N. 676.

In cases of forgery letter written by a third party to a stranger is not admissible against accused: (1923) 25 Bom.L.R. 248. See also I.L.R. 40 Cal. 783.

In a charge of conspiracy, evidence of gambling and cocaine cases prior to conspiracy charged are admissible in evidence: I.L.R. 46 Cal. 710: 54 I.C. 53.

The evidence of an Excise Inspector of raids on the dens is admissible as leading up to the omission made to him: I.L.R. 46 Cal. 710: 54 I.C. 53.

Confession of co-accused by itself not sufficient to base a conviction: A.I.R. 1926 All. 377.

Trial under S. 222, Penal Code—Accused warder in jail—Evidence of previous conduct about carrying negotiations was held admissible: A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 631: 119 I.C. 762.

'Anything said' would include the statement made, speeches delivered or declaration made. 'Anything done' must be some act done and not merely the intention or knowledge of the person. 'Anything written' would include a manuscript, signed or unsigned, written by the person and matter transcribed by him on a typewriter. But a document of which the writer is not known, found in the possession of a conspirator would not by itself be admissible for the purpose of proving the truth of its contents as against the other accused. The fact of possession would be evidence to show that the conspirator in whose possession it is found had received and preserved it: A.I.R. 1933 All. 690. See also A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 99 (S.B.).

Where some co-conspirators made statements to the Investigating Officers that they had concealed the dead body and the blood-stained weapon at a particular place, held, though the statements did not fall within the expression 'anything said', nevertheless, the acts of concealing the dead body and the weapons, appearing from their statements, were certainly relevant and could be used against the other co-conspirators: 1981 All.L.J. 991.

In order to establish that the accused were in correspondence with an individual going by the name of M.N. Roy in Berlin, it is not incumbent upon the prosecution to establish that any of the letters were, in fact, written by the particular M.N. Roy. It is enough to show that some person living in Berlin was in conspiracy with the accused and correspondence was passing between them: A.I.R. 1933 All. 690. A document written by a woman since deceased in which she described her conversations with a third person in which she said that he told her that among his revolutionary friends was the accused to whom he was accustomed to turn for guidance is admissible under S. 10 as the statement if proved is itself a relevant fact by virtue of S. 10. The statement by the writer is a relevant fact and being admissible under S. 10 is evidence against all the conspirators including the accused, to the effect that the third person made his statement concerning the accused: A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 221 (F.B.).

A confessional statement made by a deceased conspirator after he had rendered himself liable to criminal prosecution is admissible in evidence against a co-conspirator under S. 10, though not under S. 32 (3) when general evidence of a conspiracy has already been given: A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 26. See also A.I.R. 1936 Oudh 164.

Conspiracy — Evidence of: A.I.R. 1958 Tripura 1: 1958 Cr. L.J. 97.

A and B were convicted under S. 120-B read with S. 165-A, Indian Penal Code. The facts were: When the Inspector of Police was on his way to police station, both A and B approached him and requested him to hush up a criminal case pending investigation against A, for reward. The Inspector drew up the first information report of the offer of the bribe on his own statement and prepared a seizure-list of the money, thus offered, and at once arrested A and put him in the thana lock-up. After the usual investigations, A and B were placed on their trial, and were convicted. The question was whether the statement made by A, that he was sent by B with the money to be offered by way of a bribe to the Police Officer, was admissible against A.

Held, that the incident when both A and B approached the Inspector with the proposal that he should hush up the case against B for which he would be amply rewarded, was clear evidence of the two persons having conspired to commit the offence of bribing a public servant in connection with the discharge of his public duties. Therefore, the charge under S. 120-B had been properly framed against both of them. That being so, anything said or done by any one of the two, with reference to the common intention, namely, the conspiracy to offer bribe, was equally admissible against both of them. That statement was admissible not only to prove that B had constituted A his agent in the perpetration of the crime, but also to prove the existence of the conspiracy itself: A.I.R. 1958 S.C. 953.

Proof of criminal conspiracy—Scope and applicability of S. 10—Evidence Act: (1965) 1 Cr.L.J. 608: A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 682.

If the Court is satisfied that there is no trick photography and the photograph is above suspicion, the photograph can be received in evidence. It is, of course, always admissible to prove the contents of the document, but subject to the safeguards, to prove the authorship. This is all the more so in India under S. 10 of the Evidence Act to prove participation in a conspiracy. But evidence of photographs to prove writing or handwriting can only be received if the original cannot be obtained and the photographic reproduction is faithful and not faked or false: A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 938.

The burden of proof for proving insolvency is on the applicant. Where the allegations as to insolvency made by the petitioner are denied by the company, which also fails to file balance-sheet and fails to furnish the particulars of its assets and liabilities and the petitioner does not rely on specific facts and does not even refer to the last balance-sheet published and distributed to shareholders, it cannot be said that the petitioner had discharged the burden of proof. Omission on the part of the Company to disclose the particulars cannot raise a presumption of commercial insolvency under S. 114, Evidence Act: 38 Comp. Cas. 82: (1967) 1 Comp.L.J. 172 (Cal.).

Evidence of co-conspirator not named in charge—No objection raised when evidence relating to his acts was produced at trial—Held, matter was covered by S. 537, Cr.P. Code and evidence could not be excluded from consideration: (1967) 69 Punj.L.R. (Del.) 168.

Connection of accused to separate acts of conspirators need not be proved—Connection with conspiracy must be proved: (1967) 69 Punj. L.R. (Del.) 168.

Abetment to marry during subsistence of first marriage by petitioners—Evidence not showing presence of petitioners amounting to commissioning of offence under S. 167—Charge of abetment is maintainable: 1981 Cr.L.J. 833 (Mad.).

Ss. 10 and 14: S. 10 of the Evidence Act must be construed in accordance with the principle that the thing done, written or spoken, was something done in carrying out the conspiracy and was receivable as a step in the proof of the conspiracy. In criminal trials on a charge of conspiracy evidence not admissible under S. 10 of the Evidence Act as proof of the two issues to which it relates, viz., of the existence of conspiracy and of the fact of any particular person being a party to that conspiracy, is not admissible at all. In civil cases it is well settled that a principal is bound by the acts of his agent if the latter has an express or implied authority from the former and the acts are within the scope of his authority. Therefore, acts of an agent are admissible evidence as against the principal. An analogous principle is recognised in criminal matters in so far as it can be brought in under S. 10 of the Evidence Act. The principle underlying the reception of evidence under S. 10 of the Evidence Act of the statements, acts and writings of one co-conspirator as against the other is on the theory of agency. The rule in S. 10, Evidence Act confines that principle of agency in criminal matters to the acts of the co-conspirator within the period during which it can be said that the acts were 'in reference to their common intention' that is to say, 'things said, done or written, while the conspiracy was on foot' and 'in carrying out the conspiracy'. Where the charge specified the period of conspiracy, evidence of acts, of co-conspirators outside the period is not receivable in evidence. But in a conspiracy to commit criminal breach of trust all evidence which would go to show that certain transactions are bogus, is certainly admissible. The conduct in general of each individual co-conspirator including his acts writings and statements is evidence against himself. There can be no doubt that such conduct irrespective of the time to which it relates can be relied on by the prosecution to show the criminality of the intention of the individual accused with reference to his proved participation in the alleged conspiracy, that is, to rebut a probable defence which may normally arise in such a case, viz., that the participation though proved, was innocent. Such evidence would come under S. 14 of the Evidence Act: A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 747: 1957 Cr.L.J. 1325.

Ss. 10 and 30: The confession of a person who is dead and has never been brought to trial is not admissible under S. 30 as the confession of a co-accused. Nor can it be admitted under S. 10, because S. 10 applies to acts done in furtherance of a conspiracy or which bear some relation to the conspiracy and does not apply to a confession made after the conspiracy and the acts done in pursuance thereof were at an end: S. 10 cannot be extended to cover the case of a confession of a person who was co-accused or who might have been a co-accused on the charge of conspiracy and the offences which were its purpose or committed in pursuance of it: 39 Cr.L.J. 545: A.I.R. 1938 Sind 94. A confession

11. When facts not otherwise relevant become relevant.—Facts not otherwise relevant are relevant—

(1) if they are inconsistent with any fact in issue or relevant fact;

(2) if by themselves or in connection with other facts they make the existence or non-existence of any fact in issue or relevant fact highly probable or improbable.

Illustrations

(a) The question is, whether A committed a crime at Calcutta on a certain day.

The fact that, on that day, A was at Lahore is relevant.

The fact that, near the time when the crime was committed, A was at a distance from the place where it was committed, which would render it highly improbable, though not impossible, that he committed it, is relevant.

(b) The question is, whether A committed a crime.

The circumstances are such that the crime must have been committed either by A,B, C or D. Every fact which shows that the crime could have been committed by no one else and that it was not committed by either B, C or D, is relevant.

by a conspirator made to a Magistrate in Court implicating other conspirators is admissible in evidence under S. 30, but statements made by a conspirator to the police are not admissible in evidence if they are incriminating unless they can come under S. 27. For S. 10, Evidence Act, is not intended to remove those restrictions which the Evidence Act and the Cr. P. Code place upon the admissibility of statements made to the police. S. 10 does not avoid in appropriate cases the operation of either S. 25, Evidence Act, or S. 162, Cr. P. Code. It makes no difference if, because a man is deaf, these statements are written: A.I.R. 1939 Sind 185.

The confession of an accused can be admitted in evidence against him under certain circumstances but the confession of a co-accused cannot be admitted in evidence against his co-conspirators as the confessional statement refers to the past events and can have no reference to any common intention animating the co-conspirators: 1978 Ker.L.T. 963. But see Notes under S. 30.

S. 10 is more effective than S. 30 in the matter of considering evidence pertaining to one accused as against the others; but S. 10 can be invoked only where "there is reasonable ground to believe that two or more persons have conspired together to commit an offence"; a conspiracy is always hatched in secret; it is normally impossible to adduce its direct evidence; it can be proved largely from inferences drawn from acts committed by other conspirators in pursuance of a common desire: A.I.R. 1988 Ker. 1: 1988 Cr.L.J. 107: (1987) 1 Ker.L.T. 928 (F.B.).

Section 11—Notes.

[See also Ss. 13 and 106.]

Scope of section.—S. 11 attempts to state in popular language the general theory of relevancy and may, therefore, be described as the residuary section dealing with the relevancy of facts. The words of S. 11 are very wide, and it may be safely laid down that all evidence which would be held to be admissible by English Law would be properly admitted under this section of the Act. Collateral facts which, by way of contradiction are inconsistent with a fact in issue or another relevant fact, i.e., which makes the existences of fact in issue or a relevant fact impossible or highly improbable or which, by way of corroboration are consistent, with existence of fact in issue or a relevant fact, i.e., tend to render the existence of a fact in issue or relevant fact highly probable are themselves made relevant by the section: A.I.R. 1956 Mad. 226 [Overruled on another point in A.I.R. 1972 Mad. 154 (D.B.)].

S. 11 has been expressed in very wide language and, if construed widely, question of valuation, non-passing of consideration, absence of necessity for sale and matters of such nature will certainly be relevant. The section, however, does not admit of collateral facts which have practically no connection with the main fact. In considering only the sole question whether a deed has been executed within the meaning of S. 35, Registration Act, questions like valuation, absence of necessity for sale, etc., cannot be relevant under S. 11, Evidence Act. It would appear that such questions do not come within the first part of the section as they cannot be said to be truly inconsistent with the fact in issue, which is the proof of execution of the document within the scope of Ss. 35 and 77, Registration Act. Under the second part of S. 11 in a suit properly framed and not under S. 77, Registration Act, such facts will be admissible as the question of validity of the document and the effect of the execution will be the fact in issue. For an enquiry in a suit under S. 77, Registration Act, these collateral facts are not so mediate as to render the issue of a mere execution highly probable or improbable: I.L.R. (1954) Pat. 861: A.I.R. 1954 Pat. 556. See also I.L.R. (1979) 1 Del. 545 (D.B.).

The expression highly probable or improbable is significant and indicates that the connection between the facts in issue and the collateral facts sought to be proved must be immediate so as to render the co-existence of the two highly probable: I.L.R. 55 All. 1040: A.I.R. 1933 All. 690: 13 M.L.T. 282: 18 I.C. 997.

The words 'highly probable' in S. 11(2) are of great importance. Only such facts are made admissible by this clause as would carry great weight with the Court in reaching a conclusion either way with regard to existence or non-existence of a fact in issue or relevant fact. It is not mere reasonable probability that is contemplated; on the other hand, a high degree thereof is envisaged. A recital by a third party relating to the ownership of a house in which he has admittedly no interest would not have much probative force about such ownership and it is idle to argue that it would render such ownership highly probable; this clause does not cover recitals of this type: A.I.R. 1971 P.&H. 9.

The words 'highly probable' mean more than normal standard of probability. Neither by canons of common sense nor by construction of the Evidence Act can it be said that one particular instance of bad faith and mala fides in a transaction can render the issue of bad faith and mala fides in a totally different transaction highly probable: A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 709.

In a suit for partition there was an arbitration. In finding out the extent of the estate the arbitrators excluded the deposits or investments made by others because those were not assets but liabilities of the estate. They, however, showed depositors and their sums in the Schedule annexed to the award. But as the depositors were not parties to the partition suit, no direction as to the repayment of those deposits was made in the decree made on award. On refusal by the Receivers to repay them, the depositors filed a suit on the basis of the award. On the question of its maintainability, held, that the award might not be an admission of the assets held by the executors. But the Schedule of the award and the circumstances under which it was prepared made the existence of the claim of the plaintiffs highly probable, and as such, was relevant under S. 11 (2) of the Evidence Act. Further, the award contained recitals showing that the plaintiffs had claimed the money before the arbitrators, making that fact a relevant circumstance under S. 13 (1) of the Evidence Act. Therefore, although the verbal and other documentary evidence, relied on by the plaintiffs, were disbelieved by the Court below, it could nevertheless proceed on the evidence contained in the award, unmistakably, supporting the plaintiffs' claim: A.I.R. 1959 Cal. 257.

Where a doctor was charged with criminal negligence, in order to show that a particular injection given by the doctor was too strong and to rebut the presumption that the death was due to an exceptional reaction to that injection in that case, the prosecution tendered evidence of the symptoms, illness and death of nine other children. Held, that the evidence was admissible not as evidence of a course of conduct or the carelessness or negligent conduct of the doctor in injecting too much of a proper mixture, but as evidence of the reaction to children who were similarly injected at the same time and place so as to prove that too strong a preparation was used for the injection: 44 Cr.L.J. 569: A.I.R. 1943 P.C. 72 (P.C.). Proof of custom opposed to personal law. See 8 I.C. 897.

Section to be liberally construed. The illustrations do not go beyond cases familiar in English Law. There is a difference between the existence of a fact and a statement as to its existence; S. 11 makes the existence of facts admissible, and not statements as to such existence unless the fact of making that statement is itself a matter in issue. Hence, if a statement does not fall within S. 32, it cannot be admissible even under S. 11: A.I.R. 1934 All. 406 (F.B.); A.I.R. 1960 Bom. 78.

S. 11 only refers to certain facts which are either themselves inconsistent with, or make the existence or non-existence of the fact in issue or a relevant fact highly probable or improbable and has no reference to opinions of certain persons in regard to those facts. It does not make such opinions to be relevant and judgments, after all of whatever authority are nothing but opinions as to the existence or non-existence of certain facts. These opinions cannot be such facts as would fall within the meaning of S. 11 of the Act unless existence of these opinions is a fact in issue or a relevant fact: A.I.R. 1945 Lah. 23 (F.B.).

S. 11 is controlled by S. 32 where the evidence consists of the statements of persons who are dead or cannot be found. But this rule is subject to certain exceptions. The test whether the statement of a person who is dead or cannot be found is relevant under that section, presuming that it is in other respects within the intention of the section although, it would not be admissible under S. 32 is this: It is admissible under S. 11 when it is altogether immaterial whether what that dead man said was true or false, but highly material that he did say it. In these circumstances no amount of cross-examination could alter the fact, if it be a fact, that he did say the thing, and if nothing more is needed to bring the thing said under S. 11, then the case is outside S. 32. There is a difference between the existence of fact and a statement as to its existence. S. 11 makes admissible the existence of facts and not statements as to such existence unless the fact of making that statement is in itself a matter in issue: A.I.R. 1960 All. 339. See also A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 893; A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 273; 1976 Hindu L.R. 185.

Statements of living persons who had not been examined as witnesses are inadmissible under S. 11 or S. 32: A.I.R. 1929 Oudh 113. A statement is included in the definition of fact and statements can, therefore, be relevant under S. 11: A.I.R. 1938 Oudh 26. On this section, see also A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 68; A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 1067; A.I.R. 1924 Mad. 537.

S. 3 defines 'fact' as anything capable of being perceived by the senses; Illus. (c) shows "that a man said certain words is a fact." 'Statements' can be excluded from the purview of S. 11 by a very restricted interpretation which need not be followed; if the Legislature intended to exclude all statements from the purview of the word 'fact', there was no need for Illus. (a) in S. 6 which makes it unambiguously clear that a statement made by the deceased shortly before or after his murder, is a relevant fact in certain circumstances; there may be statements which are inadmissible under S. 32 but admissible under S. 6; at any rate S. 6 is not controlled by S. 32; if the scope of S. 6 cannot be whittled down like that, the scope of S. 11 cannot be curtailed by dragging it under S. 31. Nothing in S. 11 suggests that it is controlled by any other section; rather its language indicates that the provision is an exception to the other general provisions. [A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 893; A.I.R. 1934 All. 406; A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 273; A.I.R. 1960 All. 339, Dissent. from; A.I.R. 1938 Oudh 26, Rel. on]: (1992) 1 Ker.L.J. 491: 1992 Cr.L.J. 2860 (F.B.). See also 1982 Cr.L.J. 173 (Ker.) (D.B.) [It is for the Court to consider that how much of statement is worth acceptance].

S. 11 is based on the premise that facts not otherwise relevant are relevant under this section; thus, if a fact is relevant under S. 32, S. 11 is not attracted; the section operates only when other sections, including S. 32, are not attracted: (1992) 1 Ker.L.J. 491: 1992 Cr.L.J. 2860 (F.B.).

Entry in butwara papers. See 87 I.C. 694: A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 115. Entry in Hospital Register—Indoor patients in a hospital—Admissible to prove that the person mentioned in the entry was in the hospital on a certain date: 56 P.L.R. 1918: 43 I.C. 429. Statement of wounded person on the day of occurrence to a Magistrate to the effect that it was the accused who had attacked herself and her co-wife. Held, S. 11 does not justify the admission of the contents of the statements: 54 I.C. 887: (1918-19) 23 Cal.W.N. 933.

Copies of printed newspapers containing an account of some proceedings, found in possession of one accused, are evidence of the fact of the publication of such an account in that paper but are not by themselves evidence of the truth of the facts stated therein, unless in connection with other facts they make the existence or non-existence of the facts mentioned 'highly probable or improbable': A.I.R. 1933 All. 690.

A letter written by the accused where it is self-condemnatory is prima facie evidence against him and is admissible in evidence; it is enough if it can be traced to the writer. It is admissible though it was intercepted or surreptitiously detained and opened: I.L.R. 41 Cal. 545: (1913-14) 18 Cal.W.N. 386.

Where a suit was instituted by a partner of a registered firm claiming to be a tenant as proprietor of the firm but later on he sought an amendment in the plaint so as to substitute the firm as the plaintiff tenant, which application was dismissed, the admission fell under S. 11(2) and was relevant for making probable or improbable the existence or non-existence of the fact in issue, that is, the plaintiff's tenancy; whether the admission amounts to an estoppel or not, it certainly is evidence but not 'conclusive proof'. [A.I.R. 1956 S.C. 593, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1972 Del. 221.

Facts disclosing similar fraudulent transactions are admissible to prove intent: I.L.R. 39 All. 273: 39 I.C. 673: 15 All.L.J. 241.

Horoscope, see 21 I.C. 298; 48 I.C. 400. Police report, see 30 I.C. 292.

The previous activities of the accused against the complainants are admissible under S. 11: A.I.R. 1928 Rang. 118.

Deed inadmissible by reason of S. 49, Registration Act is admissible under S. 11 if it is inconsistent with fact in issue: A.I.R. 1930 All. 130.

If in a suit for arrears of rent the defendant denies the oral lease and says that the sale deed executed by him in favour of the plaintiff is bogus, the evidence about the nature of the sale deed is relevant on the question of the existence or non-existence of the oral lease under S. 11(2): A.I.R. 1943 Nag. 265.

Where the same owner in respect of different areas of land, has executed one sale deed in favour of one person and thereafter executes another sale deed in favour of another vendee, the sale deed prior in time must be given preference over the subsequent sale deed. See A.I.R. 1982 Del. 149.

Although the falsity of a statement made by an accused in a criminal case does not necessarily show that the prosecution case is true, if the Court has used the order rejecting the accused's claim in a previous claim case, as an independent evidence on the question of the possession of the disputed lands, the use cannot be said unwarranted by law: A.I.R. 1956 Ori. 212.

Contents of will left by the deceased are admissible under Ss. 11 and 21(2) to prove religion of executant: A.I.R. 1930 Rang. 42.

Where the precise date of the death of the last holder is in question, a statement in a copy of the application for probate of his Will that the deceased died on a particular date is admissible in evidence under S. 11, if not under S. 32 (5), where it is shown that the application was filed by a person who was admittedly the testator's nephew and claimed also to be his adopted son and, therefore, was in a position to know the date of his death and the application was filed about one year after the testator's death: A.I.R. 1931 Pat. 224.

Where the question in issue was whether B had predeceased K, a statement made by a party in his own favour in an objection petition filed in previous land registration proceedings that B had predeceased K was held admissible in evidence under S. 11, Evidence Act: A.I.R. 1955 Pat. 292.

Where a plaintiff derives his rights from the recitals of a deed executed between his predecessor-in-interest and a stranger, which amount to admissions by his predecessor in his own, and therefore, in favour of the plaintiff, held, the deed is not admissible either under S. 11 or S. 13: A.I.R. 1975 Karn. 179: (1975) 1 Karn.L.J. 105.

Where question as to dedication to religious endowment is in issue, the gift of property to the institution is admissible: 1930 All.L.J. 964.

A statement by a person that certain parties are governed by a particular school of Hindu Law is admissible in evidence under S. 11 only if he is a member of a connected family (i.e.) a family which had descended from the same stock from which those parties descended and not when he is neither an agnate nor a relative of theirs: (1938-39) 43 Cal.W.N. 395.

S. 11 has no application in determining the question as to whether the recitals as regards the boundaries in documents between strangers are admissible. See A.I.R. 1976 Karn. 75; A.I.R. 1935 Pat. 167 (F.B.).

Recitals as to boundaries in a document not inter partes are not admissible under S. 32: 1910 Mad.W.N. 668; A.I.R. 1915 Mad. 746; A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 450; A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 1067

Possession of instrument of offence—Recovery from house of joint family—Presumption. See A.I.R. 1957 Andh. Pra. 758.

Consideration — Question as to — Late production of pronote has no relevancy to decide question: (1965) 67 Punj. L.R. 12.

Question whether particular sale was sham — Burden of proof put on wrong party—Irrelevant matters taken into consideration—Finding held was vitiated in law: A.I.R. 1964 Guj. 174.

Where the question is whether after B has separated with his share from the joint family consisting of four brothers, A, B, C and D the remaining three brothers A, C and D, continued to remain joint, a statement in a mortgage-deed recited by A, long before the present suit by A, in which the question of the three brothers remaining joint has been claimed by A, to the effect that the property to be mortgaged belonged to him by reason of a complete partition between all the brothers, is relevant under S. 11 (2), Evidence Act, as the fact involved in this statement renders the fact in issue as alleged by A improbable: A.I.R. 1966 Pat. 168.

Income-tax documents—Suit to recover business dues—Plaintiff claiming defendant to have transacted through intermediaries—Income-tax assessment order against a plaintiff's witness produced to show dealings by defendant through intermediary—Held, cannot be used as evidence against the defendant: 1967 Ker. L.J. 237.

Assessment of market-value — Evidence —Sale deed between two private parties in nature of willing purchaser and willing vendor in open market and land in it also very close to suit lands—Held, sale deed could be accepted as sound basis for assessing market value of suit lands: (1968) 1 An.W.R. 348.

Where in respect of sale of shares of a company a complaint was filed on the basis that there were hidden losses in previous year, held, finding of Board for Industrial and Finance Reconstruction that there was no such loss is relevant under S. 11: 1992 Cr.L.J. 1448 (Cal.).

Facts having merely probative force cannot be offered in evidence under S. 11: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1584: A.I.R. 1968 Bom. 400.

Standard of proof in regard to the plea of alibi as well as in regard to prosecution evidence should be a reasonable standard: 1957 All.W.R. (H.C.) 48.

Evidence of alibi—Onus of proof is on accused: A.I.R. 1970 Bom. 438. See also 1977 Raj.L.W. 336 (It has to be proved to the satisfaction of the Court).

An alibi not set up at the very earliest stage is in most cases unconvincing, but that is no reason why the Courts should fail to give due weight to the public documents filed before them; and afford reasonable facilities for the accused to call his evidence. Usually a request to call an alibi witness at the very end is vexatious and dilatory, unless the alibi has been indicated at the earlier stages: A.I.R. 1954 Vindh. Pra. 6.

The uncorroborated oral evidence of one witness of alibi cannot be relied upon specially when he gave no reason for being able to remember the exact dates on which the accused was alleged to have come to village of the witness and to have left it: A.I.R. 1954 Vindh. Pra. 36.

The standard of proof required for establishing the plea of alibi is the same as for the evidence on behalf of the prosecution. Further, the failure on the part of the accused to substantiate the plea of alibi would not and cannot give rise to an inference that the accused was at the place of occurrence at the time when the offence is said to have taken place. This would have to be proved by the prosecution as any other matter: A.I.R. 1956 Hyd. 99. See also A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 1019 (Evidence in support of plea of alibi found to be untrustworthy).

Where a factory worker felt humiliated because the brother of the rich girl had foiled his attempt to ensnare her to marry him and the worker, accused of murdering the brother, had set up the plea of alibi, held, he succeeds only if it is shown that the accused was so far away from the scene of offence that he could not be present there when the offence was committed; where the defence evidence of alibi, as such, was consistent with the accused's presence at the factory at 8.30 A.M. and at the scene of offence at 9.00 A.M. since workers punch their cards when they enter the factory and not when they leave; the accused in all probability punched his card and then left the factory immediately and killed the brother; and he did not go back to his work for that involved the risk of the time of his re-entry being punched again; he was loitering when he was arrested at about 2.30 P.M. The plea of alibi failed: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 911: (1981) 2 S.C.C. 166. See also 1992 Cr.L.J. 648 (Pat.) (D.B.).

Where though the plea of alibi set up by the accused was supported by the Block Development Officer and Sarpanch, he evaded his arrest for two months and only thereafter came forward with his plea of alibi, held, his conduct being highly suspicious, his plea was false:1990 Cr.L.J. 2777 (Ori.).

Where though information lodged by chaukidar at the Police Station was recorded in the Station diary, but same was not produced in the Court, held, an adverse inference has to be drawn against prosecution: 1992 Cr.L.J. 2122 (Pat.) (D.B.).

Statement of persons as to cause of his death or as to any circumstances of the transaction which resulted in his death—Conviction based on identification: 1967 Ker.L.T. 466.

F.I.R. may be relevant under S. 11: 1988 Cr.L.J. 428 (Gau.) (D.B.). Omission of some important facts in the F.I.R., affecting the probabilities of the case, are relevant under S. 11 in judging the veracity of the prosecution case: A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 1026; 1989 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 25 (Ori.). However see A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 1036.

In a case where the charge is of collusion and conspiracy, sometimes it may be difficult to obtain direct evidence; but all the same it is well settled that the conclusion reached can be justified and supported by probabilities and circumstantial evidence alone: I.L.R. 46 Pat. 744: 1969 Lab. I.C. 49.

Ss. 11 and 13: Judgment not inter partes—How far admissible.—A judgment in civil suit is relevant under S. 11: I.L.R. 37 Mad. 238: 23 M.L.J. 447. Although at one time it was held that a judgment not inter partes could not be admitted in evidence under any circumstances, the tendency in recent years is to admit such judgments under certain circumstances and for limited purposes under S. 43, read with Ss. 11 and 13: A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 788.

Although a judgment not inter partes may be used in evidence in certain circumstances as a fact in issue, or as a relevant fact, findings of fact in or reasons for that judgment are not admissible in a litigation between other parties. The fact that there was a litigation or that as a result of that litigation the then plaintiffs recovered possession of the lands may be relevant under S. 11 of the Evidence Act. The judgment in that case will be evidence only to the extent of showing the existence of these facts. Assuming that a suit is a transaction within the meaning of S. 13 (a) of the Evidence Act, the existence of the suit itself will be a relevant fact and for this purpose the judgment will be evidence to show the factum of the suit as also to show its nature and scope so as to enable the Court to see whether or not it can be said that by it the right in question was claimed, recognised, asserted or denied. The suit might be an instance in which certain rights might have been claimed or recognised, etc., within the meaning of S. 13(b) of the Evidence Act. Even then the judgment will be admissible in evidence only for the limited purpose of the clause namely, to prove 'the instance': A.I.R. 1944 Cal. 57. See also A.I.R. 1945 Cal. 492 (Map prepared in previous suit between defendant and another person—Maker of map not examined—Admissibility).

A judgment not inter partes in land acquisition reference and relating to land situate near the land in question is not admissible in evidence either as an instance or one from which the market-value of the land in question can be inferred or deduced. Such a judgment cannot obviously fall under Ss. 40 to 43 or under S. 11 or S. 13 of the Evidence Act: A.I.R. 1960 Bom. 78. However see A.I.R. 1981 Karn. 26: (1980) 2 Karn.L.J. 441 (D.B.).

Court judgments about comparable land is relevant in determining compensation in land acquisition cases. [A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 2403, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1982 N.O.C. 165 (Del.).

12. In suits for damages, facts tending to enable Court to determine amount are relevant.—In suits in which damages are claimed, any fact which will enable the Court to determine the amount of damages which ought to be awarded, is relevant.

Judgments, not inter partes, if not admissible under Ss. 40, 41 or 42 may be admissible under other sections of the Evidence Act, read with S. 43 of that Act, under certain circumstances and for certain limited purposes. Where the lands in a previously decided case not inter partes and the lands in the case to be decided were contiguous, similarly, situated and were acquired under the same notification and for the same purposes.

Held, that the judgment in the previously decided case, though not inter partes was relevant and admissible in evidence under S. 11 of Evidence Act for determining market value of the land in the case to be decided: A.I.R. 1965 Him. Pra. 18. See also S. 3, Note 10, supra.

Ss. 11, 14 and 15.—Except as evidence of intention, evidence of similar transactions is inadmissible in evidence under Ss. 14 and 15: 17 Mys.L.J. 238. The first information report besides its use as a corroborative or contradictory piece of evidence under Ss. 147 and 145 of the Evidence Act, becomes a relevant fact within the meaning of S. 11 (2) of that Act when duly proved and as such retains some evidential value even after being sworn against by the author thereof: 190 I.C. 322.

A rent receipt in respect of the suit lands granted by the landlord to the plaintiff describing the plaintiff as the daughter of the deceased tenant is not admissible in evidence under S. 32, Evidence Act, when the landlord is still alive and there is no explanation on behalf of the plaintiff for his non-examination. The statement in the receipt as to the relationship of the plaintiff with the deceased tenant not being admissible under S. 32 cannot be held relevant under S. 11. Nor can such statement be admitted under S. 13 because the determination of an alleged relationship between the two persons was neither a question of any right nor of custom within the meaning of that section: A.I.R. 1963 Pat. 450.

Recitals in a document not inter partes are not 'facts' as mentioned in S. 11 unless the existence of those recitals is itself a matter in issue. Ss. 11 and 32 cover different fields and there is no question of any overlapping if properly construed. In brief S. 11 deals with 'facts' while S. 32 deals with 'statements'. S. 32 is an exception to the rule of hearsay and it is not proper to read S. 11 as an exception to S. 32. The several sub-sections of S. 32, in a measure taken in portions of a few other provisions contained in the Evidence Act. This is indicative of the fact that S. 32 exhaustively deals with law relating to relevancy of statements made by persons mentioned therein: A.I.R. 1962 Mys. 53.

Suit for compensation for short delivery and deterioration of goods — Assessment and damage certificate by Railway Inspector marked without prejudice—How far admissible as admission of liability or proof of damages — Absence of evidence aliunde — Effect: A.I.R. 1965 Cal. 636.

Where an alleged offence has been committed and the prosecution accuses a person of having committed the same, it would be a complete answer to the accusation for that person to plead that he was at that time elsewhere. And if that person succeeds in establishing that plea, technically called the plea of alibi, he will be entitled to an acquittal. Of course for the purpose of arriving at that conclusion, namely, the conclusion that the plea of alibi has been established not only the defence evidence in support of the plea but also the prosecution evidence in support of the accusation should be examined. Where an accused pleads alibi it would be taking things in their natural sequence to examine the defence evidence relating to that plea first. Where the accused sets up a plea of alibi that he was on duty at another town on the date of occurrence, the burden of proof lies on him under S. 103, Evidence Act, to establish the plea and it is not for the prosecution to prove that the accused was absent from duty on the date of the occurrence. A mere allegation in an application without any evidence in support of that allegation is of no consequence whatsoever: A.I.R. 1958 All. 746.

13. Facts relevant when right or custom is in question.—Where the question is as to the existence of any right or custom, the following facts are relevant—

(a) any transaction by which the right or custom in question was created, claimed, modified, recognized, asserted or denied, or which was inconsistent with its existence;

(b) particular instances in which the right or custom was claimed, recognized, or exercised, or in which its exercise was disputed, asserted or departed from.

Illustration

The question is, whether A has a right to a fishery. A deed conferring the fishery on A's ancestors, a mortgage of the fishery by A's father, a subsequent grant of the fishery by A's father, irreconcilable with the mortgage, particular instances in which A's father exercised the right, or in which the exercise of the right was stopped by A's neighbour's, are relevant facts.

Section 13—Synopsis.

1. Scope of section.
2. Judgments.
3. Proof of custom.
4. Clause (a).
5. Documents admitted under this section.

---

1. Scope of section.—S. 13 makes relevant only certain transactions and instances for the purposes of establishing the existence of any right or custom. A case in which all that the Court has to determine is the alleged relationship of father and son between two persons, does not come within the ambit of that section, as neither a question of any right nor any custom is involved: A.I.R. 1952 Pepsu 76. S. 13 is nothing more than a declaration of the common rule of evidence in England, but it has been given wider construction in this country and it is not confined as it is confined in England, to the proof of incorporeal rights. But although that be the case in India, its application cannot be extended to allow judgment to be used in evidence in cases which are definitely excluded by Ss. 40 to 44 of the Evidence Act.

The statement made by the ancestor of a party as recorded in some of the previous judgments, orders and decrees to which he was a party are admissible under S. 35 and also under S. 13: I.L.R. (1959) Cut. 602.

The judgment and decree in the suit wherein a party had made certain admissions that the family was joint which admissions are against his interest are admissible under S. 13 of the Evidence Act as an instance in which there was assertion that the family was joint: 1959 M.P.L.J. 1018.

S. 13 applies to all kinds of rights whether rights of full ownership, or falling short of ownership, e.g., rights of easement, etc. A right may be public, or general, or private. Further a right may be incorporeal, e.g., a right of way or corporeal, e.g., a right of ownership: A.I.R. 1956 Mad. 226 [Overruled on another point in A.I.R. 1972 Mad. 154 (D.B.)].

Section not confined to public rights, but also applies to private rights: A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 991.

The word 'right' in S. 13 includes a private land; thus, where the dispute pertains to adverse possession and the adjoining land owners orally testify and produce sale deeds, held, the deeds have a corroborative value; being admissible under S. 157, the question of their relevancy is not material at that stage: A.I.R. 1972 Gau. 52.

A right in dispute cannot be proved on the basis of the finding in respect of that right in a previous suit not inter partes as a judgment recording a finding recognising certain right cannot be used as evidence to prove that right in another suit not between the same parties. Moreover, it is inherent in the scheme of S. 13 that only a judgment which has become final can be said to be a transaction evidencing the recognition of a right or an instance in which that right has been recognised. If the suit in which the judgment was given is still continuing in the shape of an appeal in the High Court and it will not be known as to what would ultimately be decided in that suit that derogates from its character of being a transaction recognising a right or an instance recognising that right: A.I.R. 1964 All. 302.

Entries in Riwaj-i-am are presumed to be correct—Proof of custom—Oral and documentary evidence of mutations and other transaction recognising custom, are material: A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 1555.

Question as to whether applicant's mark is identical or deceptively similar to trade mark of opponent — Judgments in other cases—Admissibility of in evidence: A.I.R. 1969 Cal. 80.

Dispute regarding possession of immovable property—Magistrate mainly relying upon affidavits of parties for coming to conclusion as to possession—Finding of High Court regarding possession of disputed property given in a previous case also relied upon—Held, that finding can be used as a piece of evidence of possession quantum valebat in the case: 1969 Cr.L.J. 1197: A.I.R. 1969 Pat. 317.

Where the question is whether the suit lands were the bakasht of the plaintiff, a waqf estate, or they had been settled with the defendants, Kabuliyats, executed in favour of the plaintiff, indicating that the lands were taken on settlement by different persons from time to time who were recognising the right of the proprietor, the wakf estate, to settle those lands with them, are admissible in evidence; but as to what weight should be attached to the statements contained therein is absolutely a different matter depending on the facts and circumstances of each case: 1968 B.L.J.R. 52.

Where a suit is brought for possession by way of redemption by plaintiffs as heirs of deceased mortgagor they, in order to establish their right to redeem, are entitled to produce a copy of judgment given in another suit and an order in mutation proceedings whereunder plaintiffs' right to succeed to the estate of the deceased mortgagor is recognised. The order in the mutation proceedings and the judgment are relevant under Ss. 13 and 43 and their probative value is very high. It is not necessary for the plaintiffs to prove that the order and the judgment has been correctly passed. The fact that the order and the judgment have not been challenged or set aside in any proceedings, goes to prove that they were correctly made: (1969) 71 Punj.L.R. 735.

Scope — Judgment not inter partes — Is admissible in evidence only in proof of fact that the right was asserted on a previous occasion—But the reasons on which it is founded cannot be treated as part of the transaction—So also any finding of fact therein other than the transaction itself is not relevant in the subsequent case: 1969 Ker. L.R. 326: 1969 Ker. L.T. 110.

Complaint under Ss. 426, 447 and 506, I.P. Code—Rent note executed by tenant of complainant in respect of land in question and copy of judgment of Nyaya Panchayat in rent recovery case filed by complainant—Documents are not irrelevant, but are admissible to prove the offences: 1970 Cr.L.J. 360: A.I.R. 1970 Manipur 23.

S. 13(a) only refers to the admissibility of any transaction by which a right is asserted. It would be a farfetched application of the section to say that if in a deed of partition between two persons rights are alleged with reference to the property which either has or has not any reference to the right to partition, these allegations should be considered as a transaction by which the right is asserted: A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 398. See also A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 1; A.I.R. 1942 Cal. 445 (Document by tenant describing nature of tenancy—Landlord not party to it—Is inadmissible). Assertions of permanent rights, continuing over a long period of years in various documents of transfer executed by tenants, are admissible under S. 13, though the weight to be attached to these recitals in the documents depends upon the circumstances of each case: A.I.R. 1945 Cal. 283.

Ordinarily and in the absence of special circumstances, a judicial decision in recognition or denial of a custom is good evidence in proof thereof. There may be cases in which the judicial decision relating to a custom may not be of great value; but where it is arrived at in a well contested case in which there is no reason to suppose that the parties could not, or did not, produce all evidence available to them the value of the decree as a piece of evidence is great: A.I.R. 1939 All. 626.

It also covers rights of ownership and also incorporeal rights: I.L.R. 10 Bom. 439; I.L.R. 15 Mad. 12; I.L.R. 12 All. 1. But see A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 636. Recitals in a document, which is not inter partes, are not admissible in evidence: A.I.R. 1946 Nag. 401.

Entries in a kabala which shows the purchase of the suit land by the plaintiff's predecessor-in-interest and on which the plaintiff bases his title are admissible in evidence under S. 13 against the defendant landlord, although they are not binding on him: A.I.R. 1946 Cal. 450.

Section is applicable also to transaction being inconsistent with existence of right in dispute and is not confined merely to assertion of such a right: (1967) 69 Punj.L.R. 119.

Statement by deceased person relating to purchase of shops by him in name of someone else—Held, statement was admissible in evidence since it did contain assertion of right: (1967) 69 Punj.L.R. 119.

A statement of a Kulkarni of a village as to the existence of a tenancy right in the village is admissible: A.I.R. 1940 P.C. 192. See also (1940-41) 45 Cal.W.N. 590 (Statement in deed of transfer about nature of tenancy). A map prepared in a previous suit is not relevant under S. 13 in a subsequent suit, when the land in dispute in the two suits is different: A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 309. See also A.I.R. 1945 Cal. 492. Documents of transfers and sub-leases dating from 1879, in all of which there is an assertion that the lease is permanent, are admissible in evidence under S. 13 for the purpose of proving that the lease is permanent: A.I.R. 1940 Cal. 393.

It is well settled that an award made by a Land Acquisition Officer is not an admission binding on Government for the purposes of a reference under S. 18 of the Land Acquisition Act. The Land Acquisition Officer occupies no better position than that of an agent of Government for the purpose of making an offer. That offer may be accepted or rejected by a claimant, who if dissatisfied with it may ask for a reference. The award, thus, being a mere offer, it cannot become evidence in another case in which different parties and different properties are concerned. Besides, an offer is at best opinion evidence, which cannot become admissible, unless the person making the offer gives evidence about it: A.I.R. 1960 Bom. 78. However see (1974-75) 79 Cal.W.N. 378 (D.B.).

A land acquisition award, not accepted by the owner or the person interested, is no evidence for the Government of the market value of the land in a different land acquisition proceeding; the award contains only an unaccepted offer of compensation on behalf of the Government; unless it is accepted or upheld by the Court in a reference, the money offered thereunder is not the market value of the acquired land. But a claimant in a different proceeding can very well rely on the unaccepted award as evidence of the market value and the Government is precluded from asserting that the money offered in the award is not the market value of the acquired land: A.I.R. 1973 Cal. 284: (1971-72) 76 Cal.W.N. 584 (D.B.). See also I.L.R. (1979) 1 Del. 545 (D.B.).

Statement of a third party made in a document executed in favour of defendant about the boundaries of land in suit—Such third party not proved to be dead nor examined in the case—Statement is inadmissible in law against the plaintiff: A.I.R. 1962 Pat. 273.

Statement in will executed by deceased that certain property was joint property of three brothers held admissible under S. 32 (7) read with S. 13(1) as the deceased executor was disinterested persons being a common aunt of three brothers: I.L.R. (1961) Cut. 635.

Words 'transaction' and 'right' in S. 13 to be construed liberally—Right of person as adopted son of another is right within S. 13—Judgment not inter partes recognizing any right is transaction or instance within S. 13—Judgment upholding right of defendant as adopted son is relevant though plaintiffs not parties to that judgment: I.L.R. (1965) 15 Raj. 529: 1965 Raj. L.W. 168.

Estate impartible by custom devolving by premogeniture—Incidents of—Junior members — Rights of — Acquisitions of accretions—Doctrine of incorporation—Principle if applies to movable property (Jewels)—Holders powers of alienation—Restrictions on—Position in Madras—Proof of family custom to treat movables as impartibles—Abolition of Zamindari—Effect on family custom to treat movable property as impartible: (1964) 2 S.C.R. 403: A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 118.

Recitals of boundaries in documents between third parties are inadmissible to show that any party to the suit is or is not the owner of an adjoining land which has been mentioned as one of the boundaries in such documents: 1961 B.L.J.R. 396: A.I.R. 1961 Pat. 460.

Existence of graveyard established—No presumption that it is public wakf—For over 50 years land used by defendants family exclusively for burying their dead—Fact is conclusive circumstance against land being public wakf: 1965 All. W.R. (H.C.) 296.

Suit challenging the validity of dedication of property to deity—Judgments in previous litigation, where all the parties in present suit were not parties, though may not operate as res judicata on the question of dedication yet would be admissible under S. 13 to show that whenever an attempt was made by the owners of the property to claim the property as their private property the Courts refused to accept that contention and referred to the fact that the Thakurji was necessary party in view of the deed of trust: A.I.R. 1966 Pat. 235.

Assertion of right by husband of plaintiff in written statement in previous suit—Written statement held admissible in partition suit filed after husband's death: A.I.R. 1966 Pat. 110.

S. 13 (a) and (b)—Suit under S. 92, C.P. Code—Allegation that tank was public trust—Earlier decree granted to defendant for evicting trespassers from tank can be relied upon as transaction or instance under S. 13 (a) and (b): A.I.R. 1967 Andh. Pra. 181.

Entry in list of tenants—Not conclusive of rights of parties—It is merely a piece of evidence to be taken into consideration when title to property is in question: A.I.R. 1967 Bom. 190.

Dispute about market value in land acquisition case — Applicant under S. 14, Hyderabad Land Acquisition Act (IX of 1309-F), relying on extract from deposition of claimant found in another judgment relating to other land acquisition proceedings—Held, extract could not be relied upon as relevant: A.I.R. 1959 Andh. Pra. 52, Rel. on—Hyderabad Land Acquisition Act (IX of 1309-F), Ss. 14, 19—Land Acquisition Act (1894), Ss. 18, 23: (1968) 1 An.W.R. 348. See also (1974-75) 79 Cal.W.N. 378 (D.B.).

The appellant-firm applied in a tax reference case (High Court), to which it was not a party, for inspection of and grant of copies of certain proceedings, for use in some other connected proceedings. There were certain observations in the judgment of the Division Bench in the tax reference which were quoted in extenso in the affidavits in the present proceedings to show that a lease though it stood nominally in the name of the appellant-firm, really belonged to the assessee in the tax reference proceedings. The single Judge before whom the matter came up, permitted the appellant-firm to have a scrutiny of the judgment in the tax case, but declined the request for inspection of the documents filed in the case or for grant of copies of such documents. The appellant-firm appealed to the Division Bench.

Held, that the appellant-firm will be permitted, to inspect the documents in the tax reference proceedings. With regard to the grant of the copies of documents, the appellant-firm are referred to remedies that should be available in the appropriate pending proceedings.

The appellant-firm has a conceivable interest in repelling the effect of the remarks of the Division Bench in the reference proceedings in regard to the leases. That appeal necessarily implies, quite apart from any review or appeal in the tax reference itself, which the appellant-firm may or may not seek to file from the judgment in the tax case, that the firm will equally have an interest in knowing the nature of the material adduced in that case, upon which those observations happened to have been made: (1967) 80 Mad. L.W. 595.

Sisters and brothers, co-owners of certain property—Sisters claiming adverse possession and ouster of brothers—Cist receipts in favour of brothers relating to period after dispute—They are of no evidentiary value to show non-ouster of brothers: A.I.R. 1963 Andh. Pra. 121.

The complainants' case was that they were in possession of the disputed property and that the accused attacked them after forming unlawful assembly. A counter report was lodged in which the accused set out their own version. The difference between the two versions was that each side claimed to be in possession of the house in dispute and each side alleged that the aggression came from the other side. The Sessions Judge relied upon the judgment of the Civil Court against which second appeal was pending which was instituted as a result of the incident and which showed that the possession of the house was with the complainants and convicted the accused.

Held, that the provisions in Ss. 40 to 42 and 43 only excluded judgments as pieces of conclusive evidence but did not bar the admission of judgments as proof of the fact of litigation or its results and effect upon the parties which made a certain course of conduct probable or improbable on the part of one of the parties: A.I.R. 1965 All. 511.

Customary right—Claim for—Facts to be taken into consideration—Mode of proof—Ss. 13, 32 (4) and 48 of Evidence Act (1882) are relevant: 1965 Raj.L.W. 242: A.I.R. 1965 Raj. 217.

Mortgage executed by A and B—In it A admitting that B was adopted son of his deceased brother C—Admission of A is relevant under S. 32 (3) being against his pecuniary interests inasmuch as he would lose his share in property of C if B was his adopted son—Admission relevant also under S. 32 (5)—Admission binding on grandson of A under S. 18 (2)—The words 'during the continuance of the interest' only meanwhile the interest was subsisting and before that interest was parted with—Document also constituted evidence of B's assertion of the right that he was adopted son of C and was relevant under S. 13 read with S. 32 (7) B being dead—Under S. 21 (1) admission of B in his own favour as adopted son of C was relevant: I.L.R. (1962) Cut. 422: A.I.R. 1963 Ori. 45.

Competent Court—Order of Superintendent of former Mandi State during settlement operations—Right of villagers of certain villages to graze their cattle in disputed land recognised — Relevancy for proving customary right: A.I.R. 1962 Him. Pra. 28.

Different items of properties mortgaged—Liability to contribute towards payment of mortgage-debt—Fixation of price of mortgage properties to be with respect to date when properties were mortgaged: A.I.R. 1962 Pat. 23.

Decisions in other acquisition proceedings are relevant in considering the market value of land in subsequent acquisition cases: I.L.R. (1960) 2 All. 71.

Custom—Evidence: A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 142; A.I.R. 1958 Ker. 35 (F.B.).

2. Judgment.—Question as to validity of adoption—Previous judgment in which person concerned was adopted son—Judgment holding that he was adopted son and legal heirs of the properties of his adoptive father—This judgment is admissible for the purpose of showing that there was an assertion and denial with regard to the adoption and that it was ultimately found that the person was the adopted son: (1963) 2 An.L.T. 214: A.I.R. 1964 Andh. Pra. 109. See also A.I.R. 1964 Ori. 174.

Judgment not inter partes in which an adoption was upheld is admissible: 114 I.C. 616. See also A.I.R. 1939 Bom. 313.

A judgment given by the French Courts in Pondicherry in regard to the validity of an adoption by a Hindu widow would be admissible in evidence under S. 13 in proceedings in Courts in British India even though one of the parties to such proceedings was not a party to the proceedings in the French Courts. The weight to be given to it must depend on all the circumstances and it cannot be said that it must be followed. As it is a judgment of the Court of the domicile in relation to the validity of the adoption both in law and as regards the facts necessary to its validity in Pondicherry it is cogent evidence of the French Law itself and ought in such circumstances to be given great weight in all the matters with which it deals: A.I.R. 1950 P.C. 34.

Right of an adopted son—Suit by adopted son against trespassers—Factum of adoption — Proof — Judgment not inter partes — Order in an earlier revenue case directing impleading of plaintiff as the adopted son of one of the defendants in the case—Evidence of order held admissible to show that right as an adopted son was claimed and recognised, even though the judgment was not inter partes: A.I.R. 1964 Andh. Pra. 53.

Judgment—If and in what respect conclusive—Facts proving guardian's negligence endorsed in judgment — Admissibility of judgment: A.I.R. 1958 Pat. 477.

Recitals in a criminal case judgment are no proof of the averments made therein; the judgment, however, is admissible under S. 13 as an instance wherein the right was claimed; it can be considered alongwith other evidence in the suit. [A.I.R. 1960 Ori. 29: 25 Cut.L.T. 366, Rel. on; A.I.R. 1955 S.C. 566: (1955) 2 S.C.R. 270, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1973 Gau. 38.

Proceedings or judgments of a criminal Court constitute no evidence in civil proceedings; plaintiff alleging fraud and collusion has to independently plead with requisite particulars and prove by evidence, oral and documentary: (1991-2) 108 Mad. L.W. 436.

It is well settled that the proceedings in the criminal Court are not evidence in the suit for malicious prosecutions and the civil Court must go into evidence and decide for itself whether want of reasonable and probable cause or malice existed or not. The judgment of the criminal Court is admissible in evidence in the civil suit, only for the limited purpose of establishing the fact that the prosecution had ended in the plaintiffs favour and not for the purpose of ascertaining the grounds on which the judgment had proceeded: A.I.R. 1959 Manipur 32.

Where, therefore, what the plaintiff in a suit seeks to establish through a judgment is not a right or custom but a fact—a fact which was presumably proved in a previous action to which the defendant in the suit was not a party, the case comes neither under Ss. 40 to 44, nor under S. 13 of the Evidence Act, and the judgment not inter partes is not admissible in evidence: A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 103; A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 309; A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 347. A judgment in a suit between A, and his grantee, B, that the mineral rights in one of the villages comprised in the grant did not pass to the grantee and that the title of A to the mineral rights had not been extinguished by adverse possession, is not binding on the lessee of B, who had acquired his interest in the village under leases before the suit, and was not a party to the suit. The judgment is also not admissible against the lessee of B in a suit between him, lessee of B and successors in interest of A where the same question is agitated: (1956-57) 61 Cal.W.N. 970. A judgment not inter partes is admissible under S. 13 as mere evidence of a transaction in which the nature of the property in suit was asserted and recognised. The reasons upon which the judgment is founded and the findings of fact there come to cannot be regarded as part of the transaction and are, therefore, not relevant under the section. [I.L.R. 58 Cal. 1187 (P.C.), Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1949 East Punj. 233. The assertion or the denial of rights contemplated by S. 13 is evidently the assertion or the denial by parties and not by Courts, for Courts merely find for the one or the other of the contestants. It cannot, therefore, be said that the judgments themselves are transactions which negative certain rights and so are admissible under S. 13: A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 59.

The Courts below upheld the right of the plaintiff to take water from the spring through an artificial channel to the fields and for that purpose admitted the judgment in an earlier civil appeal.

Held, that the aforesaid judgment, though not inter partes, was admissible in evidence under S. 13 of the Evidence Act. It has been repeatedly held in several cases following the decisions of the Privy Council in 22 I.A. 60 and 29 I.A. 24, that judgments not inter partes though not conclusive were admissible like any other fact to be weighed in the balance to prove the value of the claim made in the previous suit as an instance of a right claimed asserted or denied. The judgment was also admissible under S. 42 as it related to matters of a public nature, namely, a village custom, relevant to the enquiry: 1964 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 31.

A judgment other than a judgment referred to in Ss. 40 to 42 may be admissible to prove that a right was asserted or denied under S. 13, or to explain or introduce facts in issues or to explain the history of the case. It is now too late to say that a litigation or a suit is not a transaction and that the word 'right' as used in S. 13 must be interpreted in some what narrow sense in which it was construed in I.L.R. 6 Cal. 171 (F.B.).

In a prior suit for partition a specific issue was raised as to whether K died in 1939 as claimed by his widow S or in 1933 as pleaded by other co-defendants. The trial Court found that K died in 1939. The suit was, however, dismissed on the main plea that there was already previous partition and consequently no relief was granted to S. In the subsequent suit brought by S for partition claiming her share on the assertion that K died in 1939 that is after the passing of Hindu Women's Right to Property Act, 1937, the lower Courts, in view of the circumstance of the prior suit accepted the oral evidence produced by S. On contention that the finding given in the previous partition suit as to the date of death of K should not have been taken into consideration by the Court in supplementing the merit of the evidence given by the plaintiff's witnesses, held, that the finding in regard to date of K's death could not be held as altogether inadmissible in law. The Court could accept it at least as an instance of the fact that the right was claimed and asserted and finally recognised in the previous suit. Hence, the prior judgment though not admissible under Ss. 40 to 42, was not barred from admissibility under S. 13: A.I.R. 1964 Pat. 66.

A judgment in another suit which is not inter partes is not evidence to establish the truth of the matters decided in that judgment. The findings of fact arrived at on the evidence in one case are not evidence of that fact in another case: A.I.R. 1961 Bom. 169.

In a suit to recover business dues, judgments in earlier suits filed by the defendant against some of the plaintiff's witnesses are admissible under S. 13 of the Evidence Act and can be used to corroborate the evidence of such witnesses.

A judgment inter partes which is not a judgment in rem or one relating to public matters is not admissible in a subsequent suit either as res judicata or as a proof of the particular point which it decided. But it is admissible under S. 13 and can be used to corroborate the oral evidence to such witnesses asserted a right based on what they have deposed: 1967 Ker. L.J. 237.

Previous suit for maintenance by widow of joint Hindu family—Maintenance asked to be charge of joint family property—Amount of maintenance to depend on extent of joint family property—Issue as to extent of property actually framed—Judgment in suit held admissible as an instance in which there was assertion that certain properties belonged to joint family, in subsequent suit for partition in which those properties are claimed to be self-acquired properties: A.I.R. 1954 S.C. 379.

When a custom has been repeatedly brought to the notice of the Courts and judicially recognised, it becomes a part of law of the locality where it prevails and it is not necessary to prove its attributes in each individual case. Indeed, the judicial recognition of a custom means nothing more nor less than the recognition of a valid custom and such recognition would be meaningless if a party were to be allowed to impeach its validity each time a custom is put in issue in a Court of law: A.I.R. 1955 Cal. 419.

An ex parte judgment of the High Court whether it is an instance of custom or opinion on a question of law, does not become less valuable merely on the ground of the absence of a respondent: A.I.R. 1952 Punj. 356. Although a judgment based upon a compromise cannot be placed on the same footing as that in which after contest a custom of pre-emption was held to be proved or negatived, yet it cannot be said that it is of no value whatsoever. It does show the assertion of the right to pre-empt and acceptance of the same by the defendant, whatever be the reason, for such acceptance: A.I.R. 1952 Punj. 356.

Court judgments about comparable land is relevant in determining compensation in land acquisition cases. [A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 2403, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1982 N.O.C. 165 (Del.).

Judgment not inter partes in previous cases in which the right involved in the present litigation was asserted are admissible: 60 I.C. 142. See also A.I.R. 1927 Nag. 19; A.I.R. 1926 Oudh 211: I.L.R. 1 Luck. 489; A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 194; A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 1046; A.I.R. 1928 Sind 132. (Proceedings under S. 145, Cr. P. Code); A.I.R. 1926 Oudh 19; I.L.R. 11 Cal. 745; I.L.R. 15 Cal. 233; I.L.R. 13 Cal. 352; I.L.R. 12 Mad. 9; I.L.R. 15 Mad. 12: 22 I.A. 60: I.L.R. 22 Cal. 43 (P.C.); 24 I.A. 10: I.L.R. 19 All. 277 (P.C.); 29 I.A. 24: I.L.R. 29 Cal. 187 (P.C.); A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 231; 125 I.C. 115: I.L.R. 12 Luck. 155: 1936 O.W.N. 375; A.I.R. 1942 Pat. 372; A.I.R. 1960 Ker. 123.

It is fairly settled that a judgment in a previous suit not inter partes is admissible in proof of a transaction or instance wherein a relationship asserted was admitted or denied; though not conclusive, it is admissible in evidence like any other fact to be weighed in the balance; it does not establish the correctness but only the factum of the previous decision; a finding of fact arrived at on the evidence in one case is evidence of that fact in another case: A.I.R. 1980 Ori. 54: 49 Cut.L.T. 215: I.L.R. (1979) 2 Cut. 542.

The recognised rule of law is that previous decisions, though not inter partes, are not only relevant but have a high probative value; they are in a way good precedents to be followed in subsequent litigation. Thus, in a suit for possession, the defendant relied upon a registered will proved in a previous litigation between him and a third party, held, the will being directly and substantially involved in the previous litigation, the previous judgments had a high probative value: A.I.R. 1979 P.&H. 234 (D.B.).

Judgments not inter partes are admissible to show the existence of custom of a public nature. See 7 W.R. 210: 7 M.H.C. 306: I.L.R. 12

Mad. 9; 163 I.C. 924: A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 929; A.I.R. 1960 Bom. 78. A judgment not inter partes together with the plaint which preceded it and the steps in execution which followed, are admissible as evidence of an assertion of right but cannot alter the burden of proof as between rival claimants: A.I.R. 1937 P.C. 69. See also A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 437; A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 373; A.I.R. 1944 Cal. 57; A.I.R. 1945 Pat. 211 (Pleadings and judgment in previous suit are admissible).

A judgment on a question of custom is relevant not merely as an instance under S. 13 but also under S. 42 as evidence of custom. But its value depends upon the nature of the inquiry and the evidence produced: A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 309. A question as to what the custom is on a particular matter in a locality or a class of people or a family is a question of public nature and judgments as to the existence or non-existence of the custom would be relevant both under S. 13 and S. 42: A.I.R. 1950 Lah. 6.

Judicial decisions recognising a custom are relevant and admissible even without being inter partes: A.I.R. 1971 Guj. 188 (D.B.).

A decision in a custom case is not a judgment in rem. It is only relevant under S. 13 as a judicial instance of the custom being recognized. It may be that, owing to faulty prosecution one decision may be arrived at between certain parties while there may be another decision in a suit arising between other persons: A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 861; A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 553.

It is doubtful whether a judgment recognising a custom is relevant under S. 13. Even if it is, far from having the same importance as a clear cut instance of custom recognised by the parties themselves: A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 223.

Judgments subsequent to the suit in which they are relied on as evidencing as the particular transaction or instances in dispute are not admissible in evidence: A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 152.

The Evidence Act does not make finding of fact arrived at on the evidence before the Court in one case, evidence of that fact in another case, where parties are not the same: A.I.R. 1929 P.C. 99; A.I.R. 1960 Ker. 123.

Where a judgment is not in rem nor relating to matters of public nature, nor between the parties to a subsequent suit, the fact that the Court by that judgment decides a point in a particular way is not relevant for the purpose of the decision of the same point in the subsequent suit: A.I.R. 1930 Nag. 1 (F.B.). Decrees: A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 472; A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 749.

In a rent suit, decree by another co-sharer landlord is admissible: A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 355, contra A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 353.

Judgment referring to illegitimacy of a person is admissible as establishing an instance in which the legitimacy of the person was denied: A.I.R. 1928 Oudh 233. A judgment in which the purchase at a revenue sale by the plaintiff's predecessor is recited is admissible in evidence as evidence of a transaction within the meaning of S. 13 though the defendants were not parties thereto: A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 222. See also A.I.R. 1939 Bom. 313.

The purpose of S. 13 is to enable a right which may be constituted by a number of acts by the exercise of the right itself animo domini, on numerous occasions, to be proved by transactions or particular instances in which the right or custom in question was asserted or denied but by evidence otherwise admissible. A judgment is admissible because it is the evidence or integration of a litigation or a judicial proceeding, a transaction within the meaning of S. 13 for the purpose of ascertaining the parties to the dispute and the contention of the parties, the subject of the dispute and the final decision of the Court, but not for the purpose of proving the reasons for the Court's decision and for using its findings of facts as evidence of those facts in another case: A.I.R. 1938 Sind 132; 1939 All.L.J. 708: A.I.R. 1939 All. 626. See also 73 Cal.L.J. 76.

Although a finding in a previous suit inter partes does not operate as res judicata, it is the paramount duty of the party against whom it is given to displace that finding: 73 Cal.L.J. 76. See also 1944 All.W.R. (Rev.) 293: 1944 R.D. 550; A.I.R. 1960 Ker. 123.

(But this rule of onus of proof cannot be extended in respect of a previous judgment not inter partes). The recitals in a judgment are no evidence whatever to prove the exact admissions made by a party or witness unless the whole of the statement is recited therein: A.I.R. 1960 Ker. 123.

Previous proceedings on the question of the existence of the right to the office and property are very relevant as being transactions by which the right was recognised. When documents are official records of undoubted authority which may assist the Court to decide rightly the issue before it, leave should not ordinarily be refused even though they are produced late: A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 540.

Judgment not inter partes is admissible for certain purposes: A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 788. See also 1940 R.D. 623: 1941 All.W.R. (Rev.) 433. Judgment not inter partes is admissible to prove motive of transaction alleged to be benami: A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 739.

Where in the previous representative suit the non-compliance of O. 1, R. 8 of the Code of Civil Procedure was not inadvertent, and it was not shown that the defendants had thereby suffered no injury, held, the plaintiff in the later suit could derive no benefit of Explanation VI to S. 11 of the Code; but the judgment in the previous suit, though not conclusive, is yet relevant under S. 13 as evidence of a prior instance when the right presently claimed by the plaintiff was successfully asserted: A.I.R. 1974 Raj. 144: 1974 Raj.L.W. 136.

A civil Court's decree for possession in favour of a tenant is admissible as presumptive proof of his possession; the tenancy rights having become more valuable than the proprietory right, no tenant would surrender the possession of his tenancy land; there is a strong presumption of his continuing in possession: I.L.R. (1985) Him. Pra. 823.

Where in a suit for ejectment the question was whether or not one 'A' was the erstwhile owner of the premises in question, held, the pleadings in an earlier suit filed by the karta of A's family for ejectment of another tenant showing A as the owner of the portion (which was in dispute in subsequent litigation), was admissible in evidence: A.I.R. 1978 All. 292.

In a suit for eviction against A, B, C and D on the basis of a prior decree for ejectment obtained only against A and B, C was the brother of A and B and D was the wife of C. C and D contended that the previous decree was not binding on them. Held, that the decision in the previous suit may not be res judicata against C and D but it was good evidence of the fact that the plaintiff got a declaration of his rights as against A and B. C and D being merely in occupation at the instance of A and B or as members or dependants of the family they could not claim any better right to question the validity of the decree in the earlier suit: A.I.R. 1956 Assam 115.

A plaintiff is entitled to rely upon a judgment in a prior suit filed by his transferor against the defendant and in which his transferor had proved his title as against the defendant: A.I.R. 1956 Bom. 625.

In a suit for perpetual injunction to restrain the defendant from interfering with the plaintiff's possession, the judgment of the President of the Municipal Council is relevant under S. 13 or S. 43 for establishing the transaction that permission to raise new construction was accorded by the Municipal Council; but the reasons and the finding of fact set out in such judgment are not relevant: 1975 Raj.L.W. 561: I.L.R. (1975) Raj. 959: A.I.R. 1976 Raj. 91.

Judgment not inter partes throwing light on title of landlord in respect of other villages is not admissible: 31 Bom.L.R. 335. A pedigree given in a previous judgment is not relevant under S. 13 of the Evidence Act, when it is not known who propounded that pedigree and the judgment does not proceed on the pedigree: A.I.R. 1952 Punj. 301.

Where certified copies of the decree and of two pedigrees found with it are produced, the Court may presume that the two pedigrees, found with the decree were the two pedigrees filed in the suit. Both pedigrees should be admitted as pedigrees filed by the respective parties to the suit and not as evidence of relationship under S. 32 (5). The statement in the decree that the pedigrees were filed is evidence under S. 35 as an entry in a public record or under S. 13, as evidence of the course of proceedings in a suit: A.I.R. 1934 P.C. 157.

A judgment not inter partes holding that a partition of a certain estate was proved is only admissible as establishing a particular transaction in which the partibility of the estate was asserted, and recognised. The reasons upon which the judgment is founded are no part of the transaction and cannot be so regarded nor can any finding of fact there come to, other than the transaction itself, be relevant to prove partition in a subsequent suit: 58 I.A. 125: A.I.R. 1931 P.C. 89: 61 M.L.J. 9, followed in A.I.R. 1949 East Punj. 233. See also A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 152; 1944 All.W.R. (Rev.) 293.

A judgment not inter partes holding that a partition of a certain estate was proved is only admissible under Ss. 13 and 43 of the Act, as establishing a particular transaction in which the partibility of the estate was asserted and recognised. A judgment is admissible because it is the evidence or integration of a litigation or a judicial proceeding or a 'transaction' within the meaning of S. 13, for the purpose of ascertaining the parties to a dispute, their contentions and the subject of the dispute, and the final decision of the Court, but not for proving the reasons for the Courts decision and for using its findings of fact as evidence of those facts in another case: A.I.R. 1945 Sind 57.

In order to prove the existence or non-existence of a particular custom it is only judgment that can be produced as an instance. But if such judgment is not produced a Judge's recitals about such judgment cannot be relied on: A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 152. Statement made in prior litigation is admissible in subsequent suit: A.I.R. 1929 All. 561.

3. Proof of custom.—It is incumbent on a party setting up a custom to allege and prove the custom on which he relies and it is not any theory of custom or deductions from other customs which can be made a rule of decision but only any custom applicable to the parties concerned that can be the rule of decision in a particular case. Custom cannot be extended by analogy and it cannot be established by a priori methods. Oral evidence as to instances which can be proved by documentary evidence cannot safely be relied upon to establish custom, when no satisfactory explanation for withholding the best kind of evidence is given: 1953 S.C.R. 939: A.I.R. 1953 S.C. 201.

The burden of proving a custom in derogation of the general law being heavily on the party who sets it up, it is incumbent on him to prove by clear and cogent evidence that there is a family custom excluding the females from taking as heirs. A statement as to custom from a person of the age of twenty-two cannot command much weight, as that must largely depend on his means of knowledge: A.I.R. 1956 S.C. 548.

It is unnecessary to probe into the question as to how a custom originated. All that is necessary is to make out that a particular class of people was consistently adhering to such a custom for a fairly long period of time so as to give it the force of law. If there is nothing immoral or opposed to public policy in such a custom it will be recognised and enforced by Courts of law: A.I.R. 1956 Trav.-Co. 167 (F.B.).

A custom to be valid must not be contrary to justice, equity or good conscience. It must not have been declared to be void by any competent authority nor would contravene any express provision of the law. It must also be ancient, certain and invariable. A custom may either be general or special. It may be proved or disproved in any of the following ways: (1) By the opinions of persons likely to know of its existence or having special means of knowledge thereof. (2) By statements of persons who are dead or whose attendance cannot be procured without unreasonable delay or expenses, provided they were made before any controversy as to such custom arose, and were made by persons who would have been or likely to have been aware of the existence of such custom if it existed. (3) By any transaction by which the custom in question was claimed, modified, recognised, asserted, or denied or which was inconsistent with its existence. (4) By particular instances by which the custom was claimed, recognised, or exercised, or knowledge of its exercise was disputed, asserted or departed from. The English rule that a custom in order that it may be legal and binding must have been used so long that the memory of man runneth not to contrary should not be strictly applied to Indian conditions. In the case of a negative or prohibitive custom, it depends rather on the obedience of the custom than on any disobedience thereof, and, therefore, it would be difficult to find out numerous instances of a custom of that nature.

Where the custom alleged is a prohibitory custom, that is to say, a prohibition from doing an act which involves sacrilege to the temple itself one cannot get innumerable instances in which such an attempt was made and was frustrated. The general rule that where a customary right is alleged several instances of the assertion of the right and its due recognition should be proved will not, therefore, apply in view of the peculiar facts and circumstances of this case: A.I.R. 1958 Ori. 26.

A custom must be ancient, invariable, certain and continuous; though instances of custom have some evidentiary value, but it must further be established that where such instances were proved to be in derogation of the personal law, they did not result from the parties agreement but were in exercise of customary rights; in other words, the claim was made as well as succeeded on the basis of custom: A.I.R. 1973 J.&K. 28. See also A.I.R. 1971 Cal. 405.

It need not be proved that the right is being exercised from time immemorial; it is enough to prove that the right is reasonable, ancient and has been exercised openly, peaceably and without interference, and not stealthily; it will then assume the character of a customary right enforceable in a Court of law: A.I.R. 1980 Cal. 10: (1978-79) 83 Cal.W.N. 901.

The rules of custom must always prevail; if any aberration therefrom requires to be corrected, the Court's endeavour should be towards re-establishing the rule: A.I.R. 1973 S.C. 268: (1973) 1 S.C.C. 14. See also 1974 Rev.L.R. 409 (Rule of custom cannot override a statutory rule of law).

It is well established that a custom must be specifically pleaded and proved, and a custom not pleaded cannot be proved. Thus, where the plea was that the Kanikkara tribe was governed by Marumakkathayam law and no family custom was set up when there was no uniform customary law of inheritance governing that tribe, held, the family custom could not be proved; the property will thus devolve under the general law of inheritance upon the deceased's son: A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 1398.

Custom must be alleged in precise terms and must by evidence be established as pleaded: I.L.R. (1953) Punj. 669: A.I.R. 1953 Punj. 202.

Ordinarily, custom is a mixed question of law and fact first, certain facts have to be proved and from those facts an inference of the existence of a valid custom is drawn. The inference is a legal inference: A.I.R. 1954 Pat. 408 (F.B.).

Mohammedans, according to the law in force in Kashmir State, have to be governed by the Mohammedan Law unless the relevant provision of the Mohammedan Law is modified or abrogated by custom. It would, therefore, lie very heavily upon a person, who pleads a custom in derogation of the Mohammedan Law to prove its existence: A.I.R. 1957 J.&K. 3.

Where the defendants, Muslim migrants from Afghanistan and governed there by personal law, set up a 36 years' old custom that in the matter of inheritance, daughters were governed by custom and got no share in their parental property but failed to prove a single instance where such customary right was exercised as a matter of right, held, the custom not having been acted upon for a long time did not outweigh the personal law; the practice of excluding daughters from inheritance had started with some exceptions, but it was yet in infancy and not ripened into a custom: A.I.R. 1973 J.&K. 28.

Where the plaintiff had averred that he had made demands for pre-emption necessary under the Muslim law, held, even assuming that the customary law of pre-emption did not require making of any such demand, he was estopped from contending in the second appeal that the law of pre-emption required no such demand: A.I.R. 1982 All. 98.

Custom—Proof: A.I.R. 1958 Manipur 7.

If a custom of adopting a married male having children amongst the khateeks is proved to prevail for 20 to 30 years, it is deemed as ancient, certain and reasonable; the burden lies on the other side to lead evidence to prove the contrary. [A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 605, Foll.]: 1981 Raj.L.W. 61.

Custom in derogation of Hindu Law—Proof of. See A.I.R. 1960 Andh. Pra. 412.

Custom at variance with Hindu Law—Nature of proof required: A.I.R. 1968 Mad. 105.

Custom opposed to decency or morality —Reddiars of South India—Custom allowing person to marry one's own daughter's daughter—Validity: A.I.R. 1957 Mad. 97. See also (1972) 1 Cut.W.R. 74 (Concubinage).

Party setting up custom—Strict proof of custom necessary—Long usage essential for establishment of custom: A.I.R. 1967 Him. Pra. 15.

Custom in Androth Island of Laccadive Islands totally prohibiting alienation of tarwad properties—Custom recognised by Courts in several instances—Parties in general instances proceeded under a conviction that such custom existed — Custom held proved: A.I.R. 1967 Ker. 259.

The Dastoor-e-Dehi or Wajib-ul-Arz mentions a village custom as to when a 'riyaya' sells a house, the Zamindar gets one-fourth of the consideration, called zare chaharum; it is a custom lost in antiquity and exercised as a matter of right throughout; apparently as the law then stood prior to the enforcement of the U.P. Abolition of Zare Chaharum Act, 1951, the Courts did not decline to grant decrees based on such custom on the ground of its unreasonableness; its unreasonableness is to be judged in the light of the notion of law as it then stood and not as it stands today. The 'riyaya' had no saleable interest in the house; such a right was given to him on the understanding that the Zamindar will receive one-fourth of price; after the agricultural 'riyaya' left the house or abandoned the village, it was the Zamindar alone who could settle that house to any other agricultural tenant which would entail investments by the Zamindar; the right to realise zare chaharum is, thus, neither unreasonable nor opposed to law; even the inclusion of the village in Municipal limits will not destroy such right: A.I.R. 1973 All. 162. [Held no longer good law in 1981 All.L.J. 1111].

In appreciating evidence of proof of a custom or usage, no general rule about the quantum of evidence can be laid down. Each case will depend on its own circumstances. [34 I.C. 875, Rel. on].

Where the question is whether there was a custom in regard to particular Math and its subsidiary maths to nominate different chellas as successors to different subsidiary Maths, the proof that during the tenure of the predecessor Mahants at least on two occasions nomination of different chellas to different Maths had taken place without any objection, amounts to the existence of a usage permitting nomination of different chellas to different Maths for the time being under the control of one Mahant: (1970) 36 Cut.L.T. 229.

4. Clause (a).—Transaction—Meaning.—A transaction is a business or dealing which is carried on or transacted between two or more persons: it is something which has been concluded between persons by a cross or reciprocal action, and in the largest sense, it means that which is done: A.I.R. 1956 Mad. 226; A.I.R. 1957 Pat. 293.

'By which'.—On account of the governing qualification 'by which' in regard to any transaction if it is a case which is sought to be made admissible on the ground of the right being created, claimed, modified, asserted or denied, then it must be shown to be not apart from the transaction by which it was created, claimed, etc. Instance of creation or modification of a right would be inconceivable apart from the transaction by which it was created or modified: A.I.R. 1956 Mad. 226 [Overruled on another point in A.I.R. 1972 Mad. 154 (D.B.)].

When amounts to assertion of right.—There is a fundamental distinction between a mere recital and an assertion. A right is not asserted simply because it is recited in a certain document. It is asserted only when the transaction concerned is itself entered into in exercise of the right. Where in a transaction of usufructuary mortgage the executants were entitled to grant a usufructuary mortgage of the lands whether they held them under a revenue free title or not, the mere fact that in the document of mortgage a revenue free title was recited, would not constitute an assertion of such title within the meaning of S. 13: 81 Cal.L.J. 274: A.I.R. 1947 Cal. 209. Under S. 13(a) a transaction in which the right was directly asserted may be admissible; but one in which it was casually referred to would not be admissible. Where the omission of the recital from the paper or document would make no difference on the effect of the transaction or document it cannot be said that it is a transaction in which a particular right was 'asserted' and therefore, it would be inadmissible: A.I.R. 1952 Vindh. Pra. 36.

S. 13(a) makes certified copies of decrees recognising third party interest in the disputed property admissible in evidence: A.I.R. 1982 Cal. 294.

5. Documents admitted under this section.—Where a custom is pleaded under which the ryots are entitled to sell their houses in the village, copies of sale deed produced to prove the instances of such a custom are admissible in evidence: A.I.R. 1940 All. 535. Under this section maps: I.L.R. 5 Cal. 287: 164 I.C. 277; A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 462; maps and chittas: I.L.R. (1946) 1 Cal. 149; A.I.R. 1945 Cal. 492; rent receipts: I.L.R. 16 Mad. 194; entries in taluq maps, 22 I.C. 645; A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 462; old maps, 16 Cal.W.N. 116: 13 I.C. 332; sale deeds: 23 W.R. 293: 1956 B.L.J.R. 197: A.I.R. 1957 Pat. 293; zamindari papers; A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 576; documents under which title to land is devised, when title is in question, have been admitted: (Ibid) Patwari papers: 1936 R.D. 479. See also A.I.R. 1937 Bom. 307. As to chittas by Government, see A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 189.

Muchilika executed by tenant in favour of landlord — Landlord described as adopted son of one D in descriptive portion of document — Held, description of landlord as adopted son of D was not superfluous recital but had been made in assertion of right that tenant was taking lease of land of D which the landlord could lease out on theory that he was adopted son of D—Document held admissible under S. 13. [A.I.R. 1951 Pat. 641; (S.) A.I.R. 1956 S.C. 305; A.I.R. 1947 Cal. 209, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1963 Ori. 45.

Way-bill issued by public carrier and its transfer by endorsement—In the absence of uniform and definite usage would not amount to pledge of goods: A.I.R. 1968 Mys. 133.

Question whether there was some construction upon land in dispute at time of filing of suit—Plan prepared long before dispute between parties got prepared by defendant showing that property had been built upon—Plan filed by defendant—It would be relevant piece of evidence: A.I.R. 1968 Punj. 60.

Ss. 13(a) and 32(7).—The expression 'any right' in S. 13 of the Evidence Act includes the right to be maintained from the joint family. If there is any statement in the Will which is inconsistent with the existence of such a right, it would undoubtedly fall within the last limb of S. 13 (a). Thus, under S. 13 (a) of the Evidence Act read with S. 32 (7) of the Evidence Act, the statement made in the Will that the plaintiff was paid Rs. 500 and thus her right of maintenance was settled, becomes admissible in evidence.

The word 'agreement' used in S. 25 of the Hindu Adoption and Maintenance Act is applicable to all kinds of agreements but it is difficult to accept that it would include the agreement under which the right of maintenance is relinquished in lieu of a fixed sum. Where a person entitled to be maintained compromises and accepts a definite sum in lieu of her right to be maintained from the joint family property and relinquishes her right, S. 25 will not apply to such a case.

The entries of the Census Register are inadmissible in evidence under S. 15 of the Census Act: (1968) 1 An.W.R. 429.

Admissibility of genealogies depends upon: (a) their falling within the four corners of S. 32(5) or S. 13; (b) their not being hit by the doctrine of post litem mortam; (c) they or the claims thereunder cannot be proved by recitals, depositions or facts narrated in the judgment but held inadmissible by a long course of decisions; and (d) oral evidence to prove genealogies must clearly indicate the witness's special means of knowledge about them and his exact source and the time and circumstances under which he had acquired that knowledge, and such evidence must be sufficient to clearly and conclusively prove the genealogies: (1983) 3 S.C.C. 118: A.I.R. 1983 S.C. 684.

Genealogies admitted or proved to be old and relied on in previous cases are relevant, and sometimes even conclusive; but before accepting or relying on them, the Courts must consider (a) their source and dependability; (b) their admissibility as evidence; (c) their proper use in earlier decisions or judgments relied upon; (d) their age; and (e) earlier litigations where they were accepted or rejected: (1983) 3 S.C.C. 118: A.I.R. 1983 S.C. 684.

Where genealogy is the very basis of a suit, the interested party would tend to establish its claim by concocting, fabricating or procuring a false genealogy; the Courts should, therefore, try to do justice on the materials on record, uninfluenced by extraneous circumstances: (1983) 3 S.C.C. 118: A.I.R. 1983 S.C. 684.

Recitals in sale deed are not evidence of title and cannot be used to prove a grant. It is, however, permissible to use them, to show the nature of the title that was being asserted and as transactions relevant under S. 13 by which a right was claimed or asserted on some past occasion: A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 656. See also A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 795; 1973 W.L.N. 981 (Raj.). Report submitted by a local Agent upon an enquiry made by him under the provisions of Bengal Regulation XIX of 1810, whether particular temple is a private or public temple is admissible under S. 13 of the Evidence Act, when the question of the nature of the temple, is under consideration: A.I.R. 1958 Ori. 183.

Where a plaintiff derives his rights from the recitals of a deed executed between his predecessor-in-interest and a stranger, which amount to admissions by his predecessor in his own, and therefore, in favour of the plaintiff, held, the deed is not admissible either under S. 11 or S. 13: A.I.R. 1975 Karn. 179: (1975) 1 Karn.L.J. 105.

A sale certificate is admissible in evidence under S. 13 as a transaction by which the right to possession of certain plots of land as constituting the tenancy-lands was recognised: A.I.R. 1940 Cal. 539. A certified copy of a plaint filed in a prior suit containing an assertion of the existence of a custom in dispute, is relevant under S. 13. Its probative value is, however, negligible if it is not known what happened later in the case: A.I.R. 1949 Ajmer 2. 'Instances in which the right was claimed, recognised or exercised'—Meaning of: I.L.R. 15 Pat. 260; A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 543. See also A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 635; A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 105; (1940-41) 45 Cal.W.N. 590.

A long series of instances in which a custom has been recognised is not the only mode of proving a custom; a custom of succession to properties of math, may be proved by showing a clear, distinct and positive tradition in the math, or by a long series of instances in which the custom has been recognised: A.I.R. 1954 Pat. 86.

The word 'asserted' in S. 13(b) includes both a statement and enforcement by Act. The evidence tendered under this section need not necessarily be evidence of the acts done, but a verbal statement not amounting to and not accompanied by, any act, would also be admissible if it amounted to a claim: A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 432.

A statement made when there was some dispute, though its details are obscure becomes absolutely useless either under S. 32 (4) or under S. 13(a) of the Evidence Act: A.I.R. 1952 Vindh. Pra. 36.

Under S. 13 instances in which the right or custom is claimed, recognised or exercised etc., must be instances prior to the suit in question. Post items instances are inadmissible: A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 105; A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 152. See also A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 763 (Recitals in decree); A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 223; 1944 All.W.R. (Rev.) 193. Also as authoritative statement of facts as found by the Court: 94 I.C. 694; A.I.R. 1926 Nag. 109; A.I.R. 1926 Nag. 129; A.I.R. 1926 Oudh 578. Also as evidence of transactions but not as proof of title: (1931-32) 36 Cal.W.N. 866: A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 21.

Instances which take place subsequent to the controversy in any particular case are admissible and show that the custom which is alleged to have existed before was still in continuance and that there was no variation relating to it: A.I.R. 1956 Raj. 51.

A judgment inter partes is relevant in so far as it throws light on the conduct of parties and reproduces admissions made by the parties or their ancestors: A.I.R. 1952 Nag. 271. In a suit where succession to the office of K the late mahant is in dispute a judgment in a suit by K challenging a certain alienation of property as mahant, is admissible as a transaction in which K from whom one of the parties to the present suit purports to derive his title, asserted his right as a spiritual collateral of M and on that footing got decree: A.I.R. 1954 S.C. 606.

Assertion of right under Cl. (b) need not be successful assertion: A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 727. See also A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 846. As to family custom, see 82 I.C. 886: 40 Cal.L.J. 331.

A kabala reciting that holding was homestead land is admissible although it is not inter partes: A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 315. Also discharged mortgage bond to prove rate of rent: A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 703 (2): Also the statement of agent that his principal was a bastard: A.I.R. 1928 Oudh 233.

Will containing recital as to permanent tenancy where question related to nature of tenancy is admissible: A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 473; A.I.R. 1942 Cal. 445.

Dispute regarding nature of land—Recitals in the sale deeds in favour of one party to suit showing nature of same land—Admissible both under S. 13(b) and S. 32: A.I.R. 1930 All. 299. See also A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 688; A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 846.

Where an ancient registered gift deed showed that the property was debutter, which supported the entry in the much later finalised C.S. Khatian to the same effect, held, the presumption of dedication to deity arises; it is then for the other party to rebut the presumption; recitals in the gift deed are admissible: A.I.R. 1980 Cal. 255.

Recitals in mortgage-deed—Evidentiary value against third party: 57 I.A. 339: I.L.R. 58 Cal. 858: 60 M.L.J. 142 (P.C.); A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 688. Recital in Zarpeshgi deed describing the land as a zirat—Extent of admissibility: 150 I.C. 884: A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 81. See also A.I.R. 1939 Sind 209; I.L.R. (1937) Bom. 307: (1937) 39 Bom.L.R. 288; I.L.R. (1942) 1 Cal. 510: A.I.R. 1942 Cal. 445; A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 273.

Recitals as to the character of the lands in dispute made in the mortgage bonds executed by the plaintiff are admissible in evidence under S. 13 of the Evidence Act. Note—However, it was held in this case, that these recitals in themselves were not sufficient to establish that the lands in question were zirat within the meaning of S. 120 of the Bihar Tenancy Act: A.I.R. 1954 Pat. 326.

Description in a mortgage-deed by the mortgagors of the land mortgaged as properties 'in our Sir and khas possession' may not be regarded as admissions by the mortgagees as the deeds were executed by the mortgagors; but they are certainly admissible under S. 13 of the Evidence Act as assertions of title, and when it is under these documents that the mortgagees claim, their probative value as against them and as against their lessees who claim under them is high: A.I.R. 1956 S.C. 305.

Documents of title not inter partes, can be relevant and be admitted in evidence as transactions in which the party concerned or his predecessor-in-interest 'claimed' his right which is questioned. 'Claimed' cannot be narrowly read as importing that the claim should necessarily be made in the presence and to knowledge of the party to be affected thereby. A claim may very well be made in the absence of and without the knowledge of the person affected: A.I.R. 1951 Pat. 641.

A recital in a document as to the ownership of adjoining lands is not admissible in evidence as against persons who are not parties to the document. But if the executant of the document is examined as a witness, the recital is admissible in evidence to corroborate him under S. 157, Evidence Act: A.I.R. 1950 Pepsu 7.

Batwara papers are undoubtedly admissible under S. 13 as instances in which the right in question was claimed and recognised. The section does not say that they are admissible only where the documents are inter partes. They are admissible to show that a particular right was asserted or recognised, irrespective of who the parties may have been at the time. They are, of course, not binding against tenants who were not parties in the batwara proceedings. They also carry no presumption of correctness: A.I.R. 1947 Pat. 475.

A map or plan attached to or referred to in a document of title, is a part of the document and is necessary to understand or explain the document itself, and is, therefore, admissible in evidence. [29 I.A. 24, Applied]: (1949-50) 54 Cal.W.N. 671.

In a suit for a declaration against the landlord that plaintiff has a rent-free title to the land, a kabala, which is a title deed of plaintiff is admissible in evidence, at least, to explain the nature of his possession: A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 685. Suit to establish right as mahant—Papers containing recognition of rights by revenue officers and residents of villages—Admissible: 1930 All.L.J. 964. See also A.I.R. 1942 Pat. 140. (Village note as evidence of custom).

Copies of Income-tax returns filed by the tenant to prove payment of rent, held, are not admissible under S. 13: 1979 U.P. (R.C.C.) 78.

The opinion expressed by the Law Committee of a Municipality by its resolution is not admissible in evidence when the members of the Committee have not been examined: A.I.R. 1931 All. 499 (S.B.).

Reference to a work of history and social customs at the appellate stage of a case in proof of a custom which has not been pleaded is irregular and must be avoided. Such a work by an author who is alive and available as a witness to the custom set up is inadmissible in evidence when the author is not called as a witness and no reason is adduced for not calling him: A.I.R. 1941 Pat. 146.

Settlement proceedings before a Settlement Deputy Collector are not judicial proceedings within the meaning of S. 33 so as to make statements made therein as to the existence of a custom admissible in a subsequent civil suit between the parties. But the statements cannot at the same time be excluded. Though they may not be admissible as evidence of the custom, they can be looked into to assess the value of the Deputy Collector's report and order; these are admissible under S. 13, as recognizing a custom in dispute: A.I.R. 1935 All. 187; A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 223.

An amalnama patta in which a predecessor of a co-sharer makes a statement in derogation of his own interest is certainly admissible for the purpose of showing the existence of a pesgunnah custom: A.I.R. 1944 Cal. 419.

An order under S. 145, Cr. P. Code, declaring a party to be in possession is admissible in evidence under S. 13, Evidence Act, as an instance in which a right in dispute was claimed and recognised: and statements therein relating to the facts relevant to the case are admissible under S. 35: A.I.R. 1950 Ori. 19.

It is true that Inam Fair Register is entitled to great weight as the preparation of Inam Register was a great act of State and its preparation and the contents were the subject of much consideration under elaborately detailed reports and minutes. But that is not to say that the entries therein would override or nullify the effect of registers prepared long before. It is only in the absence of authentic evidence that utmost importance will be given to the Inam fair register, but it will not displace earlier documents the authenticity of which could not be questioned: (1958) 1 An.W.R. 343.

Record of rights—Conclusiveness—Conclusiveness attaches to character of land and not to nature of title: A.I.R. 1957 Pat. 482.

Recitals as to boundaries in a document not inter partes are not admissible under S. 32: 1910 Mad.W.N. 668; A.I.R. 1915 Mad. 746; A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 1067 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 948 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 918; A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 448; A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 1; A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 750; A.I.R. 1935 Pat. 167 (F.B.); A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 450; A.I.R. 1958 Raj. 206; A.I.R. 1961 Mys. 160; A.I.R. 1962 Ori. 40; A.I.R. 1972 Mad. 154 (D.B.) [Overruling A.I.R. 1956 Mad. 226]; A.I.R. 1976 Karn. 75. But see A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 636; A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 114; A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 1005; I.L.R. 23 Bom. 63; A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 230; A.I.R. 1923 Nag. 22; A.I.R. 1930 All. 209.

Recitals of boundaries relating to adjacent lands are not admissible: A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 893. See also A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 273 (Description of land as being situate in a particular village); A.I.R. 1945 Cal. 492.

(Map and Chitta relating to disputed land prepared by defendant before suit—Admissibility in evidence as assertion of right). A mere statement of boundary cannot be classed with any of the verbs in S. 13: 'created, modified, recognized, asserted or denied' and is, therefore, not admissible under S. 13 (a): A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 105(2).

The correct legal position as to recitals of boundaries in documents is that where a recital has been made in a document 'inter partes', it would be a joint statement made by the parties to the document, and, therefore, rele-vant against them as an admission. Again, where the recital occurs in a document between a party and a stranger, it would be relevant against a party as an admission but not admissible in his favour. Where, however, the recital is in a document between strangers, it is not a particular instance in which a right was claimed, recognized or exercised or a transaction by which a right was claimed or asserted within the meaning of S. 13 and they are inadmissible to show that any party to the suit is or is not the owner of an adjoining land which has been mentioned as one of the boundaries in such documents. The principal reasons for this are, in the first place, it will not be right to hold a party bound or affected by a recital as to the making of which he could have no control whatever and which has been made completely behind his back and secondly such third parties have no particular reason to be accurate as to who is the owner of the land adjoining their own, and, therefore, a mistake may easily creep in, in the mentioning of such boundaries. Boundaries may often be mentioned on imperfect knowledge or merely on hearsay information: A.I.R. 1958 Raj. 206.

Documents clearly asserting rights of plaintiff regarding cultivation and enjoyment of disputed lands—Held, documents were admissible under S. 13(b) read with S. 21 (3): 34 Cut. L.T. 1131: I.L.R. (1968) Cut. 673.

Ss. 13 and 32(3).—Evidence in probate proceedings given by a widow holding a life-estate under the will as to the necessity for an alienation by her by way of mortgage is not admissible in evidence against her successor-in-interest in a suit against the latter by the mortgagee: A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 301.

Ss. 13, 35 and 74.—Printed copies of an index register, containing the general index of lands given on lease in a particular city with certain particulars and maps of the survey numbers situated in the different wards of the city, are public documents and admissible in evidence under S. 74, being records of the acts of public officers. They are also relevant under Ss. 13 and 35 and admissible: A.I.R. 1942 Bom. 161.

Delay in issue of certificate to practise as a Notary Public signed much earlier—No inference that Government acted mala fide deliberately with a view to deprive Notary Public of his right to practise as a Notary: A.I.R. 1969 All. 195.

Ss. 13 and 40 to 43.—Where a specific provision deals with admissibility of a document, the Court cannot resort to the general provisions to determine its admissibility; thus, if a judgment was not admissible as it did not fall under Ss. 40 to 42 and did not fulfil the conditions of S. 43, it is not relevant under S. 13; the words "other provisions of this Act" do not cover S. 13 which does not deal with judgments: A.I.R. 1983 S.C. 684: (1983) 3 S.C.C. 118.

Ss. 14 and 15.—Accused charged under S. 302 read with S. 34, Penal Code—Accused pleading exercise of right of private defence—Accused producing doctor's certificate to prove injuries on his body—Assessment of value of doctor's evidence—What doctor did in granting certificate in another criminal trial irrelevant and not taken into account: 1969 Cr. L.J. 1273 (All.).

In finding out the intention of a corporate body, the Courts will have to look to the resolutions passed or acts done by it. What the Courts are concerned with is the intention of the body as a whole. The same rule is applied when they try to find out the legislative intention in enacting any particular statute or any provision therein.

Thus, where the Court has to determine the intention of the Standing Committee of certain Municipal Corporation in passing certain resolution, the facts stated in the corner-affidavit filed by the Commissioner of the Corporation becomes irrelevant. The only thing relevant for its purpose are the facts mentioned in the resolution passed by that Committee: A.I.R. 1962 Mys. 92.

A previous judgment in a criminal case whereby the accused were convicted for an offence punishable under S. 379, Penal Code, for harvesting and removing paddy from the land in the possession of the complainant is relevant and admissible in evidence to prove dishonest intention of the same accused who is being tried for the same offence committed in respect of the same land: A.I.R. 1961 Manipur 43.

Association for habitually committing dacoities—Proof—Evidence relating to specific dacoities for which individual accused were charged previously — Admissibility: A.I.R. 1961 Pat. 260.

Proof of—Mens rea—Applicability of the maxim "actus non facit reum nisi mens sit rea": A.I.R 1957 Mad. 675: 1957 Cr. L.J. 1279.

Paternity—Acknowledgment—Effect of: (1958) 1 An.W.R. 1: A.I.R. 1958 Andh. Pra. 195.

14. Facts showing existence of state of mind, or of body or bodily feeling.—Facts showing the existence of any state of mind, such as intention, knowledge, good faith, negligence, rashness, ill-will or good-will towards any particular person, or showing the existence of any state of body or bodily feeling, are relevant, when the existence of any such state of mind or body or bodily feeling, is in issue or relevant.

Section 14—Synopsis.

1. Scope.
2. Mental or bodily state—Medical examination.
3. Evidence of previous crime—Admissibility.
4. Miscellaneous.

1. Scope.—See A.I.R. 1968 Bom. 400: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1584. S. 14 applies only to cases where a particular act is more or less criminal or culpable according to the state of mind or feeling of the person who does it, not to cases where the question of guilt or innocence depends upon actual facts, as it does in a trial for the offence of arson: A.I.R. 1941 Rang. 324. A letter from the respondent to the co-respondent in a divorce proceeding is good evidence under S. 14 of the respondent's feelings towards the co-respondent at the time it was written: A.I.R. 1943 Cal. 146.

The mental capacity of a party cannot be said to be irrelevant when upon the contractual relations entered into by the party, his property is sought to be made liable and the contract is in English, a language of which the party is said to be ignorant; and, when he is shown to be lacking in mental capacity, the party should establish that the party liable has signed the contract with an understanding mind: A.I.R. 1942 Sind 17.

Evidence of character, conduct and state of mind is admissible under Ss. 8, 14 and 32: 1980 M.P.L.J. 300 (D.B.).

Evidence of similar transactions not the subject of any charge, relevant to the charge of abetting an offence as showing an intention to aid the commission of the offence and an intentional omission to put a stop to an illegal practice, which was an 'illegal omission' would be admissible to prove intention under S. 14: (1946-47) 51 Cal.W.N. 900: (1947) 49 Bom. L.R. 688: (1947) 2 M.L.J. 328 (P.C.).

Illus.(c).—See I.L.R. 13 Bom. 532.

The recitals in the document exhibited in the case can be taken as relevant evidence as it shows the clear intention of the parties: (1984) 97 Mad.L.W. 365.

Relation of Ss. 14 and 15.—Evidence of the opinions of the other Judges on other documents written or attested by the accused in proceedings to which he is not a party is not admissible to prove his intention or knowledge in his trial for giving false evidence in respect of a document: 38 I.C. 723: 13 Nag.L.R. 35.

Ss. 14 and 15 have to be read together inasmuch as S. 15 is only an application of the general rule laid down in S. 14: A.I.R. 1956 Mys. 9.

S. 15 must be read as subject to S. 14 so far as evidence of knowledge and intention is concerned: 38 I.C. 723: 13 Nag.L.R. 35. It is settled law that under neither of Ss. 14 and 15 can the evidence of facts similar to but not part of the same transaction as the main fact be received for the purpose of proving the occurrence of the main fact which must be established by evidence directly bearing on it. But when the existence of that fact has been so established and a question arises as to the state of mind of the person who did it, or whether the act in question was done accidentally or with a particular knowledge or intention evidence of similar acts may, under certain conditions, be admitted. S. 14 is wholly inapplicable to a case where the state of mind or feeling of the accused is not a fact in issue or a relevant fact: A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 382.

Evidence of a collateral offence cannot be received as substantive evidence of the offence on trial, though, under S. 14, evidence may be given of intention and such matters where the factum of such intention or like matters is relevant: A.I.R. 1945 Bom. 152.

Though the evidence of similar unconnected acts of the accused may not be

[1][Explanation 1.—A fact relevant as showing the existence of a relevant state of mind must show that the state of mind exists, not generally, but in reference to the particular matter in question.

Explanation 2.—But where, upon the trial of a person accused of an offence, the previous commission by the accused of an offence is relevant within the meaning of this section, the previous conviction of such person shall also be a relevant fact.]

(a) A is accused of receiving stolen goods knowing them to be stolen. It is proved that he was in possession of a particular stolen article.

The fact that at the same time, he was in possession of many other stolen articles is relevant, as tending to show that he knew each and all of the articles of which he was in possession to be stolen.

[2][(b) A is accused of fraudulently delivering to another person a counterfeit coin which, at the time when delivered it, he knew to be counterfeit.

The fact that, at the time of its delivery, A was possessed of a number of other pieces of counterfeit coin is relevant.

The fact that A had been previously convicted of delivering to another person as genuine a counterfeit coin knowing it to be counterfeit is relevant.]

admissible to probabilise the commission of the offence with which he stands charged in another case, yet such evidence will be admissible under Ss. 14 and 15 as evidence of intention or knowledge on the part of the accused and in cases where it is necessary to rebut even an anticipated defence of accident or mistake or other innocent condition of mind, and it is no objection that the similar facts are the subject of separate indictments still to be tried: A.I.R. 1956 Mys. 9.

It is a general rule of law that when there is prima facie evidence that an accused is guilty of the act charged, evidence of 'similar acts' is admissible. The evidence of previous acts of a series of 'similar occurrences', in each of which the person doing the Act was concerned, is admissible under S. 15: A.I.R. 1956 Pat. 404.

Previous conviction—Evidence not admissible to show state of mind: 60 I.C. 331: 5 P.L.J. 706; A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 382; 8 Mys.L.J. 385. But see 146 I.C. 1064: A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 355, where it was held admissible to prove habit and association.

Conspiracy — Past transactions unconnected with conspiracy—Transactions not admissible in evidence, even if true: A.I.R. 1965 Cal. 38.

Conspiracy—Conduct in general of each individual co-conspirator including his acts, writings and statements, etc., is evidence against himself. See (1978) 2 Cal.L.J. 214 (D.B.).

Inference of intention—Order placed for printing of prize competitions and results thereof after the Prize Competitions Act, 1955, came into force—Denial that order was placed with intention of conducting a prize competition—Such orders placed and distributed in the past inviting entries—Intention to run a competition after the Act came into force can be inferred from previous conduct: A.I.R. 1964 All. 572.

Explanation 2 only means that if the prosecution brings forth the evidence of a prior offence as being relevant under this section, then it may also prove the conviction, which would make the evidence of previous offence more effective in its being accepted. It is also true that the general tendency of an accused cannot be proved as that would amount to proving his bad character but the facts offered in proof must show the state of mind in reference to a particular matter in question: A.I.R. 1968 Bom. 400.

(c) A sues B for damage done by a dog of B's which B knew to be ferocious.

The facts that the dog had previously bitten X, Y and Z, and that they had made complaints to B, are relevant.

(d) The question is whether A, the acceptor of a bill of exchange, knew that the name of the payee was fictitious.

The fact that A' had accepted other bills drawn in the same manner before they could have been transmitted to him by the payee if the payee had been a real person, is relevant, as showing that A knew that the payee was a fictitious person.

(e) A is accused of defaming B by publishing an imputation intended to harm the reputation of B.

The fact of previous publications by A respecting B, showing ill-will on the part of A towards B, is relevant, as proving A's intention to harm B's reputation by the particular publication in question.

The facts that there was no previous quarrel between A and B, and that A repeated the matter complained of as he heard it, are relevant, as showing that A did not intend to harm the reputation of B.

(f) A is sued by B for fraudulently representing to B that C was solvent, whereby B, being induced to trust C, who was insolvent, suffered loss.

The fact that, at the time when A represented C to be solvent, C was supposed to be solvent by his neighbours and by persons dealing with him is relevant, as showing that A made the representation in good faith.

Affidavits—Sufficiency of as evidence: A.I.R. 1967 Guj. 229. See also S. 1, Note 5, supra.

'Statement of person as to cause of his death or as to any circumstances of the transaction which resulted in his death'—Conviction based on identification: 1967 Ker.L.T. 466.

Under S. 15, Evidence Act when the acts in question form part of series of similar occurrences, evidence of similar acts is admissible to prove the intention or knowledge of the person and to rebut the defence of accident, mistake or the same having been done without the required knowledge or intention. The principle on which evidence of similar acts is admissible is not to show because the accused has committed already some crimes, he would, therefore, be likely to commit another, but to establish the animus of the act, for which he is charged and rebut by anticipation the defence of ignorance, accident, mistake or innocent state of mind.

Thus, where the accused is charged with embezzling certain amounts from Government Treasury and falsifying the accounts to cover up those defalcations during a particular period, evidence relating to similar entries or falsification of the accounts made previous to the charge period are clearly admissible under S. 15 of the Evidence Act. In a prosecution under S. 477-A, Penal Code it is not sufficient for the prosecution to prove that the entries which are the subject-matter of the charge are wrong entries and that they were made by the accused, the prosecution must go further and prove that those entries are false entries and the accused made those entries wilfully and with intent to defraud the State. Therefore, the prosecution can prove similar instances to prove that the accused made the entries in question wilfully and with intent to defraud the State. Those instances can also be proved to rebut the accused's plea that he innocently made those entries at the behest of his superiors. But that evidence cannot be used to show that the accused was guilty of temporary misappropriations in past or to probabilise the charge levelled against him by proving his past bad conduct, if any: A.I.R. 1965 Mys. 128.

Where a medical practitioner is tried for causing death of his patient by administering a lethal dose of dhatura and the prosecution has shown that even a man of no education in the country side is aware of the extremely poisonous nature of dhatura, but the defence is that there are in the record of medical experience cases in which the drug had been (g) A is sued by B for the price of work done by B, upon a house of which A is owner by the order of C, a contractor.

A's defence is that B's contract was with C.

The fact that A paid C for the work in question is relevant, as proving that A did, in good faith, make over to C the management of the work in question, so that C was in a position to contract with B on C's own account, and not as agent for A.

(h) A is accused of the dishonest misappropriation of property which he had found, and the question is whether when he appropriated it, he believed in good faith that the real owner could not be found.

The fact that public notice of the loss of the property had been given in the place where A was, is relevant, as showing that A did not in good faith believe that the real owner of the property could not be found.

The fact that A knew, or had reason to believe, that the notice was given fraudulently by C, who had heard of the loss of the property and wished to set up a false claim to it, is relevant, as showing the fact that A knew of the notice did not disprove A's good faith.

(i) A is charged with shooting at B with intent to kill him. In order to show A's intent, the fact of A's having previously shot at B may be proved.

(j) A is charged with sending threatening letters to B. Threatening letters previously sent by A to B may be proved as showing intention of the letters.

(k) The question is, whether A has been guilty of cruelty towards B, his wife.

Expressions of their feeling towards each other shortly before or after the alleged cruelty, are relevant facts.

successfully administered for curing the disease, it is open to the prosecution to show that the previous experiment carried out by the accused himself in exactly similar circumstances had shown him that far from being a cure, the drug was a certain killer. Even if the accused had been ignorant of the effect of dhatura on the human system or the fatal consequences of administering it in such doses, he has altogether no excuse to continue to be ignorant or to be optimistic after the death of the earlier patient after the administration of the dose: A.I.R. 1963 Madh. Pra. 102.

2. Mental or bodily state — Medical examination.—S. 14 does not prohibit medical examination of mental or bodily state; exposure to such examination, aided by scientific data, does not amount to deprivation of personal liberty in violation of Art. 21 of the Constitution: A.I.R. 1985 Andh. Pra. 1: (1985) 1 Hindu L.R. 698: (1985) 1 An.W.R. 28.

Where potency of either of the spouses is disputed, the Court can appoint a Commissioner-Doctor for scientific investigation to decide whether or not the spouse is impotent and able to consumnate the marriage and S. 14 does not exclude this appointment. [A.I.R. 1921 Cal. 459 and (1954) 67 Mad.L.W. 676, Foll.; A.I.R. 1963 Guj. 250 and A.I.R. 1972 Mys. 157, Dissent. from]: A.I.R. 1985 Andh. Pra. 1: (1985) 1 An.W.R. 28: (1985) 1 Hindu L.R. 698.

3. Evidence of previous crime—Admissibility.—When a person is charged with an offence, evidence of his participation in an independent crime cannot be received as substantive evidence of the offence on trial but evidence may be given to prove the elements mentioned in S. 14, such as intention, etc.: 22 I.C. 187: 18 Cal.L.J. 578. In a prosecution under S. 209, I.P. Code, evidence relating to other suits by the accused against other persons may be admissible under Ss. 14 and 15 to show the animus of the accused, and a systematic course of fraud and to rebut the plea of good faith or mistake: (1917-18) 22 Cal.W.N. 494: 19 Cr.L.J. 776.

But the evidence relating to similar suits by other persons is not admissible unless those suits form part of the same transaction or the result of a conspiracy between them: (1917-18) 22 Cal.W.N. 494: 19 Cr.L.J. 776. See also 6 B.H.C. 90.

(m) The question is, what was the state of A's health at the time when an assurance on his life was effected.

Statements made by A as to the state of his health at or near the time in question, are relevant facts.

(n) A sues B for negligence in providing him with a carriage for hire not reasonably fit for use, whereby A was injured.

The fact that B's attention was drawn on other occasions to the defect of that particular carriage, is relevant.

The fact that B was habitually negligent about the carriages which he let to hire, is irrelevant.

(o) A is tried for the murder of B by intentionally shooting him dead.

The fact that A, on other occasions shot at B is relevant, as showing his intention to shoot B.

The fact that A was in the habit of shooting at people with intent to murder them, is irrelevant.

The fact that he said something indicating an intention to commit that particular crime is relevant.

The fact that he said something indicating a general disposition to commit crimes of that class is irrelevant.

not admissible on the point of bad faith and mala fides in respect of a subsequent transaction in respect of the transfer of shares to the plaintiff which is in issue in the case. Any Court would hesitate long and much to condemn a transaction as one of bad faith when (1) the transaction is not in issue, (2) when all the interested parties in the transaction are not before the Court and (3) when the most material evidence of the persons whose transaction is condemned is not available to the Court: A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 709.

Series of similar acts involving forgery is evidence of intention but not forgery itself: I.L.R. 43 Cal. 783: (1915-16) 20 Cal.W.N. 262; 8 Mys. L.J. 385.

There are, of course, many cases in which evidence of a succession of incidents may properly be admissible to help to determine the truth of any one incident, for instance, to prove identity, intent, guilty knowledge or to rebut a defence of innocent association. On such issues evidence of a succession of incidents may be very relevant, but they have no relevance to determine whether a particular meeting or occasion for an incident ever occurred at all. Evidence that an offence of indecent assault was committed by a school master accused against a boy at C could not be any evidence, that the accused met another boy at D and committed an offence there: (1959) 2 W.L.R. 522.

In a prosecution under S. 304-A, I.P.Code, for rash driving of motor-car, evidence regarding similar occurrence previously is inadmissible under S. 14 or 15: 1929 Mad. W.N. 395.

In a charge under S. 409, I.P.Code, for embezzling specific sums, evidence of embezzling other sums is not admissible: A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 382; A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 136.

Conspiracy to commit criminal breach of trust—Evidence relating to acts outside period of conspiracy. See A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 747, cited under S. 10, supra. Where proceedings under S. 108(b), Cr.P.Code, are started against a person in order to prevent him from delivering speeches likely to create communal tension, in the inquiry, speeches delivered by the same person on prior occasions are admissible in evidence under S. 14. They serve to show the existence of a particular state of mind or intention. Illus. (e) to the section is very similar to the facts of the case: A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 134.

15. Facts bearing on question whether act was accidental or intentional.—When there is a question whether an act was accidental or intentional, [1][or done with a particular knowledge or intention,] the fact that such act formed part of a

1. Inserted by the Amendment Act 3 of 1891, S. 2.

Previous attempts.—Previous attempts to commit the offence and preparation to commit it are closely allied; attempts are a step further and nearer to the commission of the offence though both fall short; their probative value manifestly rests on the presumption that the intention to commit the offence was there in the accused's mind and it persisted until power and opportunity came his way to execute it; such evidence is admissible both under S. 8 and S. 14: (1971) 2 M.L.J. 53: 1971 Cr.L.J. 615: A.I.R. 1971 Mad. 194.

Previous dacoities.—In a charge of dacoity evidence of other dacoities committed by the accused is admissible either under S. 14 or S. 15: 1912 Mad.W.N. 49: 13 I.C. 781.

Where a man has been tried and acquitted on a charge of being in dishonest possession of property stolen in a dacoity knowing or having reason to believe that the property was stolen in a dacoity, it is open to the Crown to prove that he actually took part in the dacoity, for the latter was not the offence of which he was acquitted. Even if he was acquitted on a charge of dacoity, it is open to the Crown to prove that the day before the dacoity he was seen in the neighbourhood of dacoity: A.I.R. 1930 Oudh 455.

In a case where the offence for which the accused are being tried is the particular one of belonging to a gang of dacoits, simple theft or bad livelihood in which the order for giving security is based on evidence merely that the accused habitually commits thefts (as opposed to dacoity and possibly robbery) is not evidence indicating an intention to commit the particular crime of which the accused is charged: A.I.R. 1930 Bom. 157.

Previous cheating.—The accused was charged under S. 420, I.P.Code, for having borrowed money on mortgage, representing himself to be major, though he was minor, held, that the evidence of transactions which took place on the occasion of the loan was relevant to show the intention or knowledge or otherwise of the accused: L.R. 1 All. (Cr.) 103.

Where a licensed clerk was charged with cheating by collecting 2 annas more than what was due, from each licensee, evidence of similar action with others is not admissible under S. 14 or 15: I.L.R. 34 All. 93: 8 All.L.J. 1269. See also 17 Mys. L.J. 238.

4. Miscellaneous.—Counterfeit coins and instruments.—In the trial of a person for being in possession of counterfeit coins and instruments and materials for counterfeiting in his house in the district where he is tried, evidence of such possession in his house in another district is admissible: 61 I.C. 647: 23 Cr. L.J. 407.

Possession of stolen cattle.—In Sind possession of stolen cattle three or four months after theft is sufficient to raise presumption of guilt under this section; but the accused may set up title by lawful origin to rebut the presumption: 38 I.C. 271: 10 Sind L.R. 167.

Offence under S. 124-A, I.P. Code.—Speeches.—Previous speeches forming part of a series of speeches or lectures delivered within a short period of time are admissible. Period of six months not long: A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 867. Other newspaper articles written by the accused at the same time are admissible: 8 Mys.L.J. 49. A writing made some time after the committing of an offence under S. 124, I.P.Code, is admissible in evidence under S. 14. But the writing should be within a reasonable time of the particular occurrence: A.I.R. 1928 Bom. 78. A Court has no concern with the justice or otherwise of the claims of the accused or with the rectitude of his political views; but the Court may take cognizance of the fact that he does hold certain views, for as a guide to his conduct and intentions these views are most relevant consideration: A.I.R. 1933 All. 498.

series of similar occurrences, in each of which the person doing the act was concerned, is relevant.

(a) A is accused of burning down his house in order to obtain money for which it is insured.

The facts that A lived in several houses successively, each of which he insured in each of which a fire occurred, and after each of which fires A received payment from a different insurance office, are relevant, as tending to show that the fires were not accidental.

(b) A is employed to receive money from the debtors of B. It is A's duty to make entries in a book showing the amounts received by him. He makes an entry showing that on a particular occasion he received less than he really did receive.

The question is, whether this false entry was accidental or intentional.

The facts that other entries made by A in the same book are false, and that the false entry is in each case in favour of A, are relevant.

(c) A is accused of fraudulently delivering to B a counterfeit rupee.

The question is, whether the delivery of the rupee was accidental.

The facts that, soon before or soon after the delivery to B, A delivered counterfeit rupees to C, D and E are relevant, as showing that the delivery to B was not accidental.

---

1. Scope.—See A.I.R. 1968 Bom. 400. S. 15 is applicable to all cases where the question is whether an untruthful statement is 'accidental or intentional' or made with particular knowledge or intention: I.L.R. 39 All. 273: 15 All.L.J. 241.

S. 15 is not applicable where there was no question of the act being accidental or intentional or forming part of a series of similar transactions: I.L.R. 47 Cal. 671: (1919-20) 24 Cal.W.N. 501 (F.B.).

S. 14 would not also apply where the defence was a complete denial and no question of the character contemplated in S. 14 did or could possibly arise: I.L.R. 47 Cal. 671: (1919-20) 24 Cal.W.N. 501 (F.B.).

S. 15 admits the production of any evidence which would determine the construction to be placed upon acts which in themselves might or might not be the preparation for dacoity and evidence that one or more members of the gang had been concerned in previous and similar offences committed at the same place is admissible in evidence for this purpose: 71 I.C. 360: 24 Cr.L.J. 136 Pesh.).

Evidence of a single act is admissible and in this sense one evidentiary fact can form a series within the meaning of S. 15 with the act to be proved. The acts of which evidence is tendered must be of the same specific kind as that in question: A.I.R. 1941 Rang. 324. There is a presumption of user as of right from open user for a long time: A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 522.

Subsequent occurrence.—S. 15 covers both previous and subsequent similar occurrences: 46 I.C. 696: (1919-20) 24 Cal.W.N. 494.

2. Similar transactions.—Evidence tending to show that the accused has been guilty of criminal acts other than those covered by the indictment is not admissible except upon the issue whether the acts charged against the accused were designed or accidental, or except to rebut a defence otherwise open to him. Where the charge against the accused is that he administered dhatura to a certain person at a certain place with intent to rob him, evidence of other incidents may be admissible with a view to rebutting any defence that the administration of dhatura at the place was accidental. But before such evidence is admissible the presence of the accused at that place has to be established. The fact that he had dhatura in his possession months afterwards cannot help the prosecution, because it cannot be possibly inferred from that fact that he was in possession of dhatura when he was at that place on the date of occurrence: A.I.R. 1942 Pat. 291. See also 9 I.C. 731: 32 P.L.R. 1911; A.I.R. 1923 Nag. 248; A.I.R. 1943 P.C. 72.

Evidence of similar acts may be received to prove a party's knowledge of the nature of 16. Existence of course of business when relevant.—When there is a question whether a particular act was done, the existence of any course of business, according to which it naturally would have been done, is a relevant fact.

---

the main act or transaction and of his intent with respect thereto: (1914-15) 19 Cal.W.N. 676: I.L.R. 42 Cal. 957.

The acts tendered must also have been proximate in point of time to that in question: I.L.R. 42 Cal. 957: (1914-15) 19 Cal.W.N. 676.

In a case of criminal misappropriation evidence of similar acts in the previous year is admissible: A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 880; A.I.R. 1939 Sind 209.

The accused who was entrusted with collection of money from debtors of a Bank, collected a certain amount from a debtor and did not credit it in the cash book of the Bank or otherwise account for the same. To a charge under S. 408, I.P. Code his defence was that there was no misappropriation but that owing to pressure of work he forgot to credit the amount in the cash book. To prove dishonest intention on his part evidence was let in of another instance of a similar omission by him to credit an amount collected from another debtor. Held, that such evidence was inadmissible as one instance could not constitute 'a series of similar occurrences' within the meaning of S. 15: A.I.R. 1946 Cal. 440.

In order to become relevant under S. 15, an act has to form part of a series of similar occurrences. A solitary act or a single instance is the very antithesis of the expression 'part of a series of similar occurrences': A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 709.

It is a general rule of law that when there is prima facie evidence that an accused is guilty of the act charged, evidence of 'similar acts' is admissible. The evidence of previous acts of a series of 'similar occurrences', in each of which the person doing the Act was concerned, is admissible under S. 15, Evidence Act: A.I.R. 1956 Pat. 404.

Under S. 15 of the Evidence Act the prosecution may adduce evidence of criminal acts other than those charged without waiting for the accused to set up the specific defence calling for rebuttal and defence of similar acts to show intention. When the act in question forms part of a series of similar occurrences evidence of similar facts is admissible to prove intention or knowledge of the person and to rebut the defence of accident, mistake, etc. The principle on which evidence of similar acts is admissible is not to show that because the defendant has committed one crime, he would, therefore, be likely to commit another but to establish the amicuo of the act, and rebut by anticipation, the defences of ignorance, accident, mistake or other innocent state of mind: (1963) 2 Cr.L.J. 92 (Ker.).

Similar facts which were subject of prior indictments can be taken into consideration as relevant under S. 15. This applies also to separate indictments still to be tried. There is no warrant for the view that the other instances cannot be used in regard to the accused's knowledge of the nature of the main fact for which specific charges have been framed, simply because those other instances form the subject of separate indictments which were tried simultaneously. The evidence that the accused were connected with similar cases of user of forged chalans is admissible to prove their knowledge and intention in regard to the cases for which specific charges have been framed against them under Ss. 471/467 and 420 of the I.P.Code: A.I.R. 1961 Pat. 451.

3. Hearsay evidence.—The words of S. 15 are not so wide as to admit hearsay evidence of the evidence of facts alleged to have been discovered by the investigating officer in the course of his investigation and not properly proved: A.I.R. 1939 Sind 209. The report of a Naib Tahsildar which is based on the statements of unknown persons who happened to be present at the time of his inspection, is purely hearsay evidence and is not legally admissible: 1940 All.W.R. (B.R.) 152.

Section 16—Notes.

[See also S. 114, Illus. (e) and (f).]

According to the entry in the peon book of a firm, a letter was despatched on a certain date. No date was put under the signature on the receipt column but the peon stated in his evidence that the invariable practice followed by him was to despatch a letter either on the day on which he received it or the next day or else to return it to the office. Held, that the Court was justified in holding that the

The facts that it was the ordinary course of business for all letters put in a certain place to be carried to the post, and that that particular letter was put in that place are relevant.

letter in question was served on the date of despatch or at least the next day: A.I.R. 1952 Cal. 455.

Where in the Minutes of meetings of a Corporation there is a statement to the effect that the consideration of a case had been postponed to a later date for the presence of the petitioner who had been invited to attend, and in addition there is an entry in the Register of letters sent by the Corporation to the parties to the effect that a letter was sent to the petitioner under a certificate of posting and the necessary postage stamps covering all the letters are affixed in the Register itself there is a presumption under the provisions of Ss. 16 and 114, Illus. (f) of the Evidence Act, that the letter was duly received by the petitioner: A.I.R. 1952 Cal. 467.

Illus. (b) to S. 16 only means that each of the facts, namely, posting of a letter and the non-return of the original from the Dead Letter Office is relevant. It cannot be read as indicating that without a combination of these facts no presumption as to receipt of the letter can arise. Indeed that section with the illustrations thereto has nothing to do with presumption but only with relevance: A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 857.

The presumption of the postal endorsement of 'refusal' being correct can be drawn with the aid of Ss. 16 and 114: A.I.R. 1981 Madh. Pra. 76: 1980 Jab.L.J. 285.

The endorsement 'refused' on the registered cover containing the notice raises the presumption under S. 114(e) and (f) and S. 16 that the notice was sought to be delivered to the addressee; such presumption is no doubt rebuttable but if no such reliable evidence is produced, held, the addressee's mere denial is not sufficient to rebut the presumption; he must be deemed to have constructive notice of its contents: A.I.R. 1974 Raj. 112: 1973 Raj.L.W. 611. See also (1981) 1 Cal.H.N. (H.C.) 229.

When a notice bearing the endorsement of refusal is produced, the Court has to deem that its service was properly effected at the time when the letter would have been delivered in the ordinary course of post; it is then for the addressee to prove to the contrary: A.I.R. 1981 Madh. Pra. 76: 1980 Jab.L.J. 285.

If the presumption of correctness of the postal endorsement of 'refusal' remains unrebutted, held, failure to examine the Postman as a witness was of no effect: A.I.R. 1981 Madh. Pra. 76: 1980 Jab.L.J. 285.

Proving the fact that a letter was posted raises a presumption that it reached its destination, and the fact it was not returned to the sender, that it was received by the addressee. That presumption is based on the principle that the Court may ordinarily presume that the employees of the post office duly observe the regular course of business of the post office. An examination of the rules contained in Post and Telegraph Guide show that a registered article with an acknowledgement due when refused by the addressee will be returned with an endorsement to that effect to the sender. Therefore, there is no reason why the presumption should not be drawn that the above regular course of business was followed by postal employees when an acknowledgement due registered letter is received back by the sender with an endorsement 'refused' even if the author of the endorsement 'refused' is not examined as a witness in the case. No doubt, the presumption is one of fact and it is not obligatory on the Court to raise it. The Court may refuse to raise it if the material on record or the circumstances of the cases raises any doubt: A.I.R. 1959 Bom. 81.

An endorsement made on an envelope by a postman can be admitted in evidence even without examining the postman. It is prima facie evidence of the fact endorsed. But it is open to the party who disputes the truth of the statement in the endorsement to rebut the prima facie evidence furnished by the endorsement, and he is entitled to ask the Court to take into consideration all the proved circumstances in the case for deciding the question whether the endorsement is true or false: A.I.R. 1957 Ker. 33.

The presumption of service of a notice sent under registered post is available under Ss. 16 and 114(e) of the Evidence Act as well as S. 27 of the General Clauses Act only when the plaintiff proves that the letter was properly addressed and put into the Post Office; but the full address given in the body of the notice raises no presumption that the envelope was also correctly addressed; at any rate, such presumption is rebuttable; thus, when the addressee appears before the Court and denies on oath the service of notice, the presumption stands rebutted; and here the evidence of the Postman becomes necessary: A.I.R. 1978 N.O.C. 112 (Gau.).

Service of notice by post—Presumption—Postal peon's endorsement of refusal on registered letter—Value of. See A.I.R. 1957 Punj. 284. Refusal of a registered letter sent by post precludes the person refusing from pleading ignorance of its contents: 16 W.R. 223. See also I.L.R. 15 Cal. 681; I.L.R. 9 All. 366. But there must be evidence of posting and of proper address. See S. 114, Illus. (f).

The post marks of the places of posting and destination, on the invitation cards, held, are sufficient to infer that they were posted and received by the addresses in the normal course; they are, thus, admissible in evidence: A.I.R. 1994 Andh. Pra. 102.

The evidence of a general clerk, whose duty was to make over the covers containing drafts to a peon of the office for posting, that the particular letter was brought to him in an envelope, that he had the envelope sealed in his presence and made it over to the peon for posting, is not sufficient to prove the posting of that letter, in the absence of the evidence of the peon. If the peon had been called and he had said that though he had no recollection of posting of this particular letter, he invariably carried to the post office all the letters made over to him by the clerk, that might have been considered to be satisfactory if the peon was not disbelieved: A.I.R. 1960 Cal. 475.

It is extremely doubtful if the act of placing a bundle of circulars in the custody of an office peon is equivalent to putting it in a certain place within the meaning of the illustration; but assuming it to be so the presumption under the illustration cannot arise in a case where the particular peon who was said to be entrusted with the duty of posting the bundle of circulars could not be named: A.I.R. 1958 Cal. 644.

S. 16, Illus. (a) and S. 114, Illus. (f) apply to the course of business followed in public offices as well as in private offices. The effect of sending a letter to the post office will, in general, be regarded as presumptively proved, if the letter be shown to have been handed to or left with the person whose duty it was in the ordinary course of business to carry it to the post office: A.I.R. 1958 Punj. 440.

The presumption of a delivery of a money order, which arises under S. 114, on the production of the acknowledgment form containing the endorsement 'refused' is not, in law, automatically displaced by the addressee's statement on oath denying its receipt and hence the Court can disbelieve the denial and hold that the presumption stands unrebutted.

The combined effect of Ss. 16 and 114 is to raise a presumption that a communication sent by post was received in the ordinary course by the addressee and if it was returned to the sender with the endorsement 'refused' the postman must have tendered it but delivery could not be made because of the refusal of the addressee. These presumptions are based on common sense. The argument that the addressee's own statement on oath that he never received the money order was sufficient in law to defeat the presumption based on normal experience and the onus must shift on the sender to prove delivery cannot be accepted. Before the addressee can claim that the presumption stands rebutted he must convince the Court that he is telling the truth: 1963 All.W.R. (H.C.) 472.

Neither S. 16 nor S. 114 compel the Court to draw a presumption. The presumption may or may not be drawn. On the facts and circumstances of a case, the Court may refuse to draw the presumption. On the other hand, the presumption may be drawn initially but on a consideration of the evidence the Court may hold the presumption rebutted and may arrive at the conclusion that no letter was received by the addressee or that no letter was ever despatched, as claimed. After all, there have been cases in the past, though rare, where postal certificates and even postal seals have been manufactured: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 1191: 1981 Cr.L.J. 889: (1981) 3 S.C.C. 317.

addressed to him in jail was returned as refused and the other addressed to the tenant's home address was redirected to the jail and acknowledged by its Superintendent, held, the presumption was that initials under the refusal were those of the postman and the notice acknowledged by the Superintendent of Jail had been served on the tenant; the presumptions not having been rebutted by the tenant, held, the notice had been properly served on him: A.I.R. 1973 All. 24: 1972 All.W.R. 1. Scope.—Admission may be verbal or contained in documents (as) maps, bills, receipts, pleadings, letters, books and other entries or even horoscopes: 23 W.R. 325: 11 Cal.L.J. 22; I.L.R. 5 Cal. 864; 22 W.R. 220; 7 W.R. 249; 9 W.R. 162; 23 W.R. 27; A.I.R. 1924 Oudh 19: 73 I.C. 428; 28 M.L.J. 266; 28 M.L.J. 92: 26 I.C. 899.

S. 17 does not make it necessary that a particular statement for being used as an admission should either be on oath or contained in a plaint or application only, nor that if it is contained in a written statement or in any other pleading by way of a denial it would not amount to an admission: 1980 Mah.L.J. 477.

Per Beg, J.—An admission is concession or voluntary acknowledgment made by a party or someone identified with him in legal interest of the existence of certain facts which are in issue or relevant to an issue in the case. The predominant characteristic of this type of evidence consists in its binding character. Admissions are broadly classified into two categories: (a) judicial admissions; (b) extra-judicial admissions. Judicial admissions are formal admissions made by a party during the proceedings of the case. Extra-judicial admissions are informal admissions not appearing on the record of the case. Judicial admissions being made in the case are fully binding on the party that makes them. They constitute a waiver of proof (vide S. 58, Evidence Act). They can be made the foundation of the rights of the parties. Extra-judicial or informal admissions are also binding on the party against whom they are set up. Unlike judicial admissions, however, they are binding only partially and not fully, except in cases where they operate as or have the effect of estoppel in which case again they are fully binding and may constitute the foundation of the rights of the parties: 1957 All.L.J. 350: I.L.R. (1956) 2 All. 399: A.I.R. 1957 All. 1 (F.B.).

Per Beg, J.—(1) An admission constitutes a substantive piece of evidence in the case and, for that reason can be relied upon for proving the truth of the facts incorporated therein. (2) An admission has the effect of shifting the onus of proving to the contrary to the party against whom it is produced with the result that it casts an imperative duty on such party to explain it. In the absence of a satisfactory explanation, it is presumed to be true. (3) An admission, in order to be competent and to have the value and effect referred to above should be clear, certain and definite, and not ambiguous, vague or confused: 1957 All.L.J. 350: I.L.R. (1956) 2 All. 399: A.I.R. 1957 All. 1 (F.B.).

An admission or a concession by a party should be strictly construed: 1976 All.W.C. 720.

The admissions are substantive evidence of facts admitted: (1989) 1 Hindu L.R. 125: (1989) 1 Rev.L.R. 145 (P.&H.).

An admission is the best evidence against the party making the same, and unless it is shown that it is untrue and is made under circumstances which does not make it binding on the party, must be presumed to be true. The weight of the admission increases with the knowledge and deliberation of the speaker or the solemnity of the occasion on which it is made: (1933-34) 38 Cal.W.N. 861. See also (1937) 39 Punj.L.R. 876.

An admission, it is well settled, is the best evidence that an opposite party can rely upon; though not conclusive, it is nevertheless decisive on the point unless proved erroneous or is validly allowed to be withdrawn. [A.I.R. 1954 S.C. 355; A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 1724; I.L.R. 11 Cal. 588; A.I.R. 1946 Pat. 278 and A.I.R. 1976 Raj. 249, Foll.]: 1985 R.D. 135; A.I.R. 1971 Pat. 363 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1978 Karn. 25 (D.B.); (1982) 1 Cal.L.J. 279.

Admissions being self harming have significant relevance: 1982 M.P.W.N. 236.

There cannot be a better evidence than the admission of a party made by him against his own interest: (1989) 1 Hindu L.R. 125: (1989) 1 Rev.L.R. 145 (P.&H.); 1984 M.P.L.J. (N.O.C.) 71.

An admission, unless explained away, constitutes the best evidence. [(1965-66) 70 Cal.W.N. 199, Reversed]: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 2085: (1981) 1 S.C.C. 80: (1981) 1 S.C.R. 899.

Admission is substantive evidence, but its weight is a matter for the Court to determine. Admission must be clear and unambiguous; it is conclusive unless explained. The value of admissions must depend upon its circumstances; possible motives for incorrect statement by interested persons should not be ignored: 1981 B.L.J.R. 649.

An admission by a party cannot be treated as conclusive and it is permissible for him to meet it by acceptable explanation, but at the same time it must be recognised that an admission is an important piece of evidence carrying considerable weight: A.I.R. 1989 S.C. 879.

The proposition of law that admissions can be explained by the party concerned, held, cannot be applied where it was not contended that the statements made by the plaintiff were either inadvertently made or that there was a wrong recording by the trial Court: (1994) 1 M.L.J. 205 (D.B.).

True, there can be no better evidence than one's own admission; but it is not safe to act upon it if it is denied and is said to have been extracted by coercion: 1982 Lab.I.C. 1745 (Andh. Pra.). However, a bare denial is not sufficient to avoid an admission: 1983 W.L.N. 629 (Raj.).

If admissions conflict with other evidence, Court could come to a different conclusion: (1971) 2 Mys.L.J. 619.

When an admission of a party is satisfactorily proved, it can reasonably be presumed to be true, unless that presumption is satisfactorily rebutted by other evidence: 1956 Nag.L.J. 427: A.I.R. 1956 Nag. 257: I.L.R. (1956) Nag. 659.

Admissions are of no evidential value once they are proved untrue: I.L.R. 49 All. 707.

The value of admissions must depend upon the circumstances in which they were made and possible motives for incorrect statements by interested parties should not be ignored. The nature of the facts admitted is also a material point to be considered. If the fact admitted, is one within the personal knowledge of the party admitting and there is no evidence of convincing explanation forthcoming, its value is considerable. If, on the other hand, the fact admitted is an inference from evidence and circumstances, the weight of admission may be very little: 1939 All.L.J. 708: A.I.R. 1939 All. 626.

Once a party accepts his earlier statement, made in an earlier proceedings, it becomes a substantive piece of evidence of the facts admitted therein in view of S. 17 and S. 21; what weightage is to be attached to such a statement is a different matter. Before using such a statement, it is not required to be put to its maker to provide him an opportunity to explain it when he appears as a witness or by calling him as a witness: 1993 Cr.L.J. 1008 (Him. Pra.).

An admission of a person is binding if the facts alleged to have been admitted on his personal knowledge and not otherwise: A.I.R. 1994 All. 174.

There is a marked difference between an admission and estoppel. Admissions being declarations against an interest are good evidence but they are not conclusive and a party is always at liberty to withdraw admissions by proving that they are mistaken or untrue. But estoppel creates an absolute bar: A.I.R. 1982 S.C. 121: (1982) 1 S.C.C. 223.

Distinction between admission by a party and admission by a witness. See 1977 W.L.N.(U.C.) 42 (Raj.).

Witnesses produced to prove admission, unable to give what actually were the words used by party where he was alleged to have admitted the title of opposite party—Statements cannot be taken to prove the admission: Madh.B.L.J. (1954) H.C.R. 232: A.I.R. 1954 Madh. Bh. 58.

Admissions made by infants before the proceedings are commenced are accepted by Courts in the normal course of events and they are given whatever weight the Court may consider proper to attribute to them: (1958) 1 W.L.R. 177 (2).

That the party making the statement, that the consideration under the document in question was paid by a certain person, was a child at the date of the document is not a ground referred to in S. 17, Evidence Act, which will hinder the statement from being regarded as an 'admission' under law, by supposing that because of his childhood at that time he could not be expected to speak out of personal knowledge: 1957 Ker.L.J. 558: A.I.R. 1957 Ker. 178.

A plea of a particular status taken on the basis of a document is a matter which relates to the interpretation of that particular document and cannot operate as an admission under S. 17. The nature of the document and the status of the parties concerned have to be determined according to the terms of the document itself and by a competent Court. No amount of interpretation of the document by a party can, therefore, operate as an admission: 1940 O.W.N. 1233.

The admission of a party cannot make a document a registered one unless there has been due compliance with the Registration Act. Thus, if the defendant had in a previous suit between the parties admitted that the document in suit had been duly registered, it would not be sufficient to hold that the document is duly registered in the absence of any circumstances showing that the admission amounts to estoppel: A.I.R. 1963 Mys. 335.

A draft deed of partition prepared according to the instructions of the defendant but not signed by both the parties might not amount to a contract, nevertheless, if it is approved and signed only by the defendant, held, it would amount to an admission: A.I.R. 1987 Cal. 69 (D.B.).

Where a brother suing his other brother and purchasers, for partition of joint family property was confronted with his deed of relinquishment admittedly written and signed by him prior to the suit undoubtedly indicating that the plaintiff had received his share from the joint family property and had let off his right, title and interest in the other joint family properties, held, the deed is an unequivocal admission sufficient to defeat the plaintiff's claim: (1991-1) 11 Guj.L.H. 566.

Where the husband in an earlier deed had described the property as owned by his wife but, subsequently, without any explanation therefor claimed it as held benami by the wife, held, he was bound by the earlier admission; his claim is liable to be dismissed: A.I.R. 1978 N.O.C. 228 (Pat.) (D.B.).

Where a woman had admitted in her certificate for obtaining family pension that she was a widow of a specific person and had not married after his death, held, this is a binding admission and she was precluded from asserting that she was wife of another person, having contracted marriage under gharbasa marriage by performance of village custom or rites: (1992) 3 W.L.C. 524 (Raj.).

As to admissibility of statement of accused to police as to admission, see 44 Cal.L.J. 253: A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 17. As to effect of erroneous admission, see 77 I.C. 875: A.I.R. 1928 All. 575.

An admission can be shown to be erroneous and can be withdrawn: (1988) 2 Hindu L.R. 359 (P.&H.) (D.B.); A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 6; A.I.R. 1967 Ori. 110: 1967 Cr.L.J. 1036; A.I.R. 1972 P.&H. 333; 1983 M.P.W.N. 245.

An admission by a witness put forward by one side as a witness of truth is not to be entirely disregarded as evidence against that side merely because, the matter in question being outside his personal knowledge, his statement (if to the opposite effect) would not be evidence in his favour: 80 Cal.L.J. 297.

It is more satisfactory if a body entrusted with functions such as the customs authorities are entrusted with, takes the precaution of getting the admission of the accused in writing when its decision is mainly to depend upon such admission: (1961) 1 S.C.R. 933: A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 264.

On a question as to who under the law or custom is entitled to succeed, the statement of a witness as to his notion of the law or custom is not binding on the party: A.I.R. 1963 Punj. 66.

Admissions are relevant against the maker thereof and as laid down in S. 31, they are not conclusive proof of the matters admitted, but they may operate as estoppel: (1988) 2 Hindu L.R. 359 (P.&H.) (D.B.). However, when the other party had not altered his position to his prejudice, the person making the admission may show that it is not true and cannot be acted upon: (1971) 2 Mys.L.J. 619.

An admission is not conclusive unless it amounts to estoppel. It may be proved to be wrong; but unless so proved, it is a very strong piece of evidence against the maker thereof and is decisive of the matter, though not conclusive: (1968) 34 Cut.L.T. 328: I.L.R. (1968) Cut. 87: A.I.R. 1968 Ori. 99.

An admission is not conclusive even of a matter admitted under S. 31; the maker is at liberty to prove that the admission was made under a mistake; where, however, no attempt is made to prove it so, it is a strong evidence against the maker and his successor-in-interest whom it binds. Where a fresh suit was filed after permission to withdraw the previous one, not on the ground that the admission in the previous suit of certain facts was mistaken, but on the ground that some necessary parties had been left out and no attempt is made to rebut the admission made in the previous plaint, the admission remains binding on the plaintiff. Suits may come and go, withdrawn with or without liberty to sue afresh, dismissed or decreed—no matter which—but statements made therein—no matter where, in pleadings, petitions, affidavits or evidence—remain for ever and for all purposes allowed by law; such as to be proceeded with as admissions when they are found to be such so long as they are not rebutted, or to be confronted with under S. 145 of the Evidence Act. Otherwise the Court no less the party interested will be deprived of very valuable evidence, nothing to say of premium being put on reckless allegations with no apprehension of the makers thereof coming to grief in future for such glibness: (1967-68) 72 Cal.W.N. 867: A.I.R. 1968 Cal. 550.

Statement explaining a discrepancy in accounts maintained by Secretary of a Co-operative Society in reply to a Memo from the Co-operative Registrar—Registrar entitled to call for information under Ss. 54 and 60 (b) of the Bombay Co-operative Societies Act—Statement in reply is an admission under

S. 17 and not hit by S. 24: 1969 Cr. L.J. 791: A.I.R. 1969 Tripura 31.

Where a person, who is alleged to have made an admission regarding his status in an agreement with the Government, files a suit for a declaration as to his status as against others, the Government is neither a necessary nor a proper party to this question which is independent of the validity or invalidity of the agreement. As between the parties to the suit, it will be necessary to consider whether the statement in the agreement amounts to the admission claimed, and, if so, to consider its evidential value alongwith the other evidence, as S. 31 expressly provides that admissions are not conclusive proof of the matters admitted. Even if it amounts to a clear admission it will not act as a bar to the suit: 63 I.A. 248: I.L.R. 60 Bom. 634: A.I.R. 1935 P.C. 150: 71 M.L.J. 691 (P.C.). Two different statements in prior and subsequent documents—Value of. See 1957 Raj.L.W. 254: A.I.R. 1957 Raj. 261.

Admission in application for visa—Effect of. See (1957-58) 62 Cal.W.N. 589.

Where in an election petition, the issue involved was regarding the age of the elected candidate on the date of the scrutiny of his nomination and there were a number of clear admissions in prior declarations precisely and deliberately made in solemn documents by him which admissions were made ante litem motam during the decade preceding the election in question, held, these admissions were entitled to great weight and had shifted the burden on to the candidate to show that they were incorrect: A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 1724: (1977) 3 S.C.C. 540: (1977) 3 S.C.R. 538.

Where the main relief sought for was declaration of title and the consequential relief was injunction and partition was set up by way of evidence to the main relief, held, as in such a case question of possession became a collateral fact, admissions contained in an unregistered partition deed could be received in evidence to prove possession. [1969 S.C.D. 1158, Rel. on]: 1983 Hindu L.R. 11 (Karn.); (1981) 94 Mad.L.W. 764.

Where natural succession is sought to be displaced by alleging an adoption, the burden of proving the factum and validity of the adoption lies on the party who alleges it, though on proof of certain admissions, in the process of evaluation of the evidence, the onus of proof may shift. On this principle, when an admission is proved, it may reasonably be presumed to be true until the presumption is rebutted: (1968) 34 Cut. L.T. 890.

Merely because a person performed funeral rites of his paternal issueless uncle or used to live with him during vacations raises no presumption of adoption; the adoption and performance of the rights therefor have to be independently established. That is all the more true when one of the two wives of the deceased had denied the adoption and the other had admitted: (1994) 2 An.L.T. 445.

Where the fact in issue was whether or not the plaintiff was the adopted son of G and statements made in sale deeds by some defendants were sought to be used as admissions, held, those defendants not being jointly interested in the suit property would not be affected either way by the decision; their statements were of no assistance as admissions to the plaintiff: A.I.R. 1974 Ori. 120: (1973) 1 Cut.W.R. 809 (D.B.). See also (1988) 1 Raj.L.R. 506.

A cheque drawn by a person in settlement of a debt and encashed undoubtedly amounts to an admission by its writer of the debt owed by him to the drawee; it is an admission of the liability to pay the debt even if the cheque is dishonoured subsequently. Whether or not it amounts to an admission of the debt is to be determined with reference to the point of time when the cheque was issued; an admission does not cease to be an admission merely because it is subsequently retracted. The factum of an admission is to be determined from the statement and not from the mental process underlying or accompanying the statement: A.I.R. 1981 Pat. 187: 1981 B.L.J. 422: 1981 B.L.J.R. 537: 1981 Pat.L.J.R. 327.

2. Admission to be clear and unambiguous.—Admission must be unambiguous and clear: A.I.R. 1960 Pat. 407.

In order to make the admissions binding on the party making them they should have been clearly and unequivocally made: (1989) 1 Hindu L.R. 125: (1989) 1 Rev.L.R. 145 (P.&H.).

An admission must be clear, precise, not vague or ambiguous—If an admission is capable of two interpretations, an interpretation unfavourable to the person making it should not be put on his admission: (1960) 62 Bom. L.R. 322: A.I.R. 1961 Bom. 169.

In order to bind a party by his admission, the admission must be clear, precise and unambiguous. An admission is only a piece of evidence and the weight to be attached to it depends upon the circumstances under which it has been made. Thus, before the right of a party can be considered to have been defeated on the basis of an alleged admission made by him in a prior litigation, the implication of the statement must be clear and conclusive. There should be no doubt or ambiguity about the alleged admission: A.I.R. 1973 Raj. 208; A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 1542; 1977 R.D. 419 (All.).

A party's admission, as defined in Ss. 17 to 20, fulfilling the requirements of S. 21, is substantive evidence proprio vigore. An admission, if clearly and unequivocally made, is the best evidence against the party making it and though not conclusive, shifts the onus on to the maker on the principle that "What a party himself admits to be true may reasonably be presumed to be so and until the presumption was rebutted, the fact admitted must be taken to be established": A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 1724: (1977) 3 S.C.C. 540: (1977) 3 S.C.R. 538.

An admission in order to be competent and to have the value and effect should be clear, certain and definite, and not ambiguous, vague and confused. Every admission should be given plain, literal and fair meaning and its scope should neither be enlarged nor restricted on the basis of suspicion or surmises: (1990) 3 Karn.L.J. 473.

The admission to be binding on a person must be very specific and should not be vague; and an admission on a question of fact is binding on a party unless it is proved to be contrary or has been successfully withdrawn: A.I.R. 1994 All. 174.

Unless an express reference has been made to a witness on a certain question, his statement will not be constitute an admission as regards that question: L.R. 2 A. 204.

Vague admission is no admission.—See 21 All.L.J. 869: A.I.R. 1924 All. 193.

Stray sentences elicited in the cross-examination could hardly be construed as admission. Before the right of a party can be considered to have been defeated on the basis of an alleged admission by him, the implication of the statement made by him must be clear and conclusive. There should not be any doubt or ambiguity about the alleged admission and to examine whether there is ambiguity in the admission, it would be necessary for the Court to read the other parts of the evidence and the stand taken by him in the pleadings: A.I.R. 1981 Karn. 40: I.L.R. (1981) Karn. 78.

3. 'Statement'—Meaning of.—See (1959) 1 M.L.J. (S.C.) 101: 1959 Cr.L.J. 389: A.I.R. 1959 S.C. 356. The word 'statement' has been used in its primary meaning, namely, something that is stated. Under Ss. 17 and 21 statements made by persons may be used as admissions against them even though they may not have been communicated to any other person: A.I.R. 1973 Mys. 280.

4. Admission by conduct.—Admission by conduct—Defendant remaining ex parte—He cannot be deemed to have admitted the claim: A.I.R. 1958 Ker. 203.

The explanation of any admission or conduct must come from the party itself, if alive and able to depose; the Court is not to form an explanation of its own if it is not offered by the party: A.I.R. 1971 All. 29 (D.B.).

Mere conduct is not admission for making it eligible to be used as admission under S. 21. Thus, where the trustees, not being fully conscious of their rights or not being aware of the true state of law or facts, yielded to the dictates of the Board of Religious Trusts and submitted returns, held, the statements contained in such returns could not amount to an admission of the fact that the trust in question was a public one. [1968 Pat.L.J.R. 507: I.L.R. 46 Pat. 23, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1974 Pat. 95: 1973 Pat.L.J.R. 509 (D.B.).

5. Admission regarding landlord-tenant relationship.—Though the statement made by the landlord in the petition for fixing of fair rent would amount to an admission, yet such an admission can be explained as it is open to the Court to fix the rent at a value higher than that stated by the landlord: (1993) 1 M.L.J. 232.

Deposit of rent under S. 17(1) of W.B. Premises Tenancy Act, 1956 cannot operate as an admission of the relationship of landlord and tenant within the meaning of S. 17 of the Evidence Act: A.I.R. 1972 Cal. 446: (1971-72) 76 Cal.W.N. 397.

Mere acceptance of rent does not constitute settlement of land, nor would the filing of an arrears of rent suit constitute such a settlement. But the latter would operate as an admission under S. 17 against the zamindar: 1941 All.W.R. (Rev.) 454: 1941 R.D. 414. See also 1944 R.D. 346.

Admissibility of entries in counterfoils of rent receipt. See (1982) 2 Guj.L.H. 89.

Where in a suit for eviction the defendant admitted to be a tenant in disputed property but stated that he has never paid rent to plaintiff, held, relationship not established; such admission is of no consequence and does not operate as estoppel: 1982 M.P.W.N. 472.

Where in her earlier statement made in a revenue Court, the landlady had admitted that a person was her tenant and in the subsequent proceedings in civil Court under the Tenancy Act the said statement was put to her in the cross-examination and she admitted that it was correctly recorded, held, the admission of the landlady was substantive evidence and could be relied upon: A.I.R. 1976 Bom. 219.

A declaration made to the Municipal Corporation by a person to the effect that he was a tenant in the suit premises, held, in a subsequent suit for possession and mesne profits, such a declaration can be treated as an admission that he was in the permissive possession of the suit premises, when such admission had been duly proved: A.I.R. 1974 Bom. 12: 1973 Mah.L.J. 771: I.L.R. (1974) Bom. 816.

Where a suit was instituted by a partner of a registered firm claiming to be a tenant as proprietor of the firm but later on he sought an amendment in the plaint so as to substitute the firm as the plaintiff-tenant, which application was dismissed, the admission fell under S. 11(2) and was relevant for making probable or improbable the existence or non-existence of the fact in issue, that is, the plaintiff's tenancy; whether the admission amounts to an estoppel or not, but it certainly is evidence but not 'conclusive proof'. [A.I.R. 1956 S.C. 593, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1972 Del. 221.

Evidence by the real owner and the tenant that the house belonged to the benamidar, held, is no admission; it is like any other evidence to be considered by the Court: 1979 B.L.J.R. 296.

Admission—Value of—Village forming part of Tanjore Palace Estate—Lands, treated by Raja as separate property — Effect of seizure by Government and subsequent regrant—Eviction of tenants in long possession by alienee from purchase and in execution—Burden of proof—Admission by tenants—Binding nature of: (1957) 1 M.L.J. 72.

6. Income-tax proceedings/records.—An admission is no doubt a relevant piece of evidence, but it is never conclusive. It is all the more so in the matter of an assessment to tax which has to conform to Art. 265 of the Constitution of India. So far as an assessment to tax is concerned, it is open to the assessee who made an admission to show that it is incorrect. If he puts forward such a plea, he should be given a proper opportunity to show that it is so. When the assessee contends that he has committed a mistake in making the admission, it cannot be relied on without first considering the said contention. Thus, while an admission made by an assessee is relevant, it is not conclusive. It is open to the assessee to explain or clarify under what circumstances it was made, or to prove that what was stated did not reflect the true state of affairs. But in the absence of any demur or explanation therefor, an admission is almost conclusive regarding the facts contained therein: A.I.R. 1995 Ker. 62.

Where in a suit for partition between a father and his two sons their respective shares in the property were ascertained, in the absence of any contract or other material on record, on the basis of their wealth and income-tax assessment orders containing their respective admissions, held, though the orders were not admissible under Ss. 40 to 42 but they were certainly admissible under S. 43: A.I.R. 1991 Del. 325.

Admission made by karta before Income-tax Authorities would be binding on the coparcenary, where the karta has not acted against the interest of the family: (1973) 2 Mys.L.J. 337.

Waiver of notice under S. 34, Income-tax Act by Counsel—Not binding on client: A.I.R. 1966 Cal. 438.

Use of statement recorded under S.131 of the Income-tax Act, 1961 as an admission. See (1986) 99 Mad.L.W. (S.N.) 61.

Where in a statement made by a firm in support of income returns, the suit item is shown as a debt owing by the firm to the plaintiff, that surely constitutes an admission of liability of the firm to the plaintiff in respect of the amount mentioned therein: (1957) 2 An.W.R. 499.

Where in an eviction case on the ground of sub-letting, the affidavit filed by the alleged sub-tenant before the Income-tax Authorities claiming to be in exclusive possession as a tenant, was relied upon for proving sub-letting and that such admission was binding on the tenant, held, tenant being not a party to the said affidavit signed by the alleged sub-tenant, admission made by the latter in said affidavit was inadmissible and did not bind the tenant: (1992) 1 S.C.C. 143: A.I.R. 1992 S.C. 123: (1992) 19 All.L.R. 242: (1992) 46 Del.L.T. 6.

7. Entries in account books.—(See also S. 34, infra).While entries made by one partner without the knowledge of the other would not prejudice the latter as between himself and his co-owners, as regards partnership books these being accessible to all the partners and being kept under the surveillance of them all, they are prima facie evidence against each of them and, therefore, also for any of them against the others: I.L.R. (1969) 1 Mad. 734: A.I.R. 1969 Mad. 257.

As to admissions gathered from entries in account books, see 23 Mad.L.W. 272: 96 I.C. 423: A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 955. See also A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 433 (S.B.).

8. Admission in First Information Report.—(See also S. 21, Note 6; S. 24, Note 3; S. 25, Note 3; S. 27, Note 8, infra). It is valuable corroborative evidence. It cannot support a conviction, when the maker of the report himself is an accused person and cannot, therefore, be examined as a witness: 63 I.C. 822: 22 Cr. L.J. 694 (1).

Entire confession made by the accused in the first information report is inadmissible: (1990) 2 Crimes 288 (Madh. Pra.).

But where such a report contains an admission not amounting to a confession, the admission is admissible in evidence against the accused: 63 I.C. 822: 22 Cr.L.J. 694 (1).

Admission—First information report—Use of: 1958 Cr.L.J. 129: A.I.R. 1958 All. 90.

First information report—Admissibility as admission of accused: 1959 All.Cr.R. 267: 1959 All.L.J. 340.

The accused, immediately after he had committed a crime, appeared before an officer in charge of a police thana and made a statement to him which disclosed the facts that led to the actual commission of the crime and his subsequent conduct. It was treated as the first information report by the prosecution. On the question of admissibility of the statement in evidence, held, that if the statement be treated as a statement made by an accused to a Police Officer during the course of an investigation it could not be used as evidence in view of the provisions of S. 162, Cr.P.Code, but there was no bar to the use of such a statement made by the accused to a Police Officer before the investigation of the case had commenced as an admission under S. 17 of the Evidence Act unless it was hit by the provisions of Ss. 24 and 25 of the Act. There was no bar to splitting up of the first information report where the confessional part was separable from the rest of the statements which were otherwise admissible and to exclude from it any of the inadmissible parts and admitting the rest of it. The statement read as a whole did not appear to have been made as a result of any inducement, promise or threat by any person in authority or otherwise, as was clear from the fact that the accused appeared at the thana on his own accord and made his statement voluntarily.

The statement of the accused in the instant case examined in the light of the provisions of Ss. 17, 25 and 27 of the Evidence Act divided itself into three parts—First was introductory to the relevant fact referring to the motive, opportunity and description leading to the crime. Second part related to the commission of the actual crime and the third related to the after events as to his conduct and his confessional statement leading to the discovery of certain facts. Thus, it was only the second part dealing with the actual commission of the crime that became inadmissible in evidence under S. 25 and the whole first information report need not be excluded from consideration: (1964) 1 Cr. L.J. 528: A.I.R. 1964 Pat. 210.

9. Admission and confession.—(See also S. 21, Note 4, infra). All confessions are inculpatory admissions on the part of the maker thereof. To be a confession, admission should contain an acknowledgment of the guilt. Therefore, all confessions are admissions, but every admission may not be a confession: 1979 Bom.C.R. 680 (D.B.).

Confession is admission by accused in a criminal case and if he does not incriminate himself, statement cannot be said to be a confession: A.I.R. 1966 Pat. 448.

It is true that whenever there is a statement amounting to an admission or a confession, then the statement should be read as a whole. But it is open to a Court of law to accept the inculpatory part and reject the exculpatory part provided: (a) there is other evidence on the record to show the falsity of the exculpatory part, and (b) besides the confession there are other materials on the record establishing or indicating the guilt of the accused. Thus, the inculpatory part by itself cannot form the sole basis for conviction even if there are other materials on the record to show the falsity of the exculpatory part: (1963) 2 Cr.L.J. 611: (1963) 4 Guj.L.R. 1088: I.L.R. (1963) Guj. 1007: A.I.R. 1963 Guj. 312.

Admission and confession—Distinction: 1959 Cr.L.J. 940: A.I.R. 1959 All. 518.

Admission would mean an admission of all the facts constituting the offence; simply saying that I am guilty of the charge does not constitute an admission of guilt. Further, the accused's plea should be recorded as nearly as possible in his words, otherwise the appellate Court is deprived of the previlege to examine as to whether the plea made by the accused amounts to admission of guilt or not. Where accused stated that he was guilty of charge as given in the charge sheet and further there was no plea of guilt recorded by the Magistrate in the words of the accused, held, the alleged admission did not constitute an admission in the eyes of law: 1994 Cr.L.J. 375 (Gau.).

The Customs Officers who are empowered under S. 53 of the Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985 to be Police Station Officers are not Police Officers and any confessions made before them are admissible in evidence under S. 17 and the same is not hit by S. 25 or S. 26: 1993 Cr.L.J. 1310 (Pat.); (1989) 1 Bom.C.R. 503; (1988) 2 Guj.L.H. 531: 1989 Cr.L.J. 860; 1988 All.L.J. 441; A.I.R. 1991 S.C. 45: 1991 Cr.L.J. 97: (1990) 2 S.C.C. 409: (1990) 41 Del.L.T. 49: (1990) 2 Crimes 435 affirming (1989) 37 Del.L.T. 362: 1989 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 199: (1989) 3 Crimes 146. See also 1988 Raj.Cr.C. 462. See also S. 25, Note 4; S. 26, Note 4, infra.

10. Admission on point of law.—Admission on point of law has no force against party making it: A.I.R. 1957 Raj. 267: 1957 Raj.L.W. 290; A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 779; A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 879; A.I.R. 1929 Nag. 343. There cannot be an admission regarding the operation of law. If a person could not succeed to a holding under the law, an admission that such a person succeeded to the holding cannot confer on him any tenancy rights: 1942 O.W.N. (B.R.) 198: 1942 O.A. (Supp.) 165. The question whether or not a person is entitled to succeed as the heir of a deceased person is a question of law and there can be no legal admission about it. Where a landholder acquiesces in a person continuing to remain in possession of a holding under the impression that he was the heir of the deceased tenant, if it is later on found that he was not the heir, the acquiescence in his possession would only operate as a licence which can be revoked at will and the landholder would not be estopped from ejecting him: 1942 All.W.R. (Rev.) 212: 1942 O.A. (Supp.) 238: 1942 O.W.N. (B.R.) 340. See also 1944 R.D. 346.

A concession made on a point of law by its Counsel will not bind the party, for no estoppel can be pleaded against a statute: 1981 Hindu L.R. 445 (J.&K.); A.I.R. 1977 N.O.C. 246 (Him. Pra.); 1974 Punj.L.J. 1; A.I.R. 1966 Pat. 235; (1963) 65 Punj.L.R. 792; A.I.R. 1956 Manipur 18.

Though the defence expressly stated that they were not urging that a certain statement was wrongly admitted in evidence, their concession will not justify the Court to depend upon it for any purpose: I.L.R. (1957) Ker. 781: 1957 M.L.J. (Cr.) 662: A.I.R. 1958 Ker. 8.

An admission in so far as facts are concerned would bind the maker of the admission but not in so far as it relates to a question of law: (1964) 1 S.C.R. 316: A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 1165. As to who can make binding admissions, see (1921-22) 26 Cal.W.N. 273: A.I.R. 1922 P.C. 102.

An admission made in ignorance of legal rights or under duress cannot bind its maker. Thus, where a candidate, very anxious to appear in Part II of the L.L.B. examination, gave an undertaking to the University to file his employer's permission therefor when in fact no such permission was necessary or to abide by any order the University might pass, held, the undertaking was given in terro rem and in complete ignorance of his legal rights; as the University was bent on prohibiting him from taking the examination he had no alternative but to write the letter; the letter would not put him out of Court in case he challenged cancellation of his candidature by the University: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 376: (1976) 1 S.C.C. 311: 1976 U.J. (S.C.) 15: (1976) 2 S.C.R. 722.

11. Admission regarding contents of document.— [See also Ss. 61 and 90, infra]. While a document is marked on its formal proof being waived, the party relying upon it need not examine any witness to prove it formally, that, however, does not amount to an admission of the document's contents: (1991) 2 Hindu L.R. 428 (Cal.).

Merely because documents more than 30 years old are presumed to be duly executed raises no presumption that their contents are true. But once the execution of such a document is presumed, it would amount to the executant's admission about the truth of the statements in the recitals; the third party, not a signatory to the document, may not be bound by it but the admission can be pressed in service against the executant's successor-in-interest; that is the combined effect of Ss. 17, 18(2) and 21: A.I.R. 1981 Guj. 142: (1981) 22 Guj.L.R. 389.

Admission of mere signatures/thumb impression—Whether admission of contents of document.—Where a party only admits the signature and also explains the circumstances which led to his signing the document without knowing its contents, it cannot be said that the party has admitted its execution. Execution implies conscious execution and knowledge of its contents. Thus, where a party merely admits the thumb impression or his signatures on a document but does not admit that he executed the document in the sense that he subscribed to the contents thereof, it cannot be said that the party has admitted the execution. [A.I.R. 1957 Pat. 64; A.I.R. 1931 Pat. 266 and 1968 All.L.J. 480, Rel. on; A.I.R. 1962 Raj. 231, Dissented from]: A.I.R. 1980 J.&K. 54 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1976 All. 23: 1976 All.L.J. 656; A.I.R. 1975 Mad. 333: (1975) 88 Mad.L.W. 265.

Admission of signature of—On document—If tantamount to admission of execution of document by that person—It is one thing to admit signature of a person on a document and quite another thing which has different legal implications to admit that that person whose signature is identified by the deponent has executed the document: 1969 Mah.L.J. 838: (1970) 72 Bom.L.R. 32: A.I.R. 1970 Bom. 160.

12. Section 17 vis-a-vis section 145.—Admissions must be clear if they are to be used against the person making them. They are substantive evidence by themselves in view of Ss. 17 and 21 of the Evidence Act, though they are not conclusive proof of the matters admitted. The admissions duly proved are admissible evidence irrespective of whether the party making them appeared in the witness box or not and whether such party when appearing as witness was confronted with those statements in case it made a statement contrary to those admissions. The purpose of contradicting the witness under S. 145 of the Evidence Act is quite different from the purpose of proving the admission. Admission is substantive evidence of the fact admitted while a previous statement used to contradict a witness does not become substantive evidence and only serves the purpose of throwing doubt on the veracity of the witness. Weight to be attached to an admission made by a party is a matter different from its use as admissible evidence: (1966) 1 S.C.W.R. 222: A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 405; (1972) 38 Cut.L.T. 161; A.I.R. 1971 P.&H. 177 (D.B.); 1984 M.P.L.J. (N.O.C.) 71; 1991 Punj.L.J. 361: (1991-2) 100 Punj.L.R. 529.

The object of S. 145 is to give the witness a chance of explaining the discrepancy or inconsistency and to clear up the broad point of ambiguity or dispute; but this procedure does not apply to admissions in view of Ss. 17 and 21. The purpose of contradicting the witness under S. 145 is quite different from the purpose of proving the admission: A.I.R. 1971 Pat. 215 (D.B.).

18. Admission by party to proceeding or his agent.—Statements made by a party to the proceeding, or by an agent to any such party, whom the Court regards, under the circumstances of the case, as expressly or impliedly authorised by him to make them, are admissions.

by suitor in representative character.—Statements made by parties to suits, suing or sued in a representative character, are not admissions, unless they were made while the party making them held that character.

Admission in prior proceedings—Mutation petition—Admission by party adverse to the position taken by him in the suit is admissible against him—He need not be confronted with it while in the witness box—Difference between purpose of proof of admission and earlier contradictory statement: I.L.R. (1966) Cut. 483.

13. Miscellaneous.—Industrial Dispute—Charge of illegal gratification—Workman answering that some times he used to feed boys alleged to have given money and some times they gave money of their own accord—Held, there was no admission of facts constituting offence under Cl. 10(a)(3) of Standing Orders: A.I.R. 1966 Assam 138.

Where in a case of a deported foreigner's surreptitious re-entry, his earlier deportation was proved by documentary evidence and the Counsel for the accused admitted the genuineness of the Police Officer's letters containing details of the earlier deportation, held, the contents of the letter stood admitted and proved. [1981 Cr.L.J. 379 (All.), Rel. on]: 1982 All.L.J. 703.

Admission — Construction — A stating that A and B are monthly joint tenants under the landlord of certain premises—This must be regarded as admission on part of A that B is alive and not that he is dead—S. 108 is ruled out and S. 107 is attracted—A must prove that B is dead: (1963-64) 68 Cal.W.N. 786: 1963 Cal.L.J. 75.

1. Scope.—"Proceedings"—Meaning of: 146 I.C. 653: A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 292. Where a certain fact was sought to be proved by the plaintiff by referring to an admission contained in a document and the defendant remained ex parte, held, that the admission should be given effect to unless there was anything in the plaintiff's own evidence contradicting it. Such an admission is presumptive evidence: A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 299. For an admission to be relevant it should be shown that the person who made it had an interest at the time of making it within S. 18: 21 I.C. 174: 19 Cal.L.J. 1.

The statement of one person cannot be regarded as admission of another person merely on the allegation that the two are in collusion: 151 I.C. 261: A.I.R. 1934 All. 684.

Statements made by—

(1) by party interested in subject-matter.—persons who have any proprietary or pecuniary interest in the subject-matter of the proceeding, and who make the statement in their character of persons so interested, or

(2) by person from whom interest derived.—persons from whom the parties to the suit have derived their interest in the subject-matter of the suit, are admissions, if they are made during the continuance of the interest of the persons making the statements.

Statements by previous mahants cannot be regarded as admissions binding on the present incumbent of the office: I.L.R. 12 Lah. 497: A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 161.

Admission by husband respecting a property—Not binding on the wife unless it was established that she derived her title through him: I.L.R. (1964) Cut. 274.

There is no requirement of the Evidence Act that the statements or admissions of a person cannot be read against him if they were not adverse to his interest when made. Such an argument unreasonably restricts the opportunity to prove the true state of affairs on the party's own showing and to demolish his subsequent claim as self-contradictory: A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 409: (1977) 1 S.C.C. 60: (1977) 1 S.C.R. 967; 1995 Punj.L.J. 267.

Admissions adversely affecting property by previous owner are not admissible in evidence after he has parted with the property: 1963 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 171.

Admission, to be relied upon, must be unequivocal—Relying upon unclear statements as admissions is hazardous: I.L.R. (1964) Cut. 274.

Non-confessional statements made under S. 164, Cr.P. Code—Statements are evidence if relevant and admissible: A.I.R. 1969 Ori. 245.

Suit for possession of house by mortgagor — Mortgagee admitting mortgage deed in lower Court—Suit contested only on ground that mortgage was of particular type different from usufructuary or possessory mortgage—Plea taken in second appeal that mortgagor failed to prove mortgage deed by not adducing evidence as to attestation as required under S. 59, T.P. Act—Held, admission of mortgagee in lower Court was decisive—Mortgagee could not be allowed to wriggle out of his admission on new plea subsequently raised: (1969) 35 Cut.L.T. 821.

Where a document embodying a statement made by a person (a lady in the instant case) to a Judicial Magistrate was headed with particulars such as her name, her father's name, her husband's name, her age, occupation and residence, held, the particulars must be presumed to have been furnished by the lady herself to the Magistrate and not to have been taken down by him at the instance of somebody else. In view of such an admission subsequent denial by her about giving out her husband's name cannot be accepted: 1970 Cr.L.J. 93 (Punj.) (S.B.).

Where in a petition before the Mamlatdar under Tenancy Act for declaration that they were tenants, the respondents alleged that they were tenants of some plots of the land in dispute and that a third party was tenant of other plots in that land, but on examination, that third party submitted that neither he nor the respondents were tenants, held, the evidence given by the third party was not sufficient to negative the claim of the respondents; the provisions of S. 18(1) were not at all applicable to the present case: A.I.R. 1971 Goa 2.

Where an admission was made in a compromise effected between parties to the suit but not incorporated in any decree as the suit itself was dismissed in default, held, being a gratuitous admission, it did not amount to an estoppel; it could be withdrawn or shown to be untrue and erroneous as and when it was sought to be relied upon against its maker; it can, however, be considered as a piece of evidence along with other evidence but not as a binding admission; of course, the position would have been different if an executable decree based on it had been passed: (1985) 11 All.L.R. 172: 1984 All.W.C. 1019: 1985 All.L.J. 154.

2. Recitals in documents—Relevancy as admission.—Recital in a mortgage bond as to receipt of consideration is admissible as against a subsequent purchaser: I.L.R. 8 Pat. 766: A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 254. See also A.I.R. 1943 Pesh. 17 (Admission by donor in deed of gift that possession is delivered is binding on him). When the recital of boundaries is in a document inter partes, the recital is a joint statement made by the parties to the document and, therefore, relevant against all of them as an admission: (1955) 2 M.L.J. 687: A.I.R. 1956 Mad. 226 [Overruled on another point in A.I.R. 1972 Mad. 154: (1971) 84 Mad.L.W. 691: (1972) 1 M.L.J. 317 (D.B.)].

Recitals as to boundaries in documents not inter partes are inadmissible in evidence under Ss. 11, 13(a) and 32(3) and (5); they can be admitted in evidence by testimony in Court of the documents' executants. [A.I.R. 1915 Mad. 746, Foll.; A.I.R. 1956 Mad. 226, Overruled]: A.I.R. 1972 Mad. 154: (1971) 84 Mad. L.W. 691: (1972) 1 M.L.J. 317 (D.B.).

A person is bound by his admission in the document he has executed. The normal presumption is that his recitals in the document are true. If he seeks to displace this presumption the onus is heavy on him to show that the document signed by him was tainted with illegality or that an untrue statement was obtained with set purpose: I.L.R. (1962) Andh. Pra. 431: A.I.R. 1964 Andh. Pra. 17.

When in a sale deed there is an admission of a party admitting the receipt of consideration, held, it is for him to prove by cogent evidence that the statement contained in the document was false: A.I.R. 1971 All. 151.

Where the defendants admitted receiving of the sums mentioned in a voucher and signature thereon, held, when that voucher mentioned that the amount was advanced by way of loan, it was for the defendants to prove that the voucher was signed in blank and/or that amount was towards profits: A.I.R. 1992 Bom. 434.

Land tenures—Grant—Post Settlement Inam granted in lieu of service to ancestors of grantees—Evidence about origin and nature of grant not available—Admissions by ancestors of grantee in documents executed by him in favour of plaintiff is strong evidence of existence of occupancy rights: I.L.R. (1963) Cut. 146.

Record of rights—Presumption of correctness—Rebuttal—Admission of party to the contrary—Effect. See A.I.R. 1956 Cal. 669.

Release deed—Admission in—Value of—Mere release is ineffective to pass title—It can, however, be used to rebut presumption of correctness of settlement record. See A.I.R. 1956 Cal. 669.

Recital in deed by donor that possession was delivered—Effect: (1958) 1 M.L.J. 14: A.I.R. 1958 Mad. 327.

In a suit for adverse possession, the donor's admission contained in the gift deed that possession of the donated house was handed over to the donee on the very day the gift deed was executed, held, is not binding on the coparceners of the donor's family, when they did not claim the suit house through the donor, but were claiming the same as coparceners by virtue of their birth in the H.U.F. to which the suit house belonged: A.I.R. 1982 J.&K. 141.

Admission regarding the execution of document will mean not only the signature on the deed of the testator but also all requirements, namely, attestation of the will by the witnesses as well: 1977 R.D. 419 (All.).

3. Admissions by parties to suit.—Such admissions are generally contained in pleading, written statements or depositions. See 7 W.R. 249; 9 W.R. 162; 5 Beng.L.R. 529: 14 W.R. (P.C.) 28: 13 M.I.A. 438; 15 W.R. 437; 17 W.R. 372; 22 W.R. 303; 23 W.R. 27.

Such writings (to become admissible) must conform to legal requirements: 24 W.R. 114: I.L.R. 6 Cal. 762. See also 21 W.R. 34; 21 W.R. 414.

Effect of not putting a fact in issue. See A.I.R. 1958 Manipur 22.

An admission could only be given in evidence against the party making it and not against any other party. The only exceptions to the rule are laid down by Ss. 18 to 20: (1932) 34 Bom.L.R. 35: A.I.R. 1932 Bom. 117. An admission on a pure question of law is not binding upon a party: A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 779: 113 I.C. 99; A.I.R. 1929 Nag. 343: 119 I.C. 698; A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 879: 120 I.C. 532.

On this point, see also Note 10 under S. 17, supra. But admission as to existence of custom is binding: A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 779: 113 I.C. 99. An admission made by a party in a proceeding is of no value if a decree opposed to it is passed: (1943-44) 48 Cal.W.N. 15.

Admitted fact—Proof: (1956-57) 61 Cal. W.N. 170.

When an admission of a party is satisfactorily proved, it can reasonably be presumed to be true, unless that presumption is satisfactorily rebutted by other evidence. [I.L.R. 29 All. 184 (P.C.), Foll.]: 1956 Nag.L.J. 427: A.I.R. 1956 Nag. 257; I.L.R. (1957) Andh. Pra. 806: A.I.R. 1958 Andh. Pra. 662.

What is admitted by a party to be true must be presumed to be true unless the contrary is shown: A.I.R. 1954 S.C. 355; 1969 Ker.L.R. 1.

It is well-established that what a party himself admits to be true may reasonably be presumed to be so. The express admissions of a party to the suit or admissions implied from his conduct are evidence—Indeed strong evidence against him unless he can prove that such admissions were mistaken or were untrue, but he is not estopped or concluded by them unless another person has been induced to alter his position or condition: A.I.R. 1951 Ori. 313.

Admission—Binding force—Acknowledgment of mortgage by mortgagee—If binding on assignee: A.I.R. 1958 Ker. 307.

Where in a suit for possession, the plaintiff had admitted in his deposition that under an agreement between him and his father, the land mortgaged by an unregistered deed was in sole cultivating possession of his father, a plea not taken by the defendant in his written statement, held, an admission made in Court regarding the true state of affairs does not disentitle the other party from succeeding merely for want of such plea; the admission made in evidence was equally effective to non-suit the plaintiff: A.I.R. 1971 Del. 316.

A Court is not free to ignore or get over definite and clear statements of admission made by parties in the box by ascribing them to inadvertence or mistake especially when there is not even a suggestion made in the re-examination to that effect: A.I.R. 1955 Trav.-Co. 199.

Suit for recovery of rent based on title—Admissions made by defendants for long period of time—Proof of title—Sufficiency. See (1954) 2 M.L.J. (Andhra) 208.

It is not a correct proposition of law to state that the only kind of admissions by parties to a litigation which will either be relevant to or conclude the matter in issue are admissions operating as estoppels. There are other admissions which are equally, if not more, effective, namely: (1) admissions contained in the pleadings in a case which would circumscribe the issues and avoid the necessity for proof; and (2) admissions made by parties to a suit on earlier occasions, either in prior proceedings in a Court of law or in statements made out of Court. But the admissions made by one defendant will not bind his co-defendant, though they would bind the party making them: I.L.R. (1951) Trav.-Co. 209: A.I.R. 1951 Trav.-Co. 109.

Court can base its decision on admission of parties—Trial Courts finding on admission of wife and other evidence that child was conceived by petitioner before marriage. It is not right for High Court to remit issue for recording finding on question whether child was conceived after marriage: A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 364.

Admission—Acknowledgment of paternity: (1958) 1 An.W.R. 1: A.I.R. 1958 Andh. Pra. 195.

Statements of a party in letters written by her can be used against her as her admissions, but cannot be used in her favour: A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 364.

Statements by third parties—Admission is not admissible against a person other than the person making it, unless such person can be said to be bound by the admission: (1966) 1 S.C.W.R. 974: A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 1697.

Proceeding under O. 21, R. 97, C.P.Code —Dispute whether house belonged to mother of obstructor or to firm—Affidavit by auction-purchaser—On facts, affidavit held did not amount to admission: A.I.R. 1964 All. 302.

It is open to a defendant to treat a statement made by the plaintiff in evidence as an admission made by the plaintiff and use it against him: (1957) 59 Bom.L.R. 1112: I.L.R. (1958) Bom. 797: A.I.R. 1959 Bom. 504.

4. Admission to be taken as a whole.—The first important rule of the admission is that the whole statement containing the admission must be taken together; the object is only to ascertain what is conceded and may therefore, be presumed to be true; unless the whole is received, the true meaning of part which is evidence against him cannot be ascertained: 1981 B.L.J.R. 649. An admission of any party has to be read in its entirety and no statement out of context can constitute admission of any fact: A.I.R 1991 Madh. Pra. 18.

Every admission should be given plain, literal and fair meaning and its scope should not be widened or restricted on the basis of suspicions or surmises: A.I.R. 1954 Manipur 11. A statement in the nature of an admission has to be taken as a whole. One cannot truncate the statement and take a part and reject another: (1955-56) 60 Cal.W.N. 633: A.I.R. 1956 Cal. 102; A.I.R. 1954 Trav.-Co. 152: 1953 Ker.L.T. 587; A.I.R. 1953 Cal. 530: (1952-53) 57 Cal.W.N. 778 (S.B.); 1956 B.L.J.R. 197: A.I.R. 1957 Pat. 293; (1956-57) 61 Cal.W.N. 483: A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 372.

The entire statement must be taken together; particular passages cannot be selected to the exclusion of the rest. Admission operates merely to shift the onus and raise only a rebuttable presumption: A.I.R. 1924 Nag. 387: 78 I.C. 981; I.L.R. 10 Lah. 694: A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 318.

Admission must be deemed to be exhaustive. It must be read as it stands and it is not permissible to take one part of an admission and reject another part: I.L.R. 49 All. 704: A.I.R. 1927 All. 385.

Though the entire statement containing the admission must be put in and considered, the Court is not bound to believe or disbelieve the statement as a whole. Where there is other evidence in the case, it may, in the light of that evidence, believe one part of the statement and disbelieve the other: I.L.R. (1964) 14 Raj. 26: A.I.R. 1964 Raj. 126.

Before a statement of a party may be used against him as his admission, the statement must be considered as a whole and the Court should not pick out isolated sentences torn from their context.

Another principle governing admissions is that if the statement is ambiguous it must be put to the party who must be given an opportunity of explaining it before it can be used against him as his admission: (1963) 1 Cr.L.J. 724: A.I.R. 1963 All. 260.

5. Admission by agent.—See (1900) 2 Bom.L.R. 651. See also 12 Pat.L.T. 582: I.L.R. 11 Pat. 50: A.I.R. 1932 Pat. 105. The fact of agency must be proved: 3 Beng.L.R. 273: 46 I.C. 709: 19 Cr.L.J. 789; A.I.R. 1957 Raj. 189.

Where A is sought to be bound by an admission made by B, the relation of agency between A and B should be pleaded and established; for in the absence of a proper case made in the pleading and in the absence of any amendment, the case of agency made at the hearing cannot be taken notice of by the Court: A.I.R. 1955 Cal. 594.

Recitals in a document by person alleged to be agent of accused—Before the recitals can be used against accused, in a criminal case, agency must be satisfactorily proved: 1954 Cr.L.J. 1679: A.I.R. 1954 S.C. 660. Statement of agent before Settlement Officer that his principal was a bastard is admissible as an admission: I.L.R. 3 Luck. 416: A.I.R. 1928 Oudh 233.

A person called by a party as his witness cannot be deemed to be his agent within the meaning of S. 18: (1932) 34 Bom.L.R. 35: A.I.R. 1932 Bom. 117. The Home Minister speaks on behalf of the Government as its spokesman and his answers to questions put to him in the House as Home Minister, in relation to matters dealt by him as Home Minister, are admissible in evidence as admissions made by the Government. When Government is a party to the proceedings, these admissions are relevant and admissible under the Evidence Act against the Government. The Crown may, of course, show that the admissions were really not admissions or that they were made under a mistake or that they were not binding on Government for any other valid reason, but unless this is shown the admissions must be taken in evidence against Government: A.I.R. 1943 Cal. 377 (S.B.). See also 219 I.C. 81: A.I.R. 1944 Pesh. 34.

6. Admissions by guardians, etc.—A lunatic or his guardian or the latter's Advocate cannot admit or deny that he is a lunatic; a lunatic, by the very fact of his deranged mind, is unable to know whether he has a sound or unsound mind: (1956) 1 M.L.J. 459.

Admissions by guardians do not generally bind the wards. See 10 C.L.R. 377; 20 W.R. 223 (Signature of guardian when not binding on minor; I.L.R. 13 Cal. 292). So also are admissions by guardian-ad-litem or next friend (Tay, Evi, 8th Edn., S. 742; Field, 6th Edn., p. 89). There can be no doubt that the guardian-ad-litem has the power to make admissions provided they are made in good-faith and for the benefit of the minor. But where the minor had a good title and therefore, the admissions in question cannot be said to have been made for the benefit of the minor and where further the conduct of the guardian-ad-litem was also not free from suspicion it must be held that there was want of good faith on the part of the guardian and hence the admissions are not admissible in evidence against minor in any subsequent suit brought by him. Before such an admission can operate as an estoppel against the minor plantiff, it is necessary that it should have induced the other party to act to his prejudice: A.I.R. 1957 Manipur 32. As to admissions by Court of Wards, see 24 I.A. 107: I.L.R. 24 Cal. 853 (P.C.).

Statements made by suitor in representative capacity are binding. See 1 W.R. 339 (executor). See also 8 W.R. 63; 14 W.R. 162.

7. Admissions by persons in joint interest.—When several persons are jointly interested in the subject-matter of a suit, an admission of any one of these persons is receivable, not only against himself but also against the others whether they be all jointly suing or sued, provided that the admission relates to the subject-matter in dispute and be made by the person in his character of one jointly interested with the party against whom the evidence is tendered. The requirement of the identity in legal interest between the joint owners is of fundamental importance: 222 I.C. 604: A.I.R. 1946 Pat. 278; I.L.R. (1977) 22 Raj. 107: 1971 W.L.N. 396; A.I.R. 1973 Pat. 310; it is of no consequence whether or not all of such persons are jointly suing or sued against: A.I.R. 1981 Pat. 111 (D.B.).

As a matter of probative value, the admission of a person (such as one joint owner) having precisely the same interest at stake as another (his co-owner), will, in general, be likely to be equally worthy of consideration; there being an identity of legal liability, the two persons may be deemed one so far as it affect the propriety of discrediting one by the statements of the others. An admission of one co-defendant is not receivable against another merely by virtue of his position as a co-party in the litigation. It is not by virtue of that person's relation to the litigation that his admission can be used against the other. The vital point under consideration, is whether there is such priority of obligation or title between two persons as to justify the use of the admission of one against the other; and that must be determined by reference to the relation between the parties at the time the admission is made. Where the admission was made at a time when the parties had no community of interest, it cannot be used: A.I.R. 1954 Madh. Bh. 58.

As to statements by interested persons when binding, see 5 W.R. 268; 10 W.R. 89; 14 W.R. 484; 18 W.R. 105: 22 I.C. 714: 19 C.L.J. 1; A.I.R. 1945 Mad. 361: (1945) 1 M.L.J. 378 [Statement by a person jointly interested in the subject-matter of litigation (i.e.,) a brother of the party as to heirship of a deceased person is admissible].

Admission by some of brothers who are living undivided, in respect of disputed house property which is the subject-matter of the suit and in which all are jointly interested and amongst whom there is no friction, that their father and the eldest brother, who was given in adoption, held eight annas shares each in disputed property is binding on other brothers: I.L.R. (1962) Cut. 641.

In the case of joint family, the admissions of the father or the admissions of the managing member would not by their own force bind the other members of the family and the admissions cannot be used against them on the ground that the managing member or the father, as the case may be, did not satisfactorily account for those admissions. The junior members can always prove that the admissions are either untrue or incorrect. If the managing member or the father had made an admission while acting on behalf of the family or for acquiring properties for the family or for protecting the interests of the family and where, what he does is on behalf of himself and on behalf of the members of the family the admission made in that representative character may be used as against all the members. But, if such an admission was made by the managing member or by the father to advance his own interests and to acquire property for himself, and what he acquires would be his own acquisition which he is not bound to share with the other members or the sons, such an admission cannot bind the sons. The position is a fortiori if such an admission advances not only the personal interests of the managing member or the father but also prejudicially affects the interests of the other members: I.L.R. (1969) 1 Mad. 459: (1970) 1 M.L.J. 105: A.I.R. 1969 Mad. 329.

Office note put up for sanction of certain amount containing a statement to the effect that this amount was consideration for relinquishment of coparcenary rights by a person in an impartible estate—Same cannot have any probative value nor can be relevant evidence against person who is not a party or signatory to such note: (1961) 1 An.W.R. 183.

When several persons are jointly interested in the subject-matter of the proceedings relating to the grant of patta, the admissions of any one of those persons are receivable against himself and others; provided the admission related to the subject-matter in dispute and is made by the declarant in his character of a person jointly interested with the party against whom the evidence is tendered. The admissions are, however, rebuttable: I.L.R. (1960) 10 Raj. 6.

8. Admission by co-owner.—An admission of a relevant fact, it is fairly well settled, by a co-owner would operate against all co-owners, whether sued jointly or not, if it satisfied the triple test: (i) the admission is about the suit property (ii) by a jointly interested co-owner against his own interest (iii) but not collusive or fraudulently designed to wholly or partially deprive the other co-owners of their interest in the property. It would then bind all the co-owners or those claiming under them. [A.I.R. 1954 S.C. 355; A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 1724; I.L.R. 11 Cal. 588; A.I.R. 1946 Pat. 278 and A.I.R. 1976 Raj. 249, Foll.]: 1985 R.D. 135.

9. Admission by partner.—See I.L.R. 11 Cal. 588. An admission by one partner made in a representative capacity would be evidence against the firm. If in suit against a partnership for damages for infringement of trade mark, one of the partners admits the infringement but disputes the claim for damages, the admission will bind the other partners: 148 I.C. 763: A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 625.

Admissions by partner—Partners of partnership firm though dissolved, continuing to have identical interest in subject-matter of suit—Admission by partner is binding on other partners: 1965 Raj.L.W. 346: I.L.R. (1965) 15 Raj. 1035: A.I.R. 1966 Raj. 229.

10. Admission by member of community.—Statement made by a member of a community to the prejudice of his own right in a disputed graveyard does not bind the other members of his community in the absence of any proof that when he made the statement he occupied a representative capacity: A.I.R. 1949 All. 493: 1950 All.L.J. 21.

11. Admission by predecessor-in-interest.—Statements made by persons from whom the parties to a suit have derived their interest in the subject-matter of the suit are admissible as admissions only when the admissions are of date prior to the date of transfer. A purchaser is not bound by admission made by his vendor subsequent to the purchase made by him: Madh.B.L.J. (1954) H.C.R. 232: A.I.R. 1954 Madh. Bh. 58.

An admission made by a party's predecessor-in-interest in an earlier litigation, held, may be used against that party in another proceeding. [A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 341, Rel. on]: 1983 All.W.C. 296. See also 1976 W.L.N. (U.C.) 265 (Raj.).

There is a time lag between the recitals and the execution and it can hardly be said that the recitals and the execution are made exactly at the time of the execution. Under S. 47, Registration Act, the instrument after registration takes effect from the date of execution and not from that of registration. But it cannot be argued from this that the recitals in the sale deed also being made at the time of execution were made at the time when the vendor divests himself of his title. S. 47 cannot be legally extended by implication in its meaning beyond what it expressly provides for. The recitals in the sale deed were statements at a time when interest of the party in the property still continued and those statements of his were admission as against his successor-in-interest: A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 59.

Lease deed containing option for renewal—Lessee exercising the option by registered letter sent to lessor, before expiry of term of lease and prior to lessor's contract for sale of the property to another—Original letter not filed in suit for specific performance of contract for sale but lessor admitting lessee's exercise of option—Held, an assignee from lessee is entitled to take advantage of that admission and claim benefit of the option exercised by his assignor in resisting the attempts of transferee from lessor for ejecting him: A.I.R. 1954 Trav.-Co.10.

Any statement, made by a pre-emptor decree-holder after he had transferred the land with all the rights he possessed under the decree, is not a statement made on behalf of the transferee as at that time the pre-emptor transferor had no title in the property: A.I.R. 1953 Punj. 163: I.L.R. (1954) Punj. 15. Admission by predecessor-in-interest—Copies of original. See (1953-54) 58 Cal.W.N. 533.

12. Admission by co-defendant.—The general rule is that an admission can only be given in evidence against the party making it and not against any other party. In general, the statements of defence made by one defendant cannot be read in evidence either for or against his co-defendant, the reason being as there is no issue between the defendants, no opportunity for cross-examination is afforded. But this rule has no application to cases where the co-defendants have joint interest. It is not by virtue of a person's relationship to the litigation that the admission of one can be used against the other. It must be because of some privity of title or of obligation. This principle is deducible from S. 18 (1): I.L.R. (1962) Cut. 422: A.I.R. 1963 Ori. 45.

The admission of one defendant contained in a deposition in an earlier suit is not admissible in a subsequent suit against persons who were his co-defendants in the earlier suit: I.L.R. 20 Pat. 855. Admission not to be used against a co-defendant unless it is made in his character of a person jointly interested with the co-defendant: (1925-26) 30 Cal.W.N. 254: A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 705.

Co-defendants—Admission made by one defendant—Admission not binding on co-defendants unless interest of defendants in the suit be joint: A.I.R. 1965 Him. Pra. 32.

Admission by one of several co-defendants—Such admission can only bind the persons making it: 22 W.R. 519: I.L.R. 6 All. 395; I.L.R. 7 All. 353: 2 I.A. 113 (P.C.); 23 W.R. 214; 9 Cal.L.R. 359: 2 Cal.W.N. 166: I.L.R. 11 Cal. 588; A.I.R. 1971 All. 494.

An admission or even confession by a co-defendant is no evidence: (1927) 29 Punj.L.R. 715: A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 679; A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 721: 11 Lah.L.J. 404.

Admission by one of the defendants that the land in suit is ancestral is not binding on the others when they are not represented by him and have independent rights of their own: 122 I.C. 109: A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 238. See also 71 Cal.L.J. 200.

Admissions of liability made by some of several defendants in their written statements in the suit will not be evidence against the other defendants who have no opportunity of testing their veracity by cross-examining them. If the plaintiff wants to rely on such admissions he must examine the admitting defendants at the trial and make the admissions evidence: 44 Mys.H.C.R. 499: 18 Mys.L.J. 186.

When a co-defendant, who never appeared in the witness-box, made a statement in the written statement admitting the plaintiff's claim, held, his admission is not binding on the other defendant who had no opportunity to cross-examine him: A.I.R. 1982 Him. Pra. 57.

Where in a suit for ejectment against defendants 1 & 2 who were son and mother respectively, the defendant No. 1 had not contested the suit in the trial Court and the suit was contested by the defendant No. 2 on behalf of both the parties, held, even then defendant No. 1 will be entitled to file an appeal against the Judgment of the trial Court, but he will not be allowed to shun his disability of forfeiture of tenancy on account of the written statements filed by defendant No. 2 wherein she denied the title of the landlords: A.I.R. 1976 Raj. 249: 1976 Raj.L.W. 212: 1976 W.L.N. 44.

Where the defendant's brother in a document had admitted the defendant's title to suit properties and their alienation by the defendant to the plaintiffs and in their suit for possession of those properties on their title and the denial of execution of the document by the defendant's brother was disbelieved, held, the document, relied upon as admission, and not estoppel, was sufficient evidence to prove the defendant's title to the suit properties and their alienation by the defendant to the plaintiffs: A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 2548.

Where on scrutiny of the previous evidence of one of the co-defendants, the appellate Court considered it to be of no evidentiary value; the question whether his admission would bind the other defendants is of little importance: A.I.R. 1973 Pat. 310.

Where one of the two wives of the deceased, an issueless paternal uncle of the plaintiff, impleaded as a defendant in a suit for partition on the basis of adoption had common interest with the plaintiff and admitted the plaintiff's claim of adoption, held, her admission could not be used against the other wife; in fact, she should have been made a co-plaintiff in the suit: (1994) 2 An.L.T. 445.

13. Admission by landlord.—An admission made by a landlord after the tenancy has been created and after the controversy has arisen about the rights of the tenants cannot be said to be an admission by a person from whom the tenants have derived their interest in the subject-matter of the suit within the meaning of S. 18 of the Evidence Act: 1952 Raj.L.W. 133.

14. Admissions by counsel, attorneys and pleaders.—As to circumstances when they are binding on the client and when not, see I.L.R. 18 Mad. 73; (1945) 47 Bom.L.R. 114: I.L.R. (1945) Bom. 390: A.I.R. 1945 Bom. 351. Admission by pleader in lower Court cannot be set aside by engaging another pleader in appeal. See 102 I.C. 283: A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 248, following 9 W.R. 465; 2 M.I.A. 253; 6 Cal.W.N. 52; I.L.R. 21 Mad. 274; I.L.R. 22 Mad. 538 (adverse opinion expressed by vakil in argument not binding on client); 9 W.R. 375; 6 Cal.W.N. 62; I.L.R. 21 Mad. 724; I.L.R. 22 Mad. 538 (admission of fact by a vakil is binding on client); A.I.R. 1956 Him. Pra. 68 (Do.). But see also 17 W.R. (Cr.) 49, where the Court held that such admissions are not binding in criminal cases. See also I.L.R. 27 Cal. 421; nor when they relate to matters of law. See 18 W.R. 359 at 367; 16 W.R. 246; A.I.R. 1934 All. 531.

Suit for declaring land acquisition proceedings null and void — Locus standi of plaintiff questioned — Plaintiff relying on statement of Government Counsel admitting his title to land on date of notification under S. 4 (1), Land Acquisition Act—But statement also asserting valid termination of plaintiff's interest by acquisition and that the acquisition has to be taken as a whole and if full effect is given to it, it will prove fatal to plaintiff's case even if it was sufficient to prove his title on date of notification under S. 4 of Land Acquisition Act: I.L.R. (1969) 1 Cal. 529.

An admission made by a counsel in the course of a proceeding can be withdrawn unless circumstances are such as to give rise to an estoppel. If the other party has acted to his prejudice on the faith of that admission, it may not be allowed to be withdrawn. [(1825) 8 Bing. 119; (1835) 3 Knapp 375, Rel. on]: (1967) 1 An.L.T. 182: A.I.R. 1967 Andh. Pra. 211.

Admission by plaintiff's counsel — On point of law—Not binding on plaintiff: (1963) 65 Punj.L.R. 792. See also S. 17, Note 10, supra.

The concession on a point of law made by an Advocate will not bind a party. The plea of res judicata being a pure question of law can be raised at any stage provided that the necessary evidence is on record: 1966 B.L.J.R. 237: A.I.R. 1966 Pat. 235.

An erroneous concession of law made by an advocate of a party cannot be relied upon for saving the adversary: A.I.R. 1956 Manipur 18.

When it was the clear case of the plaintiffs that they were the owners of the suit land, it cannot be accepted that the plaintiffs' counsel would admit the ownership of the Gram Panchayat treating the plaintiffs as tenants. Thus, where writing to that effect had been made by the trial Judge who had signed it and the signature of the plaintiffs' counsel was on the left side of the Judge's signature, held, such a writing could not be said to be an admission of the plaintiffs' counsel: 1995 Punj.L.J. 156.

Where in a suit by a contractor for damages for breach of contract, the contractor (plaintiff) contended that the counsel of the defendant conceded at the time of argument before the Special Referee that on termination of contract, the plaintiff would have been paid certain amount as one months remuneration in lieu of one month's notice, held, the lawyer's concession could not be treated as an admission of fact binding on the defendant as there was no occasion for adducing any secondary evidence as the original contract was before the Special Referee: (1988) 2 Cal.L.T. (H.C.) 136 (D.B.).

Where in a prosecution under S. 109 forging a sale deed, the complainant's specimen thumb impressions were taken for comparison with the thumb impressions on the forged document, though not in the presence of the Court but the accused's counsel admitted that they were so taken, held, the trial Court could not decline to rely upon the accused's counsel's sworn testimony about something which happened during the trial; the rule that the accused are not bound by their counsel's admission is not attracted in such a case: A.I.R. 1973 S.C. 1100: (1973) 1 S.C.C. 564: 1973 Cr.L.J. 858.

Suggestions put in cross-examination are no evidence at all against the accused and on the basis of such suggestions no inference can be drawn against the accused that he admitted the facts referred to in the suggestions. It is possible that in putting suggestions the lawyer of the accused, if he thinks fit and proper, may not put the entire case of the accused in the cross-examination of a prosecution witness.

Therefore, the accused is entitled to the benefit of the plea set up by the lawyer but it cannot be said that the plea or defence which his lawyer puts forward must bind the accused. The reason is that in a criminal case a lawyer appears to defend the accused and has no implied authority to make admissions against his client during the progress of the litigation either for the purpose of dispensing with proof at the trial or incidentally as to any facts of the case. It is, therefore, evident that role that a defence lawyer plays in a criminal trial is that of assisting the accused in defending his case. The lawyer has no implied authority to admit the guilt or facts incriminating the accused. [A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 1, Rel. on].

There is another principle which is equally to be borne in mind that suggestions made in the cross-examination of prosecution witnesses cannot be used to fill in the gaps in the evidence of prosecution. Burden lies on the prosecution to prove the guilt of the accused. Such suggestions in any case cannot stand higher than the statement of the accused under S. 342 of the Criminal Procedure Code: 1969 Cr.L.J. 409: (1969) 10 Guj. L.R. 245: I.L.R. (1968) Guj. 173: A.I.R. 1969 Guj. 69.

Suggestions put are no evidence at all against the accused. Thus, suggestion by the defence counsel to the prosecutrix, in a prosecution for rape under S. 376, I.P.Code, about consent on her part would not amount to admission of guilt on behalf of the accused: 1991 Cr.L.J. 1925 (Madh. Pra.).

15. Admissions by accused.—It cannot be said that Ss. 18 to 21 do not apply to admissions in criminal cases. The illustrations given apply to criminal cases, and there is nothing in the sections to suggest that they apply to civil cases only. Incriminating statements by an accused under S. 164, Cr.P.Code, though not admissible as confessions in evidence may be admitted as admissions against interest under Ss. 18 to 21. The fact, that the statement is not a full confession but is only a partial confession or something less than a confession or is of a self-exculpatory nature cannot be made a ground for excluding it either from evidence or from consideration. It is true that extra-judicial confessions are to be regarded with caution, but it does not follow that they are always to be rejected. They may be made in such circumstances as to have no reasonable doubt as to their truth: I.L.R. (1941) Kar. 257: A.I.R. 1941 Sind 129.

Extra-judicial confession being only an admission—Held, that admission could be considered alongwith other evidence: A.I.R. 1955 Kutch 1: 1955 Cr.L.J. 177. Letters written by accused held were evidence only against themselves: A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 747.

A statement by the accused which amounts to an admission that he was present at the scene of the crime and that he was accompanying the persons who had committed the crime and which is otherwise exculpatory, fixing the sole guilt on the other man, although entirely inadmissible as against the other accused, is admissible for what it is worth, against the person making it under S. 18, vide Illus. (c) and (d) to S. 21: 162 I.C. 6: A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 131. An admission of incriminating facts made by an accused person to a Magistrate under S. 164, Cr.P. Code or a statement made to the Court during the course of the trial, admitting that he was at the scene of the crime when the murder took place, cannot be ruled out as inadmissible in evidence. It is admissible, in evidence for what it is worth against the accused making it under Ss. 18 to 21. Such a statement is not a confession. A confession must either admit in terms the offences or at any rate substantially all the facts which constitute the offence: I.L.R. (1939) Kar. 800: A.I.R. 1940 Sind 53.

Where the accused merely made a general statement that he used to keep the bags of foodgrains left with him by the businessmen and nowhere he had stated that those particular bags were kept for sale and the Court had rejected the prosecution case that the accused was a grain dealer, held, that the statement itself did not make out all the necessary ingredients of the offence to prove that the bags were stored 'for sale' under S. 3(1) of U.P. Foodgrains Control Order (1949) and the conviction could not stand: 1952 All.L.J. 571: A.I.R. 1953 All. 101.

Where during the trial of the accused under S. 326, Penal Code, the accused filed applications to the effect that they never intended to cause injury to the complainant, that the injury was caused accidentally and they felt extremely sorry that the complainant was injured and that they should, therefore, be pardoned.

Held, that the statements did not amount to an unequivocal admission of guilt on the part of the accused and their conviction based on the alleged admissions in the petitions would be illegal: (1964) 1 Cr.L.J. 460 (Mys.).

Scope—Charge under Ss. 302, 149 and S. 120-B, I.P. Code—Statement by accused under S. 164, Cr. P. Code—Accused exculpating himself but only admitting his presence at the place of occurrence—Weight of statement—It can only be treated as admission of the fact of his presence—Statement does not amount to confession and what is stated by accused against co-accused cannot be used as evidence against other co-accused: A.I.R. 1970 Ori. 100.

Admission by co-accused—Admission can be considered against other accused if there is other evidence to prove his guilt: 1969 Mad.L.W. (Cr.) 68.

Confession of co-accused—Can only be used to lend assurance to other evidence against the accused—When other substantive evidence is absent, confession cannot be basis of conviction of other accused persons: A.I.R. 1966 Pat. 448.

Where an accused obtained acquittal in a criminal revision in the High Court by admitting that he would not interfere with the defendant's rights, held, it did not amount to an unqualified admission; it only amounted to an undertaking not to take law into his own hands; besides, it was an admission made in terrorem; he was, therefore, not precluded from suing the defendants under S. 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure for framing of a Scheme: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 1569: (1976) 4 S.C.C. 780: (1976) 3 S.C.R. 721.

Third proviso to S. 33 and Explanation thereto—Suit for declaration of title and recovery of possession—Evidence of deceased witness from whom plaintiff purchased suit land given in a criminal case launched against defendant by plaintiff—Admissibility—Issue in criminal cases was as to who had grown the crops said to have been cut away by defendant and as to who was in possession—Every fact stated in evidence that deceased sold land to plaintiff for consideration and of the possession of witness before he parted with land and that the Hukumnama in favour of descendant was not executed by him taken as true—To the extent issues were not substantially the same in criminal trial and suit, evidence of deceased person was, held, inadmissible: 1969 Pat.L.J.R. 219.

16. Admission in pleading/written statement.—[See also S. 58]. Admission in pleadings or judicial admissions by themselves can be made the foundation of the rights of the parties. [A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 471, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1986 All. 126; (1987) 1 Cal.L.J. 188: (1987) 1 Cal.H.N. 220: (1986-87) 91 Cal.W.N. 971.

True, an admission contained in a pleading is binding on the party in the sense that the party cannot thereafter be permitted to take up a different stand; this does not mean that such an admission cannot be relied upon as a piece of admissible evidence in subsequent proceedings; however, its maker can show that the admission was made under some mis-apprehension or that it did not really mean what it purports to convey: 1971 All.L.J. 1027 (D.B.).

Though statements and pleadings are not automatically accepted as evidence, yet statements made by a person against his own interest and at times when he could have explained the correct facts would be admissible; the effect of such candid admissions cannot be lightly got over by their maker. [A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 341, Rel. on]: (1978) 1 M.L.J. 56: 1978 Hindu L.R. 525.

When a fact pleaded in plaint is not specifically denied, but mere ignorance about its existence is pleaded, in such cases unless by necessary implication it amounts to denial of the fact pleaded, mere plea of ignorance amounts to admission of fact: A.I.R. 1994 Raj. 133.

A person making any admission in his pleading cannot take advantage of the same; the party in whose favour the admission is made may get benefit of the same: A.I.R. 1975 Cal. 203 (D.B.).

Where the plaintiff's admission in his plaint in an earlier suit is not properly verified, held, it cannot be used against him in another case wherein that plaintiff is a defendant: (1976) 2 Cal.L.J. 113 (D.B.).

Though parties' averments in pleadings may become admissions and may be used against their maker but their value and the rule of admissions are controlled by Ss. 18 to 23 and S. 31; that is why S. 31 cautions that admissions are not conclusive proof but may operate as estoppel. The law is settled that admissions of a party bind the other if they have a common interest but not their status as parties arrayed in the proceedings. Case law discussed: (1994) 2 An.L.T. 445.

S. 17 makes no difference between the admission made by a party in a pleading and other admissions. Under the Indian Law, an admission made by a party in a plaint signed and verified by him may be used as evidence against him in other suits. If the parties have taken up a particular position before the Court at one stage of a litigation, it is not open to them to approbate and reprobate and resile from that position. This wholesome doctrine applied not only to the successive stages of the same but also to another suit than the one in which the position was taken up: (1994-2) 104 Punj.L.R. 745. See also (1989-1) 9 Guj.L.H. 539: (1989-1) 30 Guj.L.R. 183 (D.B.).

The admission made by a party to the suit is admissible against him proprie vigore and in order to make such admission admissible in evidence, it is not even necessary to bring the said fact to the notice of the person making such an admission. [A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 117, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1991 Pat. 203.

Admission made in pleadings are conclusive and no further evidence is required. However, evidentiary admissions are not conclusive proof of a fact admitted; they may be explained or shown to be wrong. The evidentiary admissions shift the burden of proof on the persons making them or the representatives claiming through them to show that they are wrong or are not binding; in the absence of such a proof they are the best evidence: (1989) 1 Hindu L.R. 125: (1989) 1 Rev.L.R. 145 (P.&H.).

Where the plaintiff filed suit on title and there were admissions of parties contradicting each other, held, admissions did not cancel each other; the Court has to assess evidentiary value of the admissions and accept one in preference to other: 1980 Mah.L.J. 205.

Admission in pleading—Exclusion from joint family property—Onus of proof—Nature of evidence—Averment in plaint that plaintiff left joint family with his mother—Plaintiff minor at the time—Suit for partition on plaintiff attaining majority—Admission not binding on plaintiff as it was not clear and specific—Limitation starts from the date party attains majority or from date of exclusion from joint family property—Onus of proof of expulsion is on opposite party: I.L.R. (1965) 1 Mad. 711: (1964) 77 Mad.L.W. 697: A.I.R. 1965 Mad. 200.

Plea of defendant in written statement not denied by plaintiff in his replication—No change made in such plea by amendment—Admission in replication to the original written statement will operate as an admission: A.I.R. 1967 Del. 22.

A person may acquire title by inheritance and the like. Ownership is a mixed question of law and fact and until and unless the plaintiff-landlord in an eviction case has alleged his mode of acquisition of property in dispute specifically as to how he acquired the property in the plaint, vague allegations about ownership in the written statement of the defendant cannot be deemed to have been admitted by the other side: A.I.R. 1994 All. 174.

17. Admission in pleading/written statement to be read as a whole.—Admissions in pleadings to be binding must be taken as a whole—Admissions in witness box: A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 364; A.I.R. 1965 Pat. 262.

When an admission in a pleading is supplemented by a further statement depending and conditional upon the admission, all of them should be taken and considered together; but if the admission is unconditional and the further admission is not conditional or based on the earlier admission this principle will not apply. Where in an eviction case the landlord's assertion of the tenancy being created on 25th of the English calendar was admitted but the tenant further stated that by mutual agreement, the rent was paid according to English calendar month, held , such admission being unconditional, did not depend on the tenant's other admission about the commencement of the tenancy; it was not necessary to treat the defence of subsequent conversion of the tenancy 'according to English calendar month' as a part of the first admission: A.I.R. 1978 Cal. 123: (1976-77) 81 Cal.W.N.629: 1978 Cal.H.N. 356.

Admission in written statement must be taken as a whole or not at all: A.I.R. 1970 Madh. Pra. 40.

Dissection of an admission in parts arising out of the pleadings is not permissible. [A.I.R. 1970 Madh. Pra. 40, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1975 Pat. 168; 1980 Hindu L.R. 654 (P.&H.).

Admissions in written statement—Acceptability in part or whole: A.I.R. 1967 Cal. 294. See also 1980 Mah.L.J. 477.

A plaintiff cannot be allowed to dissect a written statement; if the plaintiff wants to avail of those parts of the written statement or the additional written statement which are favourable to him and to discard the other parts not favourable to him, such dissection of written statement being not permissible, the plaintiff's suit cannot be allowed to succeed in view of the variance between the written statement and the evidence of the defendant : A.I.R. 1985 Cal. 233.

Where the defendant in his written statement had admitted the execution of a sale-deed in favour of the plaintiff in respect of half-share in the suit property, held, non-production by the plaintiff of the said sale-deed in the Court was of no effect: A.I.R. 1980 Ori. 54: 49 Cut.L.T. 215: I.L.R. (1979) 2 Cut. 542.

Withdrawal of admission by amendment—An admission of a fact in written statement which had been drafted at the defendant's instance, held, cannot be withdrawn by him by filing an application for amendment of the written statement: A.I.R. 1988 P.&H. 53: 1987 Punj.L.J. 184.

Where the plaintiff had filed a suit for possession for 1/9th share pleading that defendants were collaterals owning the remaining share but subsequently, sought amendment of the plaint to plead that he was the sole collateral and the defendants were merely mortgagees, held, it is always open to a party to show that the admission was wrong; if the defendants were the collaterals of an equal degree to the plaintiff, it will be open to them to show the same and if they so establish then the plaintiff will fail inspite of amendment. But in case the plaintiff was not given opportunity to back out of the wrong admission, he would not be able to show that the admission was wrong. On the peculiar facts of this case it was justified in the interest of justice to allow amendment in this behalf: 1991 Punj.L.J. 154: (1991-2) 100 Punj.L.R. 617.

18. Admission in previous litigation.—The admission contained in a pleading of a former litigation, is indeed an admission in the true sense and is certainly available to be used for all purposes. It cannot be kept out by saying that it was an admission in a former litigation and was meant for that proceeding alone and thus cannot be taken to be an admission binding in any other suit or for all times to come. Such a distinction is not open in law to be made. If it is an admission, it is so and is certainly an admission for all times to come. Unless explained away properly, an admission is the best available support for the adversary: A.I.R. 1971 Ori. 267: (1971) 1 Cut.W.R. 269; 1981 B.B.C.J. 74; (1990) 1 Ker.L.J. 354: (1990) 1 Ker.L.T. 559.

The Court is entitled to consider the admission solemnly made by a party in the course of a proceeding, in the other suit if it concerns the subject-matter in dispute. However, such an admission cannot be regarded as conclusive and the party can show that it was not true: A.I.R. 1984 Pat. 191: 1984 Pat.L.J.R. 407; (1985-2) 26 Guj.L.R. 644.

Evidence of admissions made in the prior litigation but not produced in the subsequent litigation, held, cannot be deemed to be evidence in the subsequent case: A.I.R. 1983 Andh Pra. 219: (1983) 1 A.P.L.J. 29: (1983) 1 An.L.T. 47: (1983) 2 An.W.R. 1.

Previous admissions of a party can be taken into account against him even if he was not confronted with the same when he appeared in the witness box in the subsequent proceedings. [A.I.R. 1946 Lah. 65 (F.B.) held to have been disapproved in A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 405]: A.I.R. 1971 P.&H. 177 (D.B.).

A duly proved admission, even if its maker appears as a witness or not or has been confronted with it or not, is admissible in evidence. The purpose of contradicting the witness under S. 145 is quite different from the purpose of proving the admission; an admission is substantive evidence of the fact admitted while a previous statement used to contradict the witness is not; the latter only throws doubt on the veracity of the witness; but the weight to be attached to an admission as evidence is an altogether a different thing : (1972) 38 Cut.L.T. 161; A.I.R. 1977 N.O.C. 358 (All.).

When admission in previous litigation is not clear, held, it cannot be availed of: 1983 M.P.W.N. 261.

There is a distinction between admission contained in the pleading of a party and an admission contained in some earlier proceedings or extra-judicial admission. The former stands on a higher footing: 1977 R.D. 419 (All.).

A statement in a pleading cannot be evidence in subsequent proceedings before a Court of law unless it amounts to an admission. Where in a previous suit for recovery of rent, the predecessors of defendant-tenant had, in their written statement, stated that while they were ready and willing to pay the rent up to certain date, they were not responsible to pay any rent after that date as the rented premises had fallen down due to lack of repair, held, in a subsequent suit for declaration of title by the landlord, the said statement in the written statement by the predecessors of tenant, could not be said to be any admission on their part that they surrendered the tenancy; had the earlier suit been one for declaration of title and there, in the written statement, something as to their own status and capacity had been pleaded by the defendants, certainly then it would have been an admission: A.I.R. 1971 All. 273: 1971 All.W.R. (H.C.) 26.

It is well known that an admission by the adverse party is decisive, though not conclusive, proof of the facts admitted; an admission in the written statement in another litigation will be a substantive evidence in a subsequent litigation even if its maker is not confronted with it; but the maker of the admission may explain it away by showing that it was not true and was made to serve an ulterior purpose. [A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 341 and A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 405, Foll.]: (1972) 38 Cut.L.T. 110. See also (1992) 3 Karn.L.J. 685: I.L.R. (1992) 1 Karn. 2905.

Defendants in previous suit pleading plaintiffs were tenants and, hence, there is no question of title by adverse possession—Previous suit dismissed without issue on the point—Subsequently defendants filing suit for possession on ground that plaintiffs were trespassers—Admission by defendants in earlier suit that plaintiffs were tenants held to be erroneous—Before doctrine of approbate and reprobate will apply, there has to be estoppel in one form or the other—As there was nothing that made plaintiffs alter their position in any manner and in both suits plaintiffs claimed ownership of land, doctrine did not apply: A.I.R. 1967 Punj. 328.

Where a plaint containing an admission is subsequently amended, the admission contained in the original plaint cannot be considered to be of any value. Admissions contained in a plaint cannot be utilised in part and rejected in part: 1942 O.W.N. (B.R.) 209: 1942 I.A. (Supp.) 150.

Mere withdrawal of a suit does not destroy the effect of an admission made by a party therein. [Correctness of 9 Cal.W.N. 147 (Notes), doubted]: (1955-56) 60 Cal.W.N. 1006: A.I.R. 1956 Cal. 577.

The absence of denial in written statement of an allegation in the plaint may amount to an admission only for the purpose of that suit, and cannot have the effect of an admission capable of being proved under S. 17 in another litigation: (1946) 48 Punj.L.R. 21: A.I.R. 1946 Lah. 256.

Adverse admissions made in a prior suit are not conclusive—Such admissions are, however, strong pieces of evidence against the maker—It can be proved wrong or untrue and the burden of proof is on the party making it—Such admissions, made in a prior suit, though not binding on the party making it, have great evidentiary value: 1967

Raj.L.W. 63: I.L.R. (1966) 16 Raj. 1047: A.I.R. 1968 Raj. 51.

Admission by party—Statement by party made in one litigation can be used against person claiming under that party in another litigation: (1962) 64 Bom.L.R. 322: I.L.R. (1962) Bom. 417: A.I.R. 1963 Bom. 100.

Admission in the pleading of a previous suit—Admission binds the party making it in a subsequent suit—Admission can be used against him in the subsequent suit—Admission by agent without instigation of or without benefit to principal is not binding on principal: A.I.R. 1969 Pat. 385. Admission by party in earlier suit between same parties. See (1981-82) 86 Cal.W.N. 516.

It is not correct to say that an admission of a question of fact made by a party in the course of a proceeding has in another proceeding no value whatever and cannot be regulated as a good piece of evidence relying on which the opposing party may contend that the claim made in the subsequent proceedings is unjustifiable. The Court is certainly entitled to consider admissions solemnly made by a party in the course of proceedings in other suits relating to the same subject-matter: (1959) 61 Bom.L.R. 792: I.L.R. (1959) Bom. 1144: A.I.R. 1960 Bom. 153. See also (1989-1) 30 Guj.L.R. 183.

An alleged admission contained in a deposition made in previous probate case by the defendant cannot be used against the defendant when it is not put to her and no opportunity is afforded to her to explain it. It is no answer to say, that the plaintiff had no opportunity to confront defendant with the statement as her deposition on the point in the probate case was given after her deposition in the suit. If her deposition in the probate case be allowed to be put in evidence against her in the subsequent suit in order to contradict her without giving her an opportunity to tender her explanation or to clear up the particular point of ambiguity or dispute, it will be acting contrary to general principles of law: A.I.R. 1955 Cal. 206: (1953-54) 58 Cal.W.N. 980. On this point see also Notes under S. 21, infra.

S. 18 permits a previous statement made by the accused being tendered in evidence against him in the course of a criminal trial. It depends upon the Court trying the accused as to what value should be attached to that statement when proved: 1958 Raj.L.W. 417: 1958 Cr.L.J. 1241: A.I.R. 1958 Raj. 240: I.L.R. (1957) 7 Raj. 756.

A previous admission cannot be taken into consideration in a later case unless it is legally proved on record. Recitals in a judgment are no evidence to prove the exact admission made unless the whole of the statement is recited therein. A previous admission, however, cannot be excluded from consideration in a later case simply because it was not put to the maker thereof: 1966 Cur. L.J. 537.

Admission cannot be proved by recital in judgment: 1953 B.L.J.R. 234: A.I.R. 1953 Pat. 346.

It is true that the judgment of the criminal Court cannot be used for the purposes to prove that whatever has been written in this is correct as S. 43 clearly lays down that they are irrelevant unless comes under exceptions covered by Ss. 40, 41 and 42 and, thus, it is not necessary to consider, whether any of the exceptions can be invoked or not, when the admission in the criminal proceedings was not on the question of law but on question of fact: 1986 Raj.L.W. 217.

If in a particular case an admission or consent is in relation to possession at the time of the compromise, that admission or consent is admissible even in the title proceeding. When a regular Court is called upon to decide or adjudicate the title of the parties, it can take into consideration the fact that in mutation proceedings one party had admitted or consented in respect of their possession: 1979 All.L.J. 640: 1979 All.W.C. 302; 1979 All.W.C. 299.

Admission in land acquisition cases that the properties were endowed properties is relevant to support endowment: I.L.R. (1975) Karn. 1708.

In a suit before revenue authorities for declaration of title and possession in respect of a plot, held, though an order passed in correction of paper case is not binding, any admission made therein is admissible on the question of possession: A.I.R. 1980 All. 408.

An admission made by the owner of the truck involved in the accident before the police during investigation of the criminal case against the driver would be relevant and admissible in the proceedings before the Claims Tribunal: (1981) 1 Karn.L.J. 178 (D.B.). Admission by the accused in a criminal case that he was driving the truck, held, can be pressed into service in compensation case to corroborate the testimony of the witnesses that he was the driver of the truck involved in the accident: A.I.R. 1976 Raj. 71: 1975 Raj.L.W. 399.

19. Admission regarding relationship of husband and wife.—An admission of a husband in his counter-affidavit in a former similar litigation between the parties recognising the other party as his wife, held, is an admission against his own interest; it is relevant, needs no proof and cannot be ignored because the husband has retracted from it: 1973 Mad.L.W. (Cr.) 8: 1975 Cr.L.J. 28.

The admission made by a party to a marriage might be actuated by an ulterior motive; it cannot by itself be used as evidence; it has to be considered on facts of each case whether the admission is so actuated or not; in the absence of any occasion for any such ulterior motive, the admission would bind its maker unless it is explained away by the maker himself. Thus, where in a suit for declaration of title the plaintiffs produced a 33 years' old sale deed wherein their father had admitted their mother to be his wife and there could then be no motive for him to make a false statement in the deed, the admission conclusively proved that the plaintiffs' mother was indeed the legally wedded wife of their father: A.I.R. 1989 Mad. 252: (1988-2) 102 Mad.L.W. 348: (1989) 1 Hindu L.R. 29: (1989) 1 Hindu L.R. 656: (1989) 1 D.M.C. 420.

Where a husband, despite his first wife, had been cohabiting for three decades with another woman and had begotten 6 children from the union and he had issued invitation cards for marriages of his daughters long before his death holding himself out as their father and both the women as his wives, and the cards showed his brothers as extending compliments to the invitees, held, the evidence of his first wife, his daughter from the first wife and his brothers in a suit between the first wife and her daughter and his second wife and her children after his death in 1978, about the husband's property to the effect that the second wife was not the deceased's legally wedded wife but only a concubine is negatived by the deceased's statement supported by the witnesses in the invitation card; it amounted to the deceased's admission which bound the parties as well as the witnesses: A.I.R. 1994 Karn. 247 (D.B.).

Where in a title suit the defendant, in his written statement, admitted that his father was married to plaintiff's mother in accordance with 'Henga' form of marriage, held, even though he did not come to the witness Box in support of his said averment, he could not be allowed to say that there was no marriage between the above mentioned parties according to 'Henga' custom of marriage: A.I.R. 1981 Gau. 42.

Where a husband in defence to a claim for maintenance under S. 125 of the Code of Criminal Procedure denied marriage, admitting only cohabitation, contended that he was married to another woman begetting a son and a daughter from the wedlock and the trial Magistrate concluded on the basis of earlier proceedings for maintenance by the first wife that the earlier marriage had been dissolved by customary divorce but the Sessions Judge in revision reversed that finding on the ground that the first wife was absent at the 'Nati Panch' meeting where divorce was talked about and no custom was pleaded or proved that such divorce is effective even in the absence of the first wife, held, the Sessions Judge having acted within his jurisdiction, the High Court could not interfere in revision: (1991-2) 11 Guj.L.H. 127.

Where in a proceeding for restitution of conjugal rights, the respondent categorically stated that no marriage had taken place between her and the petitioner, held, in absence of evidence that essential ceremonies of valid marriage had been performed, a vague admission in the statement of the respondent, in a proceeding under S. 97 of the Code of Criminal Procedure regarding factum of marriage between the parties, cannot be allowed to fill up the lacuna in the petitioner's evidence: 1980 Hindu L.R. 157 (P.&H.).

Where in a proceeding for maintenance, the husband filed an application that a compromise was entered into between the parties whereunder the wife was to remain at her parents' place and the husband was to send a monthly sum as stipulated in the compromise, held, there could not be a greater abuse of the process of law then, in spite of detailed admission concerning entering into compromise and acting upon it, to come forward and urge that decree awarding maintenance was ex parte, that the husband had no knowledge of the proceeding, that the compromise was signed by an imposter: 1984 Hindu L.R. 322 (All.).

A conviction under S. 494, I.P.Code, cannot be sustained on the presumption that all the rites and ceremonies for a valid marriage must have been performed unless the observance of the requisite form and performance of the necessary ceremonies are affirmatively proved. A mere letter written by the co-accused woman, the wife to the second marriage, wherein she had stated that she had already disclosed to others that she and the accused-husband were already married and that she had to suffer very much from that marriage, held, cannot be relied upon for convicting accused for the offence of Bigamy: 1992 Cr.L.J. 1502 (Cal.) (D.B.).

20. Admission by person from whom interest derived.—Though under S. 18, statements made by persons from whom the parties to the suit have derived their interest in the subject-matter of the suit, are binding on such parties as their admissions; nevertheless, before the same may bind them, it has further to be shown that the statements were made by those persons during the continuance of their interest in the subject-matter, and obviously so, because it would be highly unjust and improper to divest a person of his right in the property, lawfully acquired by him from another, on the basis of the latter's admission, after his own interest in the property has ceased to exist: A.I.R. 1983 J.&K. 29.

Merely because documents more than 30 years old are presumed to be duly executed raises no presumption that their contents are true. But once the execution of such a document is presumed, it would amount to the executant's admission about the truth of the statements in the recitals; the third party, not a signatory to the document, may not be bound by it but the admission can be pressed in service against the executant's successor-in-interest; that is the combined effect of Ss. 17, 18(2) and 21: A.I.R. 1981 Guj. 142: (1981) 22 Guj.L.R. 389.

An admission, in respect of property sold, made by vendor in favour of third party after sale, held, is not binding on the vendee: 1982 Raj.L.W. 345: 1982 W.L.N. 81. This rule can be strictly applied in all cases: (1989) 1 Raj. L.R. 922. See also 1981 All.W.C. (Rev.) 65.

21. Miscellaneous.—Admission of liability by the principal debtor, held, is no proof against the surety: A.I.R. 1978 N.O.C. 207 (Cal.).

Where a dealer appointed by the Indian Oil Corporation for operating a petrol pump under contract was given lease of the site for 99 years without any right to assign or transfer the premises or any part thereof or his interest in the dealership; on framing of a town planning scheme by the Municipal Corporation under S. 203(1) (c) of the Haryana Municipal Act, 1973, the dealer surrendered to the Municipal Corporation one fourth of his unbuilt area against compensation therefor as its owner, held, the transfer of land was for the limited purpose of development; in law, the possession and ownership still remained with the owner; the dealer's statement admitting the Municipal Corporation to be the owner, being in ignorance of the legal position, had no legal consequence; it did not divest the dealer of his rights in the site nor did it vest the transferred land's ownership in the Municipal Corporation: 1989 Punj.L.J. 424.

In a trial for dacoity, 'A' claiming to be 'B', who had attested the Panchnama, was examined as such—Subsequently, he was found to be imposter—Prosecution of that person alongwith the appellant, a Sub-Inspector of Police, who produced him and had deposed that he was 'B'—Held, in view of admissions of the appellant in the trial Court that he knew 'B' very well and in reply to show-cause notice and in his deposition before the Court he had asserted that the person examined was 'B' and was the person who had attested the Panchnama, the plea that the appellant gave evidence under an erroneous impression could not be entertained: A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 1789: 1973 Mah.L.J. 883.

Evidence as to admissions and promises made by alleged thieves before a panchayat is admissible without proof of the actual words used: 13 P.R. 1914 (Cr.): 26 I.C. 625. Bhatwara Kesra is admissible in evidence: A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 32: I.L.R. 7 Pat. 85.

19. Admissions by persons whose position must be proved as against party to suit.—Statements made by persons whose position or liability it is necessary to prove as against any party to the suit, are admissions, if such statements would be relevant as against such persons in relation to such position or liability in a suit brought by or against them, and if they are made whilst the person making them occupies such position or is subject to such liability.

A undertakes to collect rents for B.

B sues A for not collecting rent due from C to B.

A denies that rent was due from C to B.

A statement by C that he owed B rent is an admission, and is a relevant fact as against A, if A denies that C did owe rent to B.

20. Admissions by persons expressly referred to by party to suit.—Statements made by persons to whom a party to the suit has expressly referred for information in reference to a matter in dispute are admissions.

The question is, whether a horse sold by A to B is sound.

A says to B—"Go and ask C, C knows all about it". C's statement is an admission.

Section 19—Notes.

On the section, see I.L.R. 5 Mad. 239; 25 M.L.J. 51; 25 M.L.J. 329: 20 I.C. 792; 602 I.C. 417. Ss. 19 and 20 are exceptions to the general rule in S. 18. Admission by immediate reversioner that alienation was proper is not binding on actual reversioners even though they be his sons—Nobody has a vested right so long as the widow is alive and the eventual reversioner does not claim through anyone who went before him. The actual reversioners do not claim as heirs of their father but as heirs of the last holder. See A.I.R. 1954 S.C. 505.

Where in a suit for eviction for bona fide requirement, the tenant pleaded that one G had negotiated and executed an agreement for sale of the demised property on behalf of the landlord with the tenant in his own handwriting, which G denied when confronted in cross-examination whereupon the tenant's request to send the agreement to a handwriting expert was declined by the trial Court for the reason that the agreement was used by the tenant only for the limited purpose of discrediting the credibility of the witness by confronting with his previous inconsistent statement, held, the agreement was not limited to such purpose alone; the agreement could be substantive evidence against the landlord to prove not only that it was in G's writing but also that G was acting as an authorised agent of the landlord; case remanded: A.I.R. 1977 Karn. 113.

Where plaintiff, who approached the Court for letters of administration after a lapse of 20 years, satisfactorily explained the delay, held, delay was not fatal to the plaintiff's case. Further, preferential heirs to the estate of deceased had also admitted execution of will. Therefore, suspicious circumstances pleaded by the defendants, namely, delay in approaching the Court for letters of administration, was of no consequence: A.I.R. 1995 Ori. 131 (D.B.).

Section 20—Notes.

See also notes under S. 18, supra. S. 20 contemplates the existence of three parties: first, the party who refers; secondly, the party who is referred; and thirdly, the party to whom the reference is made. The principle is that when one party refers another second party to a third party for information, the first party is presumed to undertake to adopt as his own the information furnished by the third party. These conditions cannot be said to be fulfilled where a master calls for a report from a servant, regarding the conduct of another servant who is dismissed for misconduct, where there is nothing to indiciate that in doing so the master intends to regard the servant's report as conclusive on the matter. S. 20 cannot apply to such a case and the report of the servant cannot become admissible as against the master in a suit for damages for wrongful dismissal even if such report corroborates the version of the dismissed servant (plaintiff): (1935-36) 40 Cal.W.N. 865.

If the Court with the consent of the parties or with their acquiescence departs from the usual course of procedure (governing the case) and decides a question of fact, held, the parties are bound by the order: A.I.R. 1987 Ker. 42. A litigant cannot be permitted to challenge to his own advantage the validity of procedure suggested or consented to by him on the result thereof going against him: A.I.R. 1993 Madh. Pra. 147: 1993 M.P.L.J. 273.

The information referred to in S. 20 need not be information specially within the knowledge of the person referred to. The information may be gathered by inspection of the lands or by reference to accounts or by other means: (1958) 1 An.W.R. 446: A.I.R. 1958 Andh. Pra. 304.

The word 'information' occurring in S. 20 is not to be understood in the sense that the parties desired to know something which none of them had any knowledge of. Where there is a dispute as regards a certain question and the Court is in need of information regarding the truth on that point, any statement which the referee may make is, nevertheless, information within the purview of S. 20: A.I.R. 1985 S.C. 998: 1985 (Supp.) S.C.C. 17.

A dispute as to the validity or genuineness of a will cannot be referred either to an arbitrator or a referee under S. 20; it can be decided only in accordance with the law of probate under the Succession Act. The word 'information' in S. 20 means a statement of facts, not a decision; if the parties agree to abide by what the referee says, and the referee makes the statement of facts as per his knowledge or belief, held, that would be deemed to be the referring party's admission on which the Court would pronounce the judgment; a referee, thus, cannot make enquiries or collect evidence: (1976) 78 Punj.L.R. 46. See however I.L.R. (1977) 1 Del. 247.

A reference to an outside party to decide matters in dispute in a suit and question of costs is not a reference to that party for information in reference to a matter in dispute and is not justified by S. 20: 73 I.A. 52: I.L.R. (1946) All. 193: A.I.R. 1946 P.C. 72: (1946) 1 M.L.J. 339 (P.C.).

S. 20, which is second exception to the general rule laid down in S. 18 deals with one class of vicarious admissions of persons other than the parties. Where a party refers to a third person for some information or an opinion on a matter in dispute, the statements made by the third person are receivable as admissions against the person referring. The reason is that when a party refers to another person for a statement of his views, the party approves of his utterance in anticipation and adopts that as his own. The principle is the same as that of reference to arbitration. The reference may be by express words or by conduct, but in any case there must be a clear admission to refer and such admissions are generally conclusive: A.I.R. 1985 S.C. 998: 1985 (Supp.) S.C.C. 17.

Where the parties appointed a referee and inter alia agreed that the referee's statement either in person or in writing submitted by him to the Court should be treated as binding evidence for both the parties, held, if the referee's decision did not suit one party, he could not be allowed to wriggle out of the same by alleging that the sole referee was appointed not as a referee, but as an arbitrator and his decision was an award; at the most, if at all, the party could resile from the agreement before the referee's decision but not afterwards by filing objections: A.I.R. 1983 P.&H. 445: (1983) 85 Punj.L.R. 300. Merely naming a person to be a referee is not decisive of his status as a referee; what is to be seen is the parties' real intention. Where in a money suit, the parties jointly applied for appointment of 'A' as a referee and agreed to be bound by his decision and making it a decree, held, the parties' intention was to get the dispute settled through the intervention of 'A' who could decide it by hearing the parties and perusing the relevant record; the parties had clearly intended to refer to their dispute to arbitration of 'A'; calling him a referee was, in fact, a misnomer; his decision does not amount to an admission under S. 20: (1993-1) 103 Punj.L.R. 188; A.I.R. 1978 All. 351: 1977 All.W.C. 44.

Where in a suit for a declaration that the plaintiff's resignation was involuntary and procured by fraud, coercion, threat and inducement, the plaintiff offered in writing that if the employer's two named officers took a special oath in a religious place that his resignation was not so procured, that part of his claim might be dismissed as withdrawn and the two officers did take such an oath, held, the two officers had undoubtedly taken oath as the plaintiff's nominees; it amounted to an admission of the defendant's claim envisaged in S. 20; the trial Court rightly acted on the oath despite repeal of the Oaths Act, 1873 by the Oaths Act, 1969. [I.L.R. (1979) 2 Karn. 2018

21. Proof of admissions against persons making them, and by or on their behalf.—Admissions are relevant and may be proved as against the person who makes them, or his representative in interest; but they cannot be proved by or on behalf of the person who makes them or by his representative in interest, except in the following cases:—

(1) An admission may be proved by or on behalf of the person making it, when it is of such a nature that, if the person making it were dead, it would be relevant as between third persons under section 32.

and A.I.R. 1983 Ori. 250 held per incuriam; A.I.R. 1977 Mad. 273: (1977) 90 Mad.L.W. 279(D.B.), Approved; 1985 (Supp.) S.C.C. 17: A.I.R. 1985 S.C. 998, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1992 S.C. 1356: (1992) 3 S.C.C. 129; A.I.R. 1980 P.&H. 284 (F.B.) overruling A.I.R. 1976 P.&H. 287: 1976 Rev.L.R. 567: (1976) 78 Punj.L.R. 601 (D.B.); (1955) 57 Punj.L.R. 327; A.I.R. 1961 Punj. 31 and (1978) 2 Ren.L.R. 708.

Where in an eviction petition on the ground of continuous non-residence without sufficient cause for 4 months, the parties agreed to the appointment of a referee and upon his reporting non-residence, to the passing of the eviction order, held, upon the referee's report that none resided in the premises for a long time, the Rent Controller is bound to forthwith order eviction; objections against the referee's report were not admissible: (1986-1) 89 Punj.L.R. 31: I.L.R. (1986) 1 Punj. 345.

Where one of the tenants was conducting proceedings acting for himself and also for other tenants of the premises, and he agreed before the trial Court that the dispute regarding arrears of rent be resolved by the Court, held, the statement by Court in its order as to liability of tenants in the matter of arrears of rent would be a statement, made by one to whom the tenants had expressly referred for information in reference to a matter in dispute and, hence, would bind the tenants as admissions within the meaning of S. 20: A.I.R. 1993 Madh. Pra. 147: 1993 M.P.L.J. 273.

Where a person was appointed to ascertain value of disputed land by mutual consent of the parties, held, his report cannot be treated as admission under S. 20: (1985) 2 W.L.N. 135 (Raj.).

A fire insurance company informed the plaintiff that they had appointed Sinclair Murray & Co., as the Surveyors to assess the loss on their behalf and requested the plaintiff to assist the Surveyors from the plaintiff's side. The Surveyors did not supply any information to the plaintiff. They submitted their report to their employers and the company. Held, that as the plaintiff did not receive directly any information from Sinclair Murray & Co., Ltd., the case did not fall within the scope of S. 20: A.I.R. 1955 Cal. 594. Suit for partition of joint family properties and rendition of accounts including partnership business created for evasion of income-tax—Arbitrator appointed by Court as per the recitals of the partnership deed—Subsequent reference to a 'referee' by consent of parties to hear the dispute and give a decision—Referee should be deemed to be an arbitrator and his decision is an award and not a reference under S. 20 of the Evidence Act: A.I.R. 1967 Punj. 179.

(2) An admission may be proved by or on behalf of the person making it, when it consists of a statement of the existence of any state of mind or body, relevant or in issue, made at or about the time when such state of mind or body existed, and is accompanied by conduct rendering its falsehood improbable.

(3) An admission may be proved by or on behalf of the person making it, if it is relevant otherwise than as an admission.

(a) The question between A and B is, whether a certain deed is or is not forged, A affirms that it is genuine, B that it is forged.

A may prove a statement by B that the deed is genuine, and B may prove a statement by A that the deed is forged; but A cannot prove a statement by himself that the deed is genuine, nor can B prove a statement by himself that the deed is forged.

(b) A, the Captain of a ship, is tried for casting her away.

Evidence is given to show that the ship was taken out of her proper course.

A produces a book kept by him in the ordinary course of his business showing observations alleged to have been taken by him from day to day, and indicating that the ship was not taken out of her proper course. A may prove these statements, because they would be admissible between third parties, if he were dead, under section 32, clause (2).

(c) A is accused of a crime committed by him at Calcutta.

He produces a letter written by himself and dated at Lahore on that day, and bearing the Lahore post mark of that day.

The statement in the date of the letter is admissible, because if A were dead, it would be admissible under section 32, clause (2).

(d) A is accused of receiving stolen goods knowing them to be stolen.

He offers to prove that he refused to sell them below their value.

A may prove these statements, though they are admissions, because they are explanatory of conduct influenced by facts in issue.

(e) A is accused of fraudulently having in his possession counterfeit coin which he knew to be counterfeit.

He offers to prove that he asked a skilful person to examine the coin, as he doubted whether it was counterfeit or not, and that person did examine it and told him it was genuine.

A may prove these facts for the reasons stated in the last preceding illustration.

1. Scope.—An admission or a concession by a party should be strictly construed: 1976 All.W.C. 720.

The provision that 'admission is not conclusive proof' is to be considered in regard to two features of evidence; (i) the weight to be attached to an admission, would depend upon whether the admission is clear, unambiguous and relevant evidence; and (ii) even a proved admission sought to be used against its maker who as a witness is under cross-examination, he should be given an opportunity, if the admission is to be used against him to offer his explanation and to clear up the point of ambiguity or dispute which is a general salutary and intelligible rule. A mere proof of admission, if its maker had concluded his evidence, will be of no avail; it cannot be utilised against him: A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 1712: (1977) 2 S.C.C. 49: (1977) 2 S.C.R. 671.

Admissions though not conclusive proof of matters admitted, are relevant under S. 21: I.L.R. (1964) 1 Mad. 1012: A.I.R. 1965 Mad. 266.

Previous statements containing the admissions even if not confronted to the party are admissible against him in the suit: (1972) 2 Cut.W.R. 1842: (1972) 38 Cut.L.T. 1323.

Admission is substantive evidence even though party is not confronted with the statement—Weight to be attached to it is different matter: A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 405; A.I.R. 1994 Bom. 358.

The admissions are substantive evidence by themselves in view of Ss. 17 and 21, though they are not conclusive proof of the matters admitted. The admissions duly proved are admissible in evidence irrespective of whether the party making them appeared in the witness box or not and whether such party when appearing as a witness was confronted with those statements in case it made a statement contrary to those admissions: 1991 Punj.L.J. 361: (1991-2) 100 Punj.L.R. 529.

It is well established that admissions made in pleadings by a party against his own interest are conclusive; there can be no better evidence; no further evidence is required. But evidentiary admissions are not conclusive; they may be explained or shown to be wrong; they also shift the burden of proof. Admissions, if not shown to be wrong or not binding, they are best and substantive evidence of the facts admitted. But they must be clear and unequivocal: (1989) 1 Rev.L.R. 145: (1989) 1 Hindu L.R. 125 (P.&H.).

Law is well settled that an admission is not conclusive unless it amounts to an estoppel; however, the party making the admission may explain it away and show that the admission was erroneous: (1973) 2 Cut.W.R. 1204; 1979 All.W.C. 162: 1979 All.L.J. 231: 1979 All.L.R. 245.

It is well known that an admission by the adverse party is decisive, though not conclusive proof of the facts admitted; an admission in the written statement in another litigation is a substantive evidence in a subsequent litigation even if its maker is not confronted with it; but the maker of the admission may explain it away by showing that it was not true and was made to serve an ulterior purpose. [A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 341 and A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 405, Foll.]: (1972) 38 Cut.L.T. 110.

In order to bind a party by his admission the admission must be clear, precise and unambiguous. An admission is only a piece of evidence and the weight to be attached to it depends upon the circumstances under which it has been made. Thus, before the right of a party can be considered to have been defeated on the basis of an alleged admission made by him in a prior litigation, the implication of the statement must be clear and conclusive. There should be no doubt or ambiguity about the alleged admission: A.I.R. 1973 Raj. 208: 1972 Raj.L.W. 522: 1972 W.L.N. 784.

Once a party accepts his earlier statement, made in an earlier proceeding, it becomes a substantive piece of evidence of the facts admitted therein in view of S. 17 and S. 21; what weightage is to be attached to such a statement is a different matter. Before using such a statement, it is not required to be put to its maker to provide him an opportunity to explain it when he appears as a witness or by calling him as a witness: 1993 Cr.L.J. 1008 (Him. Pra.). But see (1992) 1 Cal.L.T. (H.C.) 418 [An admission by a person, who subsequently appears as a witness, can be taken advantage of only if that person is afforded an opportunity to explain the same].

Though the admission is a very material piece of evidence against a party making the same, yet the maker of it can always prove it to be wrong and even withdraw the same: (1984) 86 Punj.L.R. 96; (1972) 2 Cut.W.R. 1842: (1972) 38 Cut.L.T. 1323; (1975) 1 Cut.W.R. 3; (1994-2) 107 Punj.L.R. 277.

Where no opportunity has been afforded to the plaintiff to explain or, if so advised, to withdraw the admission and it is apparent that the admission was made in an application in a police case in which the plaintiff company was in danger of being prosecuted, the admission cannot be used against the plaintiff: I.L.R. (1952) Nag. 700: A.I.R. 1952 Nag. 154.

As an abstract proposition of law, the prosecution may be allowed in a given case not to be bound by stray admissions of its witnesses if it is shown that those admissions have been made either on account of mistake of fact or law, or on account of the witnesses being interested in the accused or if it is proved that he had any motive to give a false statement and the statement given, was not correct: 1979 Raj.L.W. 37.

Admissions doubtless raise only a presumption which is rebuttable but unless the peculiar circumstances under which the admissions were made are satisfactorily explained, they would have to be considered just as any other piece of evidence: 1958 M.P.C. 351: 1958 Jab.L.J. 512: 1958 M.P.L.J. 513: A.I.R. 1958 Madh. Pra. 261.

An admission is not conclusive proof of the matter admitted, though it may in certain circumstances operate as an estoppel: 1958 S.C.A. 544: A.I.R. 1958 S.C. 419: 1958 S.C.R. 1295.

The effect of an alleged admission depends upon the circumstances in which it was made: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 1121: (1974) 2 S.C.C. 319.

Evidentiary nature of admissions vary very much in value according to circumstances and the Court is quite at liberty to reject them, if it is satisfied from other circumstances that they are untrue: I.L.R. 10 Luck. 423: A.I.R. 1935 Oudh 41.

The word 'statement' has been used in its primary meaning, namely, something that is stated. Under S. 17 read with S. 21 statements made by persons may be used as admissions against them even though they may not have been communicated to any other person: A.I.R. 1973 Mys. 280.

Admission regarding motive in committing murder of deceased is admissible under S. 21: 1963 M.L.J. (Cr.) 343: (1963) 2 S.C.R. 433: I.L.R. 42 Pat. 166.

Statements of a party in letters written by her can be used against her as her admissions but cannot be used in her favour accepting them to be correct statements: (1964) 7 S.C.R. 267: A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 364.

Admission by agent without instigation of or without benefit to principal is not binding on principal: A.I.R. 1969 Pat. 385.

Statement made in police enquiry with respect to theft case—Use of that statement in proceedings for maintenance not forbidden—That statement could be used under S. 21, Evidence Act also: 1966 Cr.L.J. 1275: A.I.R. 1966 Mad. 392.

Admission in a document—Document secured at late stage—Admission can still be employed against its maker: (1965) 1 Mys.L.J. 42: A.I.R. 1966 Mys. 154.

A document containing the admission of third person cannot be used as evidence against the parties but the document can be admitted in evidence as proof of the fact mentioned therein as evidence of the transaction if it could be shown that it was executed in due course of business to settle disputes between the parties: 146 I.C. 937: A.I.R. 1934 at. 48.

Admission in a document by pardanashin lady: 59 Cal.L.J. 532: A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 851. See also (1935-36) 40 Cal.W.N. 75: 164 I.C. 530.

Documents clearly asserting right of plaintiff regarding cultivation and enjoyment of disputed lands—Effect and weight: 34 Cut.L.T. 1131: I.L.R. (1968) Cut. 673.

Admission of guilt by Government servant—Admission used only to corroborate independent evidence led to prove charges against him—Enquiry proceedings not vitiated: A.I.R. 1967 Cal. 381.

Statements recorded by officers of Customs Department in enquiry under S. 107 or S. 108, Customs Act (1962)—Admissions made therein can be proved against person making them or his representative in interest: 1967 Cr.L.J. 1007: A.I.R. 1967 Mad. 263 (F.B.); 1988 Raj.Cr.C. 462.

Proof of statements made by accused persons before the Custom authorities—Statement signed by accused as well as their lawyer—Statements properly proved by admission of their signatures by accused—Examination of lawyer not necessary: (1965) 1 Cr.L.J. 490: 1965 M.L.J. (Cr.) 98: A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 481.

Admission in income-tax proceedings—Binding character in subsequent suit—In income-tax assessment proceedings against predecessor of defendant in present suit, the predecessor and the defendant alleging that properties belonged to society registered under Societies Registration Act—This admission is binding on defendant in present suit against him and can be taken as evidence of fact that the society was duly registered, under Societies Registration Act, which fact is denied by defendant in the present suit: A.I.R. 1969 All. 248. See also S. 17, Note 6, supra.

Books regularly kept in the course of business—Entries alone do not fix liability: I.L.R. (1967) 1 Punj. 435.

Entries in solicitor's books of account regarding object of purchase for client are neither inadmissible nor irrelevant, nor hearsay: (1928-29) 33 Cal.W.N. 439: A.I.R. 1929 P.C. 77: 57 M.L.J. 581 (P.C.).

It is well established that although admissions constitute good evidence against the party making them and his representatives-in-interest, he is not concluded by them unless they operate as estoppels and he is at liberty to show that they were mistaken or untrue. Admissions are valuable evidence because, what a party himself admits to be true may reasonably be presumed to be so and until the presumption is rebutted the fact admitted must be taken to be established. The effect of admissions is merely to shift the onus of disproving them on the party making them unless a plea of estoppel can be successfully invoked. The evidentiary value of admissions depends upon the circumstances in which they are made and the possibility of incorrect statements being misguidedly made by ignorant persons should not be overlooked. If it is proved by other evidence that the facts admitted cannot be true, no Court of justice will hesitate to give effect to that conclusion: A.I.R. 1958 Andh. Pra. 19.

A statement made by a party to the suit to a third party or stranger of which the other party had no knowledge, and the truth of which he never directly or indirectly admitted is altogether inadmissible in evidence: 1940 A.M.L.J. 115.

Admission is pleadings/written statement.—Admission in pleading—Use of, for other purposes—Written statement following compromise arrived at earlier—Admission in written statement held could not be looked into for other purposes: I.L.R. (1962) 12 Raj. 406: 1962 Raj.L.W. 327: A.I.R. 1962 Raj. 196.

Admission by party in plaint signed and verified by him—Admission may be used as evidence against him in other suits—Such admission cannot, however, be regarded as conclusive and party can show it as not true: I.L.R. 46 Pat. 175: (1967) 1 S.C.R. 1: A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 341.

See also S. 18, Note 16, supra.

Admission in previous litigation.—Statement made by a plaintiff in a former suit in his written statement is admissible against him as an admission in a subsequent proceeding. There is a difference between the relevancy of an admission and its binding character.

An admission is the best evidence that an opposite party can rely upon, and though not conclusive, is decisive of the matter, unless successfully withdrawn or proved erroneous: 27 Cut.L.T. 81: I.L.R. (1961) Cut. 183.

Admission by plaintiff in previous suit—Binding on him in fresh suit, unless rebutted: A.I.R. 1968 Cal. 550.

Under the provisions of the Evidence Act, an admission contained in a plaint or written statement or an affidavit or any sworn deposition given by a party in a prior litigation will be regarded as an admission in a subsequent action though it is capable of rebuttal: Held, in the instant case that J the owner of house at B asserted his right in his written statement in previous suit and that was relevant under S. 13(a) of Evidence Act and J, being dead it was relevant under S. 32(7) of the Evidence Act. The written statement in the previous suit was, therefore, admissible in evidence: 1965 B.L.J.R. 800: A.I.R. 1966 Pat. 110.

Admission in plaint in previous suit—Party appearing as defendant in subsequent suit but not examined as witness—S. 145 cannot be invoked but previous statement can be proved as admission against such party under S. 21: I.L.R. (1962) Cut. 422: A.I.R. 1963 Ori. 45.

Contradiction by reference to previous admission—Statement in previous suit—Witness failing to avail of opportunity to explain it—Statement is admissible to prove admission by witness in previous suit: 1962 Jab.L.J. 796: A.I.R. 1963 Madh. Pra. 155.

Admission in prior proceedings—Mutation petition—Admission by party adverse to the position taken by him in the suit is admissible against him—He need not be confronted with it while in the witness box—Difference between purpose of proof of admission and earlier contradictory statement: I.L.R. (1966) Cut. 483.

Admission made by defendant in his deposition in prior proceedings under S. 145, Cr.P.Code about continuance of plaintiff's right of shebaitship—Admission can be used as such in subsequent civil suit when in said deposition, he had admitted that there were litigations going on between his father and grandfather of plaintiff: 1960 B.L.J.R. 717: A.I.R. 1961 Pat. 293.

See also S. 18, Note 18, supra.

2. Admission to be proved against party making it.—An admission may be proved as against the person who makes it or his representative-in-interest but it cannot be proved by or on behalf of the person who makes it or by his representative-in-interest. The section is the affirmance of the well-known rule that a man shall not be allowed to make evidence for himself: 1939 Mar.L.R. 244 (Civ.).

An admission against the interest of the party making it must be regarded as true until it is clearly proved to be untrue: (1932) 34 Punj.L.R. 788 (2): A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 885; (1946) 48 Punj.L.R. 187: A.I.R. 1946 Lah. 450.

What a party himself admits to be true must necessarily be presumed to be so, and it is for him to establish by evidence that the admission was made under a circumstance which do not make it binding on him: 1947 Mar.L.R. 280 (Civ.): A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 662: (1933) 35 Punj.L.R. 578; and until the presumption is rebutted the fact admitted must be taken to be established: A.I.R. 1958 Andh. Pra. 19; A.I.R. 1960 Mys. 97. See also 1939 Mar.L.R. 253 (Civ.): I.L.R. 15 Luck. 191: A.I.R. 1940 Oudh 35 (admission shifts the burden of proof on the party making it).

Admission—Evidentiary value—Onus, shifting of: A.I.R. 1968 Mys. 309.

An admission made by a party is not absolutely binding on him and its only effect is to shift the burden as against him. He is at liberty to prove that his admission was mistaken or untrue and is not estopped or concluded by it unless another person has been included by it to alter his condition: 67 Cal.L.J. 495.

It is no doubt true that what a party himself admits to be true may reasonably be presumed to be so. But before this rule can be invoked, it must be shown that there is a clear and unambiguous statement by the opponent, such as will be conclusive unless explained. A statement by a party that certain proceedings were fraudulent and not collusive in character would not be sufficient, without more, to sustain a finding that the proceedings were collusive: A.I.R. 1956 S.C. 593: 1956 S.C.R. 451.

Per Kartar Singh Campbellpuri, J.—There can be no doubt that under the provisions of the Evidence Act an admission in a signed pleading or affidavit made by a party in a prior litigation would be regarded as an admission in a subsequent action though it is capable of rebuttal. It is for the maker of the admission to come into the witness box where the objection is taken at the very early stages and explain as to what led him to make the admission. In the absence of any such explanation the value of the admission is rather enhanced. Per Teja Singh, C.J.—The effect of Ss. 21 and 31 of the Evidence Act is that when an admission is proved against a party a presumption arises that the matters to which the admission relates are true and the burden of proving that they are not true lies upon the person who made the admissions. The fact that the admission was gratuitous does not affect this rule and all that can be said is that if proved to be erroneous it can be withdrawn by the person who makes it and will not operate as estoppel: A.I.R. 1951 Pepsu 101. An admission is not conclusive as to the truth of the matters stated therein. It is only a piece of evidence, the weight to be attached to which must depend on the circumstances under which it is made. It can be shown to be erroneous or untrue so long as the person to whom it was made has not acted upon it to his detriment, when it might become conclusive by way of estoppel: A.I.R. 1956 S.C. 593: I.L.R. (1956) Mys. 152. See also A.I.R. 1958 S.C. 419.

A person making any admission in his pleading cannot take advantage of the same; the party in whose favour the admission is made may get benefit of the same: A.I.R. 1975 Cal. 203 (D.B.).

Some self serving statements made in other proceedings by a party cannot be used as substantive evidence in subsequent proceeding: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 280: (1974) 1 S.C.C. 289.

Admission can be used against the party making it. The party making the admission has a right to rebut the same and can plead and prove that admission so made is not true. Burden shall be on the party who wants to show that the admission so made is untrue: A.I.R. 1988 Raj. 188: 1987 Raj.L.W. 210: (1987) 1 Raj.L.R. 548.

A self-serving admission is not admissible in evidence, unless it comes within any of the exceptions under S. 21. Where after adoption of the plaintiff, the adoptive father had two sons born to him and, thus, by the time the plaintiff was about 21 years' old the adoptive father started devising ways and means to disown the plaintiff as his adopted son and in the process executed a sale-deed in favour of the plaintiff describing him as the son of his natural father, held, this deed being a self-serving document, admission made therein did not come within the ambit of S. 21 and was, therefore, inadmissible in evidence: A.I.R. 1974 Ori. 120: (1973) 1 Cut.W.R. 809 (D.B.).

Applicability—Statement against interest—Weight of—Admission against his own interest made by plaintiff's ancestor at a time when he was the Karta of the joint family consisting of himself and his son would be clearly binding against the plaintiff: I.L.R. (1959) Cut. 602.

Conduct of a party evidenced by statements in his or her own favour cannot be proved to support his or her case: (1958) 2 W.L.R. 110.

Mere conduct is not admission for making it eligible to be used as admission under S. 21. Thus, where the trustees, not being fully conscious of their rights or not being aware of the true state of law or facts, yielded to the dictates of the Board of Religious Trusts and submitted returns, held, the statements contained in such returns could not amount to an admission of the fact that the trust in question was a public one. [1968 Pat.L.J.R. 507: I.L.R. 46 Pat. 23, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1974 Pat. 95: 1973 Pat.L.J.R. 509 (D.B.).

A party cannot use in his favour an admission by his predecessor made in his own interest: I.L.R. 41 Cal. 57: (1912-13) 17 Cal.W.N. 1013. See also 93 I.C. 996: A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 381.

Hindu family—Conduct of one member of the family, who is not the karta, amounting to an admission on his part about severance of joint status or partition by metes and bounds—Admission is not binding on other members of the family who are not jointly interested with the person admitting: 33 Cut.L.T. 1163: A.I.R. 1967 Ori. 139.

Admission by father or manager of joint family—How far binding on others: A.I.R. 1969 Mad. 329.

Admission by one party, which is favourable to the other party, held, cannot be overlooked: (1991) 1 Karn.L.J. 201.

Merely because documents more than 30 years old are presumed to be duly executed raises no presumption that their contents are true. But once the execution of such a document is presumed, it would amount to the executant's admission about the truth of the statements in the recitals; the third party, not a signatory to the document, may not be bound by it but the admission can be pressed in service against the executant's successor-in-interest; that is the combined effect of Ss. 17, 18(2) and 21: A.I.R. 1981 Guj. 142: (1981) 22 Guj.L.R. 389.

Where in an election petition, the issue involved was regarding the age of the elected candidate on the date of the scrutiny of his nomination and there were a number of clear admissions in prior declarations precisely and deliberately made in solemn documents by him which admissions were made ante litem motam during the decade preceding the election in question, held, these admissions were entitled to great weight and had shifted the burden on to the candidate to show that they were incorrect: A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 1724: (1977) 3 S.C.C. 540: (1977) 3 S.C.R. 538.

When the defendants, who had made an admission, did not show that it was wrong, held, the plaintiff could certainly rely on it and the Court could not on some presumption think that the admission might not be true: (1993) 1 M.L.J. 15.

Where in a subsequent mortgage deed, the mortgagor stated the necessity for creation of subsequent mortgage and that she had received certain amount from the previous mortgagee on the basis of a mortgage deed executed by her, held, the admission was a very strong piece of evidence against her with regard to the receipt of the consideration as also about the execution of the previous mortgage deed without any undue influence and misrepresentation and that she fully understood what she was about to do and what she had done: A.I.R. 1976 Him. Pra. 41.

Where in a suit for recovery of a sum due on the promissory note, the party admits the execution, held, when once the execution of the instrument is admitted, the burden of proof of passing the consideration lies entirely on the shoulders of the promisors: A.I.R. 1987 Mad. 156: (1986) 2 M.L.J. 329.

Where a contractor in his bill for Government works contract expressly described it to be in final settlement of his dues under the contract, held, the bill amounted to a binding admission by the contractor unless he can satisfactorily explain it away: (1982) 1 S.C.C. 415.

3. Admission to be taken as a whole.—If the statements of a party are to be taken as an admission they must be taken as a whole: 1956 B.L.J.R. 745: A.I.R. 1957 Pat. 174.

An admission can be used as against the party making it only when the admission is taken as a whole. Hence, mere recital in the judgment that the tenant admitted surrender cannot be admissible as an admission to be used against him unless the entire deposition is placed on record: A.I.R. 1959 Ori. 38.

Admissions are not conclusive unless they amount to estoppel: I.L.R. 53 Bom. 321: A.I.R. 1929 Bom. 147; 164 I.C. 530; (1935-36) 40 Cal.W.N. 75.

Admission to be used either as a whole or not at all: (1961-62) 66 Cal.W.N. 872.

An admission unless it is separable has to be taken as a whole or not at all. Thus, admission of a returned candidate, in an election petition that the speech appearing in newspaper was correct version of his speech, held, has to be taken as a whole or not at all: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 154.

If the Court wishes to proceed upon the admission of a party, it should consider the admission as a whole or reject it altogether: A.I.R. 1935 Pat. 24; I.L.R. 14 Lah. 218: A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 179; 39 Mad.L.W. 34: A.I.R. 1934 Mad. 100; 151 I.C. 297: 11 O.W.N. 579 and 1367: A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 370; A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 326.

Entire statement made by accused before committal Court is admissible but if Court wants to rely on an admission it must be used as a whole—It is not permissible to take into consideration only those portions of admission which are inculpatory and reject other portions which are beneficial to the accused: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1345 (Andh. Pra.). See also S. 18, Note 4, supra.

4. Admission and confession.—Admission is usually applied to a civil transaction, and to those matters, in criminal cases which do not involve a criminal intent, while the term confessions is usually used in Criminal Courts as denoting an acknowledgment of guilt. Admission in a civil suit that a document is genuine cannot in the forgery case be regarded as confession at all: I.L.R. 37 Cal. 467: A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 539.

A statement to be called a 'confession' must either admit in terms the offence or at any rate substantially all the facts which constitute the offence; a mere admission of an incriminating fact, however grave, or a statement containing an exculpatory assertion of some fact, which if true, would negative the offence do not amount to a confession. Thus, where the accused in his statement under S. 108 of the Customs Act, 1962 stated that he was not aware that the packages loaded in the truck contained contraband goods nor were they loaded under his instructions, he merely being an innocent traveller in the truck, held, it did not amount to a confession within the meaning of S. 24 and the said statement was clearly admissible under S. 21 as an admission of incriminating facts: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 1167: (1976) 2 S.C.C. 302: (1976) 3 S.C.R. 672.

Admission by the accused made before the beginning of the proceedings alone can be proved under S. 21, as in a civil suit: I.L.R. 36 Mad. 457: 22 M.L.J. 73.

If accusations do not legally constitute an offence, an admission of an accused person of such accusations cannot be the basis of conviction. In the absence of legal proof of a crime, there can be no legal criminality: (1982) 54 Cut.L.T. 241.

What is prohibited under S. 26 is only a confession and not a statement which does not amount to a confession. Admissions can be proved as against the person who makes it, and S. 21 permits such admissions being proved. The contours of S. 21 are not bounded by limitations of the person being in the custody of a Police Officer. There is no doubt that if the admission amounts to 'confession' it transgresses into the forbidden field designed in S. 26. Thus, statements made by the accused to a Government Hospital's doctor, when they were produced before him after their arrest for examining their injuries, held, though incriminating, did not amount to confession and, hence, not hit by S. 26: A.I.R. 1988 Ker. 1: 1988 Cr.L.J. 107 (F.B.); 1984 M.L.J. (Cr.) 202: 1984 Mad.L.W. (Cr.) 23: 1984 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 193; 1986 Cr.L.J. 1865: (1987) 1 Ker.L.T. 391 (D.B.); (1993) 2 Ker.L.J. 11: 1994 Cr.L.J. 322

Ss. 21 to 27 do not suggest that statements which would be admissible in civil cases as admissions are not admissible in criminal cases. A person who subsequently becomes an accused person might make any admissions which do not by itself implicate him in any criminal charge; and these would be admissible under S. 21 in a trial on a criminal charge against him. Where in the course of an inquiry into the conduct of certain Police Officers, held by a Magistrate who is deputed for the purpose, the Officers who are not even under arrest make certain statements to the Magistrate, such statements are admissible in evidence against them, in a trial on a charge, against them, under Ss. 348 and 330, I.P.Code, of wrongful confinement and hurt for the purpose of extorting a confession. Such statements are not statements recorded under S. 164, Cr.P.Code: 1941 Mad.W.N. 505: 54 Mad.L.W. 81: A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 720.

Under S. 21 admissions made by the accused are admissible in evidence: I.L.R. (1949) Nag. 355: A.I.R. 1949 Nag. 303: 1949 Nag.L.J. 90. Under S. 21 a confession being a species of admission would be relevant and can be proved against the accused unless it can be shown that there is some provision of law which excludes the proof of such confession: A.I.R. 1934 All. 351: I.L.R. 56 All. 720; 1939 Mar.L.R. 244 (Civ.); 170 I.C. 201: A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 433.

Where a person, not yet accused of the offence, wrote in Assamese on a paper in answer to another person's query that his wife and 3 daughters were not in this world, held, the writing did not amount to a confession either under S. 24 or S. 162 of the Code of Criminal Procedure; at best it was an admission of a fact; it was not hit by Art. 20(3) of the Constitution either; the writing as well as his oral statements made in response to the query are admissible: 1975 Cr.L.J. 354 (Gau.).

Unless it is so specifically stated in the Cr.P. Code, no rule about the relevancy of evidence in the evidence Act is affected by any provision of the said Code. The admission of guilt in an application presented to a Magistrate is admissible under S. 21 of the Act. It does not become irrelevant under S. 24 or S. 25 of the Act: I.L.R. (1939) All. 367: 1939 All.L.J. 107: A.I.R. 1939 All. 242. See also 17 Pat.L.T. 472: A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 358; 167 I.C. 30: A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 19.

A statement made by the accused before the police giving his version of the occurrence and saying he had acted in the right of private defence is an exculpatory statement and is not a confession in any sense of the term. But it is admissible under S. 21 as a piece of admission and can be used against the maker: 1959 Ker.L.R. 1297. A statement made by an accused and recorded under S. 164, Cr.P.Code by a magistrate authorised to record the same, though it does not amount to a confession may be admitted in evidence under S. 21, Evidence Act as an admission: 53 Mys.H.C.R. 17.

See also S. 17, Note 9, supra.

5. Confession to Magistrate.—An oral confession by an accused to a Magistrate, is, as an admission by him, a relevant fact and may be proved at his trial under this section by the evidence of the Magistrate: A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 794. Magistrate not empowered under S. 164 holding inquest under S. 176, Cr.P. Code recording confession—Confession is admissible against accused: (1952) 2 M.L.J. 814: A.I.R. 1953 Mad. 138: I.L.R. (1953) Mad. 924.

The Executive Magistrate is competent to record the statement of an accused person during an inquest under S. 174, Cr.P.Code and if proved to be voluntary it could be used as a confession or admission under S. 21: 1993 Cr.L.J. 388: (1993) 1 An.L.T. (Cr.) 174: (1992) 3 Karn.L.J. 763 (D.B.).

Where a person after killing the deceased went to a Magistrate of his own accord and made a statement saying that he killed the deceased, and the statement is taken down by the Magistrate and read over to the person who signs the same, the statement is admissible against him when he is made accused and charged with the murder. Where his statement is exculpatory but contains various features which are in the nature of admissions, the statement can be relied upon against the accused: (1965) 2 An.W.R. 344: 1965 M.L.J. (Cr.) 800: 1966 Cr.L.J. 509: A.I.R. 1966 Andh. Pra. 131.

6. Admissibility of statement in First Information Report/Criminal case.—Where the first information report is given by an accused himself to a Police Officer and amounts to a confessional statement, proof of the confession is prohibited by S. 25. No part of the confessional statement can be proved or received in evidence, except to the extent it is permitted by S. 27 of the Evidence Act. The first information report recorded under S. 154, Cr.P.Code is not a substantive piece of evidence. It may be used to corroborate the informant under S. 157 of the Evidence Act or to contradict him under S. 145 of the Evidence Act in case the informant appears as a witness at the trial. Where the accused himself lodges the first information report, the fact of his giving the information to the police is admissible against him as evidence of his conduct under S. 8 of the Evidence Act and to the extent it is non-confessional in nature, it would also be relevant under S. 21 of the Evidence Act but the confessional part of the first information report by the accused to the Police Officer cannot be used at all against him in view of the ban of S. 25: (1994) 1 An.L.T. (Cr.) 695 (S.C.).

A non-confessional first information report lodged by the accused himself is admissible under S. 21: 1971 Mys.L.J. (S.N.) 292. A non-confessional report lodged by an accused may in the case in which he figures as a complainant attract only the provisions of the law of evidence as to corroboration or contradiction and may be no more admissible than former statement of a witness, yet in the case in which he figures as an accused, it is admissible against him as his admission under S. 21. The bar under S. 162, Cr.P.Code or S. 25 of the Evidence Act would not apply to it: 1994 M.P.L.J. 306 (D.B.); (1990) 2 Karn.L.J. 242.

First information report—What is—Use of, at the trial—First information by accused—Admissibility in evidence: I.L.R. (1961) 11 Raj. 299: (1962) 1 Cr.L.J. 82: A.I.R. 1962 Raj. 3.

Where the person who lodged the first information report regarding the occurrence of a murder is himself subsequently accused of the offence and tried and the report lodged by him is not a confessional first information report but is an admission by him of certain facts which have a bearing on the question to be determined by the Court, viz., how and by whom the murder was committed or whether the statement of the accused in the Court denying the correctness of certain statements of the prosecution witnesses is correct or not, the first information report is admissible to prove against him, his admissions which are relevant under S. 21. The first information report being neither a confession nor a statement made to a Police Officer during the course of investigation, its admissibility is not barred either by S. 25 of the Evidence Act or by S. 162, Cr.P.Code: 1965 M.L.J. (Cr.) 93: (1964) 6 S.C.R. 312: A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 1850.

Statement by accused to Police before F.I.R. not relating to occurrence under investigation but to incidents of previous day—Statement not made during investigation—Statement is admissible under S. 21 and is not barred either under S. 25, Evidence Act or S. 162, Cr.P.Code: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 647: I.L.R. (1965) 2 Ker. 33: A.I.R. 1965 Ker. 248.

If the first information given to a Poilce Officer amounts to a confession, any incriminating fact mentioned therein, if it has got a bearing either directly or indirectly with the confession, such fact, even though it may be an admission, will be inadmissible. If, on the other hand, the first information does not amount to a confession, any admission made therein can be proved against the maker thereof under S. 21 of the Evidence Act. In the instant case, the first information by the driver of the lorry, later charged with rash and negligent driving under S. 304-A of the Penal Code, does not amount to a confession. He has only given an explanation as to how the accident occurred. Therefore, the admission therein that he was driving the vehicle at the time of the accident is admissible against him: 1968 M.L.J. (Cr.) 122: 1968 Mad.L.W. (Cr.) 9: (1968) 1 M.L.J. 304: 1969 Cr.L.J. 83.

A report of an accident, which drivers of motor vehicles are required to make to the Police under S. 89 of the Motor Vehicles Act and which contains a statement that the accused was driving the motor vehicle at the time of the accident, contains an admission and as such, the statement would be admissible under S. 21 of the Evidence Act as admission. The question who was driving the vehicle at the time of the accident is a relevant fact. It is not an F.I.R. within S. 154, Cr.P.Code and, therefore, no objection to its admissibility in evidence on that ground would be countenanced: (1963) 1 Cr.L.J. 596: A.I.R. 1963 Guj. 111.

An admission by the accused in a criminal case that he was driving the truck at the time of accident, held, is not in itself a substantive piece of evidence in compensation case but can be pressed into service against him to lend support to the testimony of witnesses that he was the driver of the truck involved in the accident: A.I.R. 1976 Raj. 71: 1975 Raj.L.W. 399.

An admission made by the owner of the truck involved in the accident before the Police during investigation of the criminal case against the driver would be relevant and admissible in the proceedings before the Claims Tribunal: (1981) 1 Kam.L.J. 178 (D.B.).

7. Admissions by representative-in-interest are binding.—See I.L.R. 22 Cal. 909: 22 I.A. 129; A.I.R. 1926 Oudh 41; I.L.R. 24 Cal. 62 (Purchaser at execution sale is representative of judgment-debtor and is bound by the latter's admissions). See also A.I.R. 1924 Nag. 208; 8 I.A. 65: 10 C.L.R. 281: 7 I.C. 107 (P.C.); I.L.R. 17 Mad. 228; I.L.R. 31 Cal. 380; 100 I.C. 835: (1921-22) 26 Cal.W.N. 273 (P.C.).

A statement by way of an admission made by a person cannot be used by him as evidence in his favour nor by his successors-in-interest or legal representatives. For the purposes of this rule, an auction-purchaser at a Court sale cannot be considered to be a successor-in-interest or a legal representative of the judgment-debtor, whatever may be the natural relationship between them: A.I.R. 1948 Pat. 426. Where the son and mukhtar-e-am of a party makes an admission before the partition officer, it is admissible under S. 21 in proceedings for the division of joint Sir, it would constitute a strong piece of evidence, but is not conclusive: 1940 A.W.R. (B.R.) 138: 1940 R.D. 364.

Where in a suit for a declaration that, a partition having already taken place, the defendant was not entitled to have it repartitioned, the plaintiff files a certified copy of a previous statement made by the defendant's 'mukhtar-e-am' admitting partition and an ample opportunity is given to the defendant to explain the admission but it is not availed of by him, the admission can be used in evidence: A.I.R. 1953 Him. Pra. 52.

A partnership form and declaration signed by the plaintiff firm and one M which were filed in the Stock Exchange had been sought to be tendered. Held, that they were admissible as admissions against the plaintiff under S. 21: A.I.R. 1954 Cal. 179.

Where the admissions are wrong in point of fact and are made in ignorance of legal rights they have no binding effect: 1941 O.W.N. 648: A.I.R. 1941 Oudh 429. See also S. 17, Note 10, supra.

A peson who was no party to a suit cannot be bound by any admissions arising out of the institution of the suit in which he acted merely as the general agent of one of the parties and in that capacity verified the plaint: 1942 O.W.N. (B.R.) 145: 1942 All.L.J. (Supp.) 23.

An admission by a Hindu father that a house built by him was constructed out of the self-acquisiton of one of his sons only has the effect of relieving that son from proving that the house was built out of his self-acquisition; but it does not relieve him from proving what the actual cost of construction was when he claims that amount out of his father's estate: 62 Cal.L.J. 430: (1935-36) 40 Cal.W.N. 75.

8. Admission by witness.—It is well established that the admission has to be taken as a whole. What a party says on the day of his re-examination can be tacked on to his previous day's admission contained in the answers given in cross-examination. There is no warrant for making an artificial division of a party's deposition according to the days on which the deposition is recorded: I.L.R. (1959) Mad. 669: (1959) 2 M.L.J. 395: A.I.R. 1959 Mad. 514.

There is a cardinal distinction between a party whose prior admission is to be proved as a substantive evidence and a witness who is sought to be discredited by confronting him with his prior statement which is not a substantive evidence. In the former case, the admission being evidence proprio vigore need not be put to the party; in the latter case, the witness cannot be disbelieved unless he has been confronted with his prior statement. [(1966) 1 S.C.R. 606: A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 405, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 117: (1973) 2 S.C.W.R. 637: (1974) 1 S.C.C. 78.

Where in cross-examination a witness admits that a statement previously made by him is false he ought to be asked in re-examination why he made a statement which was false. The mere fact that the witness acknowledges the previous statement to be false is no justification for rejecting such previous statement, if on other grounds the Court is able to reach the conclusion that the statement is in substance true: 51 I.C. 449: 20 Cr.L.J. 465. See also (1908-09) 13 Cal.W.N. 409: 1 I.C. 320; 7 I.C. 505; 20 W.R. 112; I.L.R. (1945) 1 Cal. 565.

The deposition of an insolvent reduced to writing is admissible as evidence against him in a criminal charge: 54 I.C. 478: I.L.R. 48 Cal. 996. Oral and documentary evidence as to the statement of a postman in a departmental enquiry are inadmissible in evidence in his absence: 26 I.C. 307 (1): 16 Cr.L.J. 3. Statement on oath at coroner's inquest is admissible at the trial: I.L.R. 50 Bom. 111: A.I.R. 1926 Bom. 151.

9. Miscellaneous.—The usual rule of law is that the admissions of ryots that they have no occupancy rights in ryoti lands will have little value, in the face of statute, if they are proved as a matter of fact to be ryoti lands. The policy of the law has been to protect the weak man against himself: (1959) 1 M.L.J. 22.

Will is admissible to prove religion of deceased: I.L.R. 7 Rang. 702: A.I.R. 1930 Rang. 42.

Illegitimate children—Proof of their paternity—Extract from birth register—Probative value of—Information for record in birth register supplied by mother—Not binding on presumed father—Presumption of law as to paternity—Burden of proof as to paternity in such case: (1962) 2 M.L.J. 107: 1962 M.L.J. (Cr.) 427: (1962) 1 Cr.L.J. 437 (2): A.I.R. 1962 Mad. 141.

A husband's signed statement given to the Police is admissible in the wife's suit for maintenance; Policemen like others are competent to prove admissions made before them unless there is a statutory taboo: 1971 Ker.L.T. 182.

Where in the wife's case for divorce on her repudiating their marriage solemnised when she was less than 15 years of age, the husband in his deposition stated that she had then admitted to him that her age was 17 years which he neither pleaded in his written statement nor put to her in cross-examination, held, the admission not having been pleaded could not be proved; the principle of pleading and proof did apply to matrimonial causes: (1986) 2 Hindu L.R. 213 (Madh. Pra.).

Where a woman has described herself as the wife of a person in a contemporaneous transaction, it would be admissible in evidence when there is a dispute as to the fact of marriage, because she had the special knowledge in respect of the marriage and it would be proved by her: I.L.R. 16 Luck. 615: 1941 O.W.N. 249: A.I.R. 1941 Oudh 284.

The statement that a document is a copy of the original is admissible when made by a deceased person in a document relating to a relevant fact and also as an admission under S. 21: 56 I.A. 146: I.L.R. 52 Mad. 453: A.I.R. 1929 P.C. 115: 56 M.L.J. 730 (P.C.).

Statement of deceased's father as to the exclusion of daughters from inheritance by custom is admissible: I.L.R. 8 Luck. 445: A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 246. See also A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 515: (1936-37) 41 Cal.W.N. 1089.

Statement of a person before Nyaya Panchayat admitting a fact is relevant as admission and can be proved under S. 21 of the Evidence Act: 1959 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 194.

As to admission in butwara proceedings, see A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 290. A confession is evidence for the prisoner as well as against him and must be taken altogether: 53 I.C. 145: 20 Cr.L.J. 737 (N.).

But it is only where no other evidence is forthcoming that this can be pressed to the extent of requiring that no part be accepted as true without accepting the whole. (Ibid) If other evidence incompatible with a part of the confession is on record, it may be relied on in preference to that part: 53 I.C. 145: 20 Cr.L.J. 737 (N.).

Danger of resting judgment upon verbal admissions of the sum due. See 10 I.A. 74 (79): 13 C.L.R. 266 (271) (P.C.).

Where the execution of a mortgage deed is admitted but the receipt of consideration is denied, the onus lies heavily on the defendant (executant) because it was inconsistent with his own admissions in writing: A.I.R. 1928 P.C. 39: 54 M.L.J. 208 (P.C.).

In a title suit, the proceedings in the previous title suit between the present defendant and a third person are relevant under S. 19 and the pleading of the defendant is admissible as admission of the defendants under S. 21: A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 405. See also (1933) 35 Punj.L.R. 463: A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 527;(1936-37) 41 Cal.W.N. 1089: A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 515.

Proof of admission—Concession of facts recorded in judgment—No challenge in grounds of appeal—Statement in judgment to be accepted as correct unless properly challenged—Mere incorporation as a ground in memo of appeal not sufficient challenge: A.I.R. 1970 Ori. 218.

A declaration made to the Municipal Corporation by a person to the effect that he was a tenant in the suit premises, held, in a subsequent suit for possession and mesne profits, such a declaration can be treated as an admission that he was in the permissive possession of the suit premises, when such admission had been duly proved: A.I.R. 1974 Bom. 12: 1973 Mah.L.J. 771: I.L.R. (1974) Bom. 752.

Admission—Value of—Village forming part of Tanjore Palace Estate—Lands in, treated by Raja as separate property—Effect of seizure by Government and subsequent re-grant—Eviction of tenants in long possession by alienee from purchase and in execution—Burden of proof—Admission by tenants—Binding nature of: (1957) 1 M.L.J. 72.

Even the statements made several years after the date of transaction are admissible under Ss. 21 and 32(3) for deciding whether the transaction was or not a benami transaction when such statements were against the proprietary interest of their maker: A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 727: (1980) 93 Mad.L.W. (S.N.) 42. Where in some documents the husband had described his wife as real owner, his claim that she held such property as benami for him, is not tenable in absence of any explanation for such admission: A.I.R. 1978 N.O.C. 228 (Pat.) (D.B.).

The English doctrine of advancement which requires the Court to presume that a purchase of property in the name of another by the father or the husband or the grand father when the father is dead, unless rebutted by evidence to the contrary, was in fact for the benefit of the ostensible purchaser, is not in vogue in India. In India two kinds of benami transactions are generally recognised: (i) where the money is advanced by the other person with no intention to benefit the ostensible purchaser; and (ii) where the owner conveys the property to another person with no intent to transfer its title; in the former case there is an operative transfer but the transferee holds it for the benefit of the person paying the money; in the second case there is no operative transfer at all notwithstanding the deed of conveyance though in both cases real title is divorced from the ostensible owner: A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 727: (1980) 93 Mad.L.W. (S.N.) 42.

10. Denials of party.—Though 'Court' is bound to receive admissions in evidence, no such rule applies to denials: I.L.R. 49 All. 482: A.I.R. 1927 All. 383.

11. Clause (3).—Cl. (3) of S. 21 is intended to apply to cases in which the statement is sought to be used in evidence otherwise than as an admission, for instance, as part of the res gestae or as a statement accompanying or explaining a particular conduct. Where a purchase is made by a parent in the name of his child, the contemporaneous acts of the parent may be admissible but not the subsequent acts and declarations: I.L.R. 6 Luck. 44: A.I.R. 1930 Oudh 441.

Under S. 21, an admission may be proved by or on behalf of the person making it, if it is relevant otherwise than as an admission. Statements in zamindari papers which are entries in books of account regularly kept in the course of business are relevant under S. 34. Such statements can, therefore, be taken into account though they may be admissions on behalf of the zamindar: I.L.R. 19 Pat. 398: A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 622.

12. Previous admission by party—Use of—Procedure.—Under S. 21 of the Evidence Act, a party's previous admision is relevant and can be used as evidence against him if that party has not appeared in the witness-box at all. The value of that admission as a piece of evidence depends on the circumstances of each case but ordinarily an admission is a valuable piece of evidence. An admission is a relevant piece of evidence and can be used as legal evidence against a party even in cases where the party appears in the witness-box but makes no statement inconsistent or contradictory to that admission and a denial of that admission is not involved in the statement made by the party in the witness-box by considering the statement as a whole. A previous admission of a party who has gone into the witness-box on the point in issue and in the witness-box has made a statement inconsistent with the admission or the statement made in the witness-box is such which involves a denial of the previous admission or runs counter to that admission, then the previous admission cannot be used as legal evidence in the case against that party unless the attention of the witness during cross-examination was drawn to that statement and he was confronted with specific portions of that statement which were sought to be used as admission. Without complying with the procedure laid down in S. 145 of the Evidence Act, the admission contained in the previous statement cannot be used as legal evidence against that party: (1945) 47 Punj.L.R. 391: A.I.R. 1946 Lah. 65 (F.B.), followed in A.I.R. 1956 Vindh. Pra. 26.

The object of S. 145 is to give the witness a chance of explaining the discrepancy or inconsistency and to clear up the broad point of ambiguity or dispute; but this procedure does not apply to admissions in view of Ss. 17 and 21. The purpose of contradicting the witness under S. 145 is quite different from the purpose of proving the admission: A.I.R. 1971 Pat. 215 (D.B.).

Previous admissions of a party can be taken into account against him even if he was not confronted with the same when he appeared in the witness box in the subsequent proceedings. [A.I.R. 1946 Lah. 65 (F.B.) held to have been disapproved in A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 405]: A.I.R. 1971 P.&H. 177 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1974 Ori. 120: (1973) 1 Cut.W.R. 809 (D.B.).

An admission is a substantive piece of evidence. Thus, when there is an admission, it is not necessary to confront the person concerned with his previous statement. [A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 405; A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 117 and A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 409, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1982 Cal. 353 (D.B.).

Admission made in a suit as compared to admissions made in connection with other enquiries have a greater validity; under certain circumstances, they may even serve as a foundation for passing the decree: (1978) 91 Mad.L.W. 156 (D.B.).

In a suit for declaration that certain deity was a family deity, a previous statement of the plaintiffs 1 and 2 before the Inspector of Endowments that the public had installed the deity was put in evidence. The statement was signed by both the plaintiffs. One of them was not examined but the other was examined as a witness of the case and was in fact confronted with the statement and he admitted that he had signed. Held, that the statement was admissible in evidence as admission of the parties themselves: I.L.R. (1956) Cut. 689: A.I.R. 1957 Ori. 104.

Where a letter written by the defendant to the plaintiff contains passages some of which amount to pure admission, and others amount to contradiction of the evidence given by him in Court, the plaintiff is not entitled to use passages in the letter as admissions against the defendant under S. 21 of the Evidence Act without complying with the provisions of S. 145 of that Act: A.I.R. 1949 Ori. 27. See also A.I.R. 1955 Cal. 206, cited under S. 18, Note 18, supra; (Per Haider, J.M.) in 1949 R.D. 223. But see contra (Per Lal, J.M.) in 1949 R.D. 223.

An admission by a party in a previous suit is admissible in evidence in a subsequent suit and the burden is upon the party making it to show that it was wrong on the principle that what a party himself admits to be true may reasonably be presumed to be so though the party making the admission may give evidence to rebut this presumption. But unless and until that is satisfactorily done, the fact admitted must be taken to be established. This is true notwithstanding the fact that statement was not put to the party making it when he came into the witness box: A.I.R. 1955 All. 361, approved in I.L.R. (1956) 2 All. 399: 1957 All.L.J. 350: A.I.R. 1957 All. 1 (F.B.).

Per Agarwala and Beg, JJ.—(Bhargava, J. Dissenting). (1) In a civil suit it is not obligatory on the party who produces documents admitted by the opponents' Counsel and containing admissions by the opponents to draw in cross-examination his attention to the said admissions before he can be permitted to use them for the purpose of contradicting him provided that the admissions are clear and unambiguous but where the statements relied on as admissions are ambiguous or vague, it is obligatory on the party relying to do so. (2) The party producing these documents can be permitted under S. 21, Evidence Act to use them as substantive evidence in the case without drawing in cross-examination the attention of the opponent to those admissions: 1957 All.L.J. 350: A.I.R. 1957 All. 1 (F.B.). See also 1956 B.L.J.R. 197: A.I.R. 1957 Pat. 293.

The party producing documents can be permitted under S. 21 of the Evidence Act to use them as substantive evidence in the case without drawing in cross-examination the attention of the opponent to those admissions. Though the admission should ordinarily be put to the party in the witness box on principles of fairness, the admission of the parties, which is otherwise relevant under S. 21 of the Evidence Act, does not become irrelevant by reason of his attention not being drawn in the course of cross-examination: (1959) 2 An.W.R. 7.

Where a party makes an oral admission to a witness who deposes to the fact of making such admission, the admission can be used as legal evidence against the party making the admission even though it was not put to him. S. 145, Evidence Act will not apply to such a case because it only applies when it is intended to contradict the witness by a previous inconsistent statement of his in writing or reduced into writing. The admission having been established, it lies on the party to explain it and if he does not say anything about it in his examination-in-chief, then there is no obligation on the opposite party to confront him with the admission: A.I.R. 1957 Madh. Bh. 118.

A previous statement is certainly admissible for the purpose of contradiction and can also be used for corroboration, it being a question of fact as to what probative value should be attached to it, to be decided on the circumstances present in each case: A.I.R. 1958 Manipur 29.

In a prior sale-deed executed in favour of the plaintiff and M,the widow of G, the plaintiff was described as the adopted son of G. In a subsequent will executed by M it was stated by M that she had no son. Thus, there were two different statements in two documents to which M was a party.

Held, that mention of the plaintiff as the adopted son in the earlier document is of little value unless the change in the second document can be explained. In the present case, an explanation has been put forward by the defendant that the plaintiff was intended to be adopted by M, and therefore, his name was mentioned as one of the vendees with parentage of G in the sale-deed. The explanation by itself may not be wholly explainable, but when the evidence in respect of the adoption is thoroughly unreliable, the explanation becomes plausible: 1957 Raj.L.W. 254: A.I.R. 1957 Raj. 261.

Where a brother suing his other brother and purchasers for partition of joint family property was confronted with his deed of relinquishment admittedly written and signed by him prior to the suit undoubtedly indicating that the plaintiff had received his share from the joint family property and had let off his right, title and interest in the other joint family properties, held, the deed is an unequivocal admission sufficient to defeat the plaintiff's claim: (1991-1) 11 Guj.L.H. 566.

Admission of contents of contract—Its validity can still be challenged: (1968) 9 Guj.L.R. 1082.

22. When oral admissions as to contents of documents are relevant.—Oral admissions as to the contents of a document are not relevant, unless and until the party proposing to prove them shows that he is entitled to give secondary evidence of the contents of such document under the rules hereinafter contained, or unless the genuineness of a document produced is in question.

23. Admission in civil cases when relevant.— In civil cases no admission is relevant, if it is made either upon an express condition that evidence of it is not to be given, or under circumstances from which the Court can infer that the parties agreed together that evidence of it should not be given.

Explanation.—Nothing in this section shall be taken to exempt any barrister, pleader, attorney or vakil from giving evidence of any matter of which he may be compelled to give evidence under section 126.

Section 22—Note.

Where in a suit by a contractor for damages for breach of contract, the contractor (plaintiff) contended that the counsel of the defendant conceded at the time of argument before the Special Referee that on termination of contract, the plaintiff would have been paid certain amount as one months remuneration in lieu of one month's notice, held, the lawyer's concession could not be treated as an admission of fact binding on the defendant as there was no occasion for adducing any secondary evidence as the original contract was before the Special Referee: A.I.R. 1989 N.O.C. 119: (1988) 2 Cal.L.T. (H.C.) 136 (D.B.).

Section 23—Notes.

The rule enunciated in S. 23 does not apply to admissions before an arbitrator. In the absence of an express or implied understanding between the parties that the evidence of the conversation during the period when negotiations for settlement of the claim are being carried on before the arbitrator is not to be tendered, such conversation cannot be held to be privileged and must be held to be admissible in evidence: Madh.B.L.J. (1954) H.C.R. 232: A.I.R. 1954 Madh. Bh. 58.

Founded on the principle that desire for peace is always to be preferred to spoiling for a fight, S. 23 lays down two conditions when in civil cases an admission, (otherwise so prized), ceases to be relevant even. One if an admission is made upon an express condition that evidence of it is not to be given: a condition which is well met by 'without prejudice', meaning, 'the use of what I commit myself to, if not accepted by you, is impermissible'. Two, the existence of circumstances from which the Court can infer that the agreement of the parties was just so: evidence of the admission should not be given. Since an amicable settlement of a dispute merits encouragement always, all that is said and written in the course of negotiations for such settlement appears to be nothing but proof of so many circumstances from which there should be no difficulty in spelling out the agreement of the negotiating parties of not using such statements or writings in evidence. In sum, all that is said and written during such negotiations is generally without prejudice by the very mandate of S. 23, no matter whether those two words, 'without prejudice', are made use of or not: (1967-68) 72 Cal.W.N. 852: A.I.R. 1968 Cal. 388.

Admissions before a person to whom the parties went for a compromise are admissible. See 95 I.C. 363: A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 548. But an offer of a certain compensation without prejudice in land acquisition proceedings is not admissible: 92 I.C. 319: A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 509.

An admission contained in a draft of a compromise deed filed in Court has to be excluded under S. 23 where the document provides that the parties to it would be free to repudiate any condition of the proposed compromise by which in their opinion, their rights were prejudicially affected: (1943-44) 48 Cal.W.N. 15.

In civil cases no admission is relevant if it is made in the circumstances from which the Court can infer that the parties agreed that its evidence should not be given: 1984 All.W.C. (Supp.) 243.

Anything stated in the course of an attempted settlement by any of the parties or by witnesses who took part in the settlement would be hit by the second alternative to S. 23, Evidence Act and, therefore, inadmissible in evidence: (1980) 2 Karn.L.J. 347.

24. Confession caused by inducement, threat or promise when irrelevant in criminal proceeding.—A confession made by an accused person is irrelevant in a criminal proceeding, if the making of the confession appears to the Court to have been caused by any inducement, threat or promise[1], having reference to the charge against the accused person, proceeding from a person in authority and sufficient, in the opinion of the Court, to give the accused person grounds, which would appear to him reasonable, for supposing that by making it he would gain any advantage or avoid any evil of a temporal nature in reference to the proceedings against him.

Where compromise entered into between the parties was not acted upon and was not binding on them, held, application for recalling witnesses for the purpose of getting the compromise exhibited and for getting the admissions contained therein on the record, was rightly rejected, it being contrary to S. 23: A.I.R. 1992 Ori. 136.

Pardanashin lady—Proof of—Use of statement made by husband in another case—Permissibility: A.I.R. 1958 Madh. Pra. 25.

Admission by counsel of party made without prejudice to his contention does not bind the party—An incorrect admission on a question of law also does not bind the party: A.I.R. 1969 Manipur 23.

Where certain letters were in the ordinary course tendered by the plaintiffs in evidence and they were marked 'without prejudice' and the defendant's counsel admitted them, held that the privilege was withdrawn and that the letters were free to be used as evidence in the judicial proceedings. Held also, that under S. 23 in order to sustain a plea of privilege as regards the letters it must be shown that both the addressor and the addressee intended to claim the same: 6 O.W.N. 1088: A.I.R. 1930 Oudh 105.

A letter by the husband confessing that he was guilty of cruelty and seeking apology from his wife's father, written at a time when the parties were trying to effect a compromise, held, fell within the second condition laid down in S. 23 and as such the husband could claim privilege regarding the same when in a proceeding for restitution of conjugal rights, the wife sought to place that letter on record: A.I.R. 1973 P.&H. 18: 1972 Cr.L.J. 577. Letter written by wife to husband making admission of adultery and also stating that it was condoned by him. See 1979 Hindu L.R. 99 (Punj.).

The words 'without prejudice' occurring in a certificate of damage issued by the Railways do not render it inadmissible under S. 23 of the Evidence Act but merely reserves the right of both the Railway and the customer to challenge its accuracy by lending evidence to prove that the actual damage was lower or higher (as the case may be) than stated in it. The certificate is, therefore, admissible as prima facie evidence of the quantum of damage: 1966 All.L.J. 495.

1. Confession—What is.—Confession is not defined in Evidence Act. Confession is a direct admission or acknowledgment of his guilt by a person who has committed a crime: 1994 Cr.L.J. 322 (Ker.) (D.B.).

A confession is not defined in the Evidence Act but it has been judicially interpreted as meaning an admission made at any time by a person charged with a crime stating, or suggesting the inference, that he committed that crime. The statement should, however, be considered as a whole. It would not be right to take isolated portions of it and to consider whether any of them, regarded separately, amounts to an admission of guilt or not: A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 326. It should relate to the particular crime with which accused is charged: I.L.R. (1945) Bom. 278: (1944) 46 Bom.L.R. 811: A.I.R. 1945 Bom. 152.

When confessional statement of the accused was not in respect of the alleged crime which was subject-matter of indictment, held, such a statement could not be relied upon: (1983) 56 Cut.L.T. 139: 1983 Cr.L.J. 1715.

A confession to be relied upon must amount to an acknowledgment of its maker's guilt; if it contains some self-exculpatory matter which, if true, would negate the offence, it is no confession. Besides, a confession must either admit the offence as such or substantially all facts that constitute the offence; an admission of a gravely incriminating fact, even if conclusive, is by itself not a confession: 1975 Cr.L.J. 1350 (Sikkim).

A statement to be called a 'confession' must either admit in terms the offence or at any rate substantially all the facts which constitute the offence; a mere admission of an incriminating fact, however grave, or a statement containing an exculpatory assertion of some fact, which if true, would negative the offence do not amount to a confession: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 1167: (1976) 2 S.C.C. 302: (1976) 3 S.C.R. 672; (1984) 58 Cut.L.T. 127; (1982) 54 Cut.L.T. 250 (D.B.); 1981 M.P.L.J. 594.

A confession must either admit in terms the offence, or at any rate substantiate all the facts which constitute the offence. An admission of a gravely incriminating fact, even a conclusively incriminating fact is not of itself a confession. A statement that contains self-exculpatory matter cannot amount to a confession if the exculpatory statement is of some fact which, if true, would negative the offence alleged to have been confessed. A statement which when read as a whole is of an exculpatory character and in which the prisoner denies his guilt is not a confession and cannot be used in evidence to prove his guilt: I.L.R. (1962) Cut. 516: (1963) 2 Cr. L.J. 229; 1953 S.C.R. 94: A.I.R. 1952 S.C. 354.

A confession must either admit in terms the offence, or at any rate substantially all the facts which constitute the offence. A statement which purports to convey what appears to be an impression created in the mind of the accused regarding the occurrence is not a confession as it cannot amount to a categorical admission of the offence. An admission of a gravely incriminating fact, even a conclusively incriminating fact is not of itself a confession, (e.g.), admission that accused was the owner of the knife which caused the death and was in recent possession of it, would not be enough: 16 Cut.L.T. 141: A.I.R. 1950 Ori. 202; A.I.R. 1952 S.C. 354; A.I.R. 1953 All. 142: 1953 Cr.L.J. 385 (Statement merely suggesting an inference that the accused is guilty is not a confession). But see (1920) 22 Bom.L.R. 1247 and 43 I.C. 605 noted below.

A confession must either admit in terms the offence, or at any rate substantially all the facts which constitute the offence. An admission of a gravely incriminating fact, even a conclusively incriminating fact is not of itself a confession. Hence, an admission by the accused that she put her child into a pond is not a confession of murdering it. It may be an admission of an incriminating fact and cannot be considered as anything more, especially when the cause of the child's death is not known: 1961 Ker.L.T. 201.

Any statement by a person which would suggest an inference as to his guilt may be a confession: (1920) 22 Bom.L.R. 1247; A.I.R. 1930 All. 29.

Scope—Confession—What is—Law relating to—Confession or admission admissible against maker unless excluded by some provision of law—Confession to Police whether in course of investigation or otherwise and confession made while in Police custody—How far protected: 1966 M.L.J. (Cr.) 134: 1965 B.L.J.R. 865: 1966 Cr. L.J. 100: A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 119.

Where the alleged confession of the accused did not show his complicity in the crime but at best it showed that he was in the company of other accused persons, held, it could not be construed as his confession of his involvement in the crime: 1994 Cr.L.J. 555 (Ker.) (D.B.).

A confession is an admission made by a person charged with or accused of a crime suggesting inference that he committed the crime. It is the duty of Court to question the accused clearly and fairly bringing home to his mind the exact case he has to meet. Where the exact accusation as per prosecution report was not explained to the accused, his reply, pleading guilty to such vague question, cannot be said to be admission of guilt: 1994 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 121 (Ori.).

In order to distinguish between a confession and an admission a simple test can be applied. If the statement by itself is sufficient to prove the guilt of the maker, it is a confession. If on the other hand, the statement falls short of it, it amounts to an 'admission'. Where there is a direct admission of guilt, it is not possible to treat the statement as an admission. The acid test which distinguishes a confession from an admission, is that where conviction can be based on the statement alone, it is a confession and where some supplementary evidence is needed to authorize a conviction, then it is an admission. No statement that contains self-exculpatory matter can amount to a confession, if the exculpatory statement is of some fact which if true would negative the offence alleged to be confessed. Moreover, a confession must either admit in terms the offence, or at any rate substantially all the facts which constitute the offence. An admission of a gravely incriminating fact, even a conclusively incriminating fact, is not of itself a confession: 1958 All.L.J. 660: 1959 Cr.L.J. 940: A.I.R. 1959 All. 518; 25 Cut.L.T. 269: A.I.R. 1959 Ori. 159.

Where the effect of the statements might at most be described as suggesting the inference that the accused committed the crime, but could not show that the accused admitted in terms the offence, or substantially all the facts which constituted the offence, the statements individually or taken together did not amount to a confession of the crime: 1960 Cr.L.J. 544: A.I.R. 1960 S.C. 409.

An admission of a fact, however incriminating, but not by itself establishing the guilt of the maker of such admission, would not amount to confession within the meaning of Ss. 24 to 26. Thus, statement made by the accused to the Doctor where he was taken by the Police after arrest that it was the deceased who had caused the injury to him, held, it was an admission of a fact, no doubt of an incriminating fact, and which established the accused's presence in the deceased's room but which clearly was not barred under S. 26. [(1970) 2 M.L.J. 371, Affirmed]: A.I.R. 1972 S.C. 66: 1972 Cr.L.J. 11: (1972) 1 S.C.R. 450; 1984 M.L.J. (Cr.) 202: 1984 Mad.L.W. (Cr.) 23: 1984 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 193; 1985 Cr.L.R. 657(Raj.); 1986 Cr.L.J. 1865: (1987) 1 Ker.L.T. 391 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1988 Ker. 1: 1988 Cr.L.J. 107(F.B.); (1993) 2 Ker.L.J. 11: 1994 Cr.L.J. 322 (D.B.). See also 1983 Cr.L.J. 1578 (Gau.); 1982 Cr.L.J. 2102 (Ker.).

When once an accused is arrested by a Police Officer and is in his custody and is temporarily left in charge of a private individual, that does not terminate the Police custody and the accused shall still be deemed to be in a Police custody.The accused in the present case was sent in the company of Police Constables for medical examination and the Doctor says that they were actually present outside the room when the accused made the statement. Such a confession is inadmissible in evidence as it is hit by S. 26 of the Evidence Act: 1964 M.L.J. (Cr.) 29: 1962 Ker.L.J. 755: 1962 Ker.L.T. 476: (1962) 2 Ker. L.R. 244.

When the accused makes no statement inculpating himself, such a statement does not amount to a confession, and is, therefore, not admissible: 1986 Cr.L.R. 567 (Raj.).

A statement of the accused in which he does not implicate himself either directly or indirectly, is not a confession and cannot be used against him: 1960 Cr.L.J. 1577: A.I.R. 1960 Cal. 722.

A statement that contains self-exculpatory matter (case of self-defence) does not amount to a confession, if the exculpatory statement is of some fact, which if true would negative the offence alleged to be confessed: (1970) 36 Cut. L.T. 774.

Where the accused in his statement under S. 164 of the Code of Criminal Procedure inter alia stated: 'In fear of my own life, I snatched his knife and assaulted him with it', held, it did not amount to a confession of guilt; in fact, he claims the right of private defence: 1976 Cr.L.J. 1921 (D.B.).

Confession—What is—Accused stating that deceased attacked him first threatening to murder him and that, therefore, he gave him some blows in self-defence—Does not amount to confession: (1962) 2 Cr.L.J. 540 (Guj.).

Where a statement made by accused admits in terms the offence of murder and also substantially all the facts which constitute that offence and the only expression suggested to be self-exculpatory is the statement that he acted 'presuming that they would kill me', it would not be a statement of fact which, if true, would negative the offence alleged to be confessed by him. The statement in substance, amounts to a plea of justification but is not a denial of what he did. The confession is not thereby made self-exculpatory and as such inadmissible in law: (1965) 7 Ori.J.D. 198: 31 Cut.L.T. 804: I.L.R. (1965) Cut. 369.

'Confession'—Meaning of: (1960) 62 Punj.L.R. 781.

Applicability—Confessional statement—Acceptance of inculpatory portion alone—Permissibility—Inculpatory portion can be accepted if the exculpatory portion is found to be inherently improbable—Charge for murder—Confessional statement to Mukhiya of village—Exculpatory portion found to be not only inherently improbable but contradicted by the statement of accused under S. 342, Cr.P.Code—Acceptance of inculpatory portion and conviction based thereon, held, was valid: A.I.R. 1969 S.C. 422.

To make S. 24 of the Evidence Act fully operative it must be shown that not only there was inducement proceedings from a person in authority, but that the said inducement was sufficient to give the accused person a chance which would appear to the Court reasonable for supposing that by making such confession the accused gained any advantage or did avoid any evil of temporal nature in relation to the criminal proceeding: (1969) 35 Cut.L.T. 513: 1969 Cr.L.J. 995: A.I.R. 1969 Ori. 190.

Statement explaining a discrepancy in account maintained by Secretary of a Co-operative Society in reply to a Memo. from the Co-operative Registrar—Registrar entitled to call for information under Ss. 54 and 60 (b) of the Bombay Co-operative Societies Act—Statement in reply is an admission under S. 17 and not hit by S. 24: 1969 Cr.L.J. 791: A.I.R. 1969 Tripura 31.

Judicial confession—Admissible without examining Magistrate before whom it was made: A.I.R. 1969 Ori. 289.

Admissibility of a confession must be based on a reliable determination on the voluntariness issue which satisfies the constitutional rights of the defendant.

A plea of guilty is more than a confession which admits that the accused did various acts; it is itself a conviction; nothing remains but to give judgment and determine punishment.

The same standard must be applied while determining whether a guilty plea is voluntarily made. Ignorance, incomprehension, coercion, terror, inducements, subtle or blatant threats might be a perfect cover-up of unconstitutionality.

Several constitutional rights are involved in a waiver that takes place when a plea of guilty is entered in a criminal trial. First is the privilege against compulsory self-incrimination. Second is the right to trial by jury. Third, is the right to confront one's accusers.

Court cannot presume a waiver of these three important rights from a silent record: (1969) 23 Law Ed. 2nd 274: A.I.R. 1970 U.S.S.C. 10.

Applicability—Arrest and custody—Distinction—Person under surveillance making statement—Statement is not hit by S. 24, Evidence Act: A.I.R. 1970 Bom. 79.

A statement in order to be a confession must be an admission in terms of the offence or at any rate substantially of facts which constitute the offence. An admission of a gravely incriminating fact, even a conclusively incriminating fact, is not of itself a confession. If the statement of the accused is suggesting inference that he committed a crime, it cannot by itself become a confession. A statement that contains self-exculpatory matter cannot amount to a confession if the exculpatory statement is of some fact, which if true, would negative the offence alleged to be confessed. A statement which when read as a whole is of an exculpatory character and in which the prisoner denies his guilt is not a confession and cannot be used in evidence to prove his guilt: 1970 Cr.L.J. 541 (Guj.).

In a criminal case if an accused keeps silent and does not speak, it would not amount to confession of the guilt on his part. The confession of the accused should be in an unequivocal terms admitting the commission of the crime: 10 J.&K.L.R. 1: A.I.R. 1954 J.&K. 19.

It is only when an utterance is made with an animus confidenti that it would become a confession; if, therefore, the declaration is made neither with an intention to confess, nor does it amount to an admission of facts from which guilt is directly deducible, the declaration would not amount to a confession. When a statement is not a confession, there is no impediment in strict law to use it against the person making it, in the capacity of an accused. But the practice of taking a statement on oath as from a witness and then using it at a later stage against an accused is not a commendable one. Further, part of a statement cannot be used to corroborate evidence which includes that statement itself, and which is obviously in much need of corroboration: A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 254: I.L.R. (1937) Nag. 524; (1938-39) 43 Cal.W.N. 893: A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 610.

A man of sound mind and of full age who makes a statement in ordinary simple language must be bound by the language of the statement made and by its ordinary plain meaning: 159 I.C. 875: A.I.R. 1936 Oudh 156. Where the accused in a conversation with the remanding Magistrate stated to the Magistrate that the Police wanted him to turn approver; that he had given true facts to the Police; that he was in fact guilty and that he had told the Police where he had sold the stolen property, held, there was no confession; all that was said to the Magistrate was that the accused had made disclosures to the Police on the promise of pardon: 148 I.C. 400: A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 987. See also 1941 Pat.W.N. 653: A.I.R. 1942 Pat. 156 (mere admission of being present in the company of dacoits is no confession of dacoity).

A confession is admission by an accused person in a criminal case. The making of a counterfeit coin is not a statement and hence the evidence of persons who say that the accused made counterfeit coins in their presence is not barred by Ss. 24, 25 or 26: A.I.R. 1931 All. 9.

Oral confession—Accused not shown to understand language in which questions put, but in answer making signs—Conduct held not amount to confession: A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 84: 120 I.C. 539.

To constitute a 'confession' under the Evidence Act, it is not necessary that the person confessing should make a full and explicit admission of his guilt so clean as to leave no other hypothesis tenable. It is enough if they lead to an inference of guilt: 43 I.C. 605: 19 Cr. L.J. 189 (M.).

But the statement of a man who takes particular care at every stage to show that he did not take part in the offence does not amount to confession: 1935 A.W.R. 48: 36 Cr.L.J. 1086.

Where an exculpatory statement of accused is of some facts which, if true, would bring his act within the general exceptions of Ss. 96 to 105 of the Penal Code, it cannot be held to be a confession: A.I.R. 1950 Him. Pra. 18: 51 Cr. L.J. 786. Construction of confession. See A.I.R. 1945 Lah. 20.

2. Admissibility of confessions—Extent of.—Under the Evidence Act, confessions are treated as a species of admission, and under the scheme of the Act, confessions are treated prima facie as relevant or provable under the category of admissions. Ss. 24, 25 and 26 provide the circumstances under which they are not relevant or provable. Ss. 27, 28 and 29 provide the limitations in the operation of Ss. 24, 25 and 26: I.L.R. (1951) Cut. 65: A.I.R. 1951 Ori. 168: 53 Cr. L.J. 1743 (F.B.).

Confessional statements made by persons not in custody are admissible in evidence against such person in a criminal proceeding unless they are procured in the manner described in S. 24 or made to a Police Officer (S. 25), while confessional statements made by persons in custody, except those in the presence of a Magistrate (S. 26), are not provable except to the limited extent permitted by S. 27 of the Act, viz., so much of the information, whether confessional or otherwise which distinctly relates to a fact thereby discovered and no more: I.L.R. (1964) Guj. 954: (1965) 1 Cr.L.J. 30: (1965) 6 Guj.L.R. 129: A.I.R. 1965 Guj. 5.

S. 27 should be read as a proviso to S. 24, and controls it. If, therefore, a statement by an accused falls under S. 27, it is admissible in spite of the fact that it is hit by S. 24, namely, that the person making the statement may have been threatened or beaten: I.L.R. 25 Pat. 205: A.I.R. 1947 Pat. 152.

The basic theory of relevancy in S. 27 is the discovery of a fact in consequence of information received from the accused while in custody, whether obtained voluntarily or non-voluntarily and this, of course, is quite different from any self-incriminatory information by the accused, whether given voluntarily or under compulsion. A self-incriminatory statement of a confessional nature obtained under compulsion, threat or inducement is also hit by S. 24 of the Evidence Act: (1973) 39 Cut.L.T. 291 (D.B.).

Admissibility of confession: (1964) 1 Cr.L.J. 464 (Ori.).

Where a prosecution witness while referring to the information given by the accused leading to the recovery of a rifle, also stated that the accused had told him in the presence of the Investigating Officer that he (the accused) would point out the rifle, held, that the latter part of the information amounted to a confession and was inadmissible in evidence: 1957 M.L.J. (Cr.) 805: I.L.R. (1957) Mys. 81: A.I.R. 1958 Mys. 1.

3. Scope and applicability.—Unless the expectation under which the accused makes a confession is shown to have been the result of any inducement, threat or promise as specified in S. 24, a confession otherwise voluntary does not cease to be so simply because the accused person on his own believes that to confess his guilt would be the only way of saving himself: 1954 Ker. L.T. 344: A.I.R. 1954 Trav.-Co. 456.

Confession—Admissibility—Inducement, threat or promise by person in authority is essential to make it involuntary—Mere fact that accused thought that he would get some benefit out of making confession is not sufficient to strike it down as involuntary: (1965) 1 Cr. L.J. 393 (Punj.).

Merely because a statement had been made to a person in authority, it would not be hit by S. 24 in absence of evidence of threat, coercion or inducement: (1984) 58 Cut.L.T. 127.

When there is nothing in the evidence to show that any of the persons who gave the threat to the accused was a person in authority, the conditions enumerated in S. 24 are not satisfied and, consequently, the confession cannot be held to be irrelevant: (1972) 38 Cut.L.T. 428.

A confession is not hit by S. 24 when none of the persons to whom it was made was a person in authority, though they may have promised not to tell the Police: (1943) 45 Punj.L.R. 391: A.I.R. 1943 Lah. 312.

For assessing acceptability of confession before any person except a Police Officer, the test is whether it is voluntary: 1993 Cr.L.J. 2374 (Ori.) (D.B.).

In deciding whether a particular confession attracts the frown of S. 24, the question has to be considered from the point of view of the confessing accused as to how the inducement, threat or promise proceeding from a person in authority would operate in his mind. [1975 Punj.L.J. (Cr.) 261, Reversed]: A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 1294: (1977) 2 S.C.C. 263: 1977 Cr.L.J. 985.

It is well settled that where the primary basis for convicting an accused is his confession, the Court must satisfy itself whether the confession is (i) perfectly voluntary and (ii) true and trustworthy. If it is found to have been obtained by inducements, threats or promises, the Court must discard it and need not apply the second test. [1981 Cr.L.J. 424 (Gau.), Foll.]: 1981 Cr.L.J. 430 (Assam) (D.B.).

A confession, if voluntary and truthfully made is an "efficacious proof of guilt". It is an important piece of evidence and, therefore, it would be necessary to examine whether or not the confession made by an accused was voluntary, true and trustworthy. The statutory provisions dealing with the recording of confessions and statements by the Metropolitan Magistrate and Judicial Magistrates are contained in S. 164, Cr.P.Code and the rules framed by the High Court containing guidelines for recording of confessions. Unless the Court is satisfied that the confession is voluntary in nature, it cannot be acted upon and no further enquiry as to whether it is true and trustworthy need be made. Thus, where the only piece of evidence relied upon by the prosecution to connect the accused with the crime was his confessional statement recorded under S. 164, Cr.P.Code and the lower Court without making any serious attempt to ascertain the voluntary character of the confessional statement convicted the accused, held, conviction was unsustainable: A.I.R. 1995 S.C. 980.

Before the provisions of S. 24 are applied, the Court has to see firstly, whether the confession has been made by any inducement, threat or promise having reference to the charge against the accused person; secondly, that the said inducement, threat or promise had proceeded from a person in authority, and thirdly, whether in its opinion, it gave the accused person grounds which would appear to him to be reasonable in supposing that he would gain an advantage or avoid any evil of a temporal nature in reference to the proceedings against him. It is always a question of fact depending upon the circumstances of each case whether certain words used have or have not had certain effect on the mind of the accused: I.L.R. (1965) 15 Raj. 143: 1964 Raj.L.W. 596; A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 1087: 1971 Cr.L.J. 933; 1972 Kash.L.J. 65: 1972 Cr.L.J. 961.

Before any reliance can be placed on the confession, it has first to be established that it is voluntary and true. A confession has to be proved like any other fact. The value of the confession as a piece of evidence is just like any other evidence, and depends upon the veracity of the witnesses to whom it is made.

A confession does not become inadmissible merely because it was made before a person in authority. It is inadmissible only when it is brought about under any threat, or inducement, etc., and the Court is of opinion that the accused had reason to believe that he will get some advantage or avoid some evil by making such a confession: 1968 Cr.L.J. 697 (Ori.).

Leaving aside confessions made to a Police Officer and confessions made whilst the maker is in the custody of a Police Officer which are dealt with in Ss. 25 to 27, three conditions circumscribe the use of confessions in criminal proceedings. Firstly, a confession is not admissible in evidence at all unless it is voluntary in the sense that it was not the result of any threat or inducement by a person in authority. Secondly, in order to make it the foundation for a conviction it must be shown to be true. Thirdly, if it is a retracted confession, the reasons for retraction must be shown to be untrue and the confession must be corroborated by other independent evidence. The first is a rule of policy; the second is a rule based on equitable considerations and the third is a rule of prudence. The Courts have to note in this connection that a confession is something more than a mere admission of an incriminating fact, which would be governed by the rules relating to admission. Even if a confession is untrue, if it is proved that it is voluntarily made, it is admissible in evidence. On the other hand if it is shown to be not voluntary, it is inadmissible in evidence even if it is true. The second condition is based on the consideration that though it may be presumed that no person will wilfully make a statement which is against his interest unless it is true, if it is demonstrably untrue it would be unjust to convict him. The rigour of the legal presumption is tempered on equitable considerations. The third condition is two-fold and is a rule of prudence and caution adopted by Courts based on experience. Corroboration merely of collateral facts is not sufficient. In order to perform its function or adding weight to the retracted confession, the independent corroboration must tend to connect the maker of the confession as a participant in the crime, although it need not by itself be conclusive in its tendency.

Held, on facts of the case, that the confessions recorded were voluntary, without any material inconsistency and the test of independent corroboration was satisfied. The convictions based upon them were, therefore, right: I.L.R. (1963) Andh. Pra. 442: (1964) 1 Cr.L.J. 584.

In scrutinising a case from the point of view of S. 24, Evidence Act, the Court will have to perform a three-fold function: (1) it will have as a Court to determine the sufficiency of the inducement, threat or promise as affording certain grounds; (2) it will have to clothe itself with the mentality of the accused to see whether the ground would appear to the accused reasonable for a supposition that he would gain any advantage or avoid any evil; and (3) it will have to judge as a Court if the confession appears to have been caused in consequence of the inducement, threat or promise: 1967 M.L.J. (Cr.) 30: (1966) 8 Law Rep. 80 (Mys.).

Where a confession is the result of threat or undue influence by the Police it has to be rejected. It becomes absolutely irrelevant and even though the statement of the accused in Court may bear out major portion of the confession, the Court is not entitled to consider whether it is true: A.I.R. 1951 Kutch 27: 52 Cr.L.J. 257.

A voluntary statement made by an accused person is admissible as a 'confession'. He can confess as to his own acts, knowledge or intention but he cannot 'confess' as to acts of other persons which he had not seen and of which he can only have knowledge by hearsay. A failure of the prosecution to prove an essential element in the offence cannot be cured by an 'admission' of this nature: (1958) 1 W.L.R. 1050.

In order to be acted upon, the confession must be voluntary and true. There should be no doubt from the materials placed before the trial Court that the accused had made a voluntary statement before a Judicial Magistrate: (1985) 59 Cut.L.T. 281.

Where the only evidence against the accused in a prosecution is his own confession admitting his guilt, the Investigating Officer must check the truth or otherwise of the confession in the course of the investigation by independent investigation: (1971) 2 An.L.T. 96: 1971 Cr.L.J. 1594.

'Confession' — Admission — When amounts to: A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 372: 1957 Cr.L.J. 707.

Applicability—Statement of confession—Use of to contradict or corroborate evidence given as approver: A.I.R. 1957 Assam 168: 1957 Cr.L.J. 1231.

Confession induced by promise of being made an approver — Not admissible — (Cr.P.Code, 1898, S. 164).

Held, that the circumstances in which the confession was made left no doubt that the confession of the accused was induced by an indirect promise held out to him that if he made the confession, he would be made an approver and, therefore, it must be ruled out on the ground that it was not a voluntary confession: A.I.R. 1956 Raj. 67: 1955 Cr.L.J. 550: I.L.R. (1956) 6 Raj. 359.

The internal evidence furnished by the statement itself, its wealth of incidental details doubtless designed for that independent corroboration which the law requires, but which a person giving an unprompted account of what took place would hardly think it worthwhile to mention, and its playing down of the part played by the deponent, typical of confessions preceding a pardon, indicates that the statement must have been obtained by some such inducement as a promise to make the accused an approver: 1959 Ker.L.T. 167: 1959 Ker.L.J. 221: I.L.R. (1959) Ker. 319.

The wealth of details contained in the confession is not necessarily an indication of it being a Police-inspired statement: 1960 Ker.L.J. 896: (1960) 2 Ker.L.R. 222: 1960 Ker. L.T. 829.

There is a clear distinction between the admissibility of an evidence and the weight to be attached to it. A confessional soliloquy is a direct piece of evidence. Before accepting such evidence, it must be established by cogent evidence what were the exact words used by the accused. Even if so much was established, prudence and justice require that such evidence cannot be made the sole ground of conviction, but may be used only as a corroborative piece of evidence: 1966 M.L.J. (Cr.) 558: 1966 Cr.L.J. 68: A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 40.

It is not necessary that confession should be made to any particular individual. Soliloquy by the accused confessing therein the act committed by him is good and direct piece of evidence: 1966 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 9.

Statement is a genus, admission is the species and confession is the sub-species. A statement, whether communicated or not, admitting guilt amounts to a confession of guilt. Admissions and confessions are exceptions to the hearsay rule. They are placed in the category of relevant evidence by the Evidence Act (Ss. 17 to 30), presumably on the ground that, being declarations against the interest of the person making them, they are probably true. Their probative value does not depend upon their communication to another, though, just like any other piece of evidence, they can be admitted in evidence only on proof. This proof in the case of oral admission or confession can be offered only by witnesses who heard the admission or confession, as the case may be: 1966 M.L.J. (Cr.) 558: 1966 Cr.L.J. 68: A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 40.

Even a well grounded conjecture on a strong possibility that the confession was a result of inducement or threat is sufficient to attract the provisions of S. 24. Held, on facts, that considering the physical and mental state in which the accused was at the time after delivery, the confession made by her as to her having given birth to a child which she threw away through the ventilator, after repeated questioning by the lady doctor in the hospital was not voluntary and was not, therefore, admissible against her: (1961) 1 Cr.L.J. 258: A.I.R. 1961 J.&K. 11.

There is no legal bar to convict on voluntary confession if believed to be true, but the rule of prudence requires that whenever possible it should be corroborated by independent evidence. Accordingly, both retracted and unretracted confessions are admissible: 1966 Cr.L.J. 323 (2) (Cal.).

In order to sustain a conviction on the basis of a confessional statement, it is sufficient that the general trend of the confession is substantiated by some evidence which would tally with the contents of the confession. Thus, where the statement is corroborated by medical evidence, held, it was admissible under S. 24: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 1165: (1981) 2 S.C.C. 224: 1981 Cr.L.J. 628.

S. 24 refers to a person who is not only an accused at the time when he made a confession but also to one who becomes an accused subsequently. The section refers to the status of the person at the time when the confession is being considered by the Court and when he is undoubtedly an accused person: (1961) 1 Cr.L.J. 258: A.I.R. 1961 J.&K. 11.

Instructions relating to confessions of accused persons—Duty of Magistrate—Confession by child: (1964) 66 Punj. L.R. 1230: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 127: A.I.R. 1965 Punj. 291.

Where a Police Officer investigating an offence of murder deposes that the alleged confession was made by the accused after he 'tackled' the accused, it cannot be said that any undue pressure was exerted so as to render the confession involuntary: I.L.R. (1963) Cut. 567: 29 Cut.L.T. 531.

Questions influencing mind of accused—Statements made while in custody of Police Officer but not in presence of Magistrate: I.L.R. (1964) Guj. 954: (1965) 1 Cr.L.J. 38: (1965) 6 Guj. L.R. 129: A.I.R. 1965 Guj. 5.

Where at the time when the petitioners were apprehended from their possession the stolen wires, etc., had been recovered, they admitted having cut the electric line of the transformers of different tube wells at different times and they also had confessed that they had been indulging in the theft of the transformers and their parts including the electric wires, held, such confessions though made to the Police authorities, could be considered by the detaining authority as a material in support of ground of detention under the National Security Act, 1980: 1993 Cr.L.J. 3701 (All.) (D.B.).

Confession—Variation—Effect—Slight variation in description as to how accused brought-about death of deceased does not affect the confession: I.L.R. (1961) 1 Andh. Pra. 123: (1963) 1 Cr.L.J. 142: A.I.R. 1963 Andh. Pra. 87.

Murder — Appreciation of evidence — Confession mentioning a person other than deceased is of no relevance: 1966 Cr.L.J. 789: A.I.R. 1966 Ori. 156.

Confession—Reliability—Evidence: 1966 Cr.L.J. 1180: A.I.R. 1966 Ori. 205.

Where the circumstances showed the accused's confession, on the basis of which he was convicted under S. 120-B of the Indian Penal Code read with S. 135 of the Customs Act, 1962, might well have been obtained in a manner bringing it within the mischief of S. 24, held, he deserved acquittal: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 705.

Mere existence of threat, inducement or promise is not enough. It should be sufficient to cause reasonable belief in the mind of the accused that by confessing he would get an advantage or avoid any evil of a temporal nature. The expression 'appears' in S. 24 is equivalent to the word 'seems'. It imports a lesser degree of probability than proof. The word concerned would mean 'interested in', 'involved in', 'and mixed up with'.

The words used in S. 135 of the Customs Act are in pari materia with those in S. 167 (81) of Sea Customs Act. It is clear that even though a person is not a direct importer or in any way concerned in such direct import of smuggled goods, any person who knowingly deals with such smuggled goods, would come within the ambit of S. 135 of the Customs Act: 1967 M.L.J. (Cr.) 509: (1968) 1 Mys.L.J. 17: (1967) 10 Law Rep. 46.

Confession must be voluntary—Police being in any way connected with the administration of the jail—Under-trial prisoners must be taken to have been influenced—Confession not treated as voluntary: 32 Cut. L T. 1011: A.I.R. 1967 Ori. 24.

Where, in the course of making a confession, the answer of the accused in reply to a question was: 'Police people have, of course, told me that if I would tell the truth and make a plain statement, perhaps the Magistrate might take pity on me and may give me some advantage. The Judge being pleased with my truthfulness may give me some advantage', held, that the Police people referred to in the reply were persons in authority, that what she (the accused) was told by the Police people amounted to inducement sufficient to create a reasonable belief in the mind of the accused, that by confessing she would get an advantage and the Magistrate would take pity on her, and that, looking to all the circumstances of the case, the confession was not voluntary but was brought about by inducement: 1964 Raj. L.W. 596: I.L.R. (1965) 15 Raj. 143: 1966 Cr. L.J. 518: A.I.R. 1967 Raj. 98.

Statement by employer in adulteration offence before Food Inspector recorded and signed, statement was hit by S. 24: 1968 Cr.L.J. 347: A.I.R. 1968 Ker. 66.

Evidentiary value of judicial and extra-judicial confessions—Prosecution should establish the offence by independent evidence—Use of confession should be for limited purpose of finding the offender: 1968 Mad.L.W. (Cr.) 36: (1968) 1 M.L.J. 372: 1968 M.L.J. (Cr.) 291.

Before a confession of an accused can be relied on, the Court has to see whether the same is made voluntarily and whether the facts stated therein can be accepted as true. But the mere fact that the accused was in the custody of the Police for about a period of nine days before he was produced before the Magistrate for recording his confession, by itself is not a sufficient ground for holding that the confession in question cannot be considered as having been made voluntarily. However, the mere fact that the confession in question appears to have been voluntarily made, is not sufficient to rely on the same. The Court must go further and see whether the facts stated therein can be accepted as true: (1967) 69 Punj.L.R. 100: 1967 Cr.L.J. 628: A.I.R 1967 Del. 14.

Prolonged custody immediately preceding the making of confession is sufficient to stamp the confession as involuntary unless it is properly explained: I.L.R. (1962) 2 Ker. 492: (1962) 2 Ker.L.R. 499: 1963 Ker.L.T. 996: 1963 Ker.L.J. 86.

Voluntariness of confession—Mere bald assertion of accused that he was threatened, tortured or that inducement was offered to him, without more cannot be accepted as true: 1967 Cr.L.J. 62: A.I.R. 1967 Him. Pra. 10.

Confession must be voluntary—Accused complaining about Police torture at committal stage and repeating the statement before Sessions Court—Confession retracted—Confession cannot be said to be voluntary in the circumstances: 1967 Cr.L.J. 1023: A.I.R. 1967 Manipur 11.

A confession is relevant and admissible, and may, sometimes, be used to base a conviction on it. That can be done provided the Court is fully satisfied that the confession is voluntary as provided in S. 24 or in S. 28 of the Evidence Act. The question whether a confession is voluntary or not is always a question of fact, and there is no rule of law that if a certain period is not given for reflection that itself would be sufficient to rule out the confession. But at the same time, all the factors and all the circumstances of the case, including the important factor of the time given for reflection, must be considered before deciding whether the Court is satisfied that in its opinion the impression caused by any inducement, threat or promise has been fully removed as provided in S. 28: (1963) 3 Guj. L.R. 1052: (1963) 1 Cr.L.J. 755: A.I.R. 1963 Guj. 135.

Whether confessional statement was voluntarily made or not is essentially a question of fact. In ascertaining the voluntary nature of the statement, different tests will have to be applied to different sets of facts. But in the very nature of things, there can be no rigidity about them. What test is best applicable to given set of facts is for the Judge of facts to decide: (1970) 1 Mys.L.J. 149.

Whether or not confessional statement of an accused is voluntary in nature is a pure question of fact; High Court cannot go into it in its extraordinary writ jurisdiction: 1983 Cr.L.J. 1899 (J.&K.).

Voluntary confession—Allegation of Police influence—Confession recorded after accused were kept in jail custody for three days and were allowed further time for reflection when produced before Magistrate—Confessions held voluntary: (1963) 2 Cr.L.J. 562 (Manipur).

Confessions whether judicial or extra-judicial, must be voluntary and genuine and besides should have some corroboration to be relied upon and to be the basis of a conviction. Therefore, the circumstances under which the confession is made, the manner in which it is made, the persons to whom it is made, are aspects to be borne in mind before acting on a confession, particularly on a non-judicial confession. Two rules of caution are to be followed, before such action, namely: (1) whether the evidence of confession is reliable; and (2) whether it finds corroboration.

Where a Priest against whom proceedings were held for contravention of the provisions of Ss. 4(1), 5(1)(aa) and 5(1)(d) of the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act stated that "it is written in moral theology that penal laws do not oblige in conscience which means that only after catching me I became a sinner", held, the statements could be said to be pointers to their genuineness, voluntariness and reliability when they got ample corroboration not only in the recovery of the foreign currency and documents from his person, but also from the pass books and other documents seized at his residence: 1982 Cr.L.J. 461 (Goa).

Confession—Corroboration—There is no requirement of law that a confessional statement must be corroborated in all respects: 1963 Raj. L.W. 214: I.L.R. (1963) 13 Raj. 199.

Where the confessional statement of the accused, in the absence of direct evidence, that he had throttled and set ablaze an 80 years old lady, living alone and wearing great deal of ornaments and jewels which he had stolen was corroborated by incriminating circumstances like his conduct in absconding, his subsequent arrest and recoveries at his instance, his having been last seen entering the deceased's house and coming out of it 45 minutes thereafter followed by a cloud of smoke therefrom, which the Court found to be true and reliable and sufficient to enter conviction, held, merely because the servant-maid of the deceased was not examined as she had subsequently turned mad—as testified to by her mother as well as the Investigating Officer in the Court—it cannot be said that the prosecution evidence was rendered inadequate to sustain the conviction: 1995 Cr.L.J. 2383 (Mad.) (D.B.)

Applicability—S. 176, I.P.Code, applies to public servant—Person appointed as investigator under S. 33 of the Insurance Act is not public servant—Statement made to such person is not barred under S. 24, Evidence Act: (1963) 1 S.C.R. 253: (1962) 2 Cr.L.J. 805: A.I.R. 1962 S.C. 1821.

Conviction of accused on his oral confession—No reliance can be placed on the confession unless Court can be certain of the exact words used by the accused—Material discrepancy found between two statements alleged to have been made by accused—Statements not containing admission of any guilt but on the other hand self-exculpatory—Fact of accused having made the statements to the witnesses deposing to them also found to be improbable—Held, that it was unsafe in these circumstances to base the conviction on the confession: (1962) 64 Punj.L.R. 142.

Confessional statement of accused cannot be taken on solemn affirmation: 1983 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 205 (Gau.).

Merely because the signature of the witness, to whom extra-judicial confession was made, were taken on the statement made by him to the Police, held, it could not be said that his statement becomes inadmissible; it merely puts the Court on caution and may necessitate indepth scrutiny of the evidence: A.I.R. 1985 S.C. 48.

Effect of signature on the statement: 1968 Cr.L.J. 493: A.I.R. 1968 Mad. 117.

Where a School Principal charged for drawing certain amounts on the contingent bills in order to misappropriate it, was alleged to have signed a written statement before his Superior Officer admitting misappropriation on account of three items which were subject-matter of withdrawal by the same contingent bill but in respect of two items he was acquitted, held, no importance could be attached to said document with respect to third item of misappropriation: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 1080.

A first information report is not admissible in evidence at all, if in substance it is a confession to the Police: 73 I.C. 266: A.I.R. 1923 Nag. 251. See also 63 I.C. 822 (L.).

First information report by accused containing confession as to guilt, held, is not admissible in evidence: 1979 W.L.N. (U.C.) 252 (Raj.) (D.B.). However, the fact that the accused himself lodged the F.I.R. is admissible in evidence as his conduct under S. 8: 1986 W.L.N. (U.C.) 10 (Raj.); 1975 Raj.L.W. 542: I.L.R. (1976) 26 Raj. 278: 1975 W.L.N. 623; I.L.R. (1979) 29 Raj. 922; 1992 Cr.L.J. 3027 (Andh. Pra.) (D.B.).

First information report given by accused at Police out-post containing confession of his guilt—Report is to be ignored as inadmissible: (1963) 1 Cr.L.J. 120 (Him.Pra.). See also 1981 Cr.L.J. 1734 (Gau.), cited under S. 26, Note 3, infra.

First information report—Omission to mention particular matter in first information report—Whether fatal—Depends upon facts of each case: I.L.R. (1961) 11 Raj. 1091. See also S. 17, Note 8 and S. 21, Note 6, supra and S. 25, Note 3; S. 27, Note 8, infra.

The accused, who was charged with murder, made a statement on a morning to the Superintendent of Police which led to the discovery of a bill-hook which the accused said was the weapon used by him to kill the deceased. It was admitted that for four hours on the night before and for two hours on the morning on which he made the statement, the Superintendent of Police was questioning him: Held, that this was a flagrant violation of the Madras Police Executive Orders, and that the statement of the accused was not a voluntary statement and could not be admitted as it was ruled out by S. 24, although the evidence regarding the production of the bill-hook alone could be admitted in evidence: 1939 Mad.W.N. 1134: 50 Mad.L.W. 742.

Confession—Admissibility—Accused confessing guilt on being asked twice or doing so on being asked to produce stolen articles—Confession cannot be held to be result of persuasion: 1960 Cr.L.J. 1068: A.I.R. 1960 Cal. 519.

In a fight between the accused, a private soldier and the deceased, another soldier from another regiment, the accused stabbed the deceased. Immediately after the fight the Sergeant-Major of the regiment of the accused put the company on parade and indicated that the men would be kept there until he was told who had been involved in the fight. The accused made a statement to the Sergeant-Major at that parade, confessing the stabbing. At the trial the confession was admitted against the accused. The accused had also made another confession next day to a Sergeant of the special Investigation Branch after a caution had been administered to the accused.

The deceased had received two stab wounds one of which had pierced the lung causing haemorrhage. While he was being taken to the medical reception station for treatment, the man who carried him dropped the deceased twice. The treatment which was given at the station was not only incorrect but might have affected his chances of recovery. In appeal against the conviction, the accused alleged that the confessions were wrongly admitted and that the Court was not properly directed as to causation.

Held, that (1) the first confession made to the regimental Sergeant was tainted by threat or inducement and was, therefore, inadmissible; (2) that if the threat or promise under which the first statement was made still persisted when the second statement was made, then it was inadmissible. The time-limit between the two statements, the circumstances existing at the time and the caution were such that it could be said that the original threat or inducement had been dissipated. The effect of the original inducement was spent and the second confession was admissible; (3) that at the time of the death the original wound was still an operating and a substantial cause and that, therefore, death could properly be regarded to be the result of the wound, albeit that some other cause also operated: (1959) 2 W.L.R. 623.

The accused Dalmia confessed to one Annadhanam, a Chartered Accountant, who was appointed by the Central Government in exercise of the powers under S. 33(1) of the Insurance Act to investigate into the affairs of the Bharat Insurance Company, as follows: I have misappropriated securities of the order of Rs. 2,20,00,000 of the Bharat Insurance Company Ltd. 'I have lost this money in speculation'. The High Court did not consider it safe to rely upon it as it considered it was made under circumstances which implied an offer of amnesty being granted to him.

Held, that none of these circumstances would make the confession invalid. Dalmia's knowledge that Annadhanam could record his statement under law and his desire to soften the attitude of the authorities by making the statement did not establish that he was coerced or compelled to make the statement. A person making a confession may be guided by any consideration which, according to him, would benefit him. Dalmia must have made the statement after weighing the consequences which he thought would be beneficial to him. His making the confession with a view to benefit himself would not make the confession not voluntary. A confession will not be voluntary only when it is made under some threat or inducement or promise, from a person in authority. Nothing of the kind happened in this case and the considerations mentioned in the High Court's judgment did not justify holding the confession to be not voluntary. It must be held that Dalmia made the confession voluntarily: (1962) 32 Comp. Cas. 699: (1962) 2 Cr.L.J. 805: A.I.R. 1962 S.C. 1821: (1963) 1 S.C.R. 253.

Where the prosecution evidence failed to establish that the accused had murdered his wife, held, he could not be convicted on his false statement that he had killed his wife with an iron rod: 1982 Cr.L.J. 216 (Gau.).

4. "Accused person".—(See also S. 25, Note 6; S. 27, Note 8, infra). S. 24 will apply even if the person confessing was not an accused person at the time of confession. A statement falling within S. 339(2) of the Code excludes the operation of S. 24: 59 I.C. 324: (1920) 22 Bom.L.R. 1247.

The words 'accused person' in Ss. 24 to 26 include any person who subsequently becomes accused, provided that at the time of making the statements criminal proceedings were in prospect: 43 I.C. 605. The term 'accused' in S. 24 includes also a person who becomes an accused person subsequent to the making of the confession by him, although at the time of the confession he was not an accused. Hence, a confession by a person who later becomes an accused person cannot be used against him in his trial, if it offends against the provisions of S. 24: 230 I.C. 431: 48 Cr.L.J. 651.

The expression 'accused person' in S. 24 and the expression 'a person accused of any offence' in S. 25 have the same connotation and describe the person against whom evidence is sought to be led in a criminal proceeding. The expression 'accused of any offence' in S. 27, as in S. 25 is also descriptive of the person concerned against whom evidence relating to information alleged to be given by him is made provable by S. 27 of the Evidence Act. It does not predicate a formal accusation against him at the time of making the statement sought to be proved, as a condition of its applicability: A.I.R. 1960 S.C. 1125: (1961) 1 S.C.R. 14: (1961) 2 M.L.J. (S.C.) 90; I.L.R. (1964) Guj. 954: (1965) 1 Cr.L.J. 30: A.I.R. 1965 Guj. 5.

The crucial word in S. 24 of the Evidence Act is the expression 'appears'. The appropriate meaning of the word 'appears' is 'seems'. It imports a lesser degree of probability than proof. The standard of a prudent man is not completely displaced; but the stringent rule of proof is relaxed. A prima facie opinion based on evidence and circumstances may be adapted as the standard laid down. In other words, on the evidence and circumstances in a particular case it may appear to the Court that there was a threat, inducement or promise, though the said fact is not strictly proved. This deviation from the strict standards of proof has to exclude forced or induced confessions which sometimes are extorted and put in when there is a lack of direct evidence. The expression 'accused person' in S. 24 and the expression 'a person accused of any offence' have the same connotation and describe the person against whom evidence is sought to be led in a criminal proceeding. The adjectival clause 'accused of any offence' is descriptive of the person against whom a confessional statement made by him is declared not provable, and does not predicate a condition of that person at the time of making the statement for the applicability of the ban: 1964 M.L.J. (Cr.) 708: 1964 Ker. L.T. 569: I.L.R. (1964) 2 Ker. 312: A.I.R. 1965 Ker. 175.

A person who is suspected of complicity in a murder and makes a confession before the coroner under S. 19 of the Coroners Act, is an accused person within the meaning of Ss. 24 and 25, when he is later on charged with the murder or abetment of murder. His confession would be admissible against him and against his co-accused if the requisites of an admissible confession are present, though it may be retracted later on: A.I.R. 1941 Bom. 50: I.L.R. (1941) Bom. 27.

Where a confession is made before a report is made to the Police and before the person confessing is accused by others of any offence, the confession must be regarded as one made by an accused person within the meaning of S. 24: I.L.R. (1951) Mys. 239: A.I.R. 1950 Mys. 82.

The accused who was the agent of a branch of a bank forged certain documents to make out that one of the fixed depositors had applied for and was granted a loan of

Rs. 6,000 on the security of her fixed deposit and appropriated this amount for his use. The bank was then amalgamated with another bank and the accused continued to be the agent under the new set-up. As a result of the action taken by the General Manager of the new bank the accused sent a statement, dated 2nd January, 1960 to the effect that he had taken for his own use the sum of Rs. 40,000 from the bank and that he undertook to return the money in instalments as a security for which he would execute a registered hypothecation bond. On 11th January, 1960 the accused and his father executed the hypothecation bond and also on that date signed a statement giving full account of the money he had misappropriated. A demand loan account was opened in the name of the accused. He paid in a number of instalments and was continued in the service of the bank till April 1960 when his services were terminated and was eventually prosecuted and convicted under Ss. 409, 467, 471 and 471-A, I.P. Code.

Held, (1) that the confession of guilt contained in the two statements, dated 2nd January, 1960 and 11th January, 1960 and the hypothecation bonds were of no use to the prosecution as the making of the confession was caused by the inducement to withhold criminal prosecution and was involuntary in view of S. 24 and was not voluntary as a result of remorse and penitence. The position that S. 24 would not be attracted as the accused was not, at the time he made the confession, an accused person was not tenable, for the expression 'accused person' in S. 24 and the expression 'a person accused of any offence' have the same connotation and describe the person against whom evidence is sought to be led in a criminal proceeding and does not predicate a condition of that person at the time of making the statement: I.L.R. (1964) 2 Ker. 312: 1964 Ker.L.J. 801: 1964 M.L.J. (Cr.) 708: A.I.R. 1965 Ker. 175.

Where persons making statements under S. 40 of the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act sought a writ of mandamus directing the authorities to forbear from taking any action against them on the basis of those statements, held, they were not standing before the Court as 'accused persons', their statements were not hit by S. 24. The writ petition was not competent: 1989 Cr.L.J. 2138 (Mad.) (D.B.).

Where a person, not yet accused of the offence, wrote in Assamese on a paper in answer to another person's query that his wife and 3 daughters were not in this world, held, the writing did not amount to a confession either under S. 24 or S. 162 of the Code of Criminal Procedure; at best it was an admission of a fact; it was not hit by Art. 20(3) of the Constitution either; the writing as well as his oral statements made in response to the query are admissible: 1975 Cr.L.J. 354 (Gau.).

5. Confession—Mode of use.—The Court must accept or reject the confession as a whole and cannot accept only the inculpatory element while rejecting the exculpatory element as inherently incredible: 1930 All.L.J. 1481: I.L.R. 52 All. 1011: A.I.R. 1931 All. 1 (F.B.); (1933) 35 Punj.L.R. 559: A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 673; 143 I.C. 362: A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 665; (1933) 35 Punj.L.R. 659: A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 620; A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 888: 65 M.L.J. 837; (1942) 44 Punj.L.R. 448: A.I.R. 1942 Lah. 271; 44 Cr.L.J. 77; 1933 All.L.J. 581: A.I.R. 1933 All. 401; (1932) 34 Punj.L.R. 349: A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 232; A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 326; A.I.R. 1952 S.C. 545; A.I.R. 1952 S.C. 354; (1957) 2 An.W.R. 63: 1957 M.L.J. (Cr.) 368: A.I.R. 1958 Andh. Pra. 37; 1976 Cr.L.R. 640 (Raj.).

If a confessional statement is accepted it should be accepted in toto: 1990 Cr.L.J. 2385 (Gau.).

Confession or admission must be taken as a whole or rejected as a whole—Conviction on incriminatory part alone is not legal: 1966 Cr.L.J. 451: A.I.R. 1966 Raj. 83.

Confession — Admissibility — A confession is to be accepted or rejected as a whole and the Court is not competent to accept the inculpatory and exclude the exculpatory portion: (1962) 4 Ori.J.D. 156: I.L.R. (1962) Cut. 366: (1964) 2 Cr.L.J. 487.

Under the law, where an accused person's confession is the only evidence available, it is obligatory both on the part of the prosecution as well as on the Court to accept it as a whole; there being no other evidence in the light of which any part of the confession could be verified or checked. The confession of the accused person must be taken as a whole, that is, including the exculpatory circumstances indicated in the confession: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 614: A.I.R. 1965 Assam 89.

A confession and an admission must either be accepted or rejected as a whole and the Court is not competent to accept only the inculpatory part while rejecting the part which is exculpatory in character: 34 Cut.L.T. 141: 1968 Cr.L.J. 765: A.I.R. 1968 Ori. 97; 1961 All.Cr.R. 320: 1961 All.W.R. (Supp.) 67: (1961) 63 Punj.L.R. 629.

Entire statement made by accused before committal Court is admissible but if Court wants to rely on an admission it must be used as a whole—It is not permissible to take into consideration only those portions of admission which are inculpatory and reject other portions which are beneficial to the accused: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1345 (Andh. Pra.).

Admission — Must be proved as a whole—Cannot be dissected to admit part in favour of one party and to reject part which is in favour of other party: (1968-69) 73 Cal.W.N. 279.

'Confession' has been defined no where. There is no definition of 'confession' either in the Evidence Act or in any other statute. A confession is to be read and considered as a whole. Nothing should be added by the Court in reading a confession. Attempt should not be made to read what is not there in the confession. Artificial inferences to add the missing links should not be raised on the ground that they are the natural inferences: 1986 Cr.L.R. 567 (Raj.); (1978) 2 M.P.W.N. 28.

An admission made by an accused whether amounting to a confession or not cannot be split up and part of it used against him. An admission must be used either as a whole or not at all: 1955 An.W.R. 863 (1). But it is not an infallible rule of practice: 144 I.C. 160: A.I.R. 1933 Pesh. 38; A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 204: 149 I.C. 49; 11 O.W.N. 636: A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 222. See also (1938) 40 Punj.L.R. 265: A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 850.

It is true that the statement of the accused has to be accepted and rejected as a whole but if any exculpatory part is alleged by the accused and that is found to be false after close scrutiny of the evidence on record then of course, the inculpatory part of such statement can be accepted. Thus, where the accused stated in their statements under S. 313, Cr.P.Code that they had attacked deceased in order to save the honour of a lady who was injured by the complainant party but on scrutiny of the evidence on record, said version of the accused regarding saving honour of that lady was disbelieved as having no substance, held, the other part of their statement that they caused those injuries voluntarily to deceased could be accepted and acted upon for recording a conviction against them: 1995 Cr.L.J. 1333 (Raj.) (D.B.).

Where conviction of an accused is sought to be based on his confession corroborated by other evidence, held, the Court must take the confession in its entirety and give full effect to it; if the confession discloses the exercise of the right of private defence or grave and sudden provocation, the Court should as well accept it and give benefit of the same to the accused: 1971 Cr.L.J. 1594: (1971) 2 An.L.T. 96.

Where a confession had both inculpatory and exculpatory parts and the inculpatory part was proved by an independent witness but the exculpatory part raising the plea of self defence was found to be false, held, the inculpatory part could be accepted and the exculpatory part could be rejected: 1988 Cr.L.J. 1477 (Cal.) (D.B.).

The principle that the inculpatory facts must be inconsistent with the accused's innocence and incapable of explanation on any hypothesis other than that of his guilt does not mean that any extravagant hypothesis would be sufficient; the hypothesis suggested must necessarily be reasonable. [A.I.R. 1960 S.C. 29, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 826.

Where a confession or an admission is separable, there can be no objection to taking one part into consideration which appears to be true and reject the other part which is false: 1978 Karn.L.J. (Jr.) 32 (S.N.) 36.

In a case where there is evidence other than the confession of the accused, the Court is not bound to take the confession as a whole. If it is satisfied that a part of the confessional statement is false, it may reject that part and take into consideration that part of the confession which corroborate the evidence of the witnesses: 41 Cr.L.J. 516: A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 157.

Voluntary confession by accused and circumstantial evidence proving guilt of accused—Court can reject that part of confession proved to be false by prosecution evidence and accept rest of confession: 31 Cut.L.T. 401: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 385: A.I.R.1965 Ori. 170.

Where there is no other evidence to show affirmatively that any portion of the exculpatory element in the confession is false, the Court must accept or reject the confession as a whole and cannot accept only the inculpatory element while rejecting the exculpatory element as inherently incredible: A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 534.

It is permissible to believe one part of a confessional statement, and to disbelieve another, and it is enough if the whole of the confession is tendered in evidence so that it may be open to the Court to reject the exculpatory part and to take inculpatory part into consideration if there is other evidence to prove its correctness: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 1797: (1976) 3 S.C.C. 101: 1976 Cr.L.J. 1379; 1982 Cr.L.J. 41: (1981) 20 Del.L.T. 354.

Where the accused makes a confessional statement and there is evidence to show that the exculpatory portion is false, the Court can ignore that portion of the confession and use the rest of it against him: (1945) 47 Punj.L.R. 11: A.I.R. 1945 Lah. 91.

A statement or a confession of an accused person need not be considered as true in its entirety if there is other evidence including circumstantial evidence which cast doubt upon some portion thereof and it is open to the Court to accept a part of the admission or confession which appears to the Court to be true and reject the other part which appears to be not true in the light of such other evidence: 1954 Cr.L.J. 1458: 6 Sau.L.R. 421: A.I.R. 1954 Sau. 115.

There is no doubt that in cases where there is no other evidence except the confession, the rule that the confession must be used as a whole or not at all applies with full force, but in cases where there is other evidence also, the entire confession can be examined in order to find out which part of it is correct. Where the entire statement of a prisoner has been given in evidence, any part of it may be contradicted by the prosecution, and if sufficient grounds exist, the Court may accept the incriminatory, and reject the exculpatory portion: A.I.R. 1955 Tripura 19.

Where there is no other evidence to show affirmatively that any portion of the exculpatory element in the confession is false, the Court must accept or reject the confession as a whole and cannot accept only the inculpatory element while rejecting the exculpatory element as inherently incredible. A Court would be entitled to reject those portions of the confessions or admissions of the accused persons which have been proved to be false by prosecution evidence while accepting the residue: I.L.R. (1956) Cut. 195: A.I.R. 1956 Ori. 177.

Confessional statement—Use of: A.I.R. 1957 Bom. 226: 1957 Cr.L.J. 1107.

Confessional statement—Value of: A.I.R. 1957 Mys. 50: 1957 Cr.L.J. 521.

Confession recorded after a short interval—Weight of—Voluntariness: A.I.R. 1958 Ker. 207: 1958 Cr.L.J. 1021: 1958 M.L.J. (Cr.) 481.

Where the judicial confession appeared to be procured and not voluntary, held, no reliance could be placed on it: 1980 Cr.L.R. 135 (Raj.).

Where confessional statement, which was incriminatory in nature, was corroborated by independent and reliable testimony, held, it could be relied on: A.I.R. 1971 Tripura 8.

There is nothing in the Evidence Act which precludes an accused from relying upon his confession for his own purpose. Where an accused, charged with offence of murder, made a confession at Police Station to the Police Officer, held, the said statement could be relied on by the accused at least to spell out a stand that the offence committed by him was not murder but something less than that: (1991) 3 Karn.L.J. 476: 1992 Cr.L.J. 502: I.L.R. (1991) Karn. 1660 (D.B.).

Where in a murder case, the words mara hai were used by the accused in his confession, held, it does not mean that he 'gave beating' to the deceased but he had 'killed' him. [A.I.R. 1962 S.C. 554, Foll.]: 1981 M.P.L.J. 594.

Where the accused's conviction by the Court-martial was based on his confession after giving him opportunity to show that it was not voluntary, held, the High Court will not interfere under Art. 226: 1982 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 120 (Del.). See also (1983) 1 Crimes 1025 (Del.) [Confession found to be not voluntary].

6. Acceptance or rejection of confession.—Where the circumstances of the case compel a Tribunal to act only upon a confession, and to reject all other evidence, the confession must be used literatimet verbatim and due effect must be given to every statement in it whether in favour of the accused or against him: 38 I.C. 740: 18 Cr.L.J. 356; 14 Cr.L.J. 252: 19 I.C. 508.

Under S. 24, it is sufficient to exclude a confession if there are circumstances in evidence which afford a well-grounded conjecture that the confession was not voluntary: I.L.R. 25 Pat. 612: A.I.R. 1947 Pat. 305.

The Court is at liberty to disregard any statement in the confession which it disbelieves: 46 I.C. 705: 19 Cr.L.J. 785 (N.).

Where once the existence of threat, assault, beating or improper inducement has been established there is a presumption of its continuance and the prosecution has to prove that the impression caused by the original inducement, beating, assault or threat was fully removed when the prisoner made the confession: 1958 M.P.L.J. 752: A.I.R. 1959 Madh. Pra. 125.

The circumstances under which a confession is made must always be scrutinised with great care and caution, and in all cases the period of the detention of the accused in Police custody before a confession is made is always an important fact to be carefully considered. Illegal detention does not necessarily vitiate a confession. It is a fact to be carefully considered in every case: 31 Sind L.R. 494: A.I.R. 1937 Sind 251.

Where the confession of an accused has been excluded by the trial Magistrate under S. 24, it cannot be taken into consideration in revision even though such confession may be excluded wrongly: 24 Sind L.R. 338: A.I.R. 1939 Sind 168.

7. Conflict between Medical evidence and confession.—Where the accused in his confession stated that he had stabbed the deceased in his belly but the autopsy report showed that the injuries were on the chest, held, contradicted by the medical evidence, the confession was not truthful and could not be relied upon: 1977 Cr.L.J. 1831 (Gau.) (D.B.).

Where a wife confessed having murdered her husband by hitting him four times on his head by an axe and buried him in his room; his corpse was recovered ten days after the murder at her instance in a highly decomposed state with no injuries clearly visible on the head; held, her confession could not be discarded merely because the doctor conducting the autopsy had testified that there was only one cut injury on the head; the body being highly decomposed, it was not possible for the doctor to see all the injuries: A.I.R. 1989 S.C. 483: 1989 Cr.L.J. 823.

Where the version given in the retracted extra-judicial confession was inconsistent with the medical evidence, held, no reliance could be placed on it: A.I.R. 1994 S.C. 214: 1994 Cr.L.J. 245; 1984 Cr.L.R. 193: 1984 W.L.N. (U.C.) 11 (Raj.).

Where a confessional statement had exculpatory parts, which were not only inherently improbable but also contradicted the medical testimony, as well as the eye-witness's evidence which fully supported the inculpatory parts, held, the trial Court could not accept the exculpatory parts: (1981) 52 Cut.L.T. 276: 1981 Cr.L.J. 1461.

8. Confession—Evidentiary value.—It is true that ordinarily an offender is reluctant to disclose that he had taken any part in any offence. However, it all depends upon the handling of the situation by the officers responsible for the investigation. It is the experience of the Courts that in some cases offenders do make confessions and furnish information necessary for the detection of the crime. It all depends upon the tact and skill of the Investigating Officers as to how to draw out true facts from the offenders themselves. Therefore, when there appears to be no reason for the officer fabricating when in fact no information leading to the discovery of property had been given, it must be held that the information was obtained by the Investigating Officer by his tact and skill: 1958 Raj.L.W. 527.

All parts of a confession are not entitled to equal weight. Some may be believed while others rejected: I.L.R. 1 Luck. 117: A.I.R. 1926 Oudh 618. See also (1940) 42 Punj.L.R. 1: A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 157.

The rule which excludes evidence of statements made by a prisoner, when they are induced by hope held out of fear inspired by a person in authority is a rule of policy: (1913-14) 18 Cal.W.N. 705: 1 Mad.L.W. 989 (P.C.).

A confession to be admissible must be voluntary and made without any pressure: I.L.R. 35 All. 260: 19 I.C. 367; 52 I.C. 881 (1): 20 Cr.L.J. 721. See also 47 Mad.L.W. 143.

Confessional statement of exculpatory character—It should not be acted upon: 1959 Ker.L.J. 782: I.L.R. (1959) Ker. 962.

The absence in the confession of the details in extenso put forward by the prosecution when the witnesses were examined in Court is not a reason for which the confession can be said to be untrue where there is nothing in the statement in the confession which is contrary to the oral evidence: 1958 Cr.L.J. 238: A.I.R. 1958 S.C. 66.

That before the committing Magistrate no question under S. 342, Cr.P.Code was put to the appellant with regard to the confession and, therefore, he had no opportunity to put forward his complaint about the confession until the case came before the Sessions Court, even if it is a defect would not in any way show that the confession was involuntary: 1958 Cr.L.J. 238: A.I.R. 1958 S.C. 66.

Under S. 24, which is a rule of exclusion, it is not necessary that there should be decision in so many words that a confession is not irrelevant. In every case in which a confession is admitted in a criminal case, the fact that evidence of the confession is admitted is sufficient to make the confession evidence. It is open to the defence to object to the evidence of confession going in, but till such objection is raised, there is no need for the Court to pronounce a formal decision on the question of the relevancy of the confession. The actual fact of admission of the confession is sufficient for the purpose: 48 Mad.L.W. 777: (1938) 2 M.L.J. 1065.

The rule which excludes confessions not having been made voluntarily is a rule of policy. No formal proof by prosecution as to the voluntary nature of the accused's statement is necessary: 1957 M.L.J. (Cr.) 520: (1957) 2 M.L.J. 358.

There is no onus upon an accused in a criminal case to prove that he did not voluntarily make a confession which he is alleged to have made. Before a confession is taken into consideration, the Court has not only to be satisfied that it was genuinely made but has also to be satisfied that it was made freely and voluntarily. It is, therefore, for the prosecution to satisfy the Court on these points. The words 'appears to the Court' in S. 24, however, show that positive proof of the fact that there was any inducement, threat or promise is not necessary. The confession itself, the evidence adduced on behalf of the prosecution and the defence, if any, and all the circumstances of the case have to be taken into consideration. If, upon such consideration, the Court feels that the accused made the confession as a result of any inducement, threat or promise having reference to the charge, or even if the Court feels that there is reasonable doubt that there was such inducement, threat or promise, it cannot be satisfied that the confession is free and voluntary and hence it has to exclude the confession from consideration. But the Court cannot exclude a confession on mere conjecture or surmise, i.e., in other words, on mere assumption without any basis that inducement, threat or promise must have been used: 1958 B.L.J.R. 6: A.I.R. 1958 Pat. 166.

The prolonged custody immediately preceding the making of the confession is sufficient unless it is properly explained to stamp it as involuntary. The fact that the accused made various suggestions in the cross-examination of the C.I.D. Inspector such as that he was given bhang and liquor, or shown pictures, or promised to be made an approver, and they have been rejected as unfounded does not relieve the prosecution from its duty of positively establishing that the confession was voluntary, and for that purpose, it is necessary to prove the circumstances under which this unusual step was taken: A.I.R. 1956 S.C. 56: 1956 Cr.L.J. 152.

It is not necessary that the confession of the accused should be corroborated in all its particulars, but the law requires that the statement should be corroborated in its material particulars: 1973 Sim.L.J. 195 (D.B.).

It is for the prosecution to prove the voluntary nature of the confession on which it relies. If the confession is not voluntary and genuine but a tainted one, no question of its corroboration arises: I.L.R. 36 Pat. 141. It must be established that a confession is voluntary and also it is true. For the purpose of establishing its truth it is necessary to examine the confession and compare it with the rest of the prosecution evidence and the probabilities of the case: A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 637: 1957 S.C.J. 699: 1957 M.L.J. (Cr.) 672.

An accused's confession cannot be made the foundation of conviction; it can only provide support to other evidence. The proper way of appraisal is, first, to marshal other evidence against the accused (keeping out the confession altogether) and see whether, if believed, it justifies conviction; it may not then be necessary to call the confession in aid. But cases may arise where the Judge does not feel it safe to act on the other evidence; the Judge may then call in aid the confession and use it to lend assurance to the other evidence and convict the accused which but for the confession he would not be prepared to do: A.I.R. 1952 S.C. 159: 1952 S.C.R. 526: 1952 Cr.L.J. 839. Thus, the High Court's approach to make the confession a basis for ascertaining the facts and then seek corroboration in material particulars by other evidence, held, is wrong: (1992) 1 S.C.C. 473.

Conviction on basis of confession by accused—When justified: 1981 Cr.L.J. 1408 (Gau.).

Correctness of confession not established—Such confession not sufficient for punishing the accused: 1982 M.P.W.N. 355.

If a confession is not voluntary in the wider sense of the term, ex hypothesis the person who made it did not do so with the desire to tell the truth. This fact, in itself, introduces an element of suspicion. In such circumstances if facts are proved which suggest, that an inducement of some kind, although outside the terms of S. 24 was in fact given, the Court may well refuse to accept the confession as true: I.L.R. 63 Cal. 1053: A.I.R. 1936 Cal. 316.

Where the Magistrate in whose presence a confession was made is called as a witness and swears that the statement was made before him freely and willingly and not in the presence of a policeman, the confession is voluntary and can be acted upon: 2 L.L.J. 653.

Where the accused are unable to explain their confessions which clearly indicate their guilt, the confessions alone are sufficient for their conviction: 5 O.W.N. 968. The evidence of an admission of guilt to villagers may be as strong evidence against an accused as a confession before a Magistrate. It requires no corroboration: 5 O.W.N. 698: A.I.R. 1928 Oudh 393; A.I.R. 1929 Oudh 272.

Confession against himself to a witness is valid and admissible: A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 92. The confession of an accused person is substantive evidence and a conviction can be based solely on a confession: 1960 Cr.L.J. 520: A.I.R. 1960 Raj. 101.

Where a confession was approved to have been made without any sort of influence or tutoring and the same was not contradicted by other evidence, held, that the accused could validly be convicted on the strength of the confession alone: 114 I.C. 771: A.I.R. 1929 Oudh 167. See also (1936-37) 41 Cal.W.N. 183: A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 39; 38 Cr.L.J. 84: 165 I.C. 795.

Where the main foundation for the conviction is the confession alleged to have been made by the accused, there are three things which the prosecution must establish: (a) that a confession was made, (b) that evidence of it can be given, and (c) that it is true: 29 Sind L.R. 1: A.I.R. 1934 Sind 172; A.I.R. 1957 All. 459: 1957 Cr.L.J. 803.

When a confession is made the foundation for conviction, the Court must be satisfied that it is true. In law it is open to the Court to give effect to the sound presumption that what a person wilfully states against his interest is likely to be true and to convict him on his confession alone. But in practice, Courts following the English system of jurisprudence try to guard themselves particularly in cases of serious offences, against the danger demonstrated by experience of persons falsely implicating themselves for reasons which may not be apparent. The truth of falsity of a confession has, therefore, to be weighed by the Court in the light of all the facts and surrounding circumstances: 1958 An.L.T. 1125: A.I.R. 1959 Andh. Pra. 419.

Where an accused confesses to having caused the death of a woman and admits having robbed her after her death, but during that confession introduces into it circumstances with a view to excuse himself from a conviction for murder, it cannot be contended that the confession must be accepted as it is and that so taken it is not sufficient for a conviction. Such a contention is wholly unacceptable and is contrary to practice and authority. When the confession is shown to be voluntary and made with due apprehension of what was said and of the consequences, the confession must be accepted and acted upon alongwith other circumstances as a whole, including the other evidence, in the case: 187 I.C. 481: 1940 Mad.W.N. 169.

In the absence of any evidence to show that any threat, promise or inducement was made to the accused and when he had not been continuously questioned all the time but only at intervals during the period the mere fact that it took two to three hours from the time that the accused was brought to the house of the mukhia to the time when he made the confessional statement cannot make his confession one other than free and voluntary: A.I.R. 1959 S.C. 18.

The rule of prudence does not require that each and every circumstance mentioned in the confession with regard to the participation of the accused person in the crime must be separately, and independently corroborated, nor is it essential that the corroboration must come from facts and circumstances discovered after the confession was made. If the rule required that each and every circumstance mentioned in the confessional statement must be separately and independently corroborated, then the rule would be meaningless inasmuch as the independent evidence itself would afford sufficient basis for conviction and it would be unnecessary to call the confession in aid: 1957 Cr.L.J. 481: (S.) A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 216.

Where the accused persons are charged with offences under Ss. 302, 364 and 386, I.P. Code and the Court has considered it unsafe to act upon the confession as basis for the conviction in respect of murder, there is no reason why the confession in so far as it relates to the two offences of kidnapping and extortion should not be taken into consideration as against the accused to lend assurance to conclusion against them in so far as these offences are concerned based on circumstantial evidence: 1957 Cr.L.J. 559: A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 381.

Where the case against the accused depends mainly upon an alleged confession and there is a conflict as to the manner in which the confession had been obtained by the prosecuting agency, the accused is justified in asking the Court to give him the benefit of the doubt: 119 I.C. 420: 30 Cr.L.J. 1080: A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 88. Where the confession as a whole is unreliable, the discovery which is but a part of that confession should also be held to be unreliable: 177 I.C. 617; (1938) 40 Punj.L.R. 890: A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 594.

Antecedent recoveries cannot in any way be used to corroborate or to test the truth or otherwise of a confessional statement. At the most these can be taken as a part of the statement and cannot in any way add to its weight: 1953 Cr.L.J. 1865: A.I.R. 1954 J.&K. 1. But see infra. It is not necessary that the corroboration must come from facts and circumstances discovered after the confession: 1958 Ker.L.T. 761: 1958 M.L.J. (Cr.) 869: A.I.R. 1959 Ker. 46.

The statements of the accused are of two kinds, namely, exculpatory statements and inculpatory statements. Inculpatory statements should be accepted with a great deal of caution and unless the law permits it, they should be excluded from consideration. But exculpatory statements cannot be placed on the same footing. An exculpatory statement is the defence of the accused and not a statement from which any inference of guilt can be drawn against him. Therefore, such statement cannot be excluded from consideration: I.L.R. (1959) 1 All. 508: 1959 Cr.L.J. 924: A.I.R. 1959 All. 483.

The accused goes on making a confessional statement in his own way. It is not subjected to cross-examination or clarification by re-examination and the accused cannot be directed to follow the chronology exactly in the manner it happened. If the contradiction goes to the root of the matter on a material link of the case, it may be vital. A part of the confessional statement might, however, be rejected and other part accepted if the part to be rejected is proved to be false by other prosecution evidence. No hard and fast rule can be laid down. The ultimate conclusion will depend upon the facts and circumstances of each case: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 520: A.I.R. 1965 Ori. 175.

Where there was a material contradiction in the evidence of recording officer and the panch witness, held, such contradiction was sufficient to impeach the veracity of the alleged confessional statement: 1977 Cr.L.R. 43 (Mah.).

9. Confession in Police custody—Inadmissibility of.—Question of admissibility of confession comes when statement is made to Police Officer or while in Police custody: A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 539.

Statements of accused made to the Police or while in the custody of the Police Officer about his committing the offence and his pointing out the place where he committed the offence are not admissible under S. 26, Evidence Act: A.I.R. 1955 Manipur 1: 1955 Cr.L.J. 139.

Prisoner in custody of Head Constable even after order to send him to judicial lock-up—Custody is illegal—Prisoner held kept in illegal custody to extort confession—Confession held inadmissible. See A.I.R. 1955 Pepsu 33: I.L.R. (1954) Pepsu 317.

When a confession was made after being in Police custody for several days and protracted consultation between the accused and the Investigating Officers and was subsequently retracted, the confession is inadmissible: 53 I.C. 929: (1918-19) 23 Cal.W.N.

886. See also A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 39: (1936-37) 41 Cal.W.N 183; 5 L.L.J. 128; 21 Cr.L.J. 177: 54 I.C. 881 (P.C.); 18 Cr.L.J. 106: 10 Bur.L.T. 270; 17 Cr.L.J. 402: 35 I.C. 932.

The accused must be free and unhampered at the time when his confession is recorded and should not be subject to the influence of the Police. Where a Police constable was standing guard when the confessions of accused persons were recorded, and two of the accused were hand-cuffed when their confessions were recorded, it cannot be said with confidence or certainty that the accused were not under the influence of the Police: I.L.R. (1948) Nag. 147: A.I.R. 1948 Nag. 344: 1948 Nag.L.J. 489.

The immediate presence of a Policeman or Police Officer is not necessary to prove that the accused was in the custody of the Police. Even temporary absence of a Policeman or a Police Officer would not terminate his custody and the accused shall be deemed to be in the custody of the Police even in such circumstances. No statement made by the accused under these circumstances can be held to be voluntary: 1958 All.L.J. 660: 1959 Cr.L.J. 940: A.I.R. 1959 All. 518. Moral exhortation is not objectionable: I.L.R. 4 Pat. 646: A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 772.

The mere fact of the accused being in Police custody is no reason for presuming that his confession was induced by threat or promise. 98 I.C. 250: A.I.R. 1926 Oudh 622. Where the threats made do not influence the accused's confession it is admissible: I.L.R. 49 Bom. 642: A.I.R. 1925 Bom. 529.

Statements leading to discovery are admissible under S. 27, Evidence Act, although they are statements made to the Police in the course of investigation. But the principle of S. 24 applies to the statements under S. 27 and if the statement is involuntary, it would be excluded. Where the statements leading to discovery were made to the Police as a result of harassment and continuous interrogatories for several hours after the person is treated as an offender and accused, such statements must be regarded as involuntary and must, therefore, be excluded from the evidence. The statements do not fall under S. 161, Cr.P.Code because a person treated by the Police as an offender and accused cannot come within the category of any person supposed to be acquainted with the facts and circumstances of the case. Moreover, statements made by the accused person after long interrogation by the Police and admitted under S. 27, Evidence Act, would be hit by Art. 20(3) of the Constitution of India: 1960 Nag. L.J. 390: 1960 All.W.R. (Supp.) 41: 1960 All. Cr.R. 264: 1960 Cr.L.J. 1429: A.I.R. 1960 Bom. 488: I.L.R. (1960) Bom. 664.

Whether the accused was in Police custody when his confession was recorded, the crucial test is whether at the time when an accused makes a confession he is a free man or his movements are controlled by the Police either by themselves or through some other agency employed by them for the purpose of securing such a confession. The immediate presence of a Policeman or Police Officer is not necessary to prove that the accused was in the custody of the Police. Even temporary absence of a Policeman or a Police Officer, would not terminate his custody and the accused shall be deemed to be in the custody of the Police even in such circumstances. No statement made by the accused under these circumstances can be held to be voluntary: 1959 Cr.L.J. 940: A.I.R. 1959 All. 518: I.L.R. (1958) 2 All. 213.

The confession was recorded some five days after the arrest of the accused and during all this time he was nominally in judicial lock-up which was inside the Police thana itself. The record of the confession did not disclose that the Magistrate made any real attempt to satisfy himself that the accused was confessing voluntarily. On the other hand, the language in which some questions were put by the Magistrate to the accused and the answers which were given by him led one to believe that the accused did not understand these questions and did not really give the answers attributed to him. Held, that the confession must be excluded from evidence; however, the exclusion of confession did not affect the value of the strong circumstantial evidence against the accused: 1957 Jab.L.J. 460.

Where disclosure statement was made by accused after a lapse of 22 days of continuous interrogation and further Police was already in possession of the information before the statement of the accused was recorded in the presence of witnesses, held, it was inadmissible in evidence: 1994 Cr.L.J. 894 (Him. Pra.) (D.B.).

Confession recorded while accused was in Police custody—Confession not read over or explained to accused—Effect: I.L.R. (1959) Ker. 319.

10. Confession under inducement, threat, etc.—If one makes a statement after being told by the Police 'I need to take a statement from you', then obviously some inducement in the colloquial sense is held out to one to make it; but an inducement of that nature is not a sufficient inducement in law to render inadmissible a statement resulting from it. To render a confession or admission admissible the prosecution must prove affirmatively that no inducement relating to the charge or accusation was held out to the accused to make it. A confession or admission must be excluded if it is made: (i) in consequence of, (ii) any inducement, (iii) of a temporal character, (iv) connected with the accusation or relating to the charge, (v) held out to the accused by a person having some authority over the subject-matter of the charge or accusation. The words, 'I need to take a statement from you', or even words covering a suggestion that a man will have to come to the Police Station because the Police need to take statement from him when he gets there, is not an inducement in any way relating to the charge or accusation. An oral admission made by the accused, in response to the suggestion is admissible against the accused: (1957) 3 All E.R. 623. The expression 'you had better tell the truth' has always been held to import a threat or promise unless the words are qualified in some manner. The words do not mean mere exhortation to tell the truth for the accused had already been questioned by the Police. The words are susceptible of the interpretation that the accused was told that it would be better for him if he told the truth and that amounts to an inducement: 152 I.C. 998: A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 417. See also 167 I.C. 795; A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 39: (1936-37) 41 Cal.W.N. 182; A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 308: I.L.R. 17 Pat. 369; A.I.R. 1940 All. 46; 1941 Mad.W.N. 956: A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 237; A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 49: (1941) 2 M.L.J. 1070; I.L.R. (1943) Mad. 224: A.I.R. 1943 Mad. 710: (1943) 2 M.L.J. 293.

A confession can be acted upon by Courts only if it is a genuine one and the Court is satisfied that it is voluntary and that it does not appear to have been brought about by inducement, threat or promise as contemplated by S. 24. [A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 1871, Rel. on]: (1972) 1 Mys.L.J. 499: 1972 M.L.J. (Cr.) 374 (D.B.). See also 1979 Cr.L.R. 366 (Guj.).

Mere exhortation to speak out the truth in the name of God cannot of itself amount to an inducement. Such exhortation is merely a moral exhortation and is not objectionable so as to render the statement made in consequence thereof inadmissible: 1976 Kash.L.J. 253: 1976 Cr.L.J. 1310 (D.B.); 1991 Cr.L.J. 3054 (Madh. Pra.) (D.B.).

The question whether the words used were intended to convey to accused an inducement, etc., must depend on surrounding circumstances, in which those words were used. The burden is on prosecution to prove that the confession was not improperly induced: A.I.R. 1933 Sind 409. Where accused is told by a person in authority that if he makes a voluntary confession which is considered to be full and true his prayer for being made an approver will receive due consideration, the confession made under such circumstances is inadmissible: I.L.R. 45 All. 633: 21 All.L.J. 585.

Confession induced by promise of being made an approver—Not admissible: A.I.R. 1956 Raj. 67: 1958 Cr.L.J. 550. See also 1959 Ker.L.T. 167: I.L.R. (1959) Ker. 319: 1959 Ker.L.J. 222, cited in Note 3, supra.

It is not correct to assume that a person would not make a confession of his guilt, which will be prejudicial to his interest unless some pressure is exerted on him. If a Court has any reason to doubt the free and voluntary nature of the confession, then it is for the prosecution to prove that it was made without threats or promises or inducements: 52 Cr.L.J. 50: A.I.R. 1951 Him. Pra. 1.

Where there is good reason for the suspicion that a confession has been caused by inducement having reference to the charge against the accused person proceeding from a person in authority, the confession is inadmissible in evidence: A.I.R. 1950 Cal. 427. Confession made under inducement of promise of release from the custody, held, is irrelevent and inadmissible: 1971 B.L.J.R. 641.

S. 24 makes a confession inadmissible if it appears to have been caused by any inducement or promise: I.L.R. 45 All. 300: A.I.R. 1923 All. 352; A.I.R. 1929 Sind 245; A.I.R. 1930 All. 29; A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 237 (Asking accused to produce weapons coupled with a promise that nothing would happen if they produced the weapons).

The expression used in S. 24 is not 'proved' but 'if it appears' which is not as strong an expression as 'proved'. Though the accused has not adduced evidence to substantiate the allegation that the confession was obtained by threat or inducement, it is still open to him to show that the circumstances under which it was made would justify that inference. Quaere: whether the onus of proving that a confession is voluntary is on the accused or the prosecution: (1928-29) 33 Cal.W.N. 1112: A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 726; I.L.R. 61 Cal. 339: A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 636.

Assuming that it is for the accused to prove his allegation that the confession is made by him under threat and pressure of the Police, the burden of this proof on the accused is very light. This question of the onus is not free from difficulty. However, the words used in S. 24, Evidence Act, are 'appears to the Court'. It is really not the strict proof which is required from the side of the accused to show that the confession was the result of inducement, threat or promise. If it appears to the Court that it was so it is sufficient for the purposes of holding that such confession is irrelevant: A.I.R. 1952 Pepsu 19: I.L.R. (1951) Pepsu 277.

To justify a Court in holding that a confession is irrelevant on the ground of its having been caused by an inducement, threat or promise it is not necessary that it must be strictly proved to have been so caused. All that is necessary is that it must appear that it was caused by inducement, etc. The word 'appears' in S. 24 of the Evidence Act indicates a lesser degree of probability than is necessary for 'proof' as defined by S. 3. If in the circumstances of a case there is, in the opinion of the Court, reason to suspect that a confession was obtained by inducement, threat or promise, that would render the confession inadmissible. The prosecution in order to have it admitted must show that it was freely made: I.L.R. (1951) Mys. 239: A.I.R. 1950 Mys. 82.

The word 'appears' in S. 24 indicates a lesser degree of probability than the word 'proof' as defined in S. 3 of the Act. S. 24, therefore, does not require positive proof of improper inducement, etc., to justify its rejection. A well grounded suspicion is sufficient to exclude confessions from consideration: I.L.R. (1954) Patiala 317: A.I.R. 1955 Pepsu 33.

S. 24 does not require that there should be positive proof of improper inducement, threat or promise to justify the rejection of the confession. A well-grounded conjecture reasonably based upon circumstances disclosed in the evidence would be sufficient: I.L.R. (1948) Nag. 147: A.I.R. 1948 Nag. 344.

It is true that it is not necessary for the accused to prove definitely that the confession was brought about by any inducement, threat or promise and if it can be gathered from the circumstances that such inducement, threat or promise was held out, the confession would not be acted upon. But there must be something to show that there was any such inducement, threat or promise. When the confession is quite clear and cogent and has been made after due formalities and sufficient caution, there must be some such circumstances from which inducement, etc., may be reasonably inferred: 1952 Raj.L.W. 103. It is not possible for a Court to say that the making of the confession "appears" to it to have been caused by any inducement, threat or promise, except upon evidence which is before the Court: 4 Pat.L.T. 186: 72 I.C. 961: A.I.R. 1923 Pat. 13; A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 676.

Under S. 24, unless it appears to a Court that an inducement, threat or promise was held out by a person in authority a confession would be relevant without any formal proof of the voluntary nature of the statement and formal evidence that the statement was voluntary is not required from the prosecution in practice: (1941) 2 M.L.J. 1070: A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 19.

Where the accused whose confession is being recorded informs the Magistrate that he is making the confession under inducement, the confession is not admissible and cannot be allowed to go to the jury. Whether there was inducement or not is immaterial: I.L.R. 45 Bom. 1086: 60 I.C. 1006. A confession by an accused to a Magistrate who did not record or administer any of the necessary warning or adopt any of the safeguards, made after the Police had threatened him and retracted at the earliest possible moment after the accused got out of the influence of the Police, is inadmissible and insufficient in itself to base a conviction: 1933 Mad.W.N. 723.

Where a confession is positively proved by the record of the Magistrate that it was voluntary, the mere fact that the accused confessed in the hope of pardon will not justify his rejection as being improperly induced, in the absence of evidence to suggest that any Police Officer or other person in authority did or said anything which could possibly be construed into holding out a hope of pardon: (1932) 34 Punj.L.R. 704: A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 388.

Where the Magistrate has not put the necessary preliminary questions to the accused with a view to satisfy himself that his statement was voluntary, the irregularity can be cured under S. 533 of the Cr.P.Code, provided the omission has not injured the accused in his defence on the merits. In other words, the Court is enabled under S. 533 to take evidence to prove that the confession was 'duly made', i.e., in accordance with Ss. 164 and 364. If the questions were not put at all the confession is not 'duly made'. But it is not necessarily irrelevant. The Court may satisfy itself that there was necessarily no inducement or threat and so fulfil the requirements of S. 24. The weight to be attached to it depends on the facts of each case: 1933 All.L.J. 1551: A.I.R. 1934 All. 81: I.L.R. 56 All. 302 (F.B.).

A confession made by the accused during the course of investigation is inadmissible. Thus, when there is no evidence save the confession of the accused, the proceedings against the accused are liable to be quashed: 1994 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 423 (Mad.).

The statements made by the accused in the trial of the Police Officer concerned in the investigation of the case could be admitted in evidence against him on his own trial for murder: 59 I.C. 324: (1920) 22 Bom. L.R. 1247.

A confession made by an accused person under fear, encouraged by a Police Officer in a subtle way in the hours that elapsed before the accused reached the Magistrate, is inadmissible in evidence: 60 I.C. 417: 32 Cal.L.J. 204.

Where the accused who had surrendered in Court and had been granted bail was subsequently brought to Court in custody for the purpose of recording of confessional statement, held, such a confessional statement was unreliable as it would be deemed to have been made under coercion: 1994 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 428 (All.) (D.B.).

A confession made by an accused person on an inducement by a Police Officer that he would be offered a pardon is inadmissible in evidence: 60 I.C. 417: 32 Cal.L.J. 204.

The fact that a Police Officer got by means of threat information from a prisoner as to a circumstance incriminating the latter does not render that information inadmissible in evidence: 17 Cr.L.J. 32: 31 I.C. 321.

The influence may be suggested by the confession itself or by the prosecution evidence or by the evidence adduced by accused or by surrounding circumstances which the Court is bound to take into consideration: 72 I.C. 961: 4 Pat.L.T. 186.

It cannot be stated as a proposition of law that no statement made on oath can be a voluntary statement that would be admissible under S. 24, which says nothing about voluntary statement. A statement made on oath may be said in certain cases to be made as the result of the holding out of a threat; but that is a question of fact. The administering of an oath is not necessarily or always tantamount to a threat to the person under oath: A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 654: (1942) 2 M.L.J. 112.

Where an application to be made as an approver was made from jail by an accused and he also expressed a wish to make a statement, it was held that though it might be an indication of an anxiety on the part of the accused to earn a pardon by becoming an approver, it was not a reason to hold that any inducement was held out to the accused to make a confession: 1943 O.W.N. 88: A.I.R. 1943 Oudh 269.

An answer in the affirmative to a leading question by a person in authority renders the confession unacceptable to support a charge of a serious offence. Thus, where there was no record of the specific words spoken by the accused regarding the offer made in the circumstances and the reasons alleged by the authority and there were reasons to believe that the confession was due to fear under express or implied threat proceeding from the authority, held, the confession was inadmissible in view of S. 24: 1975 Cr.L.J. 1335 (Goa); 1984 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 121 (Ori.).

The lengthy character of the judicial confessional statement containing unnecessary details coupled with the fact of its retraction before commencement of the trial, held, reasonably lead to an inference that it was neither voluntary nor truthful: 1983 W.L.N. (U.C.) 580 (Raj.).

Applicability—Coercion or inducements—Locus standi to complain: 1970 Mah.L.J. 947 (S.C.): 1970 M.P.L.J. 931.

Under S. 24 a confession would be irrelevant if it should appear to the Court to have been caused by any inducement, threat or promise. The crucial word is the expression 'appears'. The appropriate meaning of the word 'appears' is 'seems'. It imports a lesser degree of probability than proof. A prima facie opinion based on evidence and circumstances may be adopted as the standard laid down. It is not possible or advisable to lay down an inflexible standard for guidance of Courts.

Under particular circumstances whether a statement made by the person in authority (that if the whole truth did not come out, he would hand over the inquiry to the Police) appears to the Court to be a threat or not is a question of fact. Where the three lower Courts concurrently held that in the circumstances of the case the statement did not appear to be a threat within the meaning of S. 25 of the Evidence Act, but was only a general statement which any person who lost his property and was not able to find out the culprit would make, in exercising the powers under Art. 136 of the Constitution, the Supreme Court was not prepared to differ from the finding: (1963) 1 S.C.R. (Supp.) 689: (1963) 2 Cr.L.J. 178: A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 1094.

Under S. 24 there must be something from which the Court can infer that the inducement or promise was given to the accused by some person who had authority to give it. It must be shown that hope was directly inspired by some one who had authority to make the promise: 109 I.C. 225: A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 500.

An approver's disclosure is in its very nature always the result of an inducement or promise, namely, the inducement to confess upon a promise of pardon; but should it appear that it was extorted as the result of undue duress, such as threats of violence, to that extent the provisions of S. 24 would be applicable and the confessional statement would have to be ruled out of evidence: I.L.R. 9 Lah. 608: A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 320 (2). The mere fact that there was a race for pardon does not detract from the value of the confession, if that race of pardon does not appear to have been caused by an inducement or promise held out by one in authority: 11 L.L.J. 5: 30 Cr.L.J. 49. It is open to the High Court to rule out a confession caused by any inducement, threat, etc.: I.L.R. (1943) 1 Cal. 487: A.I.R. 1943 Cal. 625.

The accused was charged with an offence of storing without a licence large quantities of mill made cloth for sale, the evidence against him being primarily the statement made by him to the Textile Control Officer, and the quantity of cloth seized. The trial Magistrate refused to attach importance to the statements and discharged the accused. On a revision filed by the Crown, the Sessions Judge while agreeing with the Magistrate in the appreciation of evidence in regard to other particulars, came to the conclusion that the statements of the accused and the quantity of cloth seized were sufficient legal evidence which rendered the order of discharge unreasonable and ordered further enquiry: Held, in revision (1) that the mere fact that the Textile Control Officer asked the accused to tell the truth did not amount to a threat or inducement within the meaning of S. 24 and the statements were, therefore, admissible; (2) where the trial Magistrate thought there was no legal evidence from which it could be inferred that the large quantity found with the accused was stored for sale but the Sessions Judge found that there was legal evidence, it was certainly permissible for the Sessions Judge to set aside the order of discharge and direct further enquiry: A.I.R. 1948 Mad. 324: (1947) 2 M.L.J. 359.

A Superior Officer can always extract a self-incriminating confessional statement by merely putting the threat of prosecution and dismissal and any employee who is confronted with such a disastrous possibility will easily succumb to the pressure of making a confession in the hope of avoiding the prosecution and/or disciplinary action: 1991 Cr.L.J. 922 (Cal.) (D.B.).

Where the Postal Superintendent admitted that he did hold out an inducement of promise that only departmental enquiry would be held, held, in such circumstances the accused will be in a position where he would feel that by making confession, he would avoid criminal proceedings likely to be filed against him; no reliance could be placed on such confession: 1983 Cr.L.R. 188 (Guj.).

Where a School Principal, charged for drawing certain amounts on the contingent bills, in order to misappropriate it, was alleged to have made a confessional statement to his superior officer on oath, even though said officer was not empowered to administer any oath, held, this circumstance by itself would amount to a concealed threat, because if the statement was found to be false, the accused might have entertained a genuine belief that he might be prosecuted; such a statement was clearly inadmissible under S. 24: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 1080.

Inducement, etc., proceeding from person in authority—Police Officer being one of the party and not protesting when others offered inducement: I.L.R. (1964) Guj. 954: (1965) 1 Cr.L.J. 30: (1965) 6 Guj.L.R. 129: A.I.R. 1965 Guj. 5.

Where the total period of interrogation, made in the presence of many persons, was about two hours and was regarding discovery of the knife handle, the blade whereof was found lying near the dead body, held, the High Court was not justified in holding that the accused was interrogated for several hours and his disclosure statement was involuntary and hit by S. 24: A.I.R. 1978 S.C. 1183: (1978) 3 S.C.C. 279.

Where the confessional statement was outcome of Police beating, held, it could not be relied upon: 1982 Jab.L.J. (Notes) 46.

Both the physical condition of the accused as well as the treatment meted out to him by the authorities in whose custody he is, are relevant in determining whether the confessional statement is free and voluntary; thus, where the person under arrest of the customs authorities was a heart patient, having a pacemaker inside his chest, held, it was the tribunal's duty while imposing penalty to see whether the possible authoritative influence of the Customs Officers was completely removed from the accused's mind and whether he had sufficient time to regain his composure before he made the confessional statement: 1992 Cr.L.J. 1190 (Cal.).

Where the accused himself was not assaulted but the person in authority assaulted another person in the accused's presence, held, it would have definitely put the accused in fear of being subjected to a similar treatment; a confession made by the accused in such circumstances is nothing but procured by threat: (1991) 51 E.L.T. 295 (Bom.).

Where the accused had made and signed a confession of having stolen and concealed the Railway property before an officer of the Railway Protection Force and did not either explain in his statement before the Court or cross-examine the officer that the confession was procured from him under threat or inducement, held, the confession was voluntary. [A.I.R. 1959 S.C. 18 and A.I.R. 1956 S.C. 217, Rel. on]: 1980 M.P.L.J. 483: 1980 Cr.L.J. 1024.

Where the accused's brothers-in-law forced the accused to tell them the truth as to where their sister (who had been murdered) was, and both of them promised the accused that they would not take any action, held, the confession made to them by the accused was brought about by compulsion and promise of immunity from further action and, therefore, could not under S. 24 be acted upon against the accused. [A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 1871, Rel. on]: 1972 M.L.J. (Cr.) 374: (1972) 1 Mys.L.J. 499 (D.B.).

Inadmissible confession—Inadmissible confession would be inadmissible wholly: 38 I.C. 767: 18 Cr.L.J. 383 (Bur.).

11. Confession of co-accused.—It is well settled that unless the co-accused's confession is self-inculpatory, it cannot be used as a confession against the other co-accused; it would be only a mere statement: (1988) 2 Bom.C.R. 42.

When an accused makes an exculpatory confession implicating the other accused, that sort of confession cannot be the legal basis for the conviction of other accused. The confession of a co-accused has not been defined in the Evidence Act. But if a self-inculpatory confession in support of a co-accused is there, and it is corroborated by other evidence, then this sort of confession or corroboration may be used to supplement or corroborate or support the other evidence: (1991-2) 39 B.L.J.R. 953: (1991) 3 Crimes 404 (D.B.).

Confession of co-accused—Approver's evidence—Extent of corroboration—Duty of Court: I.L.R. (1979) Bom. 380 (D.B.).

Confession of co-accused—Admissibility: 1968 Cr.L.J. 347: A.I.R. 1968 Ker. 66.

Where but for the confession of his co-accused, there is absolutely no material on record against the accused, the Magistrate may in an appropriate case refuse to issue process at the threshold itself; it is, of course, different if the accused's own confession is on record: (1988) 38 E.L.T. 271 (Bom.).

Confession of co-accused cannot be treated as substantive evidence. In dealing with a case against the accused person, the Court cannot start with the confession of a co-accused. It must begin with other evidence adduced by the prosecution and after it has formed its opinion with regard to the quality and effect of the said evidence, then it is permissible to turn to the confession in order to receive assurance to the conclusion of guilt if the judicial mind is about to reach on the said other evidence. In other words, confession by a co-accused can be pressed into service only when the Court is inclined to accept other evidence and feels the necessity of seeking for an assurance in support of its conclusion deducible from the said evidence: 1995 Cr.L.J. 1762 (Ori.).

Confessional statement of the co-accused cannot be the foundation even for the purpose of framing of the charge against the accused: (1985) 2 Bom.C.R. 499.

Self-inculpatory extra-judicial confession implicating the co-accused also—Corroborated by the recovery of dead body and discovery of weapon of offence—Held, conviction was justified so far as accused was concerned: A.I.R. 1987 S.C. 1572: (1987) 3 S.C.C. 227.

Confession of co-accused can be used against other co-accused of the case only when they are being tried jointly for the same offence: (1992-1) 40 B.L.J.R. 293.

12. "Persons in authority".—(See also S. 25, Note 4, infra). There is no statutory definition of the words 'person in authority', but it is well settled that the words have reference to a person who has authority to interfere in the matter under inquiry. Generally speaking a 'person in authority' is one who is engaged in the apprehension, detention or prosecution of the accused or one who is empowered to examine him: I.L.R. 12 Pat. 241: A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 149 (S.B.).

Expression 'person in authority' in S. 24 should be interpreted liberally. If such a person is interested or is concerned with the investigation of a case it would be sufficient to give him that authority: A.I.R. 1955 Pepsu 33.

S. 24 refers only to a person in actual authority, the test being the possession of some power or control over the accused with reference to his case: 18 Cr.L.J. 58: 10 Sind L.R. 140.

The belief of an accused that the persons to whom he made a confession were 'persons in authority' is not sufficient to bring them within the term. The test is: Had the person authority to interfere with the matter ? Whether a certain person is a person in authority would largely depend upon the circumstances of each particular case. Mukhias to whom confession was made by accused were held to be not persons in authority: 152 I.C. 1032: A.I.R. 1934 Sind 172.

The expression 'person in authority' has a wider meaning than the actual prosecutor and the test is, has the person any authority to interfere in the matter and any concern or interest in it sufficient to give him authority: 43 I.C. 605: 19 Cr.L.J. 189 (M.). See also I.L.R. 40 Bom. 220: (1915) 17 Bom.L.R. 1059. Police Patel in a village is such a person: I.L.R. 40 Bom. 220: (1915) 17 Bom.L.R. 1059; 1959 M.P.L.J. 1211: A.I.R. 1960 Madh. Pra. 132. So also a Mukhia of a village: I.L.R. 49 All. 57: A.I.R. 1926 All. 737; 1947 All.L.J. 560: A.I.R. 1948 All. 101. But see A.I.R. 1934 Sind 172. Also village Chowkhidar: 1936 All.L.J. 999: A.I.R. 1936 All. 753 (F.B.). See also I.L.R. 17 Pat. 369: 174 I.C. 524: A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 308; A.I.R. 1947 Pat. 146: 48 Cr.L.J. 412. The words 'person in authority' may also include the prosecutor: A.I.R. 1945 Cal. 360: 79 Cal.L.J. 149: 46 Cr.L.J. 683; (1921-22) 26 Cal.W.N. 54: A.I.R. 1921 Cal. 458.

A person in authority within the meaning of S. 24, Evidence Act, should be one who, by virtue of his position, wields some kind of influence over the accused. It is not necessary that he should be a person having authority to interfere in the matter of the charge against the accused. In this view, the confession made to a Patel of the village as a result of influence is hit by S. 24 of the Evidence Act: 1960 Jab.L.J. 77: 1960 Cr.L.J. 605: A.I.R. 1960 Madh. Pra. 132.

Assistant Sale Tax Officer under Orissa Sales Tax Act conducting inspection, search and seizure of account books is a 'person in authority'—Statement of accused made to him—Inadmissible evidence as it is not voluntary: (1961) 3 Ori.J.D. 415: (1962) 1 Cr.L.J. 835.

The question as to whether a person to whom a confession has been made is a 'person in authority' would naturally depend on the circumstances of each case having regard to the status of the accused in relation to the person before whom the confession is made. The words 'person in authority' must be liberally construed. Even a superior officer of an accused is a 'person in authority'.

The House Surgeon of a Hospital Ward on whose recommendation the confirmation of a probationary nurse attached to the ward depends is a superior officer to the probationary nurse; he is 'a person in authority' within the meaning of S. 24, in relation to that nurse: (1961) 1 Cr.L.J. 258: A.I.R. 1961 J.&K. 11.

The expression 'person in authority' in S. 24 has not been defined. No illustration of the expression has been appended to the section. Generally speaking 'person in authority' is one who is engaged in the apprehension, detention or prosecution of the accused, or one who is empowered to examine him. An ex-gountia is not a person having anything to do with the apprehension, detention or prosecution of the accused. He is merely an ordinary citizen and is not a person in authority. Confession made to him is admissible in evidence: 32 Cut.L.T. 402: 1966 Cr.L.J. 1180: A.I.R. 1966 Ori. 205.

An extra-judicial confession made before a Gountia, is not invalid, since the Gountia is not a 'person in authority' and especially so after abolition of Gountia system. In the absence of any proof to establish a case of threat, promise or inducement against such a person the extra-judicial confession will not be hit by S. 24 of the Evidence Act. Truth of the retracted extra-judicial confession as to commission of a murder can be established by the recovery of the dead bodies from the place of occurrence and of the weapon stained with human blood and the medical evidence corroborating the confession in material particulars both with regard to the corpus delicte and complicity of the accused though a general corroboration is sufficient. Statement of the accused in the committing Court which is to be read as evidence under S. 287, Cr.P.Code, can also be used to corroborate it: 32 Cut.L.T. 1170: I.L.R. (1966) Cut. 635.

'Person in authority'—'Gaothia'—Gaothia witness in murder case—Abolition of Gaothia system in Bihar—Held, Gaothia could not be said to be a 'person in authority': 1982 Cr.L.J. 2346 (D.B.).

Block Development Officer is a person in authority so far as a clerk-cum-cashier is concerned who worked under him. But the onus is on such person to establish that the confession was caused by inducement, threat or promise, and it has further to be proved that they were sufficient to influence him to make the confession by entertaining an idea that he would gain any advantage or avoid any evil of a temporal nature: (1975) 41 Cut.L.T. 1085.

'Person in authority' has not been given any statutory definition, but it is well settled that such a person is one who is engaged in the apprehension, detention or prosecution of the accused, or who is empowered to examine him. The Sarpanch is not possessed of any such general powers under the Orissa Gram Panchayat Act (XV of 1948): 1968 Cr.L.J. 697 (Ori.).

A collecting panchayat and an assistant panchayat are both persons 'in authority' within the meaning of the section: I.L.R. 50 Cal. 127: A.I.R. 1923 Cal. 458.

Extra-judicial confession made to panch of Gram-Panchayat, held, is admissible in evidence and the fact that it was made in the presence of the village chowkidar would not make it inadmissible: 1978 Cr.L.J. 1149: 1978 Jab.L.J. 488: 1978 M.P.L.J. 599 (D.B.).

Panchayatdars are not persons in authority within the meaning of S. 24: 45 M.L.J. 845: A.I.R. 1924 Mad. 230. The President of a panchayat who was to consider a case, is a person in authority: (1925-26) 30 Cal.W.N. 512: 33 I.C. 828. See also 1969 All.W.R. (H.C.) 377: 1969 All.Cr.R. 245, cited under Note 27, infra. Also the President of a Village Vigilance Committee: 49 Mad.L.W. 522: A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 515; I.L.R. (1940) Lah. 217: (1940) 42 Punj.L.R. 711: A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 534.

The extra-judicial confession made by an accused to the kotwar is admissible in evidence: (1993) 1 Crimes 732 (Madh. Pra.).

Whether a person who is merely the landlord of the village and a member of the Union Board is 'a person in authority' within the meaning of S. 24. See I.L.R. 63 Cal. 1089: A.I.R. 1936 Cal. 227. As to agent of landlord, see 164 I.C. 891: A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 264.

A confession made by an accused to the Superintendent of Excise in a trial for illicit possession of opium is admissible provided no inducement, threat or promise was held out to the accused for making the confession: (1917-18) 22 Cal.W.N. 451: 45 I.C. 284.

Superintendent of Mines, being the superior officer of the accused, an accountant, is a 'person in authority' within the meaning of S. 24: (1987) 1 Crimes 411 (Ori.).

The honorary Magistrate who is also a jaildar is a 'person in authority': 152 I.C. 998: A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 417.

A lambardar being a person in authority, a confession induced by him by the use of threats is inadmissible: 4 Lah.L.J. 235: A.I.R. 1922 Lah. 263; 26 Punj. Re. 1946 (Cr.); 34 I.C. 642; 1955 Cr.L.J. 537: A.I.R. 1935 Pepsu 33. A jaildar or lambardar is an officer who is to help the Police in their investigation: 14 Punj. Re. 1911 (Cr.): 12 I.C. 973. See A.I.R. 1929 Oudh 272; 1936 All.L.J. 376: A.I.R. 1936 All. 470; I.L.R. 18 Lah. 794: (1936) 40 Punj.L.R. 186. See also A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 476 (Where a villager was directed by the Police to make the accused to confess by inducement).

The head of a Matha in Balliguda Sub-Division holds an important position and if an accused while kept tied up was threatened with sound beating and then he confessed to having committed a crime, it may be reasonably inferred that the confession was extorted by threat from the person who in the opinion of the accused had sufficient authority to put him in the imminent fear of his life or at any rate to seriously injure him unless he confessed his crime: I.L.R. (1952) Cut. 620: A.I.R. 1953 Ori. 149.

A confession made to Thugyi by an accused who had been sent for by the former after being told that he would not be punished if he was not a party to the offence is irrelevant and inadmissible in evidence as the Thugyi is a person in authority within the meaning of S. 24: 26 I.C. 129. Other answers and questions based on the inadmissible statement are also inadmissible. (Ibid). Neither a co-villager nor a zamindar, is a person in authority unless the zamindar is directed by the Police to investigate: 37 I.C. 42: 18 Cr.L.J. 58; 9 I.C. 718: 12 Cr.L.J. 119.

Where an accused charged with murder is alleged to have made a confession of his guilt to a Mukhia and Ziledar who were among the party deputed by the Sub-Inspector, the Investigating Officer, to arrest the accused, upon an assurance that he would be set free if he spoke the truth, such a confession would be inadmissible in evidence against the accused as the Mukhia and Ziledar are 'persons in authority' within the meaning of S. 24: 1947 All.L.J. 560: 1947 All.W.R. (H.C.) 390. Katware in C.P. is not a Police Officer: 25 Cr.L.J. 147: A.I.R. 1924 Nag. 29. (See also notes under S. 25, infra).

A confession to a Jail Warden is not admissible: 1930 Mad.W.N. 1249.

Where a post office clerk begged of his superior to be saved if he disclosed everything and the latter having promised to help him the accused made a confession, held, that the confession was procured by inducement held out by a person in authority: I.L.R. 60 Cal. 719: A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 644.

A village headman is a person in authority but where accused made the confession of his own accord out of remorse and there was no proof of inducement, such confession is admissible: 6 O.W.N. 947.

S. 24 does not admit as legal evidence an incriminating statement to a headman at the latter's suggestion to speak the truth, lest witnesses on the other side may let it out when called: 18 Cr.L.J. 106: 37 I.C. 314.

An inamdar holds semi-official position and he is not a person in authority under this section: A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 558.

A village panch actively assisting the Police Officer is a 'person in authority' and a statement made to him under veiled threat and inducement is inadmissible: I.L.R. 8 Pat. 289: A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 275. Statement made to a Monigar on his asking accused to speak the truth is not one made under threat or promise and is admissible whether Monigar is 'a person in authority' or not: 1929 Mad.W.N. 791.

Expression 'person in authority'—Meaning—Expression has to be liberally construed—Person likely to interfere with prosecution of accused is a 'person in authority' —District Co-operative Officer is such a person with respect to a member of Co-operative Society: (1966) 7 Guj. L.R. 86.

Extra-judicial confession made to Postal Inspector—If Postal Inspector a Police Officer—Admissibility of such confession—Test of proof for admissibility under S. 24.

Held, that the Postal Inspector is not a Police Officer although he may have powers departmentally to investigate offences and irregularities committed by subordinates in the Postal Department. It is also well-settled that mere power to investigate into offences committed by subordinates would not necessarily attract the bar as to the admissibility of confession under S. 25 of the Evidence Act: 1968 M.L.J. (Cr.) 226: (1968) 1 Mys. L.J. 457.

Custom Officers.—Where statements by the accused persons before the Customs Officers, who must be taken to be persons in authority, were not made on account of any inducement, threat or promise, they would be admissible under S. 24. The statements would not be inadmissible under S. 25 as Customs Officers are not Police Officers: 1965 M.L.J. (Cr.) 98: (1965) 1 Cr.L.J. 490: A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 481; A.I.R. 1973 S.C. 62: (1973) 2 S.C.C. 401.

Authorities under the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act and Customs Act cannot be equated with Police Officers; S. 25 cannot apply to statements recorded by them: 1989 Cr.L.J. 2138 (Mad.) (D.B.).

The person summoned under S. 108 of the Customs Act, 1962 is, by the statute itself, bound under threat of criminal proceeding to speak what he knows and state it truthfully; but such compulsion to speak the truth, even though amounting to a threat, emanates not from the Officer recording his statement, but from the provisions of the statute itself; S. 24 of the Evidence Act is, thus, not attracted: A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 1087.

A Customs Officer while holding an enquiry and recording statements under S. 108 of the Customs Act is not a Police Officer; he is only a Revenue Officer. The person against whom the enquiry is held does not become an accused till the Customs Officer lodges complaint before the Magistrate; thus, a confession made by such a person during the enquiry is not an accused's confession before a Police Officer; it is not hit by S. 162 of the Code of Criminal Procedure or by Art. 20(3) of the Constitution: 1985 M.L.J. (Cr.) 335; A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 44: (1970) 1 S.C.R. 821: (1983) 13 E.L.T. 1413; 1988 Raj.Cr.C. 462.

Conditions for applicability—Confessional statement recorded by Customs Officer under S. 171-A, Sea Customs Act—Not hit by S. 24, Sea Customs Act (1878), S. 171-A—Scope of: (1965) 67 Bom. L.R. 317: I.L.R. (1965) Bom. 648: A.I.R. 1965 Bom. 195.

Where the confessional statement of a Customs Officer made before three other Customs Officers carrying an endorsement in his own hand-writing of having read and understood its contents was later on retracted by him, held, in view of the consistent, cogent and convincing evidence of the three Customs Officers that the smuggled goods were found in the accused's possession, it was highly improbable for them to falsely involve a fellow Customs Officer; they were competent, not interested witnesses; conviction under S. 135(1)(a)(ii) and 135 (1)(b)(ii) upheld: (1991) 53 E.L.T. 178 (Bom.).

Where a customs enquiry was held pursuant to a Magistrate's order, held, the Customs authorities are not Police Officers; a confession made before them in such enquiries is not hit by S. 24; it is admissible: (1982) 3 S.C.C. 512: 1983 S.C.C. (Cr.) 109.

Where the accused in his statement under S. 108 of the Customs Act, 1962 stated that he was not aware that the packages loaded in the truck contained contraband goods nor were they loaded under his instructions, he merely being an innocent traveller in the truck, held, it did not amount to a confession within the meaning of S. 24 and the said statement was clearly admissible under S. 21 as an admission of incriminating facts: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 1167: (1976) 2 S.C.C. 302: (1976) 3 S.C.R. 672.

Where the retracted confession made to the Customs officials was corroborated by the recoveries of the smuggled goods as proved by the search lists and the witnesses to the same, held, such confessional statement could validly be acted upon: A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 1224: (1980) 2 S.C.C. 239: 1980 Cr.L.J. 923.

Enforcement Officer.—Enforcement Officers under the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act, 1947, are not Police Officers and, thus, statements made to them can be acted upon, if it is voluntary: (1986) 99 Mad.L.W. 754 : (1986) 2 M.L.J. 433 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1981 Ker. 81: 1981 Ker.L.T. 833 (D.B.).

Forest Officer.—The statements made to Forest Officers are not hit by S. 25 of the Evidence Act. In the absence of a specific provision in the Madras Act conferring on the Forest Officer all the powers of the Officer-in-charge, of the Police Station he cannot be called a Police Officer.

In assuming the evidentiary value of the statement, it has to be borne in mind that it was recorded by an officer in the course of the investigation of the case, with none of the safeguards attendant on the recording of the judicial confessions and as such the Court should all the more insist on corroboration. In the total absence of acceptable evidence that the offence was committed much less that the accused had anything to do with it, the conviction of the accused based on the retracted confession is unsustainable: 1959 Ker.L.J. 593: I.L.R. (1959) Ker. 660: 1959 Ker.L.R. 599: 1959 M.L.J. (Cr.) 808; 1989 Cr.L.J. 2038 (Ker.).

Grama Rakshi.—A Grama Rakshi is not a Police Officer and, therefore, confession before him does not attract operation of S. 25. [1977 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 132: (1977) 43 Cut.L.T. 512, held no longer good law in view of 1991 Cr.L.J. 97 (S.C.)]: 1993 Cr.L.J. 2374 (Ori.) (D.B.). See contra (1981) 52 Cut.L.T. 126: 1981 Cr.L.J. 1452 (D.B.); (1978) 46 Cut.L.T. 260; 1992 Cr.L.J. 762 (Ori.) (D.B.).

Village Police Patel.—S. 2(16) read with S. 130 of the Mysore Police Act, 1963 makes it abundantly clear that a Village Police Patel, appointed by the District Magistrate, is a Police Officer; a confession made to him is hit by S. 25 and is inadmissible: (1972) 1 Mys.L.J. 499: 1972 M.L.J. (Cr.) 374 (D.B.). See also (1972) 2 Mys.L.J. 6; 1978 Mah.L.J. 244: 1978 Cr.L.J. 891; (1985) 5 Guj.L.H. 882; 1980 Cr.L.R. 154 (Guj.), cited under S. 25, Note 4, infra.

13. Duty of Court.—The Judge should satisfy himself by putting searching questions to such witnesses who had anything to do with the confession. The first question that ought to strike every Judge is "why the accused made the confession"? It is important to ascertain from those in whose custody the accused was, the circumstances in which the question of confession first arose, how the accused expressed his willingness to be placed before the Magistrate and his readiness to make a confession. Similar questions arise as regards retraction. It is only if circumstances make it reasonable to believe that the accused voluntarily made the confession and agreed to make it before the Magistrate that an inquisitive mind can be satisfied: I.L.R. 55 All. 91: A.I.R. 1933 All. 31.

It is for the Judge to decide for himself whether prima facie the confession of the accused appears to him to have been induced by threat or promise and for that reason to be inadmissible. It is not the province of jury to decide the question of admissibility of evidence. If the Judge considers the confession admissible, it is his duty to point out to the jury that the fact that he considers the confession admissible does not necessarily mean that it is true and it is for jury to make up their minds whether they should accept the confession, and in doing so they should naturally be guided by their opinion on the question whether the confession was voluntary or not: 142 I.C. 639: A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 187. See also I.L.R. (1943) 1 Cal. 487: A.I.R. 1943 Cal. 625.

If the circumstances are such as to raise a strong suspicion in his mind that the confession has been induced by threats or promise of the nature described in that section, then the confession is irrelevant. It is not necessary for the defence to establish conclusively that there was such inducement or threat. It is sufficient if the circumstances afford reasonable grounds for believing that there was such an inducement or threat: (1938-39) 43 Cal.W.N. 893: A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 610.

When the prosecution demands a conviction primarily on the basis of confession recorded under S. 164, Cr.P.Code, the Court must apply a double test:—(1) Whether the confession was perfectly voluntary? (2) If so, whether it is true and trustworthy?

Satisfaction of the first test is a sine qua non for its admissibility in evidence. If the confession appears to have been caused by any inducement, threat or promise such as is mentioned in S. 24, it must be excluded and rejected brevi manu. In such a case, the question of proceeding further to apply the second test, does not arise. If the first test is satisfied, the Court must before acting upon the confession, reach the finding that what is stated therein is true and reliable. For judging the reliability of such a confession, or for that matter of any substantive piece of evidence, there is no rigid canon of universal application. Even so, one broad method which may be useful in most cases for evaluating a confession may be indicated. The Court should carefully examine the confession and compare it with the rest of the evidence, in the light of the surrounding circumstances and probabilities of the case. If on such examination and comparison, the confession appears to be a probable catalogue of events and naturally fits in with the rest of the evidence and the surrounding circumstances, it may be taken to have satisfied the second test: A.I.R. 1978 S.C. 1248; (1978) 46 Cut.L.T. 496; 1982 Cr.L.R. 228 (Raj.).

An unambiguous confession, if admissible in evidence, and free from suspicion suggesting its falsity, is a valuable piece of evidence which possesses a high probative force because it emanates directly from the person committing the offence. But in the process of proof of an alleged confession, the Court has to be satisfied that, it is voluntary, it does not appear to be the result of inducement, threat or promise as contemplated by S. 24, and the surrounding circumstances do not indicate that it is inspired by some improper or collateral consideration suggesting that it may not be true. For this purpose, the Court must scrutinise all the relevant factors, such as, the person to whom the confession is made, the time and place of making it, the circumstances in which it is made and finally the actual words used: A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 1871: 1971 Cr.L.J. 1314: (1971) 1 S.C.R. 215.

Confession under S. 164, Cr.P.Code cannot be acted upon unless it is found to be voluntary and true. To act on extra-judicial confession or later retracted confession, the Judge would generally look for the corroboration: (1983) 2 Crimes 477 (Guj.).

Where the confession was taken at extraordinary length throughout a considerable number of days and it described in the greatest possible detail a whole series of crimes which had been committed and it further appeared that the confession was probably induced by some threat or promise, held, that the confession should not be admitted in evidence till there was a thorough enquiry that it had been made voluntarily: 145 I.C. 863: A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 835 (S.B.).

When once the voluntary character of a confession is challenged by the defence the Judge should make a thorough enquiry to see whether in fact the confession was voluntary: A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 835 (S.B.); A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 737: (1939) 2 M.L.J. 202; 17 Mys.L.J. 238; 1939 All.L.J. 966: 1939 All.W.R. (H.C.) 768.

Even if a confession is admissible in evidence, the Court has still to decide whether or not it is truthful. The Court should also satisfy itself whether or not the accused was a free man when he made the confession. The test is not whether he had formally been arrested; the Police custody in the real sense commences when the accused's movements are restricted or controlled by direct or indirect Police surveillance; and the Court has to take an overall comprehensive view as to the circumstances occurring before and after the confession: 1982 Cr.L.J. 2102 (Ker.) (D.B.).

14. Confession recorded by Magistrate.— While recording the confession, the Magistrate must take due care to ascertain whether the accused was mentally fit to make a voluntary incriminatory statement and understands its implications; he must tell the accused that he is a Magistrate and not a Police Officer; he must ask the accused pointed and searching questions to ascertain as to what impelled the accused to confession; he must further explain to the accused that the latter was not bound under law to make any statement; and the accused must be given sufficient time to reflect and decide whether he should make the confession. The trial Court must satisfy itself on materials on record that the Magistrate had taken all precautions; the warnings set out in S. 164 of the Code of Criminal Procedure in this behalf are illustrative, not exhaustive. [1981 Cr.L.J. 424 (Gau.) (D.B.), Foll.]: 1981 Cr.L.J. 430; 1982 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 39 (Gau.). See also 1991 C.Cr.L.R. 43 (Cal.); 1991 C.Cr.L.R. 195 (Cal.).

The legal formalities complied with by the Magistrate are no sure guarantee of the truth of the confession. In assessing the value of a confession, the entire set up of the prosecution case and the surrounding circumstances and most of all the intrinsic value of the confession itself will have to be taken into account: 1961 Ker.L.T. 201.

There is no provision of law which forbids a Magistrate from recording a confession on a Sunday or any other holiday and at a place other than Court-house: A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 171. See also 165 I.C. 795: 38 Cr.L.J. 84.

In view of the fact that the confessions are generally not readily made, the Magistrate recording confession is duty bound to ask the accused reasons for making confession: 1983 W.L.N. (U.C.) 459 (Raj.).

Where a Judicial Magistrate was available, held, though it was desirable to get the confession recorded by him but that by itself is not sufficient to discard the evidence of Taluka Magistrate who had recorded the confession when same was found to be voluntary and was generally corroborated and did not suffer from any infirmities. [1973 M.L.J. (Cr.) 646 (Karn.), Affirmed]: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 1924.

Confession recorded by Village Magistrate—Admissibility: A.I.R. 1959 Mad. 175: 1959 Cr.L.J. 603.

Where the learned Magistrate had taken all necessary precautions to ensure that the accused had sufficient time to reflect before he made his confessional statement and that he was under no fear or threat or allurement before appearing in the Court to make the statement and the various questions put by the learned Magistrate to him indicated that he had taken all reasonable precautions to remove any trace of fear from the accused before he made the confessional statement, held, such a judicial confession could very well be relied on: (1994) 1 An.L.T. (Cr.) 695 (S.C.); 1982 Cr.L.R. 228 (Raj.).

A voluntary and genuine confession is undoubtedly legal and sufficient proof of guilt. The confessing accused were in Police custody for a very short time before they confessed before the Magistrate. The Magistrate who recorded the confession duly followed the provision of law as enjoined in S. 164 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and gave him due caution and warning. Further, he gave more than three hours' time for reflection and after reflection the due caution and warning was repeated and he recorded his statement. Held, that the accused persons were in custody for a short period and such a stay in the Police custody did not prima facie warrant the conclusion that the ingredients as stated in S. 24 of the Evidence Act were not complied with or that any threat, inducement or tutoring was done in the case of these accused persons. Furthermore, the Magistrate whose duty was to record a confession did so in his judicial capacity and he was satisfied as to the voluntary nature of the confession. There was no material on record to show that any threat, coercion or inducement was offered by the Police to the accused persons before they made their confession during their short stay in the Police custody. The Magistrate was also satisfied that three hours' time for deliberation was sufficient for making a voluntary confession in the instant case. The confession as recorded by the Magistrate was voluntary: 1966 Cr.L.J. 323 (2) (Cal.).

If the Magistrate has put to the accused all the necessary questions to satisfy himself that the confession was voluntary and also appended the necessary certificate, held, it was not necessary to examine the Magistrate as a witness, in absence of anything justifying his examination: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 1165: 1981 Cr.L.J. 628: (1981) 2 S.C.C. 224.

Where soon after the occurrence the accused was taken in custody and produced before the Magistrate and was sent to jail for reflection and was again produced before him on the next day and the Magistrate duly recorded his confession which was corroborated in material particulars in regard to the nature and number of injuries by medical evidence, held, the fact that accused made a retraction in examination under S. 313, Cr.P.Code and Magistrate who recorded the confession was not examined could not make the confessional version unreliable: 1988 Cr.L.J. 24 (Gau.) (D.B.).

Where an accused, who wanted to make a confessional statement, was produced, the Magistrate did not record the statement on the same day but committed him to judicial lock-up with a direction that he should be produced on the next day. When he was so produced, the Magistrate got the handcuffs removed and sent away the Police from the premises of the Court. Then he explained to the accused that he was not bound to make a confessional statement and if he made one, it might be used as evidence against him. He also assured the accused that after recording of his statement, he would be committed to the judicial lock-up and not to the Police custody. After explaining him these points the Magistrate gave about one and half hours to the accused for reflection whether or not he should make a statement. After that interval the accused again expressed his desire to make the confession and made the statements. He was committed to judicial lock-up after the recording of the confession. A comparison of the confession with the rest of the prosecution evidence and the probabilities of the case also showed that the confession was true.

Held, in the circumstances of the case, that the confession made by the accused was a voluntary and true one and not made on account of Police beating and coercion and hence could be acted upon even if it was subsequently retracted: (1965) 1 Cr.L.J. 35: A.I.R. 1965 Him. Pra. 1.

The accused was kept in remand for about a fortnight after his arrest. Thereafter he was kept in jail custody for three days and then on fourth day he was produced before the Executive Magistrate for recording confession. The Magistrate made the preliminary questioning of the accused, gave him a warning and sent him back to jail. On the next day the accused was produced before the Magistrate and the confession was recorded. During the trial, the accused in answer to question regarding the confession merely said that he did not make the confession. He did not say that it was made on account of any inducement or coercion on the part of Police. On the contention that the confession was not voluntary as the accused was in prolonged Police custody for at least a fortnight before making the confession.

Held, that the confession of the accused was voluntary. It was clear that he had spent four days in judicial custody and he was not under the influence of the investigating agency for at least four days. Again he had 24 hours to think after he was told by the Magistrate that he was not bound to make any confession and if he made one it would be used against him: 1970 Cr. L.J. 373: A.I.R. 1970 S.C. 283.

Where confession was recorded by a competent Magistrate after observing the due formalities and also satisfying himself that it was voluntary and truthful and the accused was produced before him from judicial custody, held, the confession is admissible to prove the charge of murder. [1969 Cr.L.J. 671 (S.C.), Rel. on]: 1977 Cut.L.R. (Cr.) 239: 1978 Cr.L.J. 276; 1980 Cr.L.R. 147 (Raj.); A.I.R. 1978 S.C. 1248, affirming 1976 Raj.L.W. 275: 1977 Cr.L.J. 684.

Where the accused was produced from judicial custody before the Magistrate for making confessional statement and the Magistrate recorded the statement after being satisfied that the accused wanted to give the statement voluntarily and in the absence of any pressure on him and further every page of statement contained the signature of the accused, and he was again remanded to judicial custody after statement, held, the confessional statement was correctly recorded which could be used against the accused notwithstanding its retraction by the accused in his statement under S. 313, Cr.P.Code which was an after thought: 1992 Cr.L.J. 3251 (Him. Pra.) (D.B.). See also 1980 Cr.L.R. 210 (Bom.).

Where judicial confession made by the accused to the Magistrate was recorded in the form of questions and answers and he was virtually cross-examined and whatever he said was in answer to leading questions put by the Magistrate, held, such a confession was rightly excluded from consideration: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 2007: 1981 Cr.L.J. 1688.

Necessity to record confession in manner prescribed: I.L.R. (1959) Ker. 319.

A confession recorded by a Magistrate without conforming to the provisions of S. 164 or S. 364 of the Cr.P.Code is inadmissible in evidence. [A.I.R. 1936 P.C. 253 (2): 71 M.L.J. 476, Rel. on]: (1956) 1 M.L.J. 306: A.I.R. 1956 Mad. 425.

Record of confession—Omission to apprise accused of free atmosphere of Court under S. 164, Cr.P.Code—Effect: A.I.R. 1957 Mys. 50: 1957 Cr.L.J. 521.

Requirements of S. 164(3)—Compliance—Confession—Evidence of—Admissibility: 1967 Cr. L.J. 125: A.I.R. 1967 Tripura 1.

Confessions—Mode of recording and procedure—Confession not recorded in accordance with S. 164—Admissibility—Magistrate failing to state that he was Magistrate and failing to record that he complied with provisions of S. 164(3)—Statements of accused put in question-answer form—Some questions of leading nature—Confession inadmissible as evidence: (1964) 2 Cr.L.J. 105 (Ori).

Magistrate not following precautions before recording confession—Though made independently of Police investigation cannot be taken into consideration: (1965) 1 Cr.L.J. 4: A.I.R. 1965 All. 40.

Confession recorded after charge sheet—Admissibility: A.I.R. 1957 All. 184: 1957 Cr.L.J. 344.

Before a confessional statement made under S. 164, Cr.P.Code can be acted upon, it must be shown to be voluntary and free from Police influence. Thus, where the confessional statement made by the accused under S. 164, Cr.P.Code suffered from serious infirmities, i.e., (a) there was no contemporaneous record to show that the accused was actually kept in jail as ordered by Judicial Magistrate; (b) the Judicial Magistrate who recorded the confessional statement did not question him as to why he was making the confession and (c) there was also nothing in the statement of the said Magistrate to show that he told the accused that he would not be remanded to the Police lock up even if he did not confess his guilt, held, the confessional statement of the accused could not be taken into account: A.I.R. 1978 S.C. 1544.

Accused produced before Magistrate from Police custody—Accused in handcuffs during recording of their confessions—Only 15 to 20 minutes given to accused to compose themselves—Magistrate making no record of time given—No question put to accused as to why they were making confessions—Magistrate explaining to accused difference between Magistrate and Police Officer but not expecting them to understand difference—Confessions held came within mischief of S. 24: 1953 Cr.L.J. 708: A.I.R. 1953 Bilaspur 3.

Where an accused, charged with murder and subjected to Police torture, was produced before the Magistrate 10 days after his arrest without any explanation for the delay, his confession was recorded two days thereafter without the Magistrate complying with the necessary formalities and safeguards and the accused, though remanded to judicial custody, was presented to the Magistrate by the Police, held, the confession, being involuntary and obtained under Police pressure, was hit by S. 24; and was thus inadmissible: 1976 Cr.L.J. 96: 1975 J.&K.L.R. 323 (D.B.).

Where the Magistrate had no idea about the mode of, and precautions to be taken for recording the confession and nothing on record showed whether or not any Police Officer was then present inside the Court room, held, no reliance could be placed on such confession; it had to be discarded: 1981 All.W.C. 687: 1981 All.Cr.R. 353: 1981 All.L.J. 1153. See also 1981 Cr.L.J. 424 (Gau.) (D.B.); 1992 C.Cr.L.R. 366 (Cal.).

If an economically poor and socially backward accused is not fully explained and made to understand full implications of making the confession, the same should not be accepted. [1981 Cr.L.J. 424 (Gau.) (D.B.), Foll.]: 1981 Cr.L.J. 430.

Where in a murder case the accused made a confessional statement but without the Magistrate assuring him that he would not be sent back to Police custody even if he declined to confess, held, such a lapse by itself would not vitiate the confessional statement; it would still be admissible: 1982 Cr.L.J. 2158: 54 Cut.L.T. 195.

Where an accused, a step-mother, in a case under S. 307 of the Indian Penal Code had, in reply to the Magistrate's questions, stated that he had not been tutored, she did not mention any threat or torture or inducement by Police and she was never sent to Police custody, and she made a detailed catalogue of events, held, her confession was free and voluntary even if the Magistrate had neither asked her the reason for making the confession nor assured her that she would not be sent to Police custody even if she declined to confess; her confession was prompted by repentance: 1989 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 4 (Cal.) (D.B.).

Accused, in Police custody, making two applications expressing desire to make a confession—Though the Magistrate warned him that he was not bound to make any statement and that the statement made could be used against him as evidence, he proceeded to record the confession without giving any time to accused to reflect upon his warning—Doors of the Court-room, where the confession was being recorded, were not closed—Police Officers were present outside the Court and the possibility of their over-hearing the confession, or at any rate of the accused believing that they could over-hear it, could not be ruled out—Held, no reliance could be placed upon the confession because these circumstances clearly detract from the confession being voluntary and genuine: 1990 Cr.L.J. 385 (P.&H.) (D.B.).

Where an accused in Police custody was neither sent to judicial custody nor given sufficient time to be free from Police influence before recording his confession, held, his confession could not be voluntary; it was not admissible in evidence: 1972 Cr.L.J. 362.

Judicial confession obtained after a long 14 days Police custody, held, cannot be said to be voluntary: 1993 Cr.L.J. 1679 (Mad.) (D.B.). See also 1981 Cr.L.R. (Raj.) 462; 1982 Cr.L.R. (Raj.) 489.

15. Time for reflection.—A statement made by the accused under S. 24 of the Indian Evidence Act must be voluntary and true to be entitled to any consideration. The voluntary nature of the statement can only be gathered from the circumstances of the case. When an accused makes statement immediately on being produced from Police custody, that statement is not likely to be voluntary notwithstanding any assertion to the contrary made by the accused. It has, therefore, been laid down in the Criminal Rules of Practice that sufficient time should be given to the accused for deliberation. What amounts to sufficient time in a particular case has to be adjudged from the circumstances of the proceedings. Though sufficient time is given to accused for deliberation, if it appears from the answers given by the accused on the date his statement was recorded that he had not completely got over the warning and the inducement offered by the Police, then notwithstanding the endorsement of the recording Magistrate that the statement made by the accused was voluntary, the Court will not be inclined to accept it as such: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1345: (1968) 2 An. W.R. 86: 1968 M.L.J. (Cr.) 453.

Recording of confession—Sufficient time to be given to accused for reflection before making confession: (1965) 1 Cr.L.J. 393 (Punj.).

No invariable rule as to the time to be given for reflection can be laid down. The length of time to be given for reflection varies with the circumstances of each case. Where the Sub-Divisional Magistrate was satisfied that the accused was completely out of Police pressure or influence and immediately preceding the recording of the confession he was in judicial custody for two days and during this period he was kept cut off all access to the Police investigating the case to ensure that any fear or influence of the Police was dispelled from his mind and the Sub-Divisional Magistrate after asking preliminary questions at 10.40 A.M. gave him time for reflection upto 11.30 A.M. during which period he remained in the Court under supervision of the Court peon and no Police Officer was allowed any access to him, held, his confession was voluntary: 1979 Cr.L.R. 286: 1979 Raj.L.W. 401: 1979 W.L.N. 247.

Time for reflection—No hard and fast rule can be laid down regarding the time to be given to the accused for reflection—One hour's time held sufficient: (1964) 2 Cr.L.J. 487 (Ori.).

The confessional statements cannot be rejected merely because only three hour's time had been given for reflection if they are otherwise acceptable, even though the Judicial Magistrate would have been well advised if he had given more time for reflection to the accused. [1983 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 146 (Gau.), Affirmed]: A.I.R. 1985 S.C. 823. Where the interval between the preliminary examination of the accused and the recording of his confessional statement was about 15 minutes though, he had been in judicial custody for 38 hours, held, confessional statement made by him could be relied on. [1977 Cr.L.J. 684 (Raj.), Affirmed]: A.I.R. 1978 S.C. 1248.

Recording of confessional statement just on the next day of incident, held, is a sheer mistake: 1980 Cr.L.R. 147 (Raj.).

16. Retracted confession—Evidentiary value of.—In law it is always open to the Court to convict an accused on his confession itself though he has retracted it at a later stage. Nevertheless usually Courts require some corroboration to the confessional statement before convicting an accused person on such a statement. What amount of corroboration would be necessary in such a case would always be a question of fact to be determined in the light of the circumstances of each case: A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 637: 1957 M.L.J. (Cr.) 672.

Regarding the impact of the retracted confession against the author of the maker it is now well settled that the Court at the threshold must be satisfied that the same is voluntary in character and truthful in its contents and it is thereafter that inspite of the existence of these features as a matter of prudence the Court would normally insist on corroboration though such degree may vary in the context of the quantum of corroboration: (1988) 2 Bom.C.R. 42.

A confession which is properly and legally recorded does not lose its worth merely because the accused retracted from it as wisdom dawned on him later. Where confession made by accused person was properly recorded by the Magistrate and there was no evidence to hold that the accused made the confession as a result of threat or intimidation or under the influence of Police but later on he retracted from it, held, said confession could be accepted against the accused especially when there was corroboration: 1994 Cr.L.J. 555 (Ker.) (D.B.).

If the Court, after scrutiny finds that confession is on the basis of his voluntary and free will and is not suffering from the vice of temptation, coercion, duress, false promise, etc., then the Court can rely upon the same even if retracted and the same can form the basis for conviction: (1991-2) 39 B.L.J.R. 953(D.B.); (1992) 3 S.C.C. 178.

A retracted confession may form the legal basis of a conviction if the Court is satisfied that it is true and was voluntarily made. The Court may in a particular case, be convinced of the absolute truth of the confession and act upon it without corroboration: 1974 Cr.L.J. 1123 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1988 S.C. 1883; 1985 Cr.L.J. 1416 (Raj.); 1985 Guj.L.H. 559; 1981 Cr.L.J. 1452: (1981) 52 Cut.L.T. 126; I.L.R. (1976) 26 Raj. 453: 1976 Raj.L.W. 150: 1976 W.L.N. 118; I.L.R. (1973) 23 Raj. 919: 1973 Raj.L.W. 535: 1973 W.L.N. 463; I.L.R. (1979) 29 Raj. 870: 1979 Raj.L.W. 314: 1979 W.L.N. 324; 1989 Cr.L.J. 2058 (Gau.) (D.B.) [A person can be convicted solely upon his own confession even if retracted if the Court believes it to be true].

There is nothing to prevent the Court from convicting an accused on his confession, though it has been resiled from at the trial, provided the confession is held to be voluntary and believed to be true, but, as a general rule of prudence, the prosecution is required to adduce some independent evidence in corroboration of the confession. The nature and the amount of corroboration, however, depends on the circumstances of each case and no hard and fast rule can be laid down in this behalf. It is not essential that each and every circumstance mentioned in the confession must be substantiated by independent evidence because in that case conviction can be based on the corroborative evidence itself without having recourse to the confessional statement. If there is some evidence coming from independent source which lends assurance to what is contained in the confessional statement, it will serve the purpose of corroboration: 1979 Raj.L.W. 401: 1979 W.L.N. 247 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1973 S.C. 264: 1973 Cr.L.J. 280: (1973) 4 S.C.C. 17; (1980) 2 M.P.W.N. 93; (1981) 52 Cut.L.T. 276: 1981 Cr.L.J. 1461; 1982 Cr.L.J. 2040 (Del.); 1982 Cr.L.J. 2158 (Ori.); (1985) 59 Cut.L.T. 391; A.I.R. 1994 S.C. 1594.

No hard and fast rule can be laid down regarding the necessity of corroboration in the case of a retracted confession in order to base a conviction thereon. But apart from the general rule of prudence where the circumstances of a particular case cast a suspicion on the genuineness of the confession it would be sufficient to require corroboration of the retracted confession. A confession should not be accepted merely because it contains a wealth of detail which could not have been invented. Unless the main features of the story are shown to be true, it is unsafe to regard mere wealth of uncorroborated detail as a safeguard of truth: A.I.R. 1954 S.C. 4.

Retracted confession—Evidentiary value: (1963) 2 Cr.L.J. 562 (Manipur); (1967) 2 An.W.R. 340.

Law does not prohibit basing conviction on a retracted confession though prudence requires some general corroboration in material particulars; if contradicted by prosecution witnesses, it would not be safe to act upon confession: 1977 Cr.L.J. 1309 (D.B.).

A retracted confession can be used only when conviction can safely be based on the other evidence available: (1992-1) 33 Guj.L.R. 554.

Doubtless, any extra-judicial confession is generally considered as a very weak piece of evidence but where an accused adheres at the trial to a previous extra-judicial confession, it may, if the Court so chooses, be acted upon without corroboration. When a retracted confession is given in evidence, the Court has first to see if it is admissible. From the point of view of admissibility alone the mere fact that the confession is retracted is immaterial, unless it is shown that it is improperly induced. When a confession is held to be admissible, then only comes the question what weight should be given to it. As a matter of prudence and caution which has sanctified itself into a rule of law, a retracted confession cannot be made the sole basis of conviction. If, however, the making of the confession is proved beyond question, it should be a strong piece of evidence because no man would make a confession against himself if in fact the confession was not true. When a confession, therefore, is found to be voluntary and true, there is no reason why it cannot even afford the sole basis of conviction: (1973) 39 Cut.L.T. 1211 (D.B.).

The fact of retraction by itself casts a doubt on the truth of the confession. Hence, an additional rule of caution has been laid down for basing convictions on retracted confessions, viz., that the confession must be corroborated. The nature and extent of corroboration necessary must naturally depend on the object with which it is required. The object may be to dispel any doubt raised by the retraction that the confession may be untrue and the maker may have falsely implicated himself; it may be to rebut the presumption applicable to an accomplice that he is likely to falsely implicate other persons. The point of contrast between 'general corroboration' and 'corroboration in material particulars' seems to be that the latter expression requires independent evidence which in some way reasonably connects or attempts to connect the accused with the crime: 1958 An.L.T. 1125: A.I.R. 1959 Andh. Pra. 419.

Confession recorded since retracted—Corroboration: 1960 Cr.L.J. 1108: A.I.R. 1960 Mys. 199: 1960 M.L.J. (Cr.) 565.

Confession though retracted could be relied upon: (1969) 71 Punj.L.R. (Del.) 198.

Where the confession was a retracted one it could be acted upon only if substantially corroborated by independent circumstances; however, it is not necessary that a retracted confession should be corroborated in each material particular, but it is sufficient that there is a general corroboration of the important incidents mentioned in the confession: A.I.R. 1978 S.C. 1770. See also 1982 Cr.L.R. 52 (Raj.).

A retracted confession need not be totally rejected; it has to be considered in the context of various factors, such as whether it was untrue or there was independent corroboration for its general particulars, etc.: 1989 Cr.L.J. 2138 (Mad.) (D.B.).

Retracted confession—Value of—Corroboration—Necessity: (1960) 62 Punj.L.R. 781.

Where the confessions, judicial and extra-judicial, were voluntary but they were retracted by the prisoner, it is necessary to look for an independent corroborative evidence. The weight to be attached to such confessions depends upon the circumstances under which they were made and later retracted including the reasons given by the prisoner for retracting them. Without sufficient and substantial corroboration in material particulars it is not safe to convict the accused on retracted confession alone: I.L.R. (1954) Patiala 316: A.I.R. 1955 Pepsu 33.

Even if a confession is inculpatory, corroboration is necessary if the confession is retracted: A.I.R. 1956 S.C. 9: 1956 Cr.L.J. 126. Where the confession has been retracted, material corroboration must be forthcoming before it can be acted upon: 1958 B.L.J.R. 6: A.I.R. 1958 Pat. 166; 1957 M.L.J. (Cr.) 368: (1957) 2 An. W.R. 63; A.I.R. 1959 Him.Pra. 3.

A retracted confession uncorroborated in material points by other reliable evidence, is of no value. Conviction on it would be bad: 58 I.C. 49: 5 P.L.J. 430. See also 30 I.C. 436; 16 Cr.L.J. 612; 75 I.C. 152: 24 Cr.L.J. 304; A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 597 (whether against himself or co-accused); A.I.R. 1933 Sind 313: 146 I.C. 180; 11 O.W.N. 851: A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 405; I.L.R. 63 Cal. 1053: 63 Cal.L.J. 232: A.I.R. 1936 Cal. 316; A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 208; 163 I.C. 319: A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 88.

A retracted confession by an accused may form the basis of a conviction of that accused if it receives some general corroboration from other independent sources: A.I.R. 1985 S.C. 866: 1985 Cr.L.J. 1173: (1985) 2 S.C.C. 341; (1985) 59 Cut.L.T. 391; 1981 Cr.L.J. 430.

Conviction on a retracted confession if it was voluntarily made, is not legally barred. But the rule of prudence and practice requires that to base a conviction thereon, a retracted confession should be corroborated in material particulars, by independent evidence. It is not enough to have general corroboration: 1967 Cr.L.J. 62: A.I.R. 1967 Him. Pra. 10.

It is unsafe for a Court to rely and act in a confession which has been retracted unless, after a consideration of the whole of the evidence in the case, the Court is in a position to come to the unhesitating conclusion that the confession is true: (1921-22) 26 Cal.W.N. 1010: 71 I.C. 497; A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 329 (2); A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 141; A.I.R. 1930 All. 29. See also A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 731; I.L.R. (1939) 1 Cal. 1: A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 65.

Though a conviction based on a retracted confession is not strictly illegal, still it is a rule of prudence to base a conviction only if the same has been corroborated in essential particulars by other independent evidence. It is not necessary that the entire details of the confession should be corroborated. If the confession is proved to be true by a reference and recourse to other facts and circumstances, then the confession can be accepted: 1954 Cr.L.J. 1545: A.I.R. 1954 Mad. 1006.

It is very unsafe to convict an accused person upon a retracted confession unless the confession is confirmed by other evidence: 36 I.C. 133: 17 Cr.L.J. 453. See also 151 I.C. 716: A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 715; 196 I.C. 597; 23 Pat.L.T. 387: A.I.R. 1942 Pat. 90; A.I.R. 1941 Nag. 86.

A Court should not convict a person upon a statement made by him owing to a promise of pardon but subsequently retracted in the absence of corroboration in material particulars unless the peculiar circumstances of making the confession or the reasons of retraction show the genuineness of the confession in spite of its revocation: 31 I.C. 831: 16 Cr.L.J. 815; (1942) 44 Punj.L.R. 448: A.I.R. 1942 Lah. 271; A.I.R. 1944 Mad. 117: (1943) 2 M.L.J. 634 (F.B.). See also (1945) 47 Bom.L.R. 648: A.I.R. 1945 Bom. 484; A.I.R. 1955 Manipur 1: 1955 Cr.L.J. 139.

It is, however, not safe in general to convict on an uncorroborated confession from point of view of common experience and prudence, and when it is a question of a confession against a co-accused, the corroboration must not only confirm the general story of the crime but must clearly connect the co-accused with it: 30 P.R. 1914 (Cr.): 15 Cr.L.J. 626: 25 I.C. 634. See also 30 I.C. 436: 16 Cr.L.J. 612; I.L.R. 8 Pat. 289: A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 275; A.I.R. 1942 Lah. 271; (1945) 47 Bom.L.R. 648: A.I.R. 1945 Bom. 484.

There is no rule of law requiring a retracted confession to be supported by corroborative evidence in material particulars. The use to be made of such a confession is more a matter of prudence than of law: 46 I.C. 1005: 19 Cr.L.J. 861 (N.): A.I.R. 1954 Sau. 155. See also (1920-21) 25 Cal.W.N. 1010: A.I.R. 1923 Cal. 217; 152 I.C. 1032: A.I.R. 1934 Sind 172; 151 I.C. 924: A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 89; 57 Cal.L.J. 213: A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 747 (F.B.).

Although a retracted confession if believed to be true and voluntarily made, may form the basis of conviction, the rule of practice and prudence requires that it should be corroborated by independent evidence, which however does not mean that each and every circumstance mentioned in the confession with regard to participation of the accused in the crime must be separately and independently corroborated. But it is necessary that there should be some independent evidence which would lend assurance to the truth of the confession that the accused is connected with the crime: 1969 Cr.L.J. 1174 (Ori.).

It is well established that there is no legal bar to base a conviction on a retracted confession if the same is voluntary and true. There is, however, a rule of prudence to look for corroboration of the same in order to assure the mind of the Court that it is safe to convict the accused on his retracted confession. The test for the evidence of an accomplice may not be appropriate for dealing with confession which is retracted. The standards of corroboration in the two are quite different. In the case of the person confessing who has resiled from his statement, general corroboration is sufficient, while an accomplice's evidence should be corroborated in material particulars: 1970 Cr.L.J. 781 (Assam).

The rule of prudence usually observed with reference to retracted confessions does not require that each and every circumstance mentioned in the confession with regard to the participation of the accused person in the crime must be separately and independently corroborated. In the case of the person confessing who has resiled from his statement, general corroboration is sufficient. In addition the Court must feel that the reasons given for the retraction in the case of a confession are untrue: 1958 Ker.L.J. 935: A.I.R. 1959 Ker. 46.

Although the Court comes to the conclusion that the confessions are voluntary although they have been retracted, nevertheless the Court should see as a rule of prudence whether the confessions have been corroborated in some particulars by other independent evidence: 6 Sau.L.R. 473: A.I.R. 1954 Sau. 129; A.I.R. 1954 J.&K. 1.

Every retracted confession, judicial or extra-judicial, must be subjected to two tests; (i) is it voluntary? and (ii) is it truthful? But an extra-judicial confession has to be subjected to a third, the most important test as well: was it indeed made? In fact, it must be the first test before the other two tests are applied because there can be no retraction unless there is a confession in the first instance. An extra-judicial confession is too easy to fabricate; many of the accused's victims and their associates would be too willing to satisfy their grudge. Thus, where a retracted extra-judicial confession is the sheet anchor or chief support of the prosecution, the Court must scrutinise the evidence with utmost care and look for the most reliable and unimpeachable proof of the confession having indeed be made. It is only after being so satisfied that the Court should proceed with the other two tests: (1980) 1 An.W.R. 450 (D.B.).

A retracted confession is admissible in evidence but it should have no weight unless either corroborated in material particulars or unless the tribunal comes to the conclusion that the statement as a whole is a truthful statement. In either of these cases, the retracted statement may be given full weight: I.L.R. 8 Pat. 262: A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 212; 1929 Mad.W.N. 791; (1932) 34 Punj.L.R. 703: A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 388; I.L.R. 11 Luck. 662: A.I.R. 1936 Oudh 156.

Accused fully alive to consequences—Concession unexplained—Conviction on basis of retracted confession is legal: A.I.R. 1929 Oudh 381. A retracted extra-judicial confession can in law be a sufficient basis to support a conviction: A.I.R. 1929 Sind 253. There is nothing in law to prevent a Court from convicting a person upon a confession which has been subsequently retracted provided that the Court is convinced that the statement is voluntary and true: A.I.R. 1930 All. 29. See also A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 141; 12 Mys.L.J. 353; 11 Mys.L.J. 407; 35 Cr.L.J. 1180: A.I.R. 1935 Lah. 280.

Court is at liberty to base a conviction on the retracted confession of the accused if it thinks that it has a ring of truth about it. But it should be very slow to base a conviction upon such a confession which is not corroborated by any other satisfactory evidence, which does not impress the Court and which does not explain any strong motive or the crime: A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 388.

Where the confession is voluntary and not made under pressure, then there cannot be any doubt as to his guilt and conviction may be maintained even though it was subsequently retracted by him: 119 I.C. 420: A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 88; A.I.R. 1930 Oudh 353. Though under S. 133 of the Act a conviction is not illegal merely because it proceeds on the uncorroborated testimony of witnesses, Illus. (b) to S. 114 lays down that a Court may presume that an accomplice is unworthy of credit unless he is corroborated in material particulars. It is absolutely necessary that what he has deposed must be corroborated in material particulars. In contrasting this with the statement of a person making a confession who stands on a better footing, one need only find out when there is a retraction whether the earlier statement, which was the result of remorse, repentance and contrition, was voluntary and true or not and it is with that object that corroboration is sought for. The standards of corroboration in the two are quite different. In the case of the person confessing who has resiled from his statement, general corroboration is sufficient while an accomplice's evidence should be corroborated in material particulars. In addition, the Court must feel that the reasons given for the retraction in the case of a confession are untrue: 1958 Cr.L.J. 238: A.I.R. 1958 S.C. 66.

Where a confession is retracted subsequently, the proper approach is to consider each confession as a whole on its merits and use it against the maker thereof, provided the Court is in a position to come to an unhesitating conclusion that the confession was voluntary and true; and though a retracted confession, if believed to be true and voluntarily made, may form the basis of a conviction, the rule of practice and prudence requires that it should be corroborated by independent evidence. The evidence in corroboration must be independent testimony which affects the accused by connecting or tending to connect him with the crime. In other words, it must be evidence which implicates him that is, which confirms in some material particular not only the evidence that the crime has been committed, but also that the prisoner committed it. The test applicable to determine the nature and extent of the corroboration is thus the same whether the case falls within the rule of practice at common law or within that class of offences for which corroboration is required by statute. The nature of the corroboration will necessarily vary according to the particular circumstances of the offence charged. The corroboration need not be direct evidence that the accused committed the crime; it is sufficient if it is merely circumstantial evidence of his connection with the crime. Thus, a retracted confession cannot be used against a co-accused without substantial and independent corroboration both as to the crime and the criminal.

Held, on facts and circumstances of the case, that the confession of three out of four accused persons was generally corroborated by strong circumstantial evidence. Their conviction on charge of murder must be upheld: (1965) 1 Cr.L.J. 458: A.I.R. 1965 Ori. 66.

An extra-judicial confession, even though subsequently retracted, may well form the basis of conviction of the maker, if it is found to be voluntary and true, even though it is not corroborated by any other evidence. But the rule of practice and prudence requires that such a confession should be corroborated by independent evidence: (1963) 2 Cr.L.J. 579 (Pat.).

There is no rule of law to prohibit reliance being placed on an uncorroborated confession to convict a person confessing. But it is only as a rule of prudence or practice that it is recommended that no conviction may be based only on the confession without any corroboration from other evidence on record. Where the conscience of the Court is convinced as regards the absolute truth or the voluntary nature of a confession it may be prepared to act upon it without corroboration. Thus, as a matter of law there is no prohibition, it is left to the conscience of the Court as to the nature of the corroboration it will require if at all to rely upon a confession and convict the accused. There is no measure as such that can be laid down to the extent of corroboration which a Court would expect before it acts on the confession and convict the accused. It will all depend upon the facts of each case and the facts and circumstances under which such a confession is retracted:

A retracted confession may form the legal basis of a conviction if the Court is satisfied that it was true and was voluntarily made. But it has been held that a Court shall not base a conviction on such a confession without corroboration. It is not a rule of law, but is only a rule of prudence. It cannot even be laid down as an inflexible rule of practice or prudence that under no circumstances such a conviction can be made without corroboration, for a Court may, in a particular case, be convinced of the absolute truth of a confession and prepared to act upon it without corroboration; but it may be laid down as a general rule of practice that it is unsafe to rely upon a confession much less on a retracted confession, unless the Court is satisfied that the retracted confession is true and voluntarily made and has been corroborated in material particulars. Where the High Court having regard to these principles looked for corroboration of the retracted confession and found the same, the finding is one of fact: (1963) 1 S.C.R. (Supp.) 689: (1963) 2 Cr.L.J. 178: A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 1094.

There is no absolute rule that a retracted confession cannot be acted upon unless the same is corroborated. But as a matter of prudence and caution it has now been crystallised into a rule of law that a retracted confession cannot be made solely the basis of a conviction unless the same is corroborated. It does not, however, necessarily mean that each and every circumstance mentioned in the confession regarding the complicity of the accused must be separately and independently corroborated. Nor it is essential that corroboration must come from facts or circumstances discovered after the confession was made. It is sufficient that the general trend of the confession is substantiated by some evidence which would tally with what is contained in the confession. The corroboration in the case of an accomplice or approver must be in material particulars. But in the case of retracted confession of an accused it is only necessary to find out whether the retraction of the early statement which was the result of remorse, repentance and contrition was voluntary and true and it is with that object alone that corroboration is sought for. The standards of corroboration in the two are quite different. The Court must also feel that the reasons given for the retraction in the case of a confession are untrue: I.L.R. (1962) Cut. 516: (1963) 2 Cr.L.J. 229.

A confession of a crime by a person who is charged is usually the outcome of penitence and remorse and in normal circumstances is the best evidence against the maker. Where the confession has been retracted, though a conviction based on a retracted confession is not strictly illegal still it is a rule of prudence to base conviction only if the confessional statement is corroborated by other evidence. Regarding the nature of the corroboration that is required, the rule of prudence does not require that each and every circumstance mentioned in the confession with regard to the participation of the accused person in the crime must be separately and independently corroborated, nor is it essential that the corroboration must come from facts and circumstances discovered after the confession was made.

It would be sufficient that the general trend of the confession is substantiated by some evidence which would tally with what is contained in the confession: I.L.R. (1963) 2 Ker. 26: (1963) 2 Cr.L.J. 458.

A retracted confession cannot be relied on unless it is corroborated. The standard of corroboration required in the case of a retracted confession is not so high as that required in the case of the testimony of an accomplice: (1974) 2 M.L.J. 460: 1974 Cr.L.J. 857.

An extra-judicial confession, which has been retracted, cannot, in the absence of any independent evidence, either direct or circumstantial, corroborating the same, be said to be true or reliable. Even if voluntary, such a confession cannot be acted upon as it is not found to be true: (1974) 40 Cut.L.T. 1177 (D.B.).

In view of the fact that the extra-judicial confession has also been retracted, and that apart from there being no corroborative evidence of such confession, there are circumstances militating against its truth, it is difficult to place any reliance on such extra-judicial confession: (1971) 37 Cut.L.T. 477: (1971) 1 Cut.W.R. 960 (D.B.).

Retracted extra-judicial confession—It is of very little value—Independent corroboration is necessary: 1958 M.P.C. 604: 1958 Cr. L.J. 1402: A.I.R. 1958 Madh. Pra. 380.

Absence of any corroborative evidence—Conviction solely based on retracted confession is illegal: (1968-69) 73 Cal.W.N. 467: 1970 Cr.L.J. 403.

Even if statement is true and voluntary, it cannot be acted upon without corroboration: 1969 Mad.L.W. (Cr.) 68.

Retracted confession—No conviction to follow on such confession unless corroborated in material particulars by independent evidence: 1966 Cr.L.J. 323 (2) (Cal.).

Courts ordinarily consider it unsafe to convict any accused person on the basis of his retracted confession except where the truth of such confession is established by corroboration in material particulars by independent evidence. What is sufficient corroboration for this purpose has to be decided in each case on its own facts and circumstances. It may, however, be generally stated that where the prosecution by the production of reliable evidence which is independent of the confession and which is also not tainted evidence. The evidence of an accomplice or the evidence of a co-accused, establishes the truth of certain parts of the account given in the confession and these parts are so integrally connected with other parts of the accused's confession, that a prudent Judge of facts would think it reasonable to believe, in view of the established truth of these parts, that what the accused has stated in the confession as regards his own participation in the crime is also true, that is sufficient corroboration: (1963) 2 S.C.R. 890: 1963 M.L.J. (Cr.) 509.

A confession, though retracted at a later stage, can certainly, as a matter of statutory law, be accepted by a Court for sustaining the conviction of the confessor because there is no legal bar, but usually the Courts, by way of prudence and practice, require some independent corroboration of the confessional statement in material particulars before convicting the confessing accused thereon. The amount of corroboration necessary as a safeguard of truth and, therefore, for sustaining the conviction is always a question of fact to be determined in the light of the circumstances of each case.

The object of making a provision like S. 164 in the Code is to obtain an assurance of the fact that the confession is not caused by any inducement, threat or promise, as is referred to in S. 24 of the Evidence Act. The recording of confession is, thus, a very solemn act and the Magistrate performing his duty, has to take particular care to see that the confessional statement made is in fact and in substance voluntary. These questions must not become a matter of mere mechanical enquiry.

In case where the Magistrate who had recorded the confession had not applied his mind to the fact that the accused was in Police custody for nearly seven days and the questions and answers recorded also did not reflect any anxiety on his part to satisfy himself that the accused was voluntarily making a confession as a free agent, held, that it was not safe to convict him on the strength of the retracted confession. The accused had completely denied everything including that he knew the victim: (1969) 71 Punj.L.R. (Del.) 198.

Where the medical evidence corroborated the version given in confessional statement, held, such a statement, even if retracted, could certainly be relied on: 1994 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 320 (Andh. Pra.).

17. Retracted confession—Standard of corroboration required.—Corroboration of a retracted confession need not be in material particulars, it would be sufficient if the general trend of the confession is established by some evidence which would tally with the contents of the confession. Each and every circumstance mentioned in the confession regarding the complicity of the accused is not to be separately and independently corroborated. For, in that case the conviction can be based on the independent evidence itself and not on the retracted confession. The corroboration may be obtained also from the facts and circumstances discovered before the confession is made: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 520: A.I.R. 1965 Ori. 175.

The rule of prudence usually observed with reference to retracted confessions does not require that each and every circumstance mentioned in the confession with regard to the participation of the accused person in the crime must be separately and independently corroborated. In the case of the person confessing who has resiled from his statement, general corroboration is sufficient. In addition the Court must feel that the reasons given for the retraction in the case of a confession are untrue: 1958 Ker.L.J. 935: A.I.R. 1959 Ker. 46; (1965) 1 Cr.L.J. 393 (Punj.).

The amount of corroboration depends on the circumstances of each case: 145 I.C. 133: (1933) 35 Bom.L.R. 371: A.I.R. 1933 Bom. 230.

A retracted confession requires to be corroborated. The corroboration required is not only of material particulars but must be useful in connecting the accused with the crime. It is not the law that the confession should be corroborated in every respect. Otherwise the confession becomes superfluous. Nor it is necessary that the corroborating facts or circumstances should have been ascertained subsequent to the confession: (1970) 1 Mys.L.J. 149.

The standard of corroboration required for a retracted confession is somewhat different from the standard of corroboration required for the evidence of an accomplice. Where the existence of the dispute over the lands between the accused and the deceased as stated in the confession was well proved by the evidence of several prosecution witnesses, the subsequent conduct of the accused in going to the Police Outpost of his own accord with blood-stained clothes, must, in the circumstances, be held to amount to corroboration of the confession especially when the accused has given no explanation for his conduct apart from denying the incident altogether: (1963) 5 Ori.J.D. 145: (1964) 1 Cr.L.J. 464.

A Court is entitled to act upon a retracted confession as against the maker and his co-accused only if it is satisfied that it is voluntary and true and provided it is sufficiently corroborated by other evidence in the case. In the case of confession which is true and voluntary but which is retracted all that a Court need to look for is 'general corroboration' and not 'corroboration in material particulars'. It would be sufficient that the general trend of the confession is substantiated by some evidence which would tally with what is contained in the confession: (1961) 2 Cr.L.J. 229 (J.&K.).

Corroboration—Necessity—Unlike in case of accomplice where corroboration in material particulars is essential, general corroboration of retracted confession of accused is sufficient: (1969) 35 Cut.L.T. 201.

The corroboration ought to be of the kind that not only confirms the general story of the crime, but also unmistakably connects the co-accused with the crime: 19 Cr.L.J. 275: 44 I.C. 179.

Exent of corroboration required—Variation between confessional statement and evidence in case—Variation held not material: A.I.R. 1970 Ori. 54.

Retracted extra-judicial confession to form the basis for conviction should be corroborated both with regard to the story of the offence but also the complicity of the accused: 32 Cut.L.T. 1011: A.I.R. 1967 Ori. 24.

Retracted extra-judicial confession—Corroboration can be by the statements of the accused before the committing Court—Such statements are evidence under S. 287 of the Code: 32 Cut.L.T. 1011: A.I.R. 1967 Ori. 24.

Retracted confession—Conviction of—Corroboration in material particulars—Necessity—Extra-judicial confession made immediately after occurrence and subsequent conduct of accused—If sufficient corroboration: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 614: A.I.R. 1965 Assam 89.

Corroboration—Retracted confession can under certain circumstances be corroborated by evidence admitted under S. 288, Cr. P. Code: 1969 Cr.L.J. 1082 (Mad.).

The production of property, the subject of the offence, or some other article connected with the commission of the offence, will be sufficient corroboration: A.I.R. 1959 Mad. 175.

Accused making voluntary statement by retracting it—Confession corroborated by independent evidence—Confessional statement can form the basis of conviction: (1965) 1 Cr.L.J. 35: A.I.R. 1965 Him. Pra. 1.

18. Retracted confession—Use of against co-accused.—A retracted confession by an accused may form the basis of a conviction of that accused if it receives some general corroboration from other independent sources. It cannot, however, be the basis for convicting co-accused though it may be taken into consideration against co-accused also. It is entirely wrong to think that a confession can lead nowhere: A.I.R. 1985 S.C. 866: 1985 Cr.L.J. 1173: (1985) 2 S.C.C. 341.

Retracted confession—Use of against co-accused—Corroboration—Nature and extent of: 1963 Ker.L.T. 969.

A retracted confession of a co-accused can be taken into consideration against a non-confessing accused under S. 30 of the Evidence Act. It is true that, the confession of an accused person is not an evidence in the ordinary sense of the term as defined in S. 3 of the Evidence Act. It cannot be made the foundation of the conviction but can only be used in support of other evidence. The proper way is first to marshal the evidence against the accused excluding the confession altogether from consideration and then to see whether, if it is believed, a conviction can be safely based on it. If it is acceptable of belief independently of the confession, then, of course, it is not necessary to call the confession in aid—But cases may arise where a Judge is not prepared to act on other evidence as it stands even though, if believed it would be sufficient to sustain a conviction. In such an event the Judge may call in aid the confession and use it to lend assurance to other evidence and thus fortify himself in believing that without the aid of the confession he would not be prepared to accept: I.L.R. (1962) Cut. 516: (1963) 2 Cr.L.J. 229.

As against the co-accused who has not made any confession, although a retracted confession may be taken into consideration, the rule is now established that its value against the co-accused is practically nil and cannot form the basis of a conviction without substantial corroboration, both as to the crime and the criminal: 1966 Cr.L.J. 323 (2) (Cal.).

Ss. 24, 30—Retracted confession—Admissibility against co-accused—A retracted confession can be used against a co-accused provided it gets material corroboration: (1962) 4 Ori.J.D. 156: I.L.R. (1962) Cut. 366: (1964) 2 Cr.L.J. 487.

The mere fact of the retraction of a confession is not in itself sufficient to make it appear that it was unlawfully induced but will be corroboration of the approver's statement: 113 I.C. 65: 30 Cr.L.J. 49—The confession of an accused although retracted, may be taken into consideration against a co-accused: 119 I.C. 325: 30 Cr.L.J. 1046; A.I.R. 1944 Cal. 249, and is admissible in evidence against co-accused: A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 667. But its value as a piece of evidence is almost nil: 1935 An.W.R. 48. See also 10 O.W.N. 405: A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 263. It can sustain a conviction if it is corroborated by the production of articles for which the accused can give no explanation. (Ibid). There is no absolute rule that a confession, having been retracted cannot be acted upon without material corroboration. If the reasons given by an accused person for having made a confession, which he subsequently withdraws, are, on the face of them, false, the confession can be acted upon as it stands and without any further corroboration: I.L.R. 53 Mad. 160: A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 837: 57 M.L.J. 681. See also A.I.R. 1930 All. 29 (confession by a person sui juris before a Magistrate but retracted later): A.I.R. 1942 Lah. 271.

There is no rule that a retracted confession cannot be used even for the purposes of corroborating other evidence against the co-accused in the case as it comes from a tainted source. It may even provide the basis of the conviction of the confessing accused, if the Court is satisfied that it is true and voluntary. It is a rule of prudence, not of law to accept the veracity of the confession only if it is corroborated by other evidence: 1967 Cr.L.J. 134: A.I.R. 1967 All. 64.

The Court should very carefully scrutinise the confession and then decide for itself whether it is reliable and trustworthy. When the Court finds that the confession is not true and is made with the sole object of implicating others without any intention to implicate himself it cannot be acted upon by the Court and a conviction cannot be based on it: I.L.R. 10 Luck. 151: 11 O.W.N. 1012: A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 418.

As against the co-accused, a retracted confession may be taken into consideration subject, however, to the rule that it cannot form the basis of a conviction without substantial and independent corroboration both as to the crime and the criminal. Further, a higher standard of corroboration in regard to a retracted confession must be demanded than in the case of the testimony of an approver because the testimony of an approver can be tested by cross-examination whereas the confession of an accused cannot be subjected to such a test: (1942) 44 Punj.L.R. 448: A.I.R. 1942 Lah. 271.

A retracted confession of co-accused has seldom any corroborative value: A.I.R. 1954 Manipur 6. Evidence brought on the records of the case under S. 288 can be made use of to corroborate a retracted confession: I.L.R. (1954) Trav.-Co. 158: A.I.R. 1954 Trav.-Co. 321.

A retracted confession should carry practically no weight as against a person other than its maker: (1921-22) 26 Cal.W.N. 1010: I.L.R. 71 Cal. 497; A.I.R. 1942 Lah. 271; A.I.R. 1944 Cal. 249.

If there is no other reliable evidence in corroboration, the evidence of the approver, coupled with the retracted confession of a co-accused is not sufficient for conviction: I.L.R. 55 All. 91: A.I.R. 1933 All. 31.

Confession of an accused cannot be used to corroborate the evidence of an approver because such a confession is a tainted piece of evidence and cannot be placed on a higher footing than the evidence of the approver itself but the retracted confession of the accused may be relied upon against himself along with other evidence to prove his guilt: 1977 W.L.N. 379 (Raj.).

Where out of seven accused only two were convicted but under different charges under Indian Penal Code, held, the retracted judicial confession of one accused could not be relied upon against the other accused: A.I.R. 1984 S.C. 1793: (1984) 2 Crimes 914.

19. Delayed retraction—Effect of.—No doubt if a retracting statement comes after a certain lapse of time its weight is naturally reduced. Thus, where an accused arrested under the Customs Act, 1962 made a confessional statement but five days after the release on bail, he retracted the same but the Tribunal while imposing penalty proceeded on the basis that because of delay for a few days, the retracted statement will not be considered at all, held, the decision arrived at by the Tribunal was to be set aside in writ jurisdiction: 1992 Cr.L.J. 1190 (Cal.).

Where the Magistrate had appropriately questioned the accused to satisfy himself that the confession was voluntary and true and the retraction of the confession was a belated one, the retraction being at the Sessions trial and no complaint regarding any coercion, threat or any inducement was filed before any authority at any prior point of time, held, said confession was voluntary and true: (1986-87) 91 Cal.W.N. 561 (D.B.)

Where the confession was retracted after several months at the time of his examination under S. 313, Cr.P.Code, held, the confession could not be said to be not voluntary. [1977 Cr.L.J. 684: 1976 Raj.L.W. 275, Affirmed]: A.I.R. 1978 S.C. 1248.

A judicial confession recorded after due precautions by an Executive Magistrate and retracted by the accused six months thereafter on the conclusion of prosecution despite having earlier opportunities and assistance of an experienced lawyer, held, found voluntary and corroborated on material particulars, is sufficient to set aside acquittal for murder: 1986 M.P.L.J. 72 (D.B.).

20. Retracted confession—Proof of.—Where a confession is retracted both before the committing Magistrate and the Sessions trial it cannot be used unless the Court is otherwise satisfied of its truth and voluntary character: 45 M.L.J. 613: A.I.R. 1924 Mad. 391. See also I.L.R. 6 Lah. 415: A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 605; A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 315: I.L.R. 8 Luck. 518; (1942) 44 Punj.L.R. 77: A.I.R. 1942 Lah. 271; A.I.R. 1942 Pat. 90.

A confession retracted before the committing Magistrate would be deemed to have been retracted, at the earliest opportunity. Confession so retracted even if it be after a lapse of time, cannot be relied upon without corroboration. If the confession be deemed to have been made, voluntarily, then, having been retracted, it would require independent corroboration on material particulars, before it can form the basis of conviction. On the other hand, if it was not voluntary, it would be irrelevant and inadmissible. (Confession held not voluntary): A.I.R. 1957 Him. Pra. 52: 1957 Cr. L.J. 1254.

Confessional statement—Correctness affirmed before committing Magistrate—Subsequent retraction in Sessions trial held will not carry any weight: 1970 Cr.L.J. 549 (Manipur).

The fact that the confession was retracted before the committing Magistrate would not deprive it of its voluntary character: 52 I.C. 50. See also 60 I.C. 789; 25 I.C. 634.

The Court has to determine in the first instance whether a retracted confession is voluntary or has been improperly induced. If upon weighing all the circumstances, the prisoners' denial and the probabilities, it appears to the Judge that the confession has been improperly induced, no matter how true it may be he is bound to exclude it. If he comes to the conclusion that the confession was not improperly induced, and admits it, then it becomes evidence in the usual way: 1958 An.L.T. 1125.

In the case of confessions which are reduced to writing and which are subsequently resiled from by the accused, the rule is that the Court may act upon the confession if in its opinion the general trend of the confession is substantiated by some evidence which would tally with what is contained in the confession. Where the Court has to decide whether the confession made by the accused in a criminal case has been proved, the law requires that the Court must be satisfied that the confession made was free and voluntary and that it was not brought about by the influence of hope or fear: 1960 All.L.J. 28.

After the confession of an accused was recorded pardon was tendered to him and he was examined as witness for the prosecution. He denied all knowledge of the occurrence and also did not seem to recollect anything about the confession. His examination was, therefore, stopped by the Magistrate and the pardon withdrawn. But he was not tried jointly with the other accused and was examined as a prosecution witness in the Sessions Court. There also he denied all knowledge and made serious allegations against the Police. He was declared hostile and cross examined and for the purpose of contradicting him, the confession made by him was read over to him. Held, that the prosecution was not justified in reading the confession which he retracted and which according to him was not voluntary: I.L.R. 61 Cal. 399: A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 636. Where approver is tried on the basis of his statement which is retracted it must be corroborated by other evidence: I.L.R. 9 Lah. 608: A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 320 (2).

When a retracted confession is the sole evidence against an accused, it can be but of little value, especially remembering the competition for pardon where some persons suspected of an offence have already confessed or are believed to have confessed: 17 Cr.L.J. 226: 26 Punj. Re. 1916 (Cr.).

Where an accused when retracting a confession alleges ill-treatment and inducement by the Police to extract the confession, the onus is on him to prove such ill-treatment and inducement: 47 I.C. 811: 22 Cal.W.N. 809.

21. Retracted confession — Illustrative cases.—The prosecution witness deposed that the accused confessed before him that he assaulted his wife. Later on the confession was retracted. The witness told another person, also examined as a witness, about the confession and that other person went to accused's house and found the body lying with bleeding injuries. Held, the retracted confession stood corroborated by the fact that the other witness had seen the body with bleeding injuries and that, therefore, the retracted confession as deposed to could be relied upon: 35 Cut.L.T. 94: 1959 Cr.L.J. 1172.

Accused charged under S. 302, I.P. Code, for committing murder of his wife—Extra-judicial confession alleged to have been made by accused, retracted—Such confession cannot be acted on without sufficient corroboration—Accused, held, was liable to be convicted for having killed his wife on the dence which afforded sufficient corroboration to the confession: (1968) 34 Cut. L.T. 939.

Where the accused charged with throttling of his ten years daughter and throwing her dead body, tied with a stone, in a well was said to have voluntarily made an extra-judicial confession two days thereafter to the village frogman whom he had requested to retrieve the dead body and who had ascertained its presence in the well by diving down but upon the frogman's insistence that the body would be retrieved only in the presence of village elders whereupon the accused fled despite the frogman's pursuit to apprehend him, and the accused was said to have made a few more extra-judicial confessions but always made good his escape before the dead body could be recovered, the accused having retracted his confessions and there was no direct evidence of murder, held, it is well settled that a retracted extra-judicial confession requires corroboration in material particulars; apart from the evidence of death of the girl by throttling, there was no other evidence to corroborate the confessions; and the confessions do not inspire confidence as the accused's conduct in confessing, escaping and confessing several times is against human nature; conviction set aside: 1995 Cr.L.J. 2165 (Mad.) (D.B.).

Confessions amount to admissions so far as the makers of the confessions are concerned. Thus, the confessions of rape even though retracted when corroborated by the evidence are sufficient to establish guilt: (1963) 2 Cr.L.J. 562 (Manipur).

Where a foreigner, not well versed in English but living with his English wife, had signed in English every page of his English confession recorded by the Directorate of Revenue Intelligence, and had acknowledged receipt of the detention order by writing the words 'Received copy' in English, but wrote on the confession in Hebrew the words 'not understand', held, it did not amount to retraction of the confession; if he had any desire to do so, he could have simply written in English that he did not understand or accept the statement: 1979 Rajdhani L.R. 41 (D.B.).

Where in a confession, reduced into writing by gram panchayat secretary and not signed by village munsif, the scribe was not examined as prosecution witness and it was retracted by accused in the trial, held, no reliance can be placed on that document: 28 Cut.L.T. 47.

Where a confession had been made and properly recorded by a Magistrate after scrupulously going through all the formalities held, if the accused at the trial totally denies that he had made the confession but makes no effort to prove the allegation, the confession should not be doubted as retracted: A.I.R. 1952 Manipur 11 (2): 54 Cr.L.J. 89.

Retracted confession—Accused giving version as to why he made confession—Plea of extortion under threat by Police not raised before Court of Sessions—Confession held could be taken into consideration: (1963) 5 Ori.J.D. 145: (1964) 1 Cr.L.J. 464.

Where in a case of an alleged poisoning of husband by wife, the wife retracted her confession which was voluntary and various articles stained with the poison were recovered in the viscera and vomits of the deceased, held, there was sufficient corroboration: I.L.R. 15 Lah. 310: A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 150 (2).

The appellant and her co-accused were tried for the death of the deceased persons, and it was alleged that the co-accused administered poison in the food of the deceased at the instigation of the appellant. One of the deceased, it was alleged, had stated before the death that he and the other deceased became sick after taking food prepared by the co-accused, and the co-accused confessed to it when confronted by the neighbours. She also made a confessional statement before a Magistrate, but later retracted and denied everything. The lower Court convicted them on the basis of this retracted confession. Held, that conviction could not be based on retracted confession without the fullest and strongest corroboration as to the factum of the crime and as to the identity and since these were not proved the appellant could not be convicted: (1968) 70 Punj.L.R. 363: 1968 Cur.L.J. 244.

A convicted prisoner undergoing a term of imprisonment made a statement before a Magistrate implicating the petitioner in the offence for which he had been convicted. But when he was examined as a witness he denied the implication of the petitioner. Held, the statement was not admissible in evidence: 54 I.C. 893: 21 Cr.L.J. 189: 18 All.L.J. 87. See also 62 I.C. 545: (1920) 22 Bom.L.R. 1274.

Where a confession is neither voluntary nor true and is subsequently retracted, it is not sufficient for the conviction of the maker especially on a capital charge of murder: 34 Cr.L.J. 1009: A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 265.

Where apart from the retracted confession made to the Magistrate, there was no evidence to even remotely suggest that the accused had any link or connection with the murder and further the medical evidence also contradicted the contents of the confession, held, conviction could not be based solely on such retracted confession: 1995 Cr.L.J. 2715 (Gau.) (D.B.).

Where in their lengthy confessional statements both the accused had attributed everything on each other and those statements were full of facts and minute details and found corroboration from circumstantial evidence, held, even if retracted, they could be acted upon: A.I.R. 1985 S.C. 823.

22. Extra-judicial confession—General.—An extra-judicial confession is usually looked upon as a weak type of evidence and therefore, whenever it is sought to be relied upon, the burden lies upon the prosecution to show its trustworthiness. In order to render such confession worthy of belief, regard must be had to:—(i) the person to whom it was made; (ii) the connection, if any, of the accused with him; (iii) the occasion or reason for the accused to go and make such a confession to him; and (iv) the circumstances in which it was made. Besides all this, the extra-judicial confession must be considered in the over-all context of the prosecution case and the evidence on record: 1990 Cr.L.J. 385 (P.&H.) (D.B.).

Extra-judicial confession to afford a piece of reliable evidence must pass the test of reproduction of exact words, the reason or motive for confession and person selected in whom confidence is reposed. [1982 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 127 (Gau.), Reversed]: A.I.R. 1982 S.C. 1595: 1983 Cr.L.J. 149: (1982) 3 S.C.C. 351; (1985) 59 Cut.L.T. 488; (1987) 1 Crimes 295 (Ori.); 1995 Cr.L.J. 3002 (Him. Pra.) (D.B.).

Evidence of an extra-judicial confession, to be acted upon must satisfy the test of reproducing the exact words; the prosecution must also show the reason or motive for making the extra-judicial confession and whether the accused would repose confidence in the person before whom he made the confession. Thus, where one of the prosecution witnesses of extra-judicial confession had made no mention of it in his statement to the Investigating Officer and no material on record indicated the reason or motive for the accused to make the extra-judicial confession or that the witnesses were persons in whom the accused could repose confidence, held, the extra-judicial confession could not be relied upon: 1988 Cr.L.J. 1086 (Ori.) (D.B.).

The weight to be given to an extra-judicial confession would depend entirely upon the context of circumstances, the person to whom it was made and the actual condition under which it was made, which may probabilise the voluntary nature and truth of the confession or otherwise. Where it was made spontaneously by the accused to a Magistrate who was not concerned with the investigation of that offence, who was not even aware of the identity of the person appearing before him or of the fact that any offence had been committed, the confession is certainly entitled to a very great weight unless there are any reasons suggested to the contrary by the defence: (1960) 1 M.L.J. 112: 1960 M.L.J. (Cr.) 127.

An extra-judicial voluntary confession has to be proved like any other fact; at times it may not be possible for the witness to reproduce the accused's actual words; and that is why the law insists that it be recorded by a Judicial Magistrate after administrating all necessary warnings to the accused that it would be used as evidence against him: A.I.R. 1990 S.C. 2140: (1991) 1 S.C.C. 286: 1990 Cr.L.J. 2289. See also 1973 Sim.L.J. 103.

An unambiguous, extra-judicial confession, has a high probative value; if free from suspicion and suggestion of falsity, it is admissible. But the Court has to be satisfied that the confession is voluntary; it is not obtained by inducement, threat or promises envisaged in S. 24 and there are no suspicious circumstances to attract the bar under Ss. 25 and 26. The Court has also to ascertain that the confession is not inspired by improper or collateral consideration or desire to circumvent the law; it must also scrutinise all relevant facts like the person to whom it is made and the time, place and other circumstances and finally the actual words used by the accused: A.I.R. 1990 S.C. 2140: (1991) 1 S.C.C. 286: 1990 Cr.L.J. 2289. See also 1973 Sim.L.J. 103.

The fact that a confession is extra-judicial and not judicial does not really make any difference. The only material difference between a judicial and an extra-judicial confession is that where as the former is recorded by a Magistrate with all the formalities provided by S. 164, Cr.P.Code in order to facilitate ascertainment of the confession having been given voluntarily, the aid of these formalities and the evidence of the Magistrate are not available in the case of an extra-judicial confession. All the same, if it could otherwise be ascertained that the extra-judicial confession has been made voluntarily and it was true, its probative value would be the same as that of a confession duly recorded under S. 164, Cr.P.Code. Further, when an extra-judicial confession is found to be both true and voluntary, there would, strictly speaking, be no bar to the conviction on the basis of that confession alone even though it was retracted by the accused subsequently: A.I.R. 1957 All. 388: 1957 Cr.L.J. 695.

Where the main foundation for the conviction is the confession alleged to have been made by the accused, there are three things which the prosecution must establish: (1) that a confession was made, (2) that evidence of it can be given; and (3) that it is true. Where there is conflict of evidence as to the manner and the time of it, the accused would be justified in asking the Courts to reject it: 1959 All.W.R. (H.C.) 602: 1959 All.Cr.R. 503: 1959 All.L.J. 736.

While appraising an extra-judicial confession, the Court must scrutinise the evidence of confession minutely and with great caution to determine whether it was natural for the accused, considering his relationship with the witness, to confide in and confess to the witness; whether the confession was consistent with the facts deposed to by other witnesses and discovered during investigations; whether the witness of confession was otherwise reliable or had any motive in falsely implicating the accused either out of enmity or to divert suspicion away from himself for his own possible connection with the offence. If the Court then found the confession as acceptable and trustworthy, the Court might act upon it; it would not be a 'weak' evidence. [A.I.R. 1955 Madh. Bh. 119 (F.B.), Dissent. from; A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 40, Expl.; A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 1871, Rel. on]: (1972) 74 Bom.L.R. 299: 1972 Mah.L.J. 583.

While a judicial confession is recorded by a Magistrate after completing all the formalities under S. 164 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to ensure that the confession is voluntary and truthful, such formalities and the Magistrate's supporting evidence are not available for extra-judicial confessions; nevertheless, if the latter are shown to be voluntary and truthful, the probative value of the two types of confessions is at par. A voluntary and truthful extra-judicial confession, even if retracted, is no bar to conviction. Such a conviction is upheld where the confession is sufficiently corroborated by other circumstantial evidence on record: (1977) 44 Cut.L.T. 643 (D.B.).

An extra-judicial confession must be judged in the background of attending circumstances and it must be considered if the same is voluntary and true and free from suspicion. There should be cogent evidence on record about the attending circumstances as well as the exact words used by the accused person to consider whether the extra-judicial confession was not only true but also voluntary. Even accepting the extra-judicial confession which has been retracted, it is a very weak piece of evidence and has to be corroborated by other evidence on record: 1976 Cr.L.J. 262: 42 Cut.L.T. 726.

The evidence of witnesses of extra-judicial confession must not lack plausibility; it must inspire the Court's confidence: 1982 Cr.L.J. 2342 (Ori.).

Confession if oral must be assessed carefully—Voluntary nature of confession must also be considered before it can be acted upon: 1969 Mad.L.W. (Cr.) 231: 1970 Cr.L.J. 1020: A.I.R. 1970 Mad. 298.

An extra-judicial confession of an accused is admissible in evidence against the accused but it should be examined with all the caution prescribed for the scrutiny of such confessions. It is most often a very weak piece of evidence. There may be circumstances in which it may be of more probative value than it usually is. The first disability is that whenever there is an extra-judicial confession by the time it comes to the Court one is not in a position to know in what actual words the accused had spoken. As far as the actual wording goes, the longer and the more complicated the story of the confession the greater such danger and naturally the less the value of the extra-judicial confession. Where the extra-judicial confession is somewhat reliable, there being an independent corroboration, if it is retracted, it cannot be rated too high: 1971 M.P.L.J. 829.

Extra-judicial confessions are those which are made by the party elsewhere than before a Magistrate or in Court. It embraces not only express confession of crime, but also those admissions and acts of the accused from which his guilt may be implied. Extra-judicial confessions, if they are voluntary, are receivable in evidence: (1965) 7 Ori.J.D. 198: 31 Cut.L.T. 804: I.L.R. (1965) Cut. 369.

Extra-judicial confessions if voluntarily made are receivable in evidence on being proved like any other fact. They must be proved in the same way as any other admission or statements by the evidence of the persons to whom they were or who heard them made or by documents, if any, in which they have been recorded. Extra-judicial confessions are not considered of much value, unless the witness reporting can be thoroughly depended upon from all points of view and the acknowledgment of guilt is clear and unequivocal. Evidence of extra-judicial confession is a weak piece of evidence and it would be dangerous to convict a person solely on its basis. It can be taken into consideration only with other evidence: A retracted confession cannot be made solely the basis of conviction unless the same is corroborated. There must be corroboration which connects the accused person with the crime in question. Extra-judicial confessions which are retracted by the accused call for close scrutiny and cannot usually be deemed sufficient to afford the sole basis for conviction: 1966 M.L.J. (Cr.) 698: 1966 Ker. L.T. 649.

Though extra-judicial confessions have to be received with care and caution there is no reasons why they should not be believed when they are clear, consistent and convincing: 12 Mys.L.J. 73; 39 Mys.H.C.R. 320; A.I.R. 1959 Mad. 175.

Thus, where an extra-judicial confession is made to a close relative and a person who was interested in the accused and who is himself a respectable ryot there was no motive for him to falsely implicate the accused and it was in the probable and natural course of conduct that the accused would go and unburden himself to such a person in order to obtain his advice as to his future course of conduct, there could be no hesitation to accept it as true: A.I.R. 1959 Mad. 175.

Extra-judicial confession made under threat and coercion, held, is not admissible in evidence: 1992 Cr.L.J. 2190 (Pat.) (D.B.).

So long as the evidence with regard to the extra-judicial confession is not biased or tainted or is not of doubtful character or does not spring from any hostile attitude against the accused, it cannot be discarded: 1994 Cr.L.J. 555 (Ker.) (D.B.). See also (1987-1) 35 B.L.J.R. 127: 1986 Pat.L.J.R. 688 (D.B).

Extra-judicial confession must be accepted and acted upon as a whole. It is not permissible for the Court acting upon this evidence to do so only with regard to a part of a confession and to reject some part of it because the accused may not be able to offer further proof: 1960 Cr.L.J. 491: A.I.R. 1960 Mad. 187.

Extra-judicial confessions are frequently made in the presence of persons in authority, and, while that circumstance makes it necessary for the Court to scrutinise the evidence and circumstances carefully in order to ascertain whether the confession was voluntarily made it is impossible to hold, on the basis of that circumstance alone, that the confession was not freely made. It is true that a Court would exclude a confession if it appears, in such circumstances, that the person in authority used some words which might possibly have induced the accused to make the confession. It is not possible to lay down any hard and fast rule as to what would constitute inducement in the circumstances of a particular case. There must, however, be some basis for the finding that the person in authority used words which might amount to inducement: 1958 B.L.J.R. 6: A.I.R. 1958 Pat. 166: 1958 Cr.L.J. 406.

Once the Court comes to a conclusion that the extra-judicial confession was made under pressure, it cannot refer to it as lending assurance to the other evidence produced in the case: A.I.R. 1955 Sau. 68: 1955 Cr.L.J. 1208. Ordinarily, it is unsafe to base conviction on an extra-judicial confession. Evidence in respect of extra-judicial confession particularly when it is entirely oral, should be strictly scrutinised and no reliance should be placed upon it unless the Court is in a position to pronounce with certainty upon the exact words used by the accused. Apart from this where it appears from the prosecution evidence that the extra-judicial confession was the result of inducement and promise offered to the accused by lambardars of the village, the confession should be ruled out: I.L.R. (1954) Patiala 316: A.I.R 1955 Pepsu 33.

Where the Legislature has specially provided in clear and precise terms how a confession is to be made to a Magistrate and thereby delimiting the powers of the Magistrate, it is not open to the prosecution to resort to some other method, namely, that of extra-judicial confession being made to the Magistrate: A.I.R. 1955 Pat. 425: 1955 Cr.L.J. 1377.

An extra-judicial confession recorded by a Village Munsif after the Police investigation has started, being in contravention of the provisions of R. 72 of the Madras Criminal Rules of Practice, is inadmissible in evidence. The illegality cannot be condoned because of the failure of the accused to raise objection to its admissibility at the proper time.

Where information about death of a suspicious nature is received by a Village Munsif, he should record the statement of the informant and is bound to expedite Police investigation by sending the Yadast immediately to the Police. The delay made by him in sending the Yadast cannot afford him a ground for violating the law: 1961 Ker.L.T. 201.

Where in a capital case, the prosecution demanded conviction of the accused primarily on the basis of his extra-judicial confession, it becomes necessary to examine the evidence of witnesses in that behalf critically, by applying a double test—(i) whether the confession was perfectly voluntary, and if so, (ii) whether it was true and trustworthy: 1992 Mah.L.J. 402 (D.B.).

Confession made to private person in presence of Police Officer is inadmissible: (1968-69) 73 Cal.W.N. 467: 1970 Cr.L.J. 403.

Where the accused stated regarding some quarrel with deceased, held, it cannot be used as extra-judicial confession: 1983 M.P.W.N. 126.

Evidentiary value of extra-judicial confession made to a chance witness. See 1983 Cr.L.J. 1411 (Raj.).

If an extra-judicial confession by the accused is said to have been made before his arrest within the knowledge of the Police Officer arresting him, yet no mention of such confession is made by the Police Officer in his arrest entry in roznamcha, the authenticity of such confession is of little value: (1983) 2 Crimes 954 (Raj.).

Extra-judicial confession—Evidentiary value. See 1984 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 121: (1984) 1 Ori.L.R. 199.

23. Extra-judicial confession—Corroboration.—Usually and as a matter of caution Courts require some material corroboration to an extra-judicial confessional statement which connects the accused person with the crime in question: A.I.R. 1959 S.C. 18.

The confession will have to be proved just like any other fact. Usually and as a matter of caution, Courts require some material corroboration to an extra-judicial confessional statement, corroboration which connects the accused person with the crime in question; oral confession which are not reduced to writing will have to be very carefully assessed before they can be acted upon. [A.I.R. 1959 S.C. 902; A.I.R. 1959 S.C. 18; A.I.R. 1953 S.C. 411; A.I.R. 1970 Mad. 298, Ref. to and Rel. on]: (1971) 1 Cut.W.R. 351.

The extra-judicial confession is a weak type of evidence, especially when it is retracted. Firstly, the evidence to prove extra-judicial confession has necessarily to be above board, secondly, some corroboration from an independent source is needed to give strength to that evidence: 1979 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 101(Punj.) (D.B.); (1979) 2 An.L.T. 435 (D.B.); 1979 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 179 (Del.) (D.B.).

Extra-judicial confession should be proved in the same way as other admissions or statements by the evidence of persons to whom they are made. They must be proved by evidence of the most reliable character. The infirmity is that in most cases owing to the absence of any writing, the exact words used by the accused cannot be known and the witness may have misunderstood or may not have remembered. For this reason extra-judicial confessions are not considered of much value unless the witness can be depended upon. It is unsafe to convict a person only on such evidence without corroboration. As a rule of caution, Courts usually require some material corroboration to an extra-judicial confession: (1978) 1 Karn.L.J. 30: 1978 Cr.L.J. 462: I.L.R. (1978) Karn. 133.

An extra-judicial confession, if voluntary, can be depended upon by the Court alongwith other evidence in convicting the accused. It is true that the value of the evidence as other confession just like any other evidence rests on the veracity of the witness to whom it is made. It is also true that the Court requires the witness to give the actual words used by the accused as nearly as possible but it is not an invariable rule that the Court should not accept the evidence, if not the actual words but the substance were given: 1970 Raj.L.W. 1.

In the absence of any material on record to establish the offence, held, conviction on an extra-judicial confession would be illegal: 1982 Cr.L.J. 929: (1981) 52 Cut.L.T. 32.

Extra-judicial confession is a very weak piece of evidence and is hardly of any consequence; if it is lacking in probability, it can be rejected: A.I.R. 1988 S.C. 1705; A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 1545: 1974 Cr.L.J. 1010: (1974) 4 S.C.C. 747; A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 258: 1975 Cr.L.J. 282: 1975 M.L.J. (Cr.) 446: (1975) 4 S.C.C. 475: (1975) 1 S.C.R. 747.

The evidence in the shape of an extra-judicial confession, by itself, is a weak piece of evidence and the Court would normally expect sufficient and reliable corroboration to such type of evidence: 1993 Cr.L.J. 3364 (Bom.) (D.B.); 1982 M.P.W.N. 537; 1983 Jab.L.J. (Notes) 45.

Excepting in very rare cases the value of an extra-judicial confession is not very high and where there is no other corroborative evidence in support of it, it is very unsafe to rely on such confession: 184 I.C. 390: 1939 All.L.J. 732: A.I.R. 1939 All. 685.

Generally speaking evidence of extra-judicial confession is a very weak kind of evidence. It has to be scrutinised minutely and received with great caution. In dealing with extra-judicial confession it should be borne in mind that a witness may easily fabricate wholly or in part a confessional statement and it is very difficult to expose the falsity: A.I.R. 1955 Madh. Bh. 119: 1955 Cr.L.J. 1073 (F.B.).

The evidence of oral extra-judicial confession is undoubtedly a very weak piece of evidence, and it would be dangerous to convict a person solely on its basis. But it can be taken into consideration alongwith other evidence: A.I.R. 1953 Madh. Bh. 43: 1955 Cr.L.J. 497. See also A.I.R. 1953 Vindh. Pra. 38; A.I.R. 1959 Him. Pra. 3; A.I.R. 1959 Madh. Pra. 267 (it must be taken into consideration when it is corroborated by surrounding circumstances and other reliable evidence).

Extra-judicial confession—Material corroboration necessary: 1963 Jab.L.J. 856: 1964 M.P.L.J. 797: (1964) 1 Cr.L.J. 455.

An extra-judicial confession, if satisfactorily proved to have been voluntarily made, may be the basis for a conviction even in the absence of corroboration: (1963) 1 Cr.L.J. 645: I.L.R. (1963) 1 All. 53.

An extra-judicial confession, by its very nature, is a weak piece of evidence and has to be scrutinised with great caution. No doubt an extra-judicial confession, if made voluntarily can be relied upon by the Court alongwith other evidence in convicting the accused. But the confession has to be proved just like any other fact. The value of evidence as to confession just like any other evidence depends upon the veracity of the witnesses to whom it is made. Once the evidence of the witnesses is rejected as not being reliable, the value of the evidence of confession comes practically to nothing. It is also well settled that in case of extra-judicial confessions some material corroboration is required to connect the accused with the crime: I.L.R. (1963) Cut. 511.

True, there is no bar to convicting an accused on his extra-judicial confession but prudence has always insisted on some corroboration from other circumstances; an extra-judicial confession is undoubtedly a weak evidence and it is unsafe to convict solely on its basis unless its evidence is clinching and fully trustworthy. Thus, where one witness to the extra-judicial confession timed it at noon and the other three to four hours earlier and there were other discrepancies, the confession could not be safely relied upon: 1983 Raj.L.W. 418 (D.B.).

To find the accused guilty on an extra-judicial confession which is retracted, that extra-judicial confession must be corroborated in material particulars: 1956 Pat.L.R. 434.

A retracted extra-judicial confession is at best a weak kind of evidence and cannot in the absence of independent corroboration be made the sole basis of an order of conviction: 1960 M.P. L.J. (Notes) 165.

Extra-judicial confessions which are denied by the accused call for close scrutiny and cannot usually be deemed sufficient to afford the sole basis for conviction. There is, however, no rule that they should not be believed when they are clear, consistent and convincing though they have to be received with care and caution. As in the case of judicial confessions which are retracted, as a rule of prudence and caution independent evidence in corroboration is insisted upon. The mere existence of a slight motive is not a sufficient corroboration: 55 Mys.H.C.R. 134.

Extra-judicial confession though retracted subsequently is undoubtedly admissible— When the subsequent discoveries fully corroborate it, a conviction could be sustained on that alone: I.L.R. (1940) Nag. 679: 1940 Nag.L.J. 623: A.I.R. 1941 Nag. 86.

The evidence of extra-judicial confession made by an accused to a witness cannot be termed to be tainted evidence. If the Court believes the witness before whom the confession is made and it is satisfied that the confession was voluntary, a conviction can safely be founded on such evidence alone: 1980 Raj.L.W. 159: 1980 W.L.N. 452: 1981 Cr.L.J. 852. See also (1990) 1 Ker.L.T. 305: (1990) 1 Ker.L.J. 258; (1991) 2 Ker.L.T. 838; (1991) 2 Ker.L.T. 208: (1991) 2 Ker.L.J. 198.

The evidence furnished by the extra-judicial confession made by the accused to witnesses cannot be termed to be a tainted evidence and if corroboration is required it is only by way of abundant caution. If the Court believes the witnesses before whom the confession is made and it is satisfied that the confession was voluntary, then in such a case conviction can be founded on such evidence alone: A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 1320: (1974) 3 S.C.R. 915: 1975 Cr.L.J. 1102: (1975) 4 S.C.C. 234.

It is not open to any Court to start with a presumption that extra-judicial confession is a weak type of evidence; it would depend on the nature of the circumstances, the time when the confession was made and the credibility of the witnesses who speak to such a confession: A.I.R. 1985 S.C. 1678; (1992) 1 Ker.L.J. (N.O.C.) 6 (D.B.).

Extra-judicial — Confessions made by accused voluntarily can be used alongwith other evidence for convicting him: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 765: A.I.R. 1965 Him. Pra. 68.

Law does not require that the evidence of an extra-judicial confession, should in all cases be corroborated: (1993-1) 41 B.L.J.R. 129: (1992) 3 S.C.C. 204: (1992) 1 Ker.L.J. (S.N.) 50: (1992) 3 J.T. 270. Conviction can be based on it, if it is real and voluntary: 1985 Cr.L.J. 1416: (1985) 1 Crimes 859 (Raj.); if it is clear, consistent, true and trustworthy: (1985) 59 Cut.L.T. 488. However, where the extra-judicial confession was proved by an independent witness who was a responsible officer and who bore no animus against the accused, held, there was hardly any justification to disbelieve his evidence particularly when the extra-judicial confession was corroborated by the recovery of an empty cartridge from the place of occurrence: A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 2274: (1978) 1 S.C.R. 597.

Extra-judicial confession, which is not obtained by coercion, promise of favour or false hope, etc. and is plenary in character and voluntary in its nature acknowledging his guilt, and made in presence of a body of persons on two occasions inclusive of the family members of the accused and other witnesses, held, can be acted upon: (1993-1) 41 B.L.J.R. 129: (1992) 3 S.C.C. 204: (1992) 1 Ker.L.J. (S.N.) 50: (1992) 3 J.T. 270.

Though an extra-judicial confession is treated as a weak piece of evidence, there is neither any rule of law nor of prudence which requires that unless corroborated it cannot be acted upon; if the extra-judicial confession is testified by unbiased witnesses not even remotely inimical to the accused and having no motive to attribute untruth to the accused and the words of the witness, clear, unambiguous and unmistakable, show the accused to be the offender, and the evidence of the witness passes a rigorous test on the touchstone of credibility, held, the extra-judicial confession can be accepted and relied upon for convicting the accused; corroboration need not be sought. [(1978) 1 S.C.R. 597: A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 2274, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1985 S.C. 48; 1993 Cr.L.J. 2834 (All.) (D.B.).

Extra-judicial confession appears to have been treated as a weak piece of evidence. But there is no rule of law nor rule of prudence that it cannot be acted upon unless corroborated. If the evidence about the extra-judicial confession comes from the mouth of witness / witnesses who appear to be unbiased, not even remotely inimical to the accused, and in respect of whom nothing is brought out which may tend to indicate that he may have a motive for attributing an untruthful statement to the accused; the words spoken to by the witness are clear, unambiguous and unmistakably convey that the accused is the perpetrator of the crime and nothing is omitted by the witness which may militate against it, then after subjecting the evidence of the witness to a rigorous test on the touchstone of credibility, if it passes the test, the extra-judicial confession can be accepted and can be the basis of a conviction. In such a situation to go in search of corroboration itself tends to cast a shadow of doubt over the evidence. If the evidence of extra-judicial confession is reliable, trustworthy and beyond approach the same can be relied upon and a conviction can be founded thereon: (1987-1) 35 B.L.J.R. 896: 1987 B.B.C.J. 653 (D.B.).

When fact of extra-judicial confession of an accused comes through witnesses having no interest to falsely implicate the accused and it is found free from any suspicion as to its voluntary character and bears a ring of truth in it, then its evidentiary value becomes more stronger carrying high probative value and deserves to be acted upon. Where extra-judicial confession came through witnesses who had no reason to falsely implicate the accused and furthermore it was corroborated by circumstantial evidence and the same had been proved, held, extra-judicial confession could formulate the basis for conviction: 1992 Cr.L.J. 733 (Gau.) (D.B).

The existence of the dead body and other articles in the field of the accused and recovery of the same on information by and at the instance of the accused, coupled with the circumstances that the deceased had visited the accused at or about the time when he might have been murdered furnish strong corroboration to the extra-judicial confession: I.L.R. (1975) 25 Raj. 892: 1975 Raj.L.W. 286.

Where the extra-judicial confession lacked plausibility having regard to the words used and contradictions in the evidence of the witnesses and it was not voluntary as the accused was surrounded by a crowd of two or three hundred persons, held, such an extra-judicial confession could not be made basis for conviction without independent corroboration: 1990 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 168 (Cal.) (D.B.).

Where evidence of extra-judicial confession was fully corroborated by the medical evidence. See (1990) 41 Del.L.T. (S.N.) 31 (D.B.).

24. Extra-judicial confession — Actual words used by the accused.—In ordinary circumstances extra-judicial confessions are not entitled to weight because it is impossible to ascertain the exact words used by the accused in such cases. Where not only it is not possible to find out what exact words were used by the accused in the extra-judicial confession but also there is definite conflict between the statements of witnesses proving the extra-judicial confession as regards the perpetrator of the crime, the extra-judicial confession must be altogether discarded. In any case it cannot be described as credible independent evidence which can be deemed sufficient for the purpose of corroborating a retracted confession: 1953 Cr.L.J. 1865: A.I.R. 1954 J.&K. 1; A.I.R. 1955 Manipur 1: 1955 Cr.L.J. 139.

Where an attempt is made to rely upon an extra-judicial confession, every precaution should be taken to ascertain as exactly as possible the very words which were used by the prisoner who is supposed to have confessed: A.I.R. 1934 Sind 119; A.I.R. 1957 All. 459.

An extra-judicial confession, if voluntary, can be relied upon by the Court alongwith other evidence in convicting the accused. The confession will have to be proved just like any other fact. The value of the evidence as to the confession just like any other evidence depends upon the veracity of the witness to whom it is made. It is true that the Court requires the witness to give the actual words used by the accused as nearly as possible, but it is not an invariable rule that the Court should not accept the evidence, if not the actual words but the substance were given. It is for the Court having regard to the credibility of the witness his capacity to understand the language in which the accused made the confession, to accept the evidence or not: 1959 Cr.L.J. 1219: A.I.R. 1959 S.C. 902. If the Court believes the witness and is satisfied that the confession was voluntary, it may found conviction on such evidence: A.I.R. 1991 S.C. 37: 1990 Cr.L.J. 2643: (1990-2) 10 Guj.L.H. 552; (1991-2) 39 B.L.J.R. 953 (D.B.).

The exact words of an extra-judicial confession need not be proved in every case. In most cases, it would be sufficient if a substance of these words is proved. Ordinarily, layman, before extra-judicial confessions are made, do not note down the words uttered by the accused. They cannot, therefore, accurately prove the exact words used. If the witness gives a substance of the statement made by the accused, the Court can judge whether it amounts to a confession or not. In such a case, there would, ordinarily, be no objection to the Court taking the substance of the statement into consideration: 1958 Cr.L.J. 406: A.I.R. 1958 Pat. 166: 1958 B.L.J.R. 6.

It is not necessary for a witness to whom extra-judicial statement has been made by an accused person, to reproduce the very words used by him if the substance of the confessional statement as made by an accused person, is given by the witness to whom it is made. Such statement could be used against the accused person, if his evidence is not liable to be discarded on the ground of being an interested witness or his evidence being otherwise undependable: 1969 Cr.L.J. 1186 (Punj.).

An extra-judicial confession is not per se an inferior kind of confession or admission, and it would all depend upon the facts of the case. But it is usually subject to the infirmity that the actual words are not preserved; except in a very fallible sense, by recollection: 1960 Cr.L.J. 1344: A.I.R. 1960 Mad. 462.

Extra-judicial confession is considered weak evidence and it is settled law that as far as possible, the Court should be told what the accused had said: 1992 Cr.L.J. 13 (Gau.) (D.B.).

Extra-judicial confession to function as a reliable evidence must be a reproduction of exact words stated by the accused. [1982 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 127 (Gau.), Reversed]: A.I.R. 1982 S.C. 1595: 1983 Cr.L.J. 149: (1982) 3 S.C.C. 351; 1991 Cr.L.J. 570 (Ker.) (D.B.).

If the extra-judicial confession is voluntary and true it can constitute the basis of a conviction. The value of the evidence as to the confession depends on the reliability of the witness who gives the evidence. It is not an invariable rule that the evidence regarding extra-judicial confession is not acceptable unless the actual words used are given. It is always a question of fact to be determined in each case if such evidence is acceptable or not. Held, that the extra-judicial confession which was subsequently retracted was made voluntarily and the same was corroborated by the discovery made on the information of the accused himself, and his admission in the statement under S 342, Cr.P.Code, and also by the finding that the co-accused took the deceased child towards the place of incident, and was last seen with the deceased: (1964) 1 Cr.L.J. 422: A.I.R. 1964 Ori. 100.

Even if the witnesses to whom extra-judicial confession was made, gave substance and not actual words of the confession, held, it can be accepted by the Court notwithstanding slight departure by witnesses from statement in first information report: 1985 Cr.L.J. 1416: (1985) 1 Crimes 859 (Raj.).

There is no invariable rule that the Court should not accept a testimony which does not give the actual words but only the substance of the confession; the value of the evidence of confession, like any other evidence, depends on the veracity of the witness. Thus, where the witnesses were independent and disinterested and the extra-judicial confession was corroborated by the recovery of the dead body as well as of the deceased's ornaments, held, their evidence could not be disbelieved: (1982) 53 Cut.L.T. 130: 1982 Cr.L.J. 938 (D.B.).

Where against an accused, alleged to have made extra-judicial confession to two persons, only one of them, uncle of the deceased, was examined who failed to reproduce the exact words used by the accused and it was also doubtful whether the confession was voluntary, held, the evidence of extra-judicial confession was unworthy of belief: 1988 Cr.L.J. 1054 (Raj.) (D.B.).

Accused killed his wife by strangulation as he found her in a compromising position with stranger as she refused to disclose his name and afterwards tied a cloth tightly around his own neck which made him unconscious. Witnesses untied cloth and accused regained consciousness. He confessed to the witnesses his guilt. They proved the confession though they could not produce exact words used by him. It was urged for accused that as witnesses failed to reproduce his exact words, extra-judicial confession could not be relied upon: Held, that in extra-judicial confession it was not essential to reproduce and prove exact words used by accused. Proof of substance of words used by accused was enough: 1962 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 315: 1963 Jab.L.J. 24.

25. Extra-judicial confession—To whom may be made.—The value of the evidence as to the extra-judicial confession depends upon the veracity of the witnesses to whom it is made: A.I.R. 1991 S.C. 37: 1990 Cr.L.J. 2643: (1990-2) 10 Guj.L.H. 552.

It is well-known that a person committing a crime would admit his guilt only when he is repentant for his misdeed and when he has a feeling that by making a confession his mental tension on account of his misdeed would be lightened. This the offender would invariably like to make before such persons with whom he has some sort of relationship and certain amount of confidence, and not before persons with whom he had not even visiting relationship. Making confession before acquaintances and the persons not related in any manner is very seldom acceptable to Courts of law: 1992 Cr.L.J. 3927 (Ori.) (D.B.); 1979 B.L.J. (N.O.C.) 40 (S.C.).

While considering the extra-judicial confession, it has to be seen whether the person before whom such a confession was made is known to the person making confession, that is, the confession is not made before a stranger. Normally a person would not make an implicatory statement before a stranger. If the person before whom the confession is made is a close relative of the person making confession, or has possibility of being in his confidence, the same can be a piece of evidence to be utilised against the accused. Where accused made extra-judicial confession in front of three persons who were co-villagers and not strangers, held, same could be acted upon: 1992 Cr.L.J. 3614 (Ori.) (D.B).

Extra-judicial confession made before a respectable person of the town—Admissibility: 1991 Cr.L.J. 2265 (P.&H.) (D.B.).

Village Magistrate to whom extra-judicial confession was made reduced it to writing and sent to the Executive Magistrate as well and corroborated by independent witness of some status, held, such extra-judicial confession could be relied upon: 1991 Cr.L.J. 1680 (Mad.) (D.B.).

Extra-judicial confession allegedly made to a witness having casual connection with the accused, held, does not inspire confidence: 1994 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 76 (Mad.) (D.B.). Where the witness to whom the alleged confession was made was not on visiting terms with the accused and he knew the accused casually, being a resident of the locality where the accused was living about 14 years earlier, held, it was highly improbable that the accused would have made any extra-judicial confession to such witness: A.I.R. 1994 S.C. 2585.

Where the person to whom the alleged extra-judicial confession was made was not known to the accused previously and, thus, there was no reason for the accused to make a clean breast of the murder alleged to have been committed by him and that apart the accused was also stated to have told that person that certain other person had settled his dispute with the deceased and even then simply because the deceased used to remain angry he alongwith one other had murdered him, held, no reliance could be placed on such extra-judicial confession: 1990 Cr.L.J. 77 (All.) (D.B.); 1995 Cr.L.J. 3113 (Raj.) (D.B.).

Where the witness to whom the alleged extra-judicial confession was made, was neither related to the accused nor belonged to his village and was never on friendly or visiting terms with him, held, extra-judicial confession made to him was to be rejected as unworthy of belief: 1991 Cr.L.J. 742 (Del.) (D.B.). Where there was nothing to show that the accused had good relations with the person to whom the alleged extra-judicial confession was made, held, it could not reasonably be inferred that the accused would go and repose confidence in that person so as to blurt out confession of his guilt before him: 1994 Cr.L.J. 3695 (P.&H.) (D.B.). See also 1995 Cr.L.J. 3002 (Him. Pra.) (D.B.).

Extra-judicial confession—It has to be proved like any other fact—Its value depends upon veracity of witnesses to whom it is made: 1967 An.W.R. 58: 1967 M.L.J. (Cr.) 115: 1967 Cr.L.J. 1407.

A statement, whether communicated or not, admitting guilt amounts to a confession. Admissions and confessions are exceptions to the hearsay rule. They are placed in the category of relevant evidence by the Act (Ss. 17 to 30), presumably on the ground that, being declarations against the interest of the person making them, they are probably true. Their probative value does not depend upon their communication to another : A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 40. The expression 'confession' is not defined in the Evidence Act. 'Confession' is a statement made by an accused which must either admit in terms the offence, or at any rate substantially all the facts which constitute the offence. The dictionary meaning of the word 'statement' is 'act of stating; that which is stated; a formal account, declaration of facts, etc.'. The word 'statement' includes both oral and written statement. Communication to another is not, however, an essential component to constitute a 'statement.' An accused might have been over-heard uttering to himself or saying to his wife or any other person in confidence. He might have also uttered something in soliloquy. He might also keep a note in writing. All the aforesaid nevertheless constitute a statement. If such statement is an admission of guilt, it would amount to a confession whether it is communicated to another or not. Thus, extra-judicial confession need not be addressed to any particular person: 1995 Cr.L.J. 1207 (Ori.) (D.B.) contra. The extra-judicial confession must be addressed to somebody and not the way one goes on shouting in the street that he/she had killed someone: 1993 Cr.L.J. 2701 (Ori.) (D.B.); 1992 Cr.L.J. 762 (Ori.) (D.B.).

Extra-judicial confession made to such witnesses with whom the accused had no occasion to speak—Not relied on: 1980 Jab.L.J. (Notes) 51.

It looks improbable that the accused would contact the near relations of the deceased residing in different village and repose confidence in them of making confession of such a heinous crime like the murder of their relation: (1992) 2 Hindu L.R. 391 (P.&H.) (D.B.).

An extra-judicial confession is generally made to a person in whom the accused confides. Where the witness to whom alleged extra-judicial confession was made was a distant relative of the accused but very near relative of the deceased and it was not shown that the accused could repose utmost confidence in him so as to confess the guilt before him, held, such a confession was of no value: 1985 RaJ.L.W. 97 (D.B.). See also 1983 Raj.L.W. 38: 1982 W.L.N. (U.C.) 409 (D.B.); 1992 Mah.L.J. 402 (D.B.).

Where the person to whom the alleged extra-judicial confession was made were stranger to the accused and even said confession was tape recorded and medical evidence also did not support the confession, held, such a confession was clearly brought out by influence; no reliance could be placed on it: A.I.R. 1994 S.C. 468: 1994 Cr.L.J. 140.

Where an accused was said to have made an extra-judicial confession to a person, to avoid unnecessary harassment from the Police, but there was nothing to indicate that that person was a person having some influence with the Police or a person of some status to protect the accused from harassment, and also there was no other corroborative evidence about the extra-judicial confession, held, no reliance could be placed on it: A.I.R. 1988 S.C. 1705.

Extra-judicial confession made before Village Administrative Officer, held, is not reliable. See 1993 Cr.L.J. 1933 (Mad.) (D.B.).

The value of the evidence as to the confession just like any other evidence, depends upon the veracity of the witnesses to whom it is made. It is true that the Court requires the witness to give the actual words used by the accused as nearly as possible, but it is not an invariable rule. [A.I.R. 1959 S.C. 902, Rel. on]. Where, therefore, the witnesses who speak to the extra-judicial confession are thoroughly disinterested witnesses who have no axe to grind against the accused and they are persons who have no reason to invent a false confession, the Judge is perfectly justified in accepting their testimony: 1960 Ker.L.T. 116: 1960 Ker.L.J. 1375: 1961 M.L.J. (Cr.) 356: (1962) 2 Cr.L.J. 135.

Where it is made voluntarily by the accused immediately after the crime to strangers visiting the accused with every token of truthfulness and repentance even if momentary, the Court would be definitely justified in accepting and acting upon such confessional statement: A.I.R. 1960 Mad. 187.

Extra-judicial confession—Accused narrating incident to her husband—Such confession held was corroborative piece of evidence in the case: 1970 Cr.L.J. 549 (Manipur).

Where a joint confession was alleged to have been made by the accused persons to a person with whom they had no intimacy and it was not disclosed as to who out of the accused disclosed the facts relating to the occurrence because all of them could not state at the same time the same words and no reason was given for the confession and for the person selected for that purpose, held, confession to such a person who was not even sure about the place where the accused contacted him was devoid of any credibility. [1993 Cr.L.J. 149 (S.C.), Rel. on]: 1995 Cr.L.J. 248 (P.&H.) (D.B.).

Extra-judicial confession — Evidentiary value —Wife and son accused of murdering father—Wife and son alleged to have gone to a stranger's place and made confession of offence—Witness stated to have been present there—That stranger, however, not made witness—No connection suggested between that stranger, witness and accused—It will be wholly impossible for accused to go to those strangers and make such confession—Such extra-judicial confession not worthy of credence—(Cr.P.Code, 1898, S. 367—'Decision thereon'—Appreciation of evidence): (1969) 71 Punj.L.R. 280.

Where the accused in a murder case had made extra-judicial confession of having hit the deceased with a sarya before two witnesses and one of them was declared hostile for not supporting the prosecution and the other was proved by the defence to be a stock Police witness who had appeared as a prosecution witness in 15 cases, had admitted earlier in the Court of an Additional Sessions Judge as having been cited as a prosecution witness in about 30 Police cases, and was not on visiting terms with, and only casually knew, the accused, held, it was highly improbable that the accused would make an extra-judicial confession before the witness; no reliance could be placed on such a confession: A.I.R. 1994 S.C. 2585: 1995 Cr.L.J. 470.

26. Extra-judicial confession—Made by a co-accused/approver.—It is not as if an extra-judicial confession or confession of a co-accused has only to be rejected as of no value. It has to be considered in the facts and circumstances of the case as brought out in the other evidence adduced in the case. A confession can be acted upon even in a case where the only other evidence available is circumstantial evidence. Confession of a co-accused, if sufficiently corroborated in material particulars, can be treated as conclusive against the maker thereof and it can be taken into consideration alongwith other evidence against co-accused as well: (1994) 1 An.L.T. (Cr.) 405: (1994) 1 An.L.T. (N.R.C.) 47 (D.B.).

Merely because a record of extra-judicial confession of an accused, made to some individuals, is handed over to Police will not make it inadmissible in evidence.

Extra-judicial confession cannot be made the sole basis for conviction of co-accused. However, there is no bar in getting an assurance from it if the facts and circumstances brought out on the record by themselves indicate unmistakably that the co-accused has been connected with the crime. Extra-judicial confession can be used for this limited purpose for arriving at a decision regarding the guilt of the co-accused: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1: A.I.R. 1968 All. 8.

Extra-judicial confession — Statement of approver about confession of guilt made to him by accused — Statement not corroborated in material particulars — Conviction cannot be based on such statement: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 566 (Mad.).

As extra-judicial confession made in the presence of a person who was subsequently made an approver, cannot be relied upon. The approver is no better than an accomplice and therefore, his testimony on the extra-judicial confessions would need independent corroboration, before it can be acted upon: A.I.R. 1957 Him. Pra. 52: 1957 Cr.L.J. 1254.

27. Extra-judicial confession—Illustrative cases.—Where extra-judicial confessions contained several discrepancies regarding the persons to whom and the occasions when the confession was made and what precisely was said by the accused, held, it was not admissible: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 2007.

Where there were many suspicious features in the evidence of the witness to whom the alleged extra-judicial confession was made, held, in view of further fact that such confession was retracted, no reliance could be placed on it: A.I.R. 1994 S.C. 1594: 1994 Cr.L.J. 2189.

Where in the alleged extra-judicial confession the co-accused had passed on the entire blame for committing the offence of murder on the other accused and entirely exonerated himself, held, no reliance could be placed on such extra-judicial confession: 1994 Cr.L.J. 3695 (P.&H.) (D.B.).

Where confession was made soon after the incident to four persons, held, the confession being spontaneous and there being no contradiction in between, confession was proved: 1979 W.L.N. (U.C.) 437 (Raj.).

Where the accused brought out from the well voluntarily stated in front of witnesses that she had, together with her two children, jumped into the well since her mind was not working properly, held, her confession could be relied upon to enter conviction: 1989 Cr.L.J. 415 (Ori.) (D.B.).

Where accused's brother attacked him in the midnight when he was asleep and when both were involved in a scuffle, the accused could lay his hand on a bamboo and aimed a blow at his brother but suddenly their father arrived there and intervened and the blow of bamboo hit him on his head and he succumbed to his injuries next day, held, mere omission on the part of the rustic and illiterate accused to mention the word 'accident' while making extra-judicial confession to the villagers, cannot be a ground for denying him whatever protection he is entitled under the law. Further, the statements of the persons to whom the alleged extra-judicial confession was made were substantially at variance with each other and also from their respective statements made to the Police; furthermore, these witnesses could not reproduce the exact words of the extra-judicial confession of the accused; conviction set aside: 1993 Cr.L.J. 3808 (Gau.) (D.B.).

If a father finds that his son has committed a crime and puts pressure on him by using strong language to disclose the truth and the son thereafter makes a statement incriminating himself, it cannot be said that a confession was extorted: (1988) 2 Crimes 290: 1989 Cr.L.J.

Though extra-judicial confession is a weak type of evidence, it can be used for corroboration of other material on record; therefore, where the accused had made an extra-judicial confession that he kidnapped the girl, raped her and then killed her and after his arrest he gave information regarding place of incident and the body of the girl was recovered at his instance, held, there being sufficient corroboration to that confession, it could be acted upon: 1993 Cr.L.J. 1616 (Raj.) (D.B.).

Where the accused caught red-handed immediately after the happening of the incident, prayed for apology or begged pardon, held, extra-judicial confession, in such circumstance, could be relied on: 1991 Cr.L.J. 1636 (Bom.) (D.B.).

Where the prosecution witness to whom the alleged extra-judicial confession was made on sighting the accused with other witnesses asked about the deceased and persistently pressurised him by putting questions and in order to escape from the clutches of the said persons, the accused made a confession that he killed deceased girl by throttling, held, as said confession came into existence under pressure it could not be relied upon: 1994 Cr.L.J. 520(Mad.) (D.B.); 1989 Cr.L.R. 132 (Raj.).

Where it was found that the accused made the alleged extra-judicial confession when he was being beaten by the villagers and they asked him to name his associates, held, such a confession was made under threat and thus, was not legally admissible under S. 24: (1992-1) 40 B.L.J.R. 293; (1981) 52 Cut.L.T. 109.

Where, on the assumption that the accused had killed his father, the prosecution witness asked the accused as to why he killed his father and the accused replied that as he used to quarrel, he killed him, held, by no stretch of imagination this could be considered to be an extra-judicial confession made by the accused: 1993 Cr.L.J. 3364 (Bom.) (D.B.).

Where in the late hours of night, the deceased left his house and soon thereafter gun shots were heard and when his parents came out of the house to know what had happened, they saw the deceased in pool of blood and the accused, who was a neighbourer, fell in their feet saying that he had committed a mistake and in a provocative moment killed the deceased and in the F.I.R. also, which was registered only some minutes after the death of the deceased, fact of making said extra-judicial confession was mentioned, held, as the said confession had been made voluntarily without any duress, undue influence, coercion or any other suspicious circumstances and further as there was nothing to show that there was any animosity between the parents of the deceased and the accused so that they were interested in implicating him in a false case, his confessional statement could be relied upon: 1994 Cr.L.J. 736 (J.&K.) (D.B.).

Where the accused allegedly went to a person's house after covering a distance of 4, 5 Kms. on a rainy night after 11.45 P.M. and confessed the commission of crime and said person did not inform about the same to anyone or Police on meeting them, held, the story of making extra-judicial confession was clearly not believable: 1992 Cr.L.J. 3848 (Him. Pra.) (D.B.). See also 1982 M.P.W.N. 375.

Where there was nothing on record that the non-judicial confession made (expecting hushing up of the case) to a close relative of the accused and the deceased was extracted by threat, inducement or promise or that it was not voluntary and it also satisfied the rule of caution of being corroborated by evidence and other incriminating circumstances like unearthing of the dead body by the accused from his field, held, the confession could safely be relied on: 1975 Raj.L.W. 286 (D.B.).

Extra-judicial confession — Confession made to village Panch—No proof of any threat having been given—Confession admissible in evidence: 1960 B.L.J.R. 268: I.L.R. 39 Pat. 361.

Extra-judicial confession by the accused to the Pradhan of a village appointed under the U.P. Panchayat Raj Act on his promise to get the accused acquitted, is inadmissible in evidence and conviction cannot be based on such confession.

Pradhan being an ex officio member of Gaon Panchayat and Gaon Panchayat being entrusted with administration of Criminal and Civil Justice, Pradhan must be deemed to exercise his powers in the administration of Criminal and Civil Justice and hence, confession made on his promise is confession on the promise made by a person in authority and is inadmissible: 1969 All.W.R. (H.C.) 377: 1969 All.Cr. R. 245.

Where the accused made an extra-judicial confession before the Village Administrative Officer before being arrested by the Police, held, the said confessional statement in its entirety was admissible and valid. [1975 Cr.L.J. 774 (S.C.) and 1987 Mad.L.W. (Cr.) 375, Foll.]: 1993 Cr.L.J. 3113 (Mad.) (D.B.).

Extra-judicial confession made to quasi-official witness like Lambardar—Confession could not be discarded: 1969 Cr.L.J. 94 (Punj.).

Where the accused, a constable of Border Security Force, prosecuted for his wife's murder, made an extra-judicial confession to his wife's uncle and cousin and also to Inspector and the commandant stating that he had killed his wife, held, the extra-judicial confession made to his wife's uncle and cousin did not suffer from any legal infirmity as they were not persons in authority under S. 24: A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 898: (1975) 4 S.C.C. 33.

Where the alleged extra-judicial confession was made after about 20 days of the incident to a person who himself was an accused in another case, held, possibility of that witness deposing at the instance of the Police could not be ruled out and, thus, no reliance could be placed on it: A.I.R. 1994 S.C. 470: 1994 Cr.L.J. 142; (1992) 1 An.L.T. 21 (D.B) [Extra-judicial confession to a person of dubious character and not so intimate to the accused].

Where a murder accused, having escaped from judicial custody, was apprehended four years thereafter and produced before the Mukhiya by villagers for committing a theft; he asked the Mukhiya not to hand him over to the Police because he was hiding from the Police; and it was alleged that he stated that he was wanted in connection with a murder case, but of the two witnesses of the extra-judicial confession, one resiled in the Court; held, having been made after a long lapse of time, the confession could not be relied upon; it had to be discarded: A.I.R. 1987 S.C. 1507: (1987) 3 S.C.C. 480.

Where the prosecution version was that the Investigating Officer and the village Pradhan had apprehended the accused from his village, got him identified by other prosecution witnesses as the person last seen with the deceased, whereafter, the Investigating Officer went away for further investigation, leaving the accused with the Pradhan before whom the accused made the confession; and it was then that the accused made an extra-judicial confession to the Pradhan, held, it is incredible that the Investigating Officer would leave the accused without taking him into custody; obviously, the Investigating Officer had manipulated this artificial scenario to procure the extra-judicial confession; he could have very well taken the accused to a Judicial Magistrate and get the confession recorded under S. 164 of the Code of Criminal Procedure; that would have greater probative value and an unerring assurance of its truth to the Court. The 'extra-judicial' confession was hit by S. 26 as the accused was in Police custody: A.I.R. 1990 S.C. 2140: (1991) 1 S.C.C. 286: 1990 Cr.L.J. 2289; (1992) 2 Crimes 1050 (All.).

Where the Police was present in his village at the time when the accused was alleged to have made an extra-judicial confession before a person in an adjacent village and no reason was shown as to why the accused, instead of surrendering himself before the Police, should go to adjacent village, blurt out a confession before him and ask to produce the accused before the Police, held, no reliance could be placed upon it: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 1545: 1974 Cr.L.J. 1010: (1974) 4 S.C.C. 747.

Where 8 out of 10 witnesses before whom alleged extra-judicial confession was made turned hostile and presence of one of the remaining two witnesses was found doubtful and as regards the remaining witness there were several contradictions, held, no reliance could be placed on such confession. [A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 1545: 1974 Cr.L.J. 1010; 1990 Raj. Cr.C. 34 and 1990 Cr.L.R. (Raj.) 111, Rel. on]: 1994 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 143 (Raj.) (D.B).

Where accused's extra-judicial confession that he pushed the deceased, his mother-in-law, into river was corroborated by the evidence that (i) he chased the deceased, (ii) returned alone in drenched clothes after half an hour of chasing the deceased and (iii) he disappeared from the locality when dead body was recovered from the river, held, such an extra-judicial confession could certainly be relied on: 1992 Cr.L.J. 1682 (Ker.) (D.B.).

Where the accused was stated to have made extra-judicial confession to his uncle that after giving lathi blows he had locked the deceased and in the F.I.R. lodged on the basis of said confession, such injuries were specifically mentioned and further the nature of injuries stated to have been disclosed in the confession stood corroborated from the medical evidence, held, the accused could be convicted on the basis of such extra-judicial confession: A.I.R. 1995 S.C. 1943: 1995 Cr.L.J. 3225.

Where a witness alleged that the accused confessed to him of having killed the deceased, and he ran away just when the witness tried to ring up the Police and the witness did not inform the Police about the confession the same day, held, if the accused intended to run away, he would be the last person to confess before a stranger; such evidence of extra-judicial confession could not, thus, be relied upon: 1982 Cr.L.J. 2289 (Him. Pra.) (D.B.).

Where after committing the crime when the accused tried to run away he was apprehended by the people and soon thereafter he made a confession and no Police man had arrived at that time, held, that confession before the members of the public was wholly voluntary, not before any person in authority and without any threat, promise or undue influence. It was rather spontaneous and it will not be hit by S. 24: (1987-1) 35 B.L.J.R. 127: 1986 Pat.L.J.R. 688 (D.B.).

Where a rustic woman, in apprehension of assault and mal-treatment at the village panchayat meeting, makes a confession, held, it is involuntary and not valid: (1985) 60 Cut.L.T. 346.

Except extra-judicial confession, nothing to connect the accused with the crime—Persons to whom he allegedly confessed were strangers to him and it was not prosecution's case that he sought their help from harassment of Police—Held, his conviction was not justified: 1993 Cr.L.J. 1679 (Mad.) (D.B.).

Where accused who was only about 14 or 15 years of age was kept in tied up condition till the Police arrived and in that state he made a confession, held, no reliance could be placed on such evidence of extra-judicial confession: 1992 Cr.L.J. 13 (Gau.) (D.B.).

Where there was no cogent evidence of the exact words used by the accused in his extra-judicial confession, there was no other evidence to establish the extra-judicial confession and the evidence disclosed that the accused was tied up with the leg of a cot and was not in mental equilibrium, held, the possibility of extracting the extra-judicial confession from his mouth could not be ruled out; no reliance could be placed on the confession: 1989 Cr.L.J. 1495 (Gau.) (D.B.).

Penal Code (1860), S. 302—Extra-judicial confession—Value of—Proof by person who had no reason to state falsity—Corroborated by circumstances proved by independent evidence—Accused, held, was rightly convicted under S. 302: 1962 All.L.J. 302: 1962 M.L.J. (Cr.) 429: (1962) 2 S.C.R. (Supp.) 203: A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 152.

Where the extra-judicial confessions that he had killed his wife, inter alia, by strangulating her with a leather belt were made by the accused before several witnesses, one confession having been made in the presence of two witnesses, and corroborated by the recovery of the belt at his instance, medical evidence as to the nature and location of injuries on her body and the evidence as to the state of the spot in the field where she was killed, held, the evidence was sufficient to enter conviction on the charge of murder: 1995 Cr.L.J. 2129 (Raj.) (D.B.).

Where the accused was said to have made extra-judicial confessional statement to his wife's relations that he had killed her and her daughter when the relations visiting his house had found him asleep with his daughter's dead body by his side, held, it is improbable that the accused having tried to cause disappearance of his wife's dead body would keep his daughter's corpse by his side, and when woken from sleep would confess before his wife's relations; the extra-judicial confession excluded from consideration: (1986) 1 Bom.C.R. 343.

An extra-judicial confession by one of the accused to the widow of another accused, whom she had been helping in making spears and other weapons, held, cannot be relied upon: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 1127.

Where a prosecution witness stated that he had seen the accused, not known to the witness, running away and on being questioned, the accused stated that he had committed a mistake and killed his brother due to a quarrel; on cross-examination, the witness admitted not having narrated the story to any one though he had met numerous persons before he was called to the Police Station, held, it was difficult to believe that the accused would make a confession to a person not known to him at all; it would be wholly unsafe to accept such an extra-judicial confession: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 1620.

Two accused, husband and wife—Each implicating himself or herself — Husband telling before villagers that he had killed the deceased—Wife also making statement before Police and Magistrate that she shot the deceased when he was trying to abduct her—No corroborating evidence—If statements of accused are not believed they should be rejected as a whole: 1969 Jab.L.J. 525: 1969 M.P.L.J. 524: 1969 Cr.L.J. 1291.

Where accused had made a statement that she stabbed the deceased, because he outraged her modesty, held, considered as a whole the statement did not tantamount to an extra-judicial confession for the reason that she had justified her action of stabbing the deceased in exercise of her right of private defence: 1989 Cr.L.J. 621 (Ori.) (D.B.).

Where prosecution witnesses to the extra-judicial confession had no reason to falsely implicate the accused, and the extra-judicial confession was also mentioned in the F.I.R., held, their evidence could be accepted as reliable: 1988 Cr.L.J. 1412 (Gau.) (D.B.).

25. Confession to police officer not to be proved.—No confession made to a police officer[1], shall be proved as against a person accused of any offence.

person in authority—Circumstances corroborating statements, present—Statements, held, were admissible: 1964 M.P.L.J. 750: 1964 Jab.L.J. 724.

Evidence of oral confessions of guilt has to be received with great caution. There was nothing in the cross-examination of the witnesses to show that they had any motive for implicating the accused. The witnesses had not made any different statements previously. They had not been confronted with any and asked to explain variations. They did not state merely their conclusion about the guilt of the accused but also deposed to the actual words uttered by the accused. Held, that none of the considerations which tend to impair the value of this kind of evidence was present here and there was, thus, no reason to discard the statements of the witnesses that the accused admitted having killed his sister-in-law in the words deposed to by them: A.I.R. 1955 Madh. Bh. 43: 1955 Cr.L.J. 497.

Where the prosecution had relied on the testimony of a child eye-witness and oral extra-judicial confession of the accused and the circumstances did cast a serious doubt about the child's claim to being an eye-witness, held, it also destroyed the veracity of the extra-judicial confession; no case for conviction was made out: A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 1621: (1980) 1 S.C.C. 582.

Where all the witnesses, in whose presence the alleged extra-judicial confession was made, gave inconsistent versions, held, the story of making confession was a cooked up story and could not be relied: 1988 Raj.Cr.C. 65.

Extra-judicial confession coupled with discovery of dead body, held, such confession is reliable: 1982 M.P.W.N. 96.

Oral extra-judicial confession—Unsafe to deduce therefrom exact state of mind and meaning of confessor, when no adequate corroboration thereof is available—Accused not in full possession of mental faculties when she made confession—Confession that she took one bottle of poison and gave half bottle to her child to die—Only one bottle shown to have been seized—Held, discrepancy in corroboration though minor was material and confession being not adequately corroborated, could not be relied—Evidence—Appreciation of major and minor discrepancies—Evidence Act (1872), S. 3—Appreciation of evidence—Major and minor discrepancies: 1966 Mad.L.W. (Cr.) 82.

Where there was evidence of witnesses as to extra-judicial confession of accused that he had committed murder of deceased which was supported by incriminating circumstantial evidence to the effect that after death of deceased he was burried inside a pit in one of the rooms of the accused and also judicial confession made before Magistrate stating that he had mixed poison with liquor and given it to the deceased, held, the prosecution had proved its case against the accused: 1990 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C) 109 (Ori.) (D.B.).

1. Statement not amounting to confession.—The test to decide whether a statement is confession or not is to see whether the accused states that he has done something which amounts to an offence thereby accusing himself of committing of an offence: I.L.R. 17 Pat. 15: 19 Pat.L.T. 452.

A statement made by an accused to a Police Officer if it does not amount to a confession may nevertheless be used against him and more particularly if the statement made turns out to be false in the light of the other evidence in the case: 23 Cr.L.J. 193: A.I.R. 1922 All. 24. See also A.I.R. 1941 Lah. 82; I.L.R. (1959) Bom. 1244: (1959) 61 Bom.L.R. 715: A.I.R. 1959 Bom. 534.

Under S. 25 only confessions are excluded and not admissions not amounting to a confession. The accused, a Police Officer, made confession to his subordinate that he had heard a rumour about the murder and that certain persons had approached him to get the matter hushed up and had forced upon him a certain amount. Held, that statement as to acceptance of bribe being confession was inadmissible under S. 25 but the statement as to a rumour and approach of people to the accused to get the matter hushed up being admission was admissible: 193 I.C. 878: A.I.R. 1941 Lah. 82.

Self-exculpatory statements cannot be excluded from consideration: A.I.R 1959 All. 483. No statement that contains self-exculpatory matter can amount to a confession if the exculpatory statement is of some fact which, if true, would negative the offence alleged to be confessed. A confession cannot be construed as a statement by an accused "suggesting the inference that he committed" the offence: 66 I.A. 66: (1938-39) 43 Cal.W.N. 473: (1939) 1 M.L.J. 756: A.I.R. 1939 P.C. 47 (P.C.); A.I.R. 1941 Oudh 359; A.I.R. 1942 Lah. 37: I.L.R. (1943) Lah. 77.

All confessions are inculpatory admissions on the part of the maker thereof. To be a confession, admission should contain an acknowledgment of the guilt. Therefore, all confessions are admissions, but every admission may not be a confession: 1979 Bom.C.R. 680 (D.B.).

A statement made by the accused to the Police containing an admission of a gravely incriminating fact or even a conclusively incriminating fact, is not itself a confession. And not being a confession, it cannot be excluded by S. 25, Evidence Act. And if the statement happens to be made to the Police prior to the investigation in the case, then it is also not hit by S. 162, Cr. P. Code. Thus, it becomes admissible in evidence: A.I.R. 1956 Cal. 82: 1956 Cr.L.J. 509. See also A.I.R. 1958 Mad. 368. But see 36 I.C. 480: 17 Cr.L.J. 512 (Admission made by accused to Police is inadmissible against him under S. 25).

Every statement made to the Police by an accused person is not a confession and statements which are of an incriminating nature are admissible: 151 I.C. 437: A.I.R. 1934 Sind 100. Statement of an accused made at the Police Station against the co-accused is inadmissible and cannot be used as evidence against the co-accused: (1932) 34 Punj.L.R. 259: A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 167.

Confession by co-accused—Confession wholly self-exculpatory—Cannot be used against the other co-accused: 1965 Raj.L.W. 418: I.L.R. (1965) 15 Raj. 989: 1966 Cr.L.J. 441: A.I.R. 1966 Raj. 74.

A confession by an accomplice to an Excise Officer is inadmissible as a piece of substantive evidence as against the other accused, even if the latter had been tried alongwith the maker and a fortiori it is inadmissible in a separate proceeding against the other accused. But where the maker is examined as a witness on behalf of the other accused it is admissible for the purpose of impeaching his credit in respect of the later statement made by him in the evidence in Court, under the provisions of S. 155: I.L.R. 61 Cal. 967: (1933-34) 38 Cal.W.N. 1005: A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 616.

Where the accused was neither named in the F.I.R. nor named by any witness nor any property was recovered from his possession, held, he could not be proceeded against merely on the basis of statement of co-accused made to Police; that being a confession made to Police will not be admissible under Ss. 25 and 26: 1993 Cr.L.J. 1499 (Madh. Pra.).

2. Scope and applicability.—The prohibition enjoined by section is directed against proof of confessions made to a Police Officer. That section does not prohibit the proof of any other matter unconnected with the confession of the crime: I.L.R. (1956) Mys. 244: A.I.R. 1957 Mys. 50.

Confession made to the Police Officer is admissible to prove the ownership of property regarding which he is charged: 56 I.C. 62: 21 Cr.L.J. 414 (N.).

S. 25 applies to confession to any Police Officer though he may not be acting as such. The policy behind S. 25 is to make it substantive rule of law that confessions whenever and wherever made to the Police, or while in the custody of the Police to any person whomsoever unless made in the immediate presence of a Magistrate, shall be presumed to have been obtained under the circumstances mentioned in S. 24 and, therefore, inadmissible, except so far as is provided by S. 27 of the Act: 1993 Cr.L.J. 2374 (Ori.) (D.B.).

Section applies to every Police Officer and is not restricted to a regular Police Force:

I.L.R. 26 Cal. 569. S. 25 is very broad in its terms and would exclude any confession if made to a Police Officer, whether he is then acting as such or not: 1956 Cr.L.J. 217: A.I.R. 1956 Kutch 1.

Writer constable in a Police Station—Incriminating statement made to him not admissible evidence: 35 Cut.L.T. 94: 1969 Cr.L.J. 1172.

There is no bar to the admissibility of a confessional statement of an accused, unless it is shown that the same has been made to a Police Officer. The material words used in S. 25, Evidence Act and S. 162, Cr.P.Code, are the same and the intention in enacting the former is the same as in the case of the latter: I.L.R. (1964) Guj. 804: (1964) 5 Guj.L.R. 897: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 753: A.I.R. 1965 Guj. 302. See also 1966 Cr.L.J. 1275: A.I.R. 1966 Mad. 392.

For assessing acceptability of confession before any person except a Police Officer, the test is whether it is voluntary: 1993 Cr.L.J. 2374 (Ori.) (D.B.).

Nature of proceedings under—Confessional statement of accused is admissible: (1962) 1 Cr.L.J. 654 (Ker.).

Statement made by accused to Police during investigation—Where such statement is confession it is hit by section: 1969 Cr.L.J. 739: A.I.R. 1969 Goa 68.

A confession made by the accused during the course of investigation is inadmissible: 1994 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 423 (Mad.).

Applicability—Conspiracy cases—Statements made by accused before investigation—S. 162, Cr.P.Code—Effect of: A.I.R. 1958 Mad. 368: 1958 Cr.L.J. 906.

Statements made during the investigation whether inculpatory or exculpatory, whether in the nature of confession or not, cannot be excluded from consideration by the Investigating Agency, while submitting a charge sheet. The bar of Ss. 25 and 27 applies to a stage when the case is being tried by a Court before whom the evidence is recorded: 1983 All.W.C. 289: 1983 All.Cr.R. 154: 1983 All.L.J. 309.

S. 27 apparently provides an exception to Ss. 25 and 26 but a careful reading shows that it is not really an exception to S. 25 at all but only an exception to S. 26, because S. 27 contains the phrase 'in the custody of a Police Officer,' which is found only in S. 26 and not in S. 25: I.L.R. (1961) 1 Punj. 33: (1962) 1 Cr.L.J. 186: A.I.R. 1962 Punj. 70.

In a trial for murder the prosecution proved the panchanama prepared by the Police the day the murder was committed and signed not only by the panchas but purporting to have been signed also by the accused persons. That document was a record which was a complete confession of the crime from the beginning to the end, by all the accused persons. Held, that this was highly irregular as the provisions of the Evidence Act and of the Cr.P.Code had not been observed: A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 737.

A confession made by an accused to the Police is inadmissible; and a conviction based on such a confession is illegal and liable to be set aside: 1981 Cr.L.J. 1235 (P.&H.); 1978 Mah.L.J. 244; 1982 Jab.L.J. 300.

Ss. 25 and 31—Conviction based on admissible portion of confession by accused—Conviction of accused not based merely on his statement under S. 342, Cr.P.Code, but also other evidence including admissible portion of confession, as a whole—Procedure adopted by Court is not open to legal objection: (1963) 76 Mad.L.W. 722.

Confession—Contained in a letter addressed by an accused person to a Police Officer—S. 25 not attracted—Letter is not admissible in evidence: (1974) 2 Chand.L.R. 107 (S.C.).

Where, though the accused was alleged to have made a confessional statement to a Police Officer and also to an Executive Magistrate under S. 176, Cr.P.Code but the latter was not tendered in evidence and thus, what was ultimately left was the confessional statement made to the Police Officer, held, the same was hit by S. 25; therefore, the accused could not be convicted on the basis of information given by him to a Police Officer: 1993 Cr.L.J. 388: (1993) 1 An.L.T. (Cr.) 174: (1992) 3 Karn.L.J. 763 (D.B.).

Where a confession was made to the villagers at large, the mere fact that a Policeman happened to be present in the crowd would not make the confession inadmissible in evidence: 1934 All.L.J. 143: A.I.R. 1934 All. 132; 1978 Jab.L.J. 488: 1978 M.P.L.J. 599 (D.B.); 1983 Cr.L.J. 1559: (1982-83) 87 Cal.W.N. 723: (1983) 2 Cal.H.N. 26: (1983) 2 Crimes 499; 1987 Cr.L.J. 1172: (1987) 2 Crimes 870: (1987) 1 Bom.C.R. 709: 1986 Mah.L.J. 1055.

Confession made to a private individual in presence of Chaukidar—Admissibility of: A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 222.

Where a confession is made by the accused to some villagers, the fact the chowkidar was also present there would not render the confession inadmissible on that ground. The accused could not be said to be in the custody of chowkidar: 1947 All.L.J. 265: A.I.R. 1948 All. 7.

S. 25 refers to confessions made to a Police Officer and not to confessions made in the hearing of Police Officer. If a confession is made to a person who is not a Police Officer, S. 25 would not apply to it even though a Police Officer may have overheard it. Of course, if it is made to a person who is not a Police Officer but while an accused is in custody of the Police, S. 26 may apply to it unless it is made in the immediate presence of a Magistrate.

Held, that the confession made to a member of C.R. Police at a time when he was taking the accused to the quarter-guard under order of Havildar is excluded by both Ss. 25 and 26 of the Evidence Act as it was made to a member of the C.R.P. Force while the accused was in his custody: A.I.R. 1956 Kutch 1: 1956 Cr.L.J. 217.

The prohibition contained in S. 25 applies only to confessions which are to be proved against the accused, that is, in support of the prosecution case, and does not apply to statements on which the accused himself wishes to rely in connection either with his conviction or his sentence: (1941) 43 Punj.L.R. 672: A.I.R. 1942 Lah. 37.

S. 25 only lays down that a confession made by the accused to a Police Officer cannot be used against the accused; it does not, thus, bar the use of such confession in favour of the accused; it is a well settled proposition of law. Thus, where the accused had immediately after murdering his wife was first to report at the Police Station and inter alia stated that his wife and her mother were selling their flesh for money, held, this statement could be used in the accused's favour: 1975 Raj.L.W. 370: I.L.R. (1975) 25 Raj. 929: 1975 W.L.N. 508 (D.B.).

The prohibition contained in S. 25 is of a general nature. It forbids the proof at a trial of a criminal offence of any admission of any offence made by the accused to a Police Officer, and it makes no difference whether the offence is one of which the accused can be convicted at the trial at which it is sought to prove the confession made to a Police Officer. The admissibility of a confession does not depend upon the offence charged. A confession made by an accused to the Police of an offence of culpable homicide not amounting to murder is not admissible in a trial of murder on the same fact: A.I.R. 1941 Sind 134: I.L.R. (1941) Kar. 292.

The prohibition under S. 25 is of a general nature; it is not confined to the confession for the offence the accused is charged with; thus, where the accused is charged with murder, a confession for a lesser offence is also inadmissible. [(1964) 2 Cr.L.J. 744 (S.C.), Rel. on]: 1982 Cr.L.J. 534: 53 Cut.L.T. 305 (D.B.).

A confession made to the Police in the course of the investigation of a crime is inadmissible in evidence, though the confession relates to another crime. The whole spirit of S. 25 is to exclude confessions to the Police, and the moment a statement is found to amount to a confession, it does not matter at all of what crime it is a confession: A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 209: (1937) 1 M.L.J. 154. See also I.L.R. (1942) Mad. 77: (1941) 2 M.L.J. 209.

S. 25 merely forbids the use of a confession made to a Police Officer in a trial of the accused person for having committed an offence. The statement would be admissible in a civil case brought against the accused for recovery of the article or for damages for trespass and the like. Proceedings under S. 517, though they occur in the Code of Criminal Procedure are really in the nature of proceedings analogous to civil proceedings in which the question to be determined is to whom the possession of certain articles should be given. These proceedings are proceedings, in which the guilt of the accused person is not to be determined but are proceedings which take place after the main proceedings are over. In that proceedings the Magistrate is perfectly right in taking into consideration the statements of the accused which led to the recovery of the property in determining the question as to who was entitled to the possession of that property: 1954 Cr.L.J. 155: A.I.R. 1954 Punj. 27.

The guidelines for recording confessions in pre-indictment interrogation under S. 15 of the Terrorist and Disruptive Activities (Prevention) Act, 1987 to ensure that they are not tainted with vice but strictly conform to well recognised principles and fundamental fairness are: (1) they should be recorded in a free atmosphere and as narrated by the accused in the language he spoke; (2) the accused should be produced, alongwith the original confession, in the concerned Court without unreasonable delay; (3) the concerned Court should scrupulously record the accused's statement, if made, get it signed by him and if he complains of torture, he should be directed to be produced for medical examination before a medical officer not lower in rank than of an Assistant Civil Surgeon; (4) the Police Officer seeking custody of an accused for pre-trial interrogation from judicial custody must file his affidavit explaining not only the reason for seeking such custody but also for the delay, if any, in moving the Court; and (5) if the accused on administration of the statutory warning asserts his right not to make any statement, the Police Officer must respect his right and not compel him to make any statement. The guidelines recommended for incorporation in the Act or the Rules framed thereunder: 1994 Cr.L.J. 3139 (S.C.).

As per S. 15(1) of the Terrorist and Disruptive Activities (Prevention) Act, 1987, a confession can be reduced into writing or recorded on any mechanical device like cassettes, tapes or sound tracks from which sounds or images can be reproduced; since they can be tampered, tailored, linkered, edited and erased, there must be some severe safeguards to be scrupulously observed while recording such confessions to prevent, to some appreciable extent, the possibility of extorting a false confession; S. 15(2) enjoins upon the Police Officer recording such confessions to explain to the confessor that he was not bound to confess and give to him a statutory warning that his confession might be used as evidence against him: 1994 Cr.L.J. 3139 (S.C.).

A statement by an accused, arrested on a charge of unlawful possession of opium to Excise Officers, the Police servants remaining in a room in another part of the house, is still a statement made while in Police custody and therefore, inadmissible: 39 I.C. 977: (1916-17) 21 Cal.W.N. 694.

Statement by accused on being halted, to Police Officer—It is not admissible as confession being hit by S. 25—Such statement is not admissible under S. 26, being made in immediate presence of Magistrate, where it was not recorded in the manner laid down by S. 164, Cr.P.Code: 1954 Cr.L.J. 230: A.I.R. 1954 S.C. 15.

Interpretation of Statutes — Maxim contemporanea expositio — Its applicability to comparatively modern statute — It cannot be applied to S. 25, Evidence Act. Per Subba Rao and Mudholkar, JJ.—The maxim contemporanea expositio as laid down by Coke is applied in construing ancient statutes but not in interpreting Acts which are comparatively modern. The rule of construction which ought to be applied to a statute either ancient or modern is the same and that is to ascertain the intention of the Legislature. However, it would be inappropriate to attach wide meaning to the words used by the Legislature in a law made in remote ages when society was static. The position would be different with respect to words used in a law made in a modern progressive society in which the frontiers of knowledge are fast expanding. The maxim laid down by Coke, cannot therefore, properly be applied for construing the language used by the Legislature in S. 25 of the Evidence Act: (1964) 2 S.C.R. 752: A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 828.

S. 25—Ss. 24 to 30—Confession—What is—Law relating to—Confession or admission admissible against maker unless excluded by some provision of law—Confession to Police whether in course of investigation or otherwise and confession made while in Police custody—How far protected: 1966 Cr.L.J. 100: A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 119.

Confession to Police Officer, held, cannot be used even for proving motive of accused. [A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 119, Foll.]: 1982 Cr.L.J. 534: 53 Cut.L.T. 305 (D.B.).

Police Officer forming raiding party on receipt of information and seizing opium bags—Admission by accused of ownership of goods—Admissibility. See (1972) 2 Sim.L.J. 152.

Where in a prosecution for violation of the Motor Spirits and High Speed Diesel Oil (Maintenance and Regulation of Supplies) Order, 1979, there was no oral or documentary evidence even remotely suggesting the involvement of the accused in the offence but much reliance was placed on an alleged confession made to a Police Officer, held, the same was violative of S. 25 and could not be accepted as substantive evidence: 1990 Cr.L.J. 100 (Ker.).

The phraseology employed by S. 25 and S. 26 contains negative and positive injunctions with regard to the confessions by accused person and is indicative as to when and against whom such evidence is admissible or is not admissible: 1979 Bom.C.R. 680 (D.B.).

Admission of a confession in evidence does not complete the judicial process; it is not a plea of guilt but only a light weight evidentiary document: (1992) 58 E.L.T. 192 (Cal.).

An unambiguous, extra-judicial confession, has a high probative value; if free from suspicion and suggestion of falsity, it is admissible. But the Court has to be satisfied that the confession is voluntary, is not obtained by inducement, threat or promises envisaged in S. 24 and there are no suspicious circumstances to attract the bar under Ss. 25 and 26. The Court has also to ascertain that the confession is not inspired by improper or collateral consideration, motive or desire to circumvent the law; it must also scrutinise all relevant facts like the person to whom it is made and the time, place and other circumstances and finally the actual words used by the accused: A.I.R. 1990 S.C. 2140: 1990 Cr.L.J. 2289: (1991) 1 S.C.C. 286. See also 1973 Sim.L.J. 103.

An admission of a fact however incriminating, but not by itself establishing the guilt of the maker of such admission, would not amount to confession within the meaning of Ss. 24 to 26. Thus, statement made by the accused to the doctor where he was taken by the Police after arrest that it was the deceased who had caused the injury to him, held, it was an admission of a fact, no doubt of an incriminating fact, and which established the accused's presence in the deceased's room but which clearly was not barred under S. 26. [(1970) 2 M.L.J. 371, Affirmed]: A.I.R. 1972 S.C. 66: 1972 Cr.L.J. 11: (1972) 1 S.C.R. 450; 1984 M.L.J. (Cr.) 202: 1984 Mad.L.W. (Cr.) 23: 1984 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 193; 1986 Cr.L.J. 1865: (1987) 1 Ker.L.T. 391 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1988 Ker. 1 (F.B.); (1993) 2 Ker.L.J. 11: 1994 Cr.L.J. 322 (D.B.). See also 1982 Cr.L.J. 2102 (Ker.); 1983 Cr.L.J. 1578 (Gau.); 1991 Cr.L.J. 1793 (Karn.) (D.B.).

Any incriminating statement which may even go to establish the presence of accused at the time of the incident will amount to a confession and, hence, hit by S. 25. [20 Guj.L.R. 847 and A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 119, Rel. on]: (1985) 26 Guj.L.R. 136.

Where the accused stated before the Police that while sleeping with his deceased wife at night, he quarrelled with her and killed her, held, the prosecution could not rely on the information about the accused sleeping with his wife that night; ultimately it would be the vital link in the chain of circumstances to establish that there was then none else other than the accused, his wife and their child in the house and none else could commit the murder; this part of information would certainly be hit by the bar under S. 25. [1981 Cr.L.J. 1235 (P.&H.), Foll.]: 1993 Cr.L.J. 388: (1993) 1 An.L.T. (Cr.) 174: (1992) 3 Karn.L.J. 763 (D.B.).

3. First information report by accused containing confessional statement.—See also S. 17, Note 8; S. 21, Note 6; S. 24, Note 3, supra and S. 27, Note 8, infra. If the first information of an offence is given by the accused to a Police Officer, and that information admits his own guilt, it is a 'confession', which cannot be proved under S. 25: (1934) 36 Bom.L.R. 1117: I.L.R. 59 Bom. 120: A.I.R. 1935 Bom. 26. See also (1932) 34 Punj.L.R. 1000: A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 899. As S. 25 stands at present confessions made in a first information report must be excluded from its operation. However, the statement made in the course of such an inadmissible confession are not excluded for the purposes of S. 27: I.L.R. (1940) Nag. 679: A.I.R. 1941 Nag. 86.

First information report by accused amounting to a confession should be excluded from consideration: 1967 Jab. L.J. 504.

Confessional statement made to Police Officer which formed the basis of the first information report is not admissible in evidence, being hit by S. 25: A.I.R. 1972 S.C. 922; I.L.R. (1971) 21 Raj. 1274: 1971 Raj.L.W. 589; (1990) 2 Karn.L.J. 242.

The inculpative statement made by an accused even though it forms part of the first information report in the case is inadmissible in evidence. [A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 119, Foll.]: 1995 Cr.L.J. 61: (1994) 1 Ker.L.J. 696 (D.B.).

A non-confessional report lodged by an accused may, in the case in which he figures as a complainant, attract only the provisions of the law of evidence as to corroboration or contradiction and may be no more admissible than former statement of a witness, yet in the case in which he figures as an accused, it is admissible against him as his admission under S. 21. The bar under S. 162, Cr.P.Code or S. 25 of the Evidence Act would not apply to it: 1994 M.P.L.J. 306 (D.B.).

The contents of the first information report given by the accused, which has not been denied by him, held, is not admissible in evidence in view of S. 25: (1985) 59 Cut.L.T. 93.

Where a first information report made by the accused contains confessional statements, the whole of the first information report need not be excluded from admission. The confessional part of the first information report alone should be excluded: A.I.R. 1950 Ajmer 75, following A.I.R. 1941 Nag. 86.

Where the first information report is made by the accused himself so much of it which amounts to a confession by him is not admissible in evidence against him in view of the provisions of S. 25 of the Evidence Act. But those portions of the report which do not relate to the commission of the crime itself, as for instance which are introductory or narrate the motive and the opportunity for the offence, the presence of certain witnesses, or give information about facts which are admissible under S. 27 of the Evidence Act would be relevant evidence in the case: A.I.R. 1952 Pepsu 98: I.L.R. (1952) Pepsu 186.

If the first information report made by an accused person contains facts relating to motive, preparation and opportunity to commit the crime, with which he is charged, and the facts recited therein are self-inculpatory in the sense that the narrative describing the relations between the accused and the deceased gives the motive for the crime with which the accused is charged, the whole statement must be treated as a confession made to a Police Officer and would be hit by S. 25 of Evidence Act. A narrative disclosing strained relations between the accused and the deceased and referring to an event that occurred several days before the occurrence in the first information report given by the accused, being a statement disclosing motive for the crime is inadmissible under S. 25 of the Evidence Act: 1964 All.L.J. 285: (1964) 2 Cr.L.J. 372: 1965 All.W.R. (H.C.) 9: 1965 All.Cr. R. 42: A.I.R. 1964 All. 447.

A first information report lodged by a person who subsequently becomes the accused is admissible against its maker; but if it contains a confession, the entire report is rendered inadmissible. [A.I.R. 1917 P.C. 25; A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 1850 and 1966 Mah.L.J. 244, Rel. on]: 1978 Cr.L.J. 891: 1978 Mah.L.J. 244; 1979 W.L.N. (U.C.) 252 (Raj.) (D.B.).

If an investigation starts on the basis of the complaint given by a person who later becomes the accused in the case, that information cannot be used for any purpose. But this rule has no application, where the statement made by the accused before the actual F.I.R. was even prepared, did not lay down any complaint in connection with the occurrence in which the deceased was killed and in fact did not refer to the deceased being injured, but related to the injuries sustained by the accused in an incident of the previous day, when he was assaulted and the statement is neither a confession nor one made to Police Officer in the course of the investigation of the occurrence, S. 25, Evidence Act and S. 162, Cr.P.Code do not bar its admissibility. The report is an admission by the accused of certain facts which have a bearing on the questions to be determined by the Court, namely, whether the earlier incident as spoken to by an eye-witness had, in fact, taken place and whether the other accused or others had sustained injuries as a result of the incident. It will also help in showing whether the statement of the accused denying altogether the earlier incident is true or not. Admissions of this nature are admissible in evidence under S. 21 of the Evidence Act and are proveable against them: 1965 Ker.L.T. 292: 1965 Ker. L.J. 412: I.L.R. (1965) 2 Ker. 33: (1965) 1 Ker.L.R. 306: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 647: A.I.R. 1965 Ker. 248.

Where the first information report is given by an accused himself to a Police Officer and amounts to a confessional statement, proof of the confession is prohibited by S. 25. No part of the confessional statement can be proved or received in evidence, except to the extent it is permitted by S. 27 of the Evidence Act. The first information report recorded under S. 154, Cr.P.Code is not a substantive piece of evidence. It may be used to corroborate the informant under S. 157 of the Evidence Act or to contradict him under S. 145 of the Evidence Act in case the informant appears as a witness at the trial. Where the accused himself lodges the first information report, the fact of his giving the information to the Police is admissible against him as evidence of his conduct under S. 8 of the Evidence Act and to the extent it is non-confessional in nature, it would also be relevant under S. 21 of the Evidence Act but the confessional part of the first information report by the accused to the Police Officer cannot be used at all against him in view of the ban of S. 25: (1994) 1 An.L.T. (Cr.) 695 (S.C.).

The entire first information report is not inadmissible in evidence merely because it has been made by an accused person. Parts of it which can be properly separated from the confessional part can and should be admitted in evidence as first information: 1952 Raj.L.W. 269: I.L.R. (1952) 2 Raj. 93.

F.I.R. by accused—Not admissible against makers: 1968 Cr.L.J. 15: A.I.R. 1968 All. 37.

First information report—Value and use of—First information by accused containing confession—How far admissible in evidence: 1966 Cr.L.J. 100: A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 119.

A statement of an accused amounting to a confession made at a Police Station and taken down as first information report in the case, is inadmissible against him as it amounts to a confession to a Police Officer. There is, however, no legal bar to such a confession being used in his favour: 48 Cr.L.J. 977: A.I.R. 1948

Lah. 43, followed in I.L.R. (1956) Mys. 244: A.I.R. 1957 Mys. 50.

A confession made by an accused to a Police Officer cannot be used against an accused but may be used in favour of the accused. Where the accused was found guilty of murder and the only extenuating circumstances are found in a confession made by him to the Police which was also the first information in the case, the motive and extenuating circumstances appearing in the confession, the Court is entitled to use the confession in favour of the accused: (1951) 2 M.L.J. 605: A.I.R. 1952 Mad. 586.

Statement to Officer recording F.I.R.—Accused charged with rash and negligent driving and causing death—First information lodged by himself in the Police Station—Statement made by him to the officer recording the information, that he had driven the lorry, would be a confession made to a Police Officer and would be inadmissible in evidence: (1963) 76 Mad.L.W. 724: 1963 M.L.J. (Cr.) 558: (1963) 2 M.L.J. 473: (1964) 1 Cr.L.J. 241.

Where the truck driver, after the accident, went to the Police Station and stated that while he was driving the truck, a cyclist was injured and people had collected and he had rushed to the Police Station, held, though the confessional part of his statement could not be considered admissible evidence because of S. 25, the fact of the driver having gone to and given information about the accident at the Police Station, was admissible under S. 8 as his conduct: (1990-2) 31 Guj.L.R. 785: 1990 Cr.L.J. 2500. See also (1993) 1 An.W.R. (N.R.C.) 27.

Where the accused lodged a report at the Thana that he committed the murder of his wife, held, such a statement being a confessional statement, is hit by S. 25. [A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 1850, Disting.]: 1973 All.W.R. 142: 1973 All.L.J. 251: 1973 Cr.L.J. 1478. See also 1979 W.L.N. (U.C.) 252 (Raj.) (D.B.).

An F.I.R. lodged by the accused himself that he had murdered his wife because of her bad character and that her dead body and the khurpi with which he killed her were lying in his field which were later on recovered, held, the F.I.R., being a confession made by the accused to the Police, was inadmissible under S. 25; it could not be used to prove the accused's motive; however, the part which led to recovery of the dead body and the khurpi was admissible under S. 27: 1977 Cr.L.J. 358: 1977 All.Cr.R. 29 (D.B.).

4. "Police Officer".—(See also S. 26, Note 4, infra). The expression 'Police Officer' in S. 25 is used in its usual and more comprehensive meaning, and includes Police Officers of the Native States as those of British India: 43 I.C. 111: 14 Nag.L.R. 192. The term 'Police Officer' in this respect must be construed not in any strict technical sense but according to its most comprehensive and popular meaning: 71 I.C. 360: 24 Cr.L.J. 136 (Pesh.). Hence, in common parlance and among the generality of people, a Sub-Divisional Magistrate cannot be taken to be a Police Officer. He is a member not of the Police service but of the Provincial Civil Service and much of his work is judicial: 150 I.C. 991: A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 256.

A confession made under S. 15 of the Terrorist and Disruptive Activities (Prevention) Act, 1987 can be recorded either by a Police Officer not lower in rank than of a Superintendent of Police under that section or by a (Metropolitan, Judicial, Executive or Special) Magistrate under S. 164(1) of the Cr.P.Code, 1974 read with S. 20(3) of the former Act: 1994 Cr.L.J. 3139 (S.C.).

'Police Officer'—Interpretation of—Test to be applied in determining meaning—Bihar and Orissa Excise Act (II of 1915), Ss. 77(2) and 78—Notification No. 470-F, dated 15th January, 1919 — Inspector or Sub-Inspector of Excise empowered to investigate any offence punishable under Bihar Act—Confession recorded by such Inspector of Excise—(Per Subba Rao and Mudholkar, JJ.). It is confession to Police Officer and hence not admissible in evidence — It is also inadmissible under S. 162, Cr.P.Code.

Per Subba Rao and Mudholkar, JJ.—The words 'Police Officer' to be found in S. 25, of the Evidence Act are not to be construed in a narrow way but have to be construed in a wide and popular sense. Those are, however, not to be construed in so wide a sense as to include persons on whom only some of the powers exercised by the Police are conferred. What is pertinent to bear in mind for the purpose of determining as to who can be regarded a 'Police Officer' for the purpose of S. 25, Evidence Act, 1872, is not totality of the powers which an officer enjoys but the kind of powers which the law enables him to exercise. The test for determining whether such a person is a 'Police Officer' for the purpose of S. 25 of the Evidence Act would be whether the powers of a Police Officer which are conferred on him or which are exercisable by him because he is deemed to be an Officer-in-Charge of Police Station establish a direct or substantial relationship with the prohibition enacted by S. 25, that is, the recording of a confession. In other words, the test would be whether the powers are such as would tend to facilitate the obtaining by him of a confession from a suspect or a delinquent. If they do, then it is unnecessary to consider the dominant purpose for which he is appointed or the question as to what other powers he enjoys.

Unlike the Customs Officer, on whom are conferred by the Sea Customs Act, 1878, powers of a limited character which are analogous to those conferred upon Police Officers, the powers of investigation into offences which a Police Officer enjoys are conferred upon Inspectors or Sub-Inspectors of Excise by the Bihar and Orissa Excise Act. It is the possession of those powers which enables Police Officers and those who are deemed to be Police Officers to exercise a kind of authority over the persons arrested which facilitate the obtaining from them statements which may be incriminating the persons making them. The law allows the Police Officer to obtain such statements with a view to facilitate the investigation of the offences. But it renders them inadmissible in evidence for the obvious reason that a suspicion about voluntariness would attach to them. It is the power of investigation which establishes a direct relationship with the prohibition enacted in S. 25. Therefore, where such a power is conferred upon an officer, the mere fact that he possesses some other powers under another law would not make him anytheless a Police Officer for the purpose of S. 25. Hence, a confession made by a person accused of an offence under the Bihar and Orissa Excise Act (II of 1915) and recorded by an Excise Inspector, who is empowered under Notification No. 470-F, dated 15th January, 1919, to investigate any offence under the Act, is inadmissible by reason of the provisions of S. 25, Evidence Act, 1872. For another reason also the confession made to an Excise Sub-Inspector has to be excluded from the evidence because it is a statement made during the course of Investigation to a person who exercises the powers of an Officer-in-charge of a Police Station. Such statement is excluded from evidence by S. 162, of the Cr.P.Code except for the purpose of contradiction.

Per Raghubar Dayal, J. (Contra).—The Excise Inspector and Sub-Inspector empowered by the State Government under S. 77(2) of the Bihar Act are not Police Officers within the meaning of S. 25 of the Evidence Act. Further, the aforesaid officers cannot be treated to be Police Officers for the purposes of S. 162 of the Cr.P.Code. S. 162, does not confer any power on a Police Officer. It deals with the use which can be made of the statements recorded by a Police Officer carrying out investigation under Chap. XVI of the Code. The investigation which the aforesaid Excise Officer conducts is not under Chap. XVI of the Code, but under the provisions, of the Bihar and Orissa Excise Act and therefore, this is a further reason for the non-applicability of S. 162, Cr.P.Code to any statement made by a person to an Excise Officer during the course of his investigation an offence under the Act: (1964) 2 S.C.R. 752: A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 828.

The ratio of (1966) 3 S.C.R. 698 is that even if an Officer under a Special Act is invested with most of the powers of an Officer-in-charge of a Police Station investigating a cognizable offence, he does not thereby become a 'Police Officer' within the meaning of S. 25 unless he is further empowered to file charge-sheets under S. 173 of the Code of Criminal Procedure; statements made before him by a person arrested or against whom an enquiry is pending are not hit by S. 25: A.I.R. 1970 S.C. 1065: 1970 Cr.L.J. 898: (1983) 13 E.L.T. 1427; (1984) 15 E.L.T. 289: 1984 Cr.L.J. 134: 1983 Mad.L.W. (Cr.) 289 (F.B.).

The definition of 'Police Officer' occurring in the Indian Police Act V of 1861 is not exhaustive and in the absence of a statutory definition and apart from all authority, one would be tempted to say that a Police Offier is a person whom any statute or other provision of law calls such, or, on whom it confers all or substantially all the powers and imposes on him the duties of Police Officer. If he is expressely called a Police Officer there is no difficulty whatsoever. If he is not so called, then the next step to ask is—What does the law require him to do? What are the duties imposed on him and what are the powers conferred on him?: (1976) 42 Cut.L.T. 80.

In order to ascertain whether officers empowered to inquire into offences are 'Police Officers' within meaning of S. 25, the Court should examine closely and thoroughly the powers, disabilities, functions and duties of the officers under the relevant Act, even though they may not have been described as 'Police Officers': (1975) 77 Bom.L.R. 295: 1975 Cr.L.J. 1891 (D.B.), affirmed in A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 379: (1980) 4 S.C.C. 600.

Police Officer includes person invested with Police powers: I.L.R. 8 Rang. 52: A.I.R. 1930 Rang. 227 (Assistant Superintendent of Pakokku Hill Tracts exercising the powers of Additional District Magistrate); A.I.R. 1946 Mad. 430: (1946) 1 M.L.J. 368. (Special Officer of Commercial-tax Department empowered under Hoarding and Profiteering Prevention Ordinance). Food grains inspector under the U.P. Food Grains Control Order is not a 'Police Officer' within the meaning of S. 25 and, hence, confessions made to him cannot be said to be inadmissible: 1947 All.W.R. (C.C.) 126: A.I.R. 1948 Oudh 81.

As a Home Guard under Ss. 4 and 5 of the Orissa Home Guards Act, 1961 and R. 17 framed under that Act essentially performs Police duties, an extra-judicial confession made before him while he is performing his duties, held, is hit by S. 25; his evidence of confession is inadmissible: 1989 Cr.L.J. 1566 (Ori.) (D.B.).

Confession made to a Police Officer in Nizam's Dominions is not admissible in evidence: 19 Cr.L.J. 79; 43 I.C. 111: 19 Nag.L.R. 192.

There must be some communication to a Police Officer for the purpose of showing that the statement was made to a Police Officer. It is such communication which makes it tainted evidence. Therefore, in each case the question must be examined whether the statement was in fact made to a Police Officer or not: I.L.R. (1964) Guj. 954: (1965) 1 Cr.L.J. 30: (1965) 6 Guj.L.R. 129: A.I.R. 1965 Guj. 5.

Ss. 25 to 27.—The words 'Police Officer' are used in Ss. 25 and 26 and also in the proviso to S. 27 and they must have the same wide meaning in all those sections. They must cover a person who is authorised to exercise the powers of a Police Officer and would not necessarily mean a person who is in charge of the Police Station or who is empowered to make an investigation. If the statement to any such Police Officer is hit under S. 25 or S. 26 as tainted evidence the principle underlying S. 27, viz., that the evidence relating to confessional or other statements made by a person while a person is in the custody of the Police is tainted and, therefore, inadmissible but if the truth of the information given by him is assured by the discovery of a fact, it may be presumed to be untainted must apply to all such statements. This would on the one hand shut out all evidence of a tainted nature while on the other hand permit the proof of so much of the information, whether it amounts to a confession or not which distinctly leads to the discovery of a fact on the ground that its truth is assured: I.L.R. (1964) Guj. 954: (1965) 1 Cr.L.J. 30: (1965) 6 Guj. L.R. 129: A.I.R. 1965 Guj. 5.

According to the provisions of the Karnataka Village Defence Parties Act and the rules framed thereunder, a Dalapathi under the Act has virtually to discharge the duties of a Police Officer and, therefore, the confessional statement made before him is inadmissible in evidence under S. 25. However, the fact of the accused approaching Dalapathi with blood-stained axe and blood-stained clothes is clearly admissible as evidence of his conduct under S. 8: (1990) 2 Karn.L.J. 242: 1991 Cr.L.J. 458 (D.B.). See however 1988 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 53 (Gau.); 1988 Cr.L.J. 573 (Gau.) (D.B.) [Members of the Village Defence Organisation are not Police personnel; extra-judicial confession made to them is not hit by S. 25].

Ss. 25 and 26—Excise offence—Midnight raid in village—Witnesses from place away from village called—S. 103 does not strictly apply—Non-compliance with its strict provision does not nullify or vitiate proceedings—Police witnesses as a class not discreditable under Ss. 25 and 26, Evidence Act: (1964) 66 Punj.L.R. 81.

Mere power to investigate into offences committed by subordinate does not attract bar as to admissibility of confessions, enacted under S. 25—Confession made by accused, a postal employee, to officer authorised to investigate into departmental offences and irregularities committed by subordinates in Postal Department—Held, Officer was not exercising same powers as Police Officer-in-charge of detection in context of provisions of Cr.P.Code and admissibility of statement in evidence was not barred under S. 25: (1968) 1 Mys.L.J. 457: 1968 M.L.J. (Cr.) 226.

The powers conferred upon a Regional Inspector under the Mines Act are similar to those of Customs Officer under the Sea Customs Act which are merely analogous to those of Police Officer under Cr.P.Code, and not identical. Hence, a Regional Inspector under the Mines Act is not a Police Officer for the purposes of S. 25, Evidence Act: 1967 Cr.L.J. 1684: A.I.R. 1967 Pat. 441.

The test for determining whether an Officer is to be deemed a Police Officer, as laid down by the Supreme Court is, whether he is invested with all the powers of a Police Officer qua investigation of an offence including the power to submit a report under S. 173, Cr.P.Code. An Inspector of Mines not having the power to arrest any person or to submit a report under S. 173, Cr.P.Code, cannot be considered to be a Police Officer within S. 25 although under S. 7 of the Mines Act, 1952, he has power of examination, enquiry, search and seizure and he can also make a complaint for an offence under that Act.

A statement made to Inspector of Mines during an enquiry into an accident in the mine out of which the complaint arose is not inadmissible in evidence, since the Inspector is not a Police Officer. [A.I.R. 1970 S.C. 940; A.I.R. 1970 S.C. 1065, Appl.; 1973 Cr.L.J. 290 (Madh. Pra.); A.I.R. 1967 Pat. 441, Foll.]: 1974 Lab.I.C. 934 (Madh. Pra.).

Statements made to a Forest Officer stand on a different footing from those made to Police Officers. As Forest Officers are not vested with powers of an Officer-in-charge of a Police Station they cannot by any means be considered Police Officers under the Cr.P.Code and S. 25 of the Evidence Act cannot apply to them. Therefore, statement made by the accused to the Forest Range Officer, is admissible in evidence: 1958 Cr.L.J. 52: (1957) 2 M.L.J. 624: A.I.R. 1958 Mad. 31. See also 1959 Ker.L.J. 593: I.L.R. (1959) Ker. 660: 1959 Ker.L.R. 599: 1959 M.L.J. (Cr.) 808; 1989 Cr.L.J. 2038 (Ker.), cited under S. 24, Note 12, supra.

The expression 'Police Officer' in S. 25 of the Evidence Act is not confined only to such officers who are appointed under the Indian Police Act, but includes also other officers who exercise the same powers as that of a Police Officer of a Police Station in respect of investigation of certain offences. The confessions recorded by them in exercise of that power of investigation into the offences would be inadmissible in evidence under S. 25 of the Evidence Act. The mere fact that they are also enjoined with duties other than investigating certain offences would not be a good reason for holding that they are not Police Officers provided the powers of investigation exercised by them are the powers of investigation under the Cr.P.Code, which are exercisable by a Police Officer-in-charge of the Police Station. A Customs Officer under the Customs Act is not a Police Officer within the meaning of S. 25, Evidence Act.

S. 21 of the Central Excise and Salt Act does not make an officer of the Central Excise a Police Officer for all purposes. His powers of arrest or summoning persons for examining them as witnesses or searches are only, in respect of offences under the Central Excise Act. After the arrest of the person he is to be forwarded to a Central Excise Officer empowered to send the person to a Magistrate, and it is only this officer who is empowered to inquire into the charge against the person who is reasonably believed to be liable to punishment under the Excise Act, and it is only for this limited purpose that the powers of investigation of a Police Officer-in-charge of a Police Station are conferred on him and he is empowered to exercise those powers under the Cr.P.Code. The Central Excise Officers who are not by appointment Police Officers are empowered to exercise the same powers as are exercisable by an Officer-in-charge of Police Station only in respect of investigation of offences under the Central Excise Act. It, therefore, follows that it cannot be said that he is a Police Officer while discharging his duties under the Customs Act. Consequently, confessions recorded by Superintendent and Deputy Superintendents of Central Excise, in their capacity as Customs Officers and not in their capacity as officers of Central Excise, are not hit by the provisions of S. 25, Evidence Act: (1965) 67 Bom.L.R. 317: I.L.R. (1965) Bom. 648: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 616: 1965 Mah.L.J. 705: A.I.R. 1965 Bom. 195.

Authorised Officers of Customs, Excise and other Departments are not Police Officers; statements made before them are, thus, not inadmissible: 1989 Cr.L.J. 460 (Guj.).

Statements made by accused to Customs Officers—Admissibility: (1965) 1 Cr.L.J. 490: A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 481.

Central Excise and Salt Act, 1944, S. 21—Statement made by an accused to the Deputy Superintendent of Customs and Excise would not be hit by S. 25 of the Evidence Act and would be admissible in evidence—Deputy Superintendent of Customs and Excise is not a Police Officer within the meaning of S. 25 of the Evidence Act: 1966 Cr.L.J. 1353: A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 1746; A.I.R. 1969 Andh. Pra. 278: 1969 Cr.L.J. 1022.

The confession made before the Superintendent, Customs and Excise is not hit by S. 25. That officer may be given the powers of a Police Officer for the purpose of investigation, but he cannot be deemed to be 'Police Officer' for the purpose of S. 25. [A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 1746, Rel. on]: 1980 All.Cr.R. 58.

Authorities under the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act and Customs Act cannot be equated with Police Officers; S. 25 cannot apply to statements recorded by them: 1989 Cr.L.J. 2138 (Mad.) (D.B.).

Confessional statements made to a Customs Officer do not come within the inhibition of Ss. 24 and 25: A.I.R. 1973 S.C. 62: (1973) 3 S.C.C. 401; (1984) 58 Cut.L.T. 127; 1976 Cr.L.J. 165.

Though the Customs personnel are endowed with powers of search, seizure and arrest, akin to those of Police personnel, yet, they are, for all practical purposes, not to be construed as 'Police personnel' under S. 25 on the salutary principle that they are not having the powers of filing of final report as adumbrated under S. 173 (2) of the Cr.P.Code: 1993 Cr.L.J. 956 (Mad.); 1994 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 276 (P.&H.) (D.B.).

A Customs Officer is not a member of the Police force. He is not entrusted with the duty to maintain law and order. He is entrusted with power which specifically relates to the collection of customs duties and prevention of smuggling. The test for determining whether an officer of customs is to be deemed a Police Officer is, whether he is invested with all the powers of a Police Officer qua investigation of an offence, including the power to submit a report under S. 173 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. A Customs Officer exercising power to make an enquiry cannot submit a report under S. 173 of the Code of Criminal Procedure: (1969) 2 Um.N.P. 401: (1969) 2 S.C.R. 461: A.I.R. 1970 S.C. 940; A.I.R. 1972 S.C. 1224: 1972 Cr.L.J. 759; I.L.R. (1974) 2 Del. 706; (1990) 45 E.L.T. 51 (Mad.).

The Customs Authorities are not Police Officers as they are not invested with powers of an Officer-in-charge of a Police Station and powers of investigation and the statement made to Customs Authorities by a person, who may later on be accused of an offence under the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act, is not hit by S. 25 of the Evidence Act and is admissible in evidence: 1961 M.L.J. (Cr.) 163: (1961) 1 Cr.L.J. 106: A.I.R. 1961 Mys. 7.

Customs Officer not a Police Officer within meaning of S. 25: 1969 Cr.L.J. 1245: A.I.R. 1969 Del. 301.

The Customs Officer is not primarily concerned with the detection and punishment of crime committed by a person, but is mainly interested in the detection and prevention of smuggling of goods and safeguarding the recovery of customs duties. He is more concerned with the goods and customs duty, than with the offender. Merely because similar powers in regard to detention of infractions of Customs laws have been conferred on Officers of the Customs Department as are conferred on Officers of the Police is not a sufficient ground for holding them to be Police Officers within the meaning of S. 25 of the Evidence Act. The Customs Officers, when they act under the Sea Customs Act to prevent the smuggling of goods by imposing confiscation and penalties act judicially. A Police Officer never acts judicially. Hence, a Customs Officer either under the Land Customs Act, 1924, or under the Sea Customs Act, 1878, is not a Police Officer for the purpose of S. 25, Evidence Act: (1962) 3 S.C.R. 338: (1962) 2 S.C.A. 321: (1962) 1 Cr.L.J. 217: A.I.R. 1962 S.C. 276.

The Customs Officer under S. 104(3) is, it is true, invested with the powers of an Officer-in-charge of a Police Station for the purpose of releasing any person on bail or otherwise. The expression 'or otherwise', however, does not confer upon him the power to lodge a report before a Magistrate under S. 173 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Power to grant bail, power to collect evidence, and power to search premises or conveyances without recourse to a Magistrate do not make him an Officer-in-charge of a Police Station. Powers are conferred upon him primarily for collection of duty and prevention of smuggling. He is for all purposes an Officer of the revenue. Thus, a Custom Officer is, under the Act of 1962, not a Police Officer within the meaning of S. 25 of the Evidence Act and the statements made before him by a person who is arrested or against whom an inquiry is made are not covered by S. 25 of the Evidence Act: (1969) 2 Um.N.P. 401: (1969) 2 S.C.R. 461: A.I.R. 1970 S.C. 940.

The Customs Officers are not equated with Police Officers acting under the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898 and hence, statement recorded by them under S. 108 of Customs Act, 1962, cannot be hit by S. 25 of the Evidence Act.

The whole purpose of the Act of 1962, is to safeguard the revenues of the country and its economy. It is intended to prevent evasion of duty and in order that the duty might not be evaded, the evasion is made an offence and it is a limited extent and for that limited purpose that powers of searches, seizure and investigation are given to the Customs Officers.

S. 104(3) of the Act of 1962, read in its context does not give any ascendancy whatsoever to the officer over a citizen merely because the power of granting bail has been given to him. Neither the Sea Customs Act, 1878, nor the Act of 1962, provides the Customs Officers with a lock-up under their control. Their actions are open to view as those of any other officer in his office and they cannot, therefore, extract any confession from the person whom they are questioning: (1968) 70 Bom.L.R. 231: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1617: A.I.R. 1968 Bom. 433.

The confessional statements of the accused made before the Customs Officer are hit by the provisions of S. 25, Evidence Act and cannot be taken into consideration for determining the guilt of the accused. Customs Officers have powers analogous to Police Officer's powers relating to prevention or detection of crimes even though those powers fall short of powers of investigation. The power of investigation is not the real governing test for the application of S. 25 of the Evidence Act: (1958) 60 Punj.L.R. 643: A.I.R. 1959 Punj. 113; (1959) 61 Punj.L.R. 235: A.I.R. 1959 Punj. 287. But see infra. The Assistant Inspector of Customs is not a Police Officer within the meaning of S. 25 of the Evidence Act as the section should not be extended to other classes of officers merely on the ground of similarity of function. So, where statements are made by the accused to the Assistant Inspector of Customs, such statements are not hit by S. 25 of the Evidence Act and are hence admissible in evidence: A.I.R. 1947 Mad. 308: (1946) 59 Mad.L.W. 751: 1946 Mad.W.N. 776: (1946) 2 M.L.J. 480: I.L.R. (1947) Mad. 788.

Even though under the new Customs Act of 1962, a Customs Officer has been invested with many powers which were not to be found in the provisions of the old Sea Customs Act of 1878, he cannot be regarded as a 'Police Officer' within the meaning of S. 25 of the Evidence Act and the statements made before him by a person who is arrested or against whom an inquiry is made are not covered by S. 25 of the Evidence Act: (1969) 2 S.C.R. 613: 1970 Cr.L.J. 998: A.I.R. 1970 S.C. 1065.

S. 25 rests upon the principle that it is dangerous to depend upon a confession made to a Police Officer which cannot extricate itself from the suspicion that it might have been procured by the exercise of coercion or by enticement. A confession may fall outside the orbit of S. 25 notwithstanding the presence of a Police Officer at the time when the confession was made if it is established that the confession was not made to him but to someone else who was not a Police Officer, but if on the other hand, it is clear that although there were persons who were not Police Officers present when the confession was made, the confession was made to a Police Officer who was also present, the confession would be inadmissible. Since the evidence of the Police constable demonstrated beyond doubt that the accused came out with her confession on being interrogated by him to speak the truth, the mere fact that other persons who were not Police Officers were also present when the confession was made would not take the confession out of the prohibition which the section incorporates: 1966 M.L.J. (Cr.) 313: 1966 Cr.L.J. 921: A.I.R. 1966 Mys. 199.

A statement made by an accused before the Customs Authorities is not hit by S. 25 and hence the statements made by the accused before the Customs Authorities are relevant unless it appears that they have been caused by any inducement, threat or promise: I.L.R. (1968) 18 Raj. 962: 1969 Cr.L.J. 311: A.I.R. 1969 Raj. 48. See also S. 24, Note 12, supra.

Enquiry by Customs Department Officers under S. 107 or S. 108 of Customs Act—Not same as an investigation of an offence under Chap. 14, Cr.P. Code: 1967 Cr.L.J. 1007: A.I.R. 1967 Mad. 263 (F.B.).

A Customs Officer while holding an enquiry and recording statements under S. 108 of the Customs Act is not a Police Officer; he is only a Revenue Officer. The person against whom the enquiry is held does not become an accused till the Customs Officer lodges complaint before the Magistrate; thus, a confession made by such a person during the enquiry is not an accused's confession before a Police Officer; it is not hit by S. 162 of the Code of Criminal Procedure or by Art. 20(3) of the Constitution: 1985 M.L.J. (Cr.) 335; A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 1087; (1988) 35 E.L.T. 458 (Bom.); 1991 Cr.L.J. 2359 (Bom.) (D.B.). But if such confession is shown to have been obtained by inducement, threat, coercion or duress or extracted during his illegal and prolonged custody or obtained by using third degree methods, held, such confession being involuntary cannot be accepted or relied upon: (1984) 15 E.L.T. 289 (Mad.) (F.B.); (1992) 3 S.C.C. 178.

The Customs Officers who are empowered under S. 53 of the Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985 to be Police Station Officers are not Police Officers and any confessions made before them are admissible in evidence under S. 17 and the same is not hit by S. 25 or S. 26: 1993 Cr.L.J. 1310 (Pat.); (1989) 1 Bom.C.R. 503: 1990 Cr.L.J. 144; (1988-2) 8 Guj.L.H. 531: 1989 Cr.L.J. 460; 1988 All.L.J. 411; A.I.R. 1991 S.C. 45: 1991 Cr.L.J. 97: (1990) 2 S.C.C. 409: (1990) 41 Del.L.T. 49: (1990) 2 Crimes 435 affirming (1989) 37 Del.L.T. 362: 1989 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 199: (1989) 3 Crimes 146.

An Intelligence Officer of the Narcotic Control Bureau, vested with powers of an Officer-in-charge of a Police Station for investigation of offences in accordance with S. 53 of the Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985, held, is not a Police Officer; a confessional statement made to him is admissible: 1989 Cr.L.J. 2007 (Cal.); (1990) 2 Ker.L.T. 405: (1990) 2 Ker.L.J. 307; 1991 C.Cr.L.R. (Cal.) 143; 1995 Cr.L.J. 665 (Del.).

Where a custom enquiry was held pursuant to a Magistrate's order, held, the Customs Authorities are not Police Officers; a confession made before them in such enquiries is not hit by S. 24; it is admissible: (1982) 3 S.C.C. 512: 1983 S.C.C. (Cr.) 109.

Onus lies on the prosecution to establish that the confession was made voluntarily and not under pressure; for that purpose, it will have to establish before the quasi-judicial authority that the accused had signed the confession without undue lapse of time and despite having the choice, he did not leave the Customs House till he had of his own accord signed the confession: (1992) 58 E.L.T. 192 (Cal.).

Where the accused, for long in the Customs Officer's custody, had retracted their confessional statements only during the trial and not when they were originally produced before the Magistrate, held, it did not necessarily mean that their confessions were involuntary and, therefore, unlawful: (1991) 51 E.L.T. 43 (Bom.).

Confession before Administrator in Portuguese territory not admissible. See (1924) 26 Bom.L.R. 706: A.I.R. 1924 Bom. 480. It would be difficult to hold that a member of the civic guard should be treated as anything else than a Police Officer when called out on duty, even though he may not have the powers of investigation. There may also be cases in which a confession made to a civic guard would have to be regarded as being a confession made to a Police Officer, though he had not been technically called out on duty; but this would rather be a result of the ordinary rule of prudence which often makes it necessary to exclude confessions made to Village Lambardars or other notables who are assisting the Police in the course of investigation: (1944) 46 Punj.L.R. 15: A.I.R. 1944 Lah. 57.

As S. 25 refers only to a Police Officer, a Court should not extend it to other classes of officers merely on grounds of similarity of function. The restrictive provisions of S. 25 should not be applied to Excise Officers: 39 Cr.L.J. 338: A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 460: (1938) 1 M.L.J. 238. But see also A.I.R. 1938 Sind 1: 32 Sind L.R. 185.

Police Officer — Excise Officer under Bihar and Orissa Excise Act is not Police Officer: 1962 B.L.J.R. 344.

An officer who performs 'Police' functions of investigation and arrest would be a Police Officer within the meaning of S. 25 of the Evidence Act, S. 21(2) of the Central Excise and Salt Act confers these functions upon the Excise Officers. A confession of the accused made at the time of his arrest to the Superintendent of Central Excise, therefore, has to be excluded from evidence under S. 25 of the Evidence Act: 1966 All.Cr. R. 85: 1966 All.W.R. (H.C.) 149: 1966 Cr.L.J. 4: A.I.R. 1966 All. 42.

It is well settled that the statement of the accused made to an Officer of Central Excise is not hit by S. 25 of the Evidence Act: (1974) 40 Cut.L.T. 806; (1986) 6 Guj.L.H. 754: (1986) 2 Guj.L.R. 1124 (D.B.).

An Excise Officer invested with the powers of an Officer-in-charge of a Police Station for investigation of offences under S. 20-A of the Opium Act is a 'Police Officer' coming within the purview of S. 25 of the Evidence Act and S. 162 of the Code of Criminal of Procedure and any confession made to him in the course of investigation is inadmissible under S. 25 of the Evidence Act and the statements made to such an officer under S. 162, Cr.P.Code, can be used only in the manner enacted therein: (1953) 2 M.L.J. 189: A.I.R. 1953 Mad. 917: I.L.R. (1954) Mad. 57.

An Excise Officer is a Police Officer: I.L.R. 61 Cal. 607: (1933-34) 38 Cal.W.N. 930: A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 580 (F.B.); A.I.R. 1935 Nag. 13; 46 Cr.L.J. 213: A.I.R. 1945 Lah. 10.

Proceedings before Director of Enforcement—Confession made before authority having no Police powers at that time—S. 25 is inapplicable: 1969 Ker. L.J. 450.

Enforcement Officers under the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act, 1947, are not Police Officers and, thus, statements made to them can be acted upon, if it is voluntary: (1986) 99 Mad.L.W. 754: (1986) 2 M.L.J. 433 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1981 Ker. 81: 1981 Ker.L.T. 833 (D.B.); 1990 Cr.L.J. 1068 (Del.).

Confessions made to an Enforcement Officer whose powers are similar to those of a Customs Officer are admissible in evidence; a Customs Officer is not a Police Officer. True, an Enforcement Officer is not empowered to summon persons and to record their statements but there is no bar to his questioning a person apprehended or whose premises are searched; confessional statements made in answer to such questioning constitute extra-judicial confessions: 1982 Cr.L.J. 461 (Goa).

Applicability—Statement made to officer appointed under S. 38 (1), Bombay Sales Tax Act—Admissibility in trial for offence under S. 36 (1)(b): (1958) 9 S.T.C. 681 (Bom.).

Where an accused charged with the offence of possessing medicines for sale without a licence under Ss. 18(c) and 27 of the Drugs and Cosmetics Act told the Police Constable of his intention to sell them, held, it amounted to a confession made to a Police Officer, it was inadmissible: 1984 Cr.L.J. 931 (Cal.) (D.B.).

Whereas S. 25 renders inadmissible a confession made by an accused to the Police S. 26 goes further and enacts that a confession made by a person, while he is in the custody of the Police even to a third person, who may not be a Police Officer, is inadmissible unless it is made in the immediate presence of a Magistrate. The reason underlying these two sections is obvious, namely, that the influence of the Police is presumed to affect the voluntary nature of the confession and, therefore, its reliability. The law is imperative in excluding what comes from an accused person in the custody of the Police if it incriminates him. Courts in this country have been so jealous of the voluntary nature of the confession that they have construed the word 'custody' not necessarily to mean custody after formal arrest, but it has been held to extend to a state of affairs in which the accused can be said to have come into the influence of a Police Officer or has been even under some form of Police surveillance or restrictions on his movements by the Police.

A conviction for acquisition of gold in excess of permissible limit based solely on confession of accused made to Excise Authority in presence of Police Officer is illegal as such confession is inadmissible: 1970 Cr.L.J. 635 (Del.).

A Police Patel under the Mysore Police Act, 1963, is a Police Officer and, therefore, a confession made to him is hit by S. 25: 1972 M.L.J. (Cr.) 374: (1972) 1 Mys.L.J. 499 (D.B.).

A Police Patel under the Bombay Village Police Act, 1867, is a Police Officer within the meaning of S. 25: (1985) 5 Guj.L.H. 882. Confession made to him is inadmissible even if he was father-in-law of the accused: 1980 Cr.L.R. 154 (Guj.).

A confession contained in an information given by the accused to a Police Patel is not admissible; however, its other parts which do not amount to confessions are admissible. [(1972) 1 Mys.L.J. 499: 1972 M.L.J. (Cr.) 374 (D.B.), Rel. on]: (1972) 2 Mys.L.J. 6.

The words 'a Police Officer' in S. 25 should not be read in any strict technical sense, but according to its more comprehensive and popular meaning. Nor is the term confined to the person actually in charge of the investigation of an offence under the Criminal Procedure Code. A confession made to him need not have been made when he was actually discharging any Police duty. A confession made to any member of the Police of whatever rank and at whatever time is inadmissible in evidence under S. 25. S. 6 of the Maharashtra Village Police Act, particularly Cl. (vii) thereof, clearly stamps the Village Police Patel with the character of a Police Officer. A Police Patel is, therefore, a Police Officer within the meaning of S. 25. A confession made to him is hence not admissible. [I.L.R. 17 Bom. 485; A.I.R. 1962 S.C. 276; (1972) 1 Mys.L.J. 499 and (1972) 2 Mys.L.J. 6, Rel. on]: 1978 Mah.L.J. 244: 1978 Cr.L.J. 891.

See however 1979 Mah.L.J. 603 [A Village Kotwal is not a Police Officer and an extra-judicial confession made to him is admissible in evidence and does not come within the mischief of S. 25. The position and status of a Village Kotwal, who has no powers to exercise but has merely duties to perform, cannot be equated with that of a Police Officer. A Village Kotwal has no power to exercise, much less to misuse.

The scheme of Ss. 5 to 7 in Ch. II of the Maharashtra Land Revenue Code (1956) and in particular phraseology of sub-S. (4) of S. 7, viz., 'one or more Kotwals or village servants', bring to the forefront that a village Kotwal is not an 'Officer' much less a 'Police Officer', and that he is no more than a village servant connected with the Revenue Department].

Extra-judicial confession made to the members of the Village Defence Organisation is not hit by the provisions of S. 25 as they are not Police personnel: (1988) 1 Crimes 254 (Gau.).

The village chowkidar who is deemed to be a kotwar under S. 230 (2) of the M.P. Land Revenue Code is not a Police Officer within the meaning of S. 25, though he may be performing certain functions which are performed by the Police. A village chowkidar could not, therefore, be termed as a Police Officer and an extra-judicial confession made to him is not inadmissible. [1978 M.P.L.J. 599: 1978 Cr.L.J. 1149 (D.B.); 1978 M.P.L.J. 802 and 1986 M.P.L.J. 490 (D.B.), Affirmed]: 1987 M.P.L.J. 195 (F.B.); (1993) 1 Crimes 732 (Madh. Pra.).

The extra-judicial confession by accused made to several witnesses including a village chaukidar, was admissible in evidence as the same was made when the accused was neither in the custody of the chaukidar nor was it made to the chaukidar; it was not also made under the influence of the chaukidar. [A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 222; A.I.R. 1948 All. 7, Foll.]: 1974 Cr.L.J. 126: 1973 All.W.R. 668.

The words "Police Officer" used in S. 25 is not to be considered in a strict sense but is to be given its more comprehensive and popular meaning. S. 7(1) of the C.R. Police Act, 1949, clearly shows that the members of the C.R.P. Force have a duty to detect and bring offenders to justice and therefore, they are "Police Officers" within the meaning of S. 25 of the Indian Evidence Act. Merely because some special powers or duties of Police Officers are not conferred or imposed on the members of the C.R.P. Force under S. 16 of the C.R.P. Act, it would not mean that they are not "Police Officers" within the meaning of S. 25. The definitions given in S. 3 of the Bombay District Police Act are meant for the purpose of that Act alone. A member of the C.R.P. Force may not be a Police Officer within the meaning of the Bombay District Police Act; but it does not mean that he would not be a Police Officer within the meaning of S. 25 of the Indian Evidence Act: A.I.R. 1956 Kutch 1: 1956 Cr.L.J. 217.

An officer of the Railway Protection Force making an inquiry under S. 8(1) of the Railway Property (Unlawful Possession) Act, 1966, held, cannot be deemed to be a 'Police Officer' under S. 25. Therefore, any confessional or incriminating statement recorded by him in the course of an inquiry under S. 8(1) of the 1966 Act, cannot be excluded from evidence under the said section. [1975 Cr.L.J. 1891: (1975) 77 Bom.L.R. 295 (Bom.) (D.B.), Affirmed]: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 379: (1980) 4 S.C.C. 600: (1980) 2 Kam.L.J. (S.N.) 92; 1972 Mah.L.J. 191: (1971) 73 Bom.L.R. 891; 1973 M.P.L.J. 663 (D.B.); 1983 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 188 (Ori.); 1983 Mad.L.W. (Cr.) 219; (1988) 1 Ker.L.J. 235: 1989 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 110.

Statements by accused to C.I.D. Officer—Admissibility: 1938 Mad.W.N. 825: A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 893. The expression 'Police Officer' is not to be read in a technical sense but in its more comprehensive and popular meaning. Whatever reasons existed for inducing the Legislature to make a departure from the English Law and exclude a confession made to Police Officer apply with equal if not greater force to an officer who is clothed with powers of a Police Officer and is actually engaged in the investigation of a crime in respect of which the confession is made to him. Hence, an Abkari Officer investigating an offence against the Bombay Abkari Act in exercise of the powers conferred upon him in Ch. 9 of the Act is a Police Officer within the scope of S. 25: 32 Sind L.R. 185: A.I.R. 1938 Sind 1, overruling A.I.R. 1925 Sind 70 and A.I.R. 1927 Sind 112.

The expression "Police Officer" in S. 25 of the Evidence Act is not used in a technical and restricted sense and includes a Ward Rationing Officer whose position is analogous to that of an Excise Officer: A.I.R. 1951 Punj. 387: (1951) 53 Punj.L.R. 157.

A Prohibition Sub-Inspector under the Madras Prohibition Act cannot be deemed to be a "Police Officer" within the meaning of S. 25. Throughout the Madras Prohibition Act, "Police Officer" is mentioned in contradistinction to a "Prohibition Officer". Hence, confessional statement recorded by a Prohibition Sub-Inspector is not inadmissible in evidence under S. 25 of the Evidence Act: A.I.R. 1948 Mad. 116: 1947 Mad.W.N. 524: (1947) 60 Mad.L.W. 530: I.L.R. (1948) Mad. 574: (1947) 2 M.L.J. 218; (1952) 1 M.L.J. 658: A.I.R. 1953 Mad. 1004. See also (1952) 1 M.L.J. 69: A.I.R. 1952 Mad. 299.

A member of the frontier constabulary is a Police Officer: 71 I.C. 360: 24 Cr.L.J. 146 (Pesh.) As to village headman in Burma, see I.L.R. 2 Rang. 31: A.I.R. 1924 Rang. 246 (F.B.). An extra-judicial confession made by the accused to a Lambardar and a Safedposh cannot be admitted in evidence: (1933) 35 Punj.L.R. 359.

Impropriety of recording confession in jail pointed out—The Courts can, however, hold that the confession is voluntary if, after properly appreciating the importance and significance of the circumstances, they find that there are other facts and circumstances which completely assure its voluntariness: 1970 Cr.L.J. 603 (All.).

A Sub-Inspector of Police even while on deputation as Security Inspector in the Heavy Engineering Corporation does not cease to be a Police Officer inasmuch as he does not cease to be an enrolled Police Officer as contemplated by the Police Act. By reason of such deputation he does not cease to be a member of the Police force as envisaged by S. 2, Police Act. That can happen only if subsequently he cannot be reverted to the general line in the Police force. Therefore, merely on the ground of such deputation he does not lose the character of a 'Police Officer' in the comprehensive and popular sense of the term in S. 25, Evidence Act. Hence, a confession made to him is inadmissible and it cannot form the basis of a conviction: 1969 Pat. L.J.R. 646: 1969 B.L.J.R. 707.

'Police Officer'—Meaning of—Liberal construction: (1970) 1 S.C.J. 701.

Extra-judicial confession suggesting mutual affeary between deceased and accused—Whether can be relied on: 1970 Pat. L.J.R. 172.

Confession made to Police Officer—Letter, written and signed by accused and addressed to Sub-Inspector stating that he, i.e., accused had committed murder of his wife, found near dead body of wife—Held, that as letter was not written in presence of Police Officer, confession contained therein was not confession made to Police Officer within bar created by S. 25 and it was admissible in evidence. [Per Mudholkar, J., and Sarkar, C.J., Bachawat, J. Contra]: 1966 Cr.L.J. 1519: 1966 S.C.R. (Supp.) 265: A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 1906.

5. Confession leading to discovery of fact.— S. 25 to which S. 27 is a proviso applies equally to confession with regard to offences not under investigation. Where a person while under custody for a criminal breach of trust in respect of a cycle that he had taken on hire and then sold, confessed that he had similarly sold another cycle and as a result of that confession that cycle was discovered, the confession is admissible under S. 27: I.L.R. (1943) Mad. 456: (1942) 2 M.L.J. 549: A.I.R. 1943 Mad. 89.

Ss. 25, 26 and 27—Relative scope—S. 27 is an exception to Ss. 25 and 26 both: 1960 Cr.L.J. 1: A.I.R. 1960 All. 1 (F.B.); 1990 Rajdhani L.R. 154: 1990 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 118 (D.B.); 1994 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 59 (Madh. Pra.) (D.B.).

S. 27 is in the nature of an exception to the preceding sections, particularly Ss. 25 and 26—Conditions essential for bringing the section into operation laid down. See A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 483: 1976 Cr.L.J. 481: (1976) 1 S.C.C. 828.

Incriminating statements made to a Police Officer are hit by Ss. 25 and 26 of the Evidence Act. The statement that the axe is one with which the murder had been committed is not a statement which leads to any discovery within the meaning of S. 27 of the Evidence Act. Nor is the alleged statement of the accused that the bloodstained shirt and dhoti belonged to him a statement which leads to any discovery within the meaning of S. 27. It is fallacious to treat the 'fact discovered' within S. 27 as equivalent to the object produced. The fact discovered embraces the place from which the object is produced and the knowledge of the accused as to this, and the information given must relate distinctly to this fact. It is, therefore, wrong to admit in evidence the alleged statement of the accused that the axe had been used to commit murder or the statement that the bloodstained shirt and dhoti were his. Held, that if the statements relating to axe and dhoti were excluded from evidence then there remained only the circumstantial evidence. But as the chain of circumstantial evidence was not complete in this case the conviction of the accused for murder of his uncle deserved to be set aside: (1963) 2 S.C.R. 881: A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 1113.

The difficulty, however great, of proving that a fact discovered on information supplied by the accused is a relevant fact, can afford no justification for reading into the section something that is not there and admitting in evidence a confession barred by S. 25: 1990 Rajdhani L.R. 154: 1990 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 118 (Del.) (D.B.).

Any confession made by the accused before a Police Officer will not be legally admissible under S. 25. But the words distinctly relating to facts discovered are clearly admissible under S. 27: 1954 Cr.L.J. 713: A.I.R. 1954 Manipur 13.

Where in consequence of the disclosure statement made by the accused no incriminating article was recovered, held, the statement would not be protected under S. 27 and being in the nature of confession to the Police, it would be hit by Ss. 25 and 26 and as such would be inadmissible in evidence: 1985 Cr.L.J. 1700 (Del.).

Per Agarwala, J.—The accused was arrested at his house. On his way to the Police Station he informed the Police Officer that he would produce the clothes of the deceased. The Police Officer stated that the accused had also confessed his guilt and then he had also said that he had placed the clothes in a pit above a brick-kiln. Held, that the statement that the accused had confessed his guilt was not admissible but the other statement that he had placed the clothes in a pit, was admissible. As however the statement of the Police Officer on this point was not supported by any other witnesses, probably because no questions were put to the witnesses about it, the statement could not be said to have been proved in the case and must be ignored: A.I.R. 1955 All. 443: 1956 All.L.J. 468.

If an accused tells a Police Officer that the ornaments which the deceased was wearing and which had been taken off his body are in his house and that he would recover them, that portion of the statement which relates to the taking off the ornaments from the body of the deceased is inadmissible in evidence under Ss. 25 and 26 of the Evidence Act as it amounts to a confession made to a Police Officer while the accused is in Police custody. The portion of the statement that he could recover the ornaments from his house is relevant under S. 27 of the Act: 1951 Raj.L.W. 74: A.I.R. 1952 Raj. 20.

Where no recovery could be effected pursuant to the confession made by the accused, held, the confession became inadmissible in view of S. 25 and S. 27 also became inapplicable as no fact was proved to have been discovered in consequence of the information received from the accused: A.I.R. 1971 Tripura 16: 1971 Cr.L.J. 407.

Once a fact is discovered from other sources there can be no fresh discovery even if the relevant information is extracted from the accused. Where from the evidence of the photographer who was taken by the Police at the spot where the dead body was lying, it was clear that he was engaged by the Police to take photograph of a skeleton which means that the Police already knew that the dead body was a skeleton and there was nothing in the statement of the accused, recorded at the Police Station before the alleged recovery, that the accused knew that the dead body had become a skeleton, held, the irresistable conclusion was that the Police had already seen that dead body and that it had become a skeleton and, hence, subsequent statement of the photographer that accused had taken them to the place where the dead body was lying was prima facie, of no consequence and, thus, said information could not be relied on for proving the guilt of the accused: 1990 Cr.L.J. 77 (All.) (D.B.).

Ss. 25 and 27—Theft case—Disposal of stolen property—Confessional statement of accused leading to recovery of sale-proceeds of stolen property—Accused acquitted but not claiming money to be his—Order of confiscation—Legality—Confessional statement admissible in proceedings under S. 517—S. 162 or S. 25, Evidence Act is no bar to its admissibility: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 805: A.I.R. 1965 Raj. 238.

The accused after his arrest and recovery of stolen property from him pointed out the place from where the article recovered from him were stolen.

Held, that this amounted to a confession without leading to any new discovery and therefore, was inadmissible in evidence: (1956) 58 Punj.L.R. 320: (S) A.I.R. 1956 Punj. 224.

Where property is recovered on being pointed out by the accused in the presence of respectable witnesses of the neighbourhood and the recovery memo. is properly prepared, the memo. and evidence of attesting witnesses form materials for the Court to arrive at a conclusion as to the genuineness or otherwise of the alleged recovery. Discovery of property on information received from the accused and that on being pointed out by him fall equally under the exception in S. 27 and therefore, escape the mischief of S. 25, Evidence Act and S. 162, Cr.P.Code. But where there is no corroborative evidence of the imparting of information by the accused, the Court has no material to arrive at a correct decision as to the truth of the information alleged to be conveyed. Where property was alleged to be recovered on the information of the accused and the Police Officer proceeded to hold himself identification proceedings as regards such property, such proceedings do not come under the exception contained in S. 27 and hence oral and documentary evidence relating to such proceedings is barred by S. 25, Evidence Act and S. 162, Cr.P.Code: A.I.R. 1952 Him.Pra. 68: 1952 Cr.L.J. 1495.

Where persons accused of an offence under S. 411, I.P.Code made a confession during the course of the investigation of a case of theft that they had taken part in the theft and promised to deliver the loot and subsequently handed over to the Police some of the stolen articles and also the sale proceeds of some others, on a question whether the confession would be admissible in evidence, held, the confession would not be admissible in evidence in view of Ss. 25 and 27 of the Evidence Act for the statement could not be said to have been responsible for the alleged discoveries, the reason being that the articles were produced by the accused themselves. There was no discovery in consequence of the information. Even if it is assumed to amount to discovery within the meaning of S. 27 of the Evidence Act, the information that the accused were responsible for the theft or the other statements, does not constitute the cause of which the effect was the discovery: 1950 All.L.J. 738. Where a prosecution witness while referring to the information given by the accused leading to the recovery of a rifle, also stated that the accused had told him in the presence of the Investigating Officer that he (the accused) would point out the rifle, held, that the latter part of the information amounted to a confession and was inadmissible in evidence: 1957 M.L.J. (Cr.) 805: A.I.R. 1958 Mys. 1.

On a joint trial of four accused, before an accused is convicted on the basis of confession made by them, there must be evidence on the record which leads one to conclude that it was the particular accused who made the crucial statement or that it was he who was responsible for the discovery of the relevant facts: (1942) 55 Mad.L.W. 355: A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 532 (1).

6. "Accused of any offence".—[See also S. 24, Note 4, supra; S. 27, Note 8, infra]. The expression "accused of any offence" in S. 25 would cover the case of an accused who has since been put on trial, whether or not at the time when he made the confessional statement, he was under or in custody as an accused in that case or not: (1994) 1 An.L.T. (Cr.) 695 (S.C.).

An information given by a person who ultimately becomes an accused, containing a confession of his own guilt amounts to 'confession' within the meaning of S. 25. The terms of S. 25 cover a confession made by the accused when he was free and not in Police custody, as also a confession made before the investigation began. The expression 'accused of any offence' in S. 25 covers a person accused of an offence at the trial, whether or not he was accused of the offence when he made the confession. [1966 Mah.L.J. 113 (S.C.): A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 119 and (1934) 36 Bom.L.R. 1117, Foll.]: 1978 Mah.L.J. 244: 1978 Cr.L.J. 891 (D.B.). See also 1977 B.B.C.J. 389.

S. 25 applies to a case where a confessional statement is made by a person who was not an accused person at the time of making the statement but is being tried subsequently. The section does not set out anything regarding the state of the person who is making the confession. The section merely means that when an accused person is being tried, a confession, which he on a previous occasion, made to a Police Officer, cannot be proved against him. It is not specified that the accused person must have been an accused person at the time of making the statement, nor need he have been in Police custody: I.L.R. (1961) 1 Punj. 33: (1962) 1 Cr.L.J. 186: A.I.R. 1962 Punj. 70.

The test which has to be applied in deciding whether S. 25 applies, is the position of the person at the time when it is proposed to prove the admission, not his position at the time when he is alleged to have made it: 13 Cr.L.J. 465: 15 I.C. 305; 11 Mys.L.J. 438.

A confession therefore made to a Police Officer by a person when he is not accused of any offence is inadmissible in evidence against him when he is accused of an offence. A confession made by an accused to a Police Officer might be admissible in favour of a co-accused but not against him: 15 I.C. 305. The statements of approver to a Police Inspector being really confessions, are inadmissible: I.L.R. 35 Mad. 247: 22 M.L.J. 490 (S.B.). See also 15 Cr.L.J. 474: 24 I.C. 562; 15 I.C. 305.

A person arrested by an Officer of the Railway Protection Force under S. 6 of the Railway Property (Unlawful Possession) Act, 1966 for the alleged commission of an offence under S. 3 of that Act, is not a "person accused of an offence" within the meaning of Art. 20(3) of the Constitution: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 379: 1980 Cr.L.J. 1424: (1980) 4 S.C.C. 600; (1988) 1 Ker.L.J. 235: 1989 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 110.

Where a stranger to whom extra-judicial confession was made reduced it to writing and sent the same to Police, held, when it contained the facts as given by the accused himself and was made by the accused at a time when no case had been registered against him, it was admissible: 1973 Sim.L.J. 195 (D.B.).

7. Miscellaneous.—Where in a proceeding under S. 3(2) of the National Security Act, preventive action only is sought to be taken, without deciding the guilt, held, confession made to the Police could certainly be relied upon by the detaining authority: (1988) 1 Crimes 969 (All.).

Guidelines for recording confession under the Terrorist and Disruptive Activities (Prevention) Act, 1987. See 1994 Cr.L.J. 3139 (S.C.).

Confessional statement made by a proposed detenu can be considered by the detaining authority for passing an order of his detention under the Tamil Nadu Prevention of Dangerous Activities of Bootleggers, Drug-offenders, Goondas, Immoral Traffic Offenders and Slum Grabbers Act, 1982 but the weight to be attached to it is for the said authority to decide. [1985 Cr.L.J. 1115: 1984 Mad.L.W. (Cr.) 182, Overruled]: A.I.R. 1986 Mad. 318; (1986) 1 Crimes 47 (Mad.).

Where the accused had made and signed a confession of having stolen and concealed the Railway property before an officer of the Railway Protection Force and did not either explain in his statement before the Court or cross-examine the officer that the confession was procured from him under threat or inducement, held, the confession was voluntary.

26. Confession by accused while in custody of police not to be proved against him.—No confession made by any person whilst he is in the custody of a police officer, unless it be made in the immediate presence of a Magistrate[1], shall be proved as against such person.

[2][Explanation.—In this section "Magistrate" does not include the head of a village discharging magisterial functions in the Presidency of Fort St. George [3][* * *] or elsewhere, unless such headman is a Magistrate exercising the powers of a Magistrate under the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1882[4] (10 of 1882)].

Where the accused had merely stated in his 'confessions', judicial and extra-judicial, that he was brandishing his dao at the deceased, which is no confession, and is also contradicted by the accused's statement under S. 313 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and there was no dying declaration and other evidence of homicidal death, held, the prosecution having failed to prove beyond reasonable doubt that the accused exceeded the right of private defence, conviction could not be sustained: 1993 Cr.L.J. 3742 (Gau.) 1. Scope and applicability.—The phraseology employed by S. 25 and S. 26 contains negative and positive injunctions with regard to the confessions by accused person and is indicative as to when and against whom such evidence is admissible or is not admissible: 1979 Bom.C.R. 680 (D.B.).

The Miranda [(1966) 384 U.S. 436] exclusionary rule that custodial interrogations are inherently coercive is reflected in S. 26, though the section confines it to confessions which have a narrower concept than self-crimination. [(1978) 45 Cut.L.T. 253, Reversed]: A.I.R. 1978 S.C. 1025: 1978 Cr.L.J. 968: (1978) 2 S.C.C. 424.

To render a confession or admission admissible, the prosecution must prove affirmatively that no inducement relating to the charge or accusation was held out to the accused to make it. A confession or admission must be excluded if it is made (i) in consequence of (ii) any inducement (iii) of a temporal character (iv) connected with the accusation or relating to the charge (v) held out to the accused by a person having some authority over the subject-matter of the charge or accusation. The words, "I need to take a statement from you", or even words covering a suggestion that a man will have to come to the Police Station because the Police need to take statement from him when he gets there, is not an inducement in any way relating to the charge or accusation. An oral admission made by the accused, in response to the suggestion is admissible against the accused: (1957) 3 All E.R. 623.

The bar of inadmissibility under S. 162 of the Code of Criminal Procedure operates not only on statements of witnesses but also on those of the accused made to Police Officer: A.I.R. 1972 S.C. 1331: 1972 Pat.L.J.R. 263: 1972 Cr.L.J. 860.

All confessions are inculpatory admissions on the part of the maker thereof. To be a confession, admission should contain an acknowledgment of the guilt. Therefore, all confessions are admissions, but every admission may not be a confession: 1979 Bom.C.R. 680 (D.B.).

A confession though made in the presence of a Magistrate is of very little value, when the accused is not aware of his presence: 22 I.C. 150: 15 Cr.L.J. 6. See also 31 Sind L.R. 460: A.I.R. 1937 Sind 212.

Where a Magistrate simply accompanies a Police Officer while the Police Officer is making the investigation, the evidence of the Magistrate as to what happened is not admissible under S. 26: 34 Cr.L.J. 754: A.I.R. 1933 All. 394.

A confession made in the presence of a Magistrate though on leave, is nevertheless relevant and admissible: 22 I.C. 150.

A confession made by an accused to a Magistrate on leave in the presence of a Police Officer who had the accused under arrest at the time is not admissible in evidence, where no record was made of his statement under S. 164 of the Cr.P.Code: 118 I.C. 46: A.I.R. 1929 All. 855.

On the plain language of S. 26, the confession made in the presence of a Magistrate does not become inadmissible for the mere reason that the accused had been in the custody of the armed constable. Ordinarily, a Magistrate should not keep the accused in charge of the armed Policemen unless for reasons to be recorded he is satisfied that there was risk and danger to the life. No hard and fast rule can, however, be laid down. As far as possible the accused should be kept in charge of Magistrate's own staff: 32 Cut.L.T. 1170: I.L.R. (1966) Cut. 635.

Magistrate recording confession observing requisite formalities—Mere fact that record does not show that he told accused that he was Magistrate is immaterial: (1964) 1 Cr.L.J. 680: A.I.R. 1964 Ori. 144.

Where the learned Magistrate had taken all necessary precautions to ensure that the accused had sufficient time to reflect before he made his confessional statement and that he was under no fear or threat or allurement before appearing in the Court to make the statement and the various questions put by the learned Magistrate to him indicated that he had taken all reasonable precautions to remove any trace of fear from the accused before he made the confessional statement, held, such a judicial confession could very well be relied on: (1994) 1 An.L.T. (Cr.) 695 (S.C.).

A Police Officer while giving evidence should not be allowed to state that an admission of guilt was made by the accused: 13 I.C. 783: (1911-12) 16 Cal.W.N. 238: I.L.R. 15 Cal. 595 (607). See also I.L.R. 19 Bom. 363.

An accused's confession to some person other than a Police Officer is admissible in evidence: 26 I.C. 654 (as) at coroner's inquest: I.L.R. 50 Bom. 111: A.I.R. 1926 Bom. 151. Admissions of facts which are not of an incriminating nature are admissible in evidence: (1903) 5 Bom.L.R. 321. Actual arrest and detention are not necessary: I.L.R. 1 Rang. 609: 77 I.C. 429: A.I.R. 1924 Rang. 173. Statement made by accused to the Police in ignorance of the complaint filed against him is admissible under Ss. 25 and 26 as the accused was not in Police custody nor was he aware of the complaint against him and the statement could be used as an admission under S. 18 and to use the statement was not contrary to S. 162 of the Cr.P.Code: 9 Pat.L.T. 449: A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 473.

The accused was in the Police lock-up for three days and was subsequently brought out temporarily, and taken to the house of the Superintendent of Post Offices. The accused made a confession before this Officer and was subsequently taken back to the Police lock-up. Held, that the confession was inadmissible in evidence as the separation of the accused from the Police was only temporary: 108 I.C. 398: A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 282.

S. 26 is not inapplicable in cases where the arrest by the Police Officer of person making the confession is illegal. Whether the arrest is legal or illegal the mischief which the section is intended to avert remains all the same, and a confession made by the arrested persons while in the custody of the Police Officer is inadmissible under S. 26. The illegality of the arrest does not affect the operation of S. 26: I.L.R. 17 Pat. 369: A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 308.

Where an accused person makes a statement in the presence of the Police and another person, the question whether that statement was made to the other person or to the Police is a question of fact and not of law. Even if it is an extra-judicial confession, it would be excluded by S. 26 if the accused is in custody and no Magistrate is present: (1945-46) 50 Cal.W.N. 88: A.I.R. 1946 Cal. 452.

A statement of the accused, charged with murder, identifying the body discovered as that of the deceased in the presence of a Magistrate and Police officials does not come under S. 26. The statement does not amount to a confession of a crime. Further S. 26 is expressly not applicable, when the statement is made, in the immediate presence of a Magistrate, even though the person making it might be in Police custody: 1960 Cr.L.J. 1344: A.I.R. 1960 Mad. 462.

Where the Police Officer produced the accused—a railway employee, before the Railway Emergency Officer for recording confession which was recorded in the Police Station in the presence of Executive Magistrate and he was thereafter taken back in Police custody and the accused who had earlier been suspended was taken back on duty after statement, held, it was inadmissible under S. 26: 1976 Mah.L.J. (Notes) 87.

It cannot be said that an under-trial prisoner was in Police custody while being taken from the jail to the Magistrate, unless it can be further shown that the escorting Police Officer was in any way connected with the investigation of the case or that he was directly under the supervision of the investigating Police Officer, as otherwise no confession can possibly be held to be free from Police influence, because it will be unreasonable to expect any person other than a Police Officer to escort such under-trial prisoners. Moreover the long interval such as of two days during which the accused was kept in jail custody, is sufficient to remove all Police influence, if any. Where the Magistrate also put several questions to the accused with a view to ascertain whether the confession was made voluntarily including the question as to why he wanted to make a confession, and the accused, like a typical Khond, replied frankly that as he had committed a crime for the sake of land he should not deny his guilt.

Held, that the confession was made voluntarily and not under duress: (1963) 5 Ori.J.D. 145: (1964) 1 Cr.L.J. 464.

A confession while in Police custody is of little value: 10 Punj. Re. 1914 (Cr.): 25 I.C. 825. See also 12 W.R. (Cr.) 82.

Confession made when in Police custody—Admissibility: A.I.R. 1957 Him. Pra. 52: 1957 Cr.L.J. 1254.

Confession of accused in Police custody: 1959 Cr.L.J. 940: A.I.R. 1959 All. 518.

Evidence to prove a confession made while an accused person is in Police custody, is inadmissible: 22 I.C. 150: 15 Cr.L.J. 6. See also I.L.R. 22 Bom. 235; A.I.R. 1929 Nag. 350. In 7 W.R. (Cr.) 56, evidence of Policeman who overheard a prisoner's statement made in another room to another held admissible. But see also I.L.R. 20 Bom. 165: 39 I.C. 977: (1916-17) 21 Cal.W.N. 694.

Accused kept in remand for fifteen days—Then, after keeping in jail custody for three days, produced before Magistrate for recording confession—After preliminary questioning and a warning accused sent back to jail—Confession recorded on next day, held, was voluntary—Accused had spent four days in judicial custody and he was not under influence of investigating agency for at least four days: A.I.R. 1970 S.C. 283.

Accused in Police custody for 10 days, before being sent to jail custody — Confession in jail — Prolonged detention in Police custody unless satisfactorily explained is a circumstance strongly mitigating against voluntariness of confession — Prolonged detention held satisfactorily explained and the confession held was voluntary: 1970 Cr.L.J. 603 (All.).

Accused charged with bribery — Trap party recovering the currency notes in question—Recovery memo. signed by the accused amounts to a confession by the accused while in Police custody in view of presumption under S. 4, Prevention of Corruption Act — Memo. cannot form the basis for conviction — However, it can be considered to test the regularity and propriety of the recovery proceedings—(Penal Code, 1860, S. 161)—(Cr.P.Code, 1898, S. 162): 1968 Cr.L.J. 391.

Confession — Voluntariness. See Cr.P. Code, 1898, S. 164: A.I.R. 1958 Ker. 207: 1958 Cr.L.J. 1021: 1958 M. L.J. (Cr.) 481.

For a confessional statement to be admissible and to be used against an accused, it must be proved to be voluntary. The voluntary nature of the evidence can be judged from the internal evidence of the document itself and also from the evidence of the Magistrate recording the confession: 1977 Cr.L.J. 296 (Gau.) (D.B.).

Where the accused who had surrendered in Court and had been granted bail was subsequently brought to Court in custody for the purpose of recording of confessional statement, held, such a confessional statement was unreliable as it would be deemed to have been made under coercion: 1994 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 428 (All.) (D.B.).

A judicial confession can be taken into consideration only when it is voluntary and true: (1986) 1 Crimes 716 (Ori.).

Where to the question put by the Magistrate as to why the accused decided to make the statement, the accused replied that he wanted to speak out the truth, held, the accused's confessional statement recorded under S. 164, Cr.P.Code, was really voluntary and free from Police influence: 1991 Cr.L.J. 3248 (Ori.) (D.B.).

Voluntary character of confession. See Cr.P.Code, 1898, S. 164: A.I.R. 1957 Madh. Bh. 72: 1957 Cr. L.J. 199.

Accused under surveillance of Police constable—Extra-judicial confession—Confession also retracted—Confession held was hit by S. 26: 34 Cut.L.T. 141: 1968 Cr.L.J. 765: A.I.R. 1968 Ori. 97.

When confession was made to villagers at large, held, the mere fact that a Policeman happened to be member of the crowd, would not render it inadmissible: 1979 M.P.L.J. 599; 1983 Cr.L.J. 1559: (1982-83) 87 Cal.W.N. 723: (1983) 2 Cal.H.N. 26: (1983) 2 Crimes 499.

The mere fact that the Court constable was allowed to remain present while the co-accused were making their confessions before the Magistrate does not involve the total exclusion of the confessions from evidence, but it certainly detracts from their evidentiary value: 14 Pat.L.T. 111: A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 586. See also 165 I.C. 319: A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 455.

Oral confession.—A confession to be admissible in evidence need not be recorded. It may be oral, and may be proved by the Magistrate to whom the oral confession was made: 45 I.C. 843: 11 P. R. 1918 (Cr.); (1932) 34 Punj.L.R. 896: A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 513; I.L.R. 56 All. 730: A.I.R. 1934 All. 351. See also A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 998; 10 O.W.N. 923: A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 423.

Plea of guilty by undefended accused enfeebled by illness.—A plea of guilty can be allowed to be withdrawn if the accused was at the time of making it, enfeebled by illness and was undefended: 28 I.C. 145: 16 Cr.L.J. 257.

Confession—Admissibility of, against co-accused.—A confession by an accused is not admissible against co-accused under S. 30, if the former is convicted on his plea of guilty: 28 I.C. 145: 16 Cr.L.J. 257; 159 I.C. 875: A.I.R. 1936 Oudh 156. A confession of an accused recorded outside British India by a Magistrate is not excluded by S. 26: 69 I.C. 257: 17 Nag.L.R. 113. As to confession not recorded under S. 164, Cr.P.Code, but recorded under S. 339(2), Cr.P.Code, before tender of pardon, see I.L.R. (1943) Kar. 285: A.I.R. 1943 Sind 166.

Two accused charged with murder—One of them admitting to be joint participant facilitating murder by the other—Explanation that he was threatened with death by other accused, held, did not exonerate him: 31 Cut.L.T. 17: (1964) 1 Cr.L.J. 680: A.I.R. 1964 Ori. 144.

Where the accused was neither named in the F.I.R. nor named by any witness nor any property was recovered from his possession, held, he could not be proceeded against merely on the basis of statement of co-accused made to Police; that being a confession made to Police, it will not be admissible under Ss. 25 and 26: 1993 Cr.L.J. 1499 (Madh. Pra.).

2. Section 26 vis-a-vis section 27.—S. 26 is the main section which lays down the general rule. S. 27 lays down an exception to the rule enunciated in S. 26 and insists upon certain conditions being fulfilled before the application of S. 27 is attracted. The statement must be made by a person already in the custody of the Police Officer, and the provable part of the information, whether amounting to confession or not, must relate distinctly to the fact thereby discovered. The actual discovery of a thing in consequence of the information is considered to be a guarantee of the truth of the information and of the fact of its communication to the Police: (1956-57) 61 Cal.W.N. 483: A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 372: 1957 Cr.L.J. 707. See also A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 483: 1976 Cr.L.J. 481: (1976) 1 S.C.C. 828.

S. 27 is in the nature of a proviso to S. 26 which interdicts the provision of confessional statements made by a person in custody of the Police. S. 27 partially removes the ban placed on the reception of confessional statements under S. 26. But the removal of the ban is not of such an extent as to absolutely undo the object of S. 26. So much of the statement made by a person accused of an offence and in custody of a Police Officer, whether it is confessional or not, as relates distinctly to the fact discovered is proveable.

Held, that the evidence in regard to the discovery of the key as well as the box which the accused handed over to the Police was admissible in evidence under S. 27. The confession lay in the fact that with key the shop of the complainant was opened and, therefore, that portion was inadmissible in evidence and only that portion which distinctly related to the fact discovered, i.e., the finding of the key was admissible. Similarly, the recovery of the box was proveable because there was no statement of the confessional nature in the recovery memo. relating to it: I.L.R. (1962) 2 All. 522: A.I.R. 1962 S.C. 1116: 1963 M.L.J. (Cr.) 209: (1962) 2 S.C.R. (Supp.) 830.

Where in consequence of the disclosure statement made by the accused no incriminating article was recovered, held, the statement would not be protected under S. 27 and being in the nature of confession to the Police, it would be hit by Ss. 25 and 26 and as such would be inadmissible in evidence: 1985 Cr.L.J. 1700 (Del.).

Recovery of articles in consequence of statement made by accused, under S. 27—Witness to recovery memo. not of locality—His evidence cannot be rejected on this ground—Provisions of S. 103, Cr.P.Code, are not applicable to recoveries made under S. 27—They are confined only to search made under Chap. VII of Code—Even under S. 103 stress is on word 'respectable' and not on word 'locality': 1967 Cur.L.J. 682: (1967) 69 Punj.L.R. 935.

Onus—Two statements by accused about place of concealment—Second statement relied on by prosecution—Prosecution to prove that the recovery is in pursuance of second statement and not the first: 1968 Cr.L.J. 372: A.I.R. 1968 Punj. 120.

Statements and reports prepared outside the Court cannot by themselves be accepted as primary or substantive evidence of the facts stated therein. S. 159 then permits a witness, while under examination, to refresh his memory by referring to any writing made by himself at the time of the transaction concerning which he is questioned, or so soon afterwards that the Court considers it likely that the transaction was at that time fresh in the memory. Again, with the permission of the Court, the witness may refresh his memory by referring to a copy of such document. And the witness may even refer to any such writing made by any other person but which was read by him at the time the transaction was fresh in his memory and when he read it he knew it to be correct. S. 160 then provides for cases where the witness has no independent recollection say, from lapse of memory, of the transaction to which he wants to testify by looking at the document and states that although he has no such recollection he is sure that the contents of the document were correctly recorded at the time they were. Where a case of this character arises and the document itself has been tendered in evidence, the document becomes primary evidence in the case.

The fundamental distinction between the two sections is that while under S. 159 it is the witness's memory or recollection which is evidence, the document itself not having been tendered in evidence, under S. 160, it is the document which is evidence of the facts contained in it. However, in order to bring a case under S. 160, though the witness should ordinarily affirm on oath that he does not recollect the facts mentioned in the document, the mere omission to say so will not make the document inadmissible provided the witness swears that he is sure that the facts are correctly recorded in the document itself. S. 160 of the Act applies equally when the witness states in so many words that he has no independent recollection of the precise words used, or when it should stand established beyond doubt that should be so as a matter of natural and necessary conclusion from the surrounding circumstances.

Normally, a Police Officer should reproduce the contents of the statement made by the accused under S. 27 of the Evidence Act in Court by refreshing his memory under S. 159 of the Evidence Act from the memo. earlier prepared thereof by him at the time the statement had been made to him or in his presence and which was recorded at the same time or soon after the making of it. Where the Police Officer swears that he does not remember the exact words used by the accused from lapse of time or a like cause or even where he does not positively say so but it is reasonably established from the surrounding circumstances, that it could hardly be expected in the natural course of human conduct that he could or would have a precise of dependable recollection of the same, then under S. 160 of the Evidence Act, it would be open to the witness to rely on the document itself and swear that contents thereof are correct: 1965 Raj.L.W. 418: I.L.R. (1965) 15 Raj. 989: 1965 Cr.L.J. 441: A.I.R. 1966 Raj. 74. See also I.L.R. (1966) Guj. 134.

Statement made in Police custody and before Magistrate is not admissible either against him or against a person jointly tried with him, unless it has led to discovery of any fact mentioned in S. 27: 28 I.C. 145: 16 Cr.L.J. 257.

3. Police custody—What amounts to.— [See also S. 27, Note 14, infra].What S. 26 contemplates is not the arrest of an accused but his being in 'custody' of a Police Officer when the confession is made. To go to the 'custody' of a Police Officer it is not necessary that he should be formally arrested. 'Police custody' commences from the moment when his movements are restricted and he is kept in some sort of direct or indirect Police surveillance: (1990) 4 Karn.L.J. 46: I.L.R. (1991) Karn. 615 (D.B.).

Custody contemplated by S. 26 does not necessarily mean a formal arrest and what is necessary is that at the time of making the confession the accused should be in the hands of a Police Officer, i.e., not free to depart at his own free will: A.I.R. 1957 Tripura 48: 1957 Cr.L.J. 1457.

Even if a confession is admissible in evidence, the Court has still to decide whether or not it is truthful. The Court should also satisfy itself whether or not the accused was a free man when he made the confession. The test is not whether he had formally been arrested; the Police custody in the real sense commences when the accused's movements are restricted or controlled by direct or indirect Police surveillance; and the Court has to take an overall comprehensive view as to the circumstances occurring before and after the confession: 1982 Cr.L.J. 2102 (Ker.).

There is a distinction between custody and arrest. 'Custody' is not always formal and includes any sort of surveillance or restraint by Police. A person, called to the Police Station to be interrogated as an accused in investigation of a crime, must be deemed to be in Police custody as his formal arrest is not then necessary. Thus, if the accused, after interrogation, is allowed to go home and formally arrested thereafter, his statements during interrogation leading to discovery are admissible under S. 27; obviously after he made such statements, he must have been under Police eye throughout. [A.I.R. 1954 All. 687; A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 620; A.I.R. 1948 All. 7 and 1968 C.L.R. 268 (S.C.), Foll.]: 1974 M.P.L.J. 429 (D.B.).

'Police custody' for the purpose of S. 26 does not commence only when the accused is formally arrested but would commence from the moment when his movements are restricted and he is kept in some sort of direct or indirect Police surveillance. As soon as an accused or suspected person comes into the hand of a Police Officer, he is, in the absence of any clear and unmistakable evidence to the contrary, no longer at liberty and is, therefore, in 'custody' within the meaning of Ss. 26 and 27 of the Evidence Act. Even indirect control over the movements of suspects by the Police would amount to 'Police custody' within the meaning of S. 26. S. 46 of the Code of Criminal Procedure does not contemplate any formality before a person can be said to be taken in custody, submission to the custody by word of mouth or action by a person is sufficient. A person directly giving a Police Officer by word of mouth information which may be used as evidence against him may be deemed to have submitted himself to the custody of the Police Officer within the meaning of S. 27. Once the Police custody has commenced, the mere fact that, for a temporary period, the Police discreetly withdraws from the scene and leaves the accused in charge of some other person will not render the confession of the accused before that person admissible.

The accused had been interrogated by a Police Officer and was brought in a Police van the next day to the residence of the person before whom he made an extra-judicial confession. Although the regular Police Officers went away after leaving the accused with that person, some other persons, who had come in the Police van, were left there. After the accused made the confession, the Police Officer came there the next day and formally arrested him.

Held, that the accused was in Police custody for the purpose of S. 26, from the date of his interrogation by the Police Officer and that he continued to be in custody when he was brought and left at the residence of the person to whom he made the confession, as there was indirect control and surveillance over his movements by the Police which continued till the next day when he was formally put under arrest and the confession was inadmissible in evidence under S. 26: (1963) 5 Ori. J.D. 372: (1964) 1 Cr.L.J. 680: 31 Cut.L.T. 17: A.I.R. 1964 Ori. 144.

Where a person goes to a Police Officer and makes a statement which shows that an offence has been committed by him, he accuses himself and though he is formally not arrested since he is not free to move wherever he likes after disclosure of the information to the Police, he must be deemed to be in custody of the Police. The fact that the accused was interrogated and that he made a statement and led the panchas and the Police Officer to a field and thereafter produced certain articles which were the subject-matter of dacoity was sufficient to establish that there was submission on his part to Police custody. The word 'custody' in S. 26 or S. 27, does not mean formal custody but includes such state of affairs in which the accused can be said to have come into the hands of a Police Officer or can be said to have been under some sort of surveillance or restriction. Thus, the 'Police custody' is deemed to extend even when the accused was deemed to have submitted to such custody of a Police Officer by submitting to the interrogation and by making statements about discovery and who could not thereafter be said to be a free man: I.L.R. (1964) Guj. 954: (1965) 1 Cr.L.J. 30: (1965) 6 Guj. L.R. 129: A.I.R. 1965 Guj. 5.

It is possible without even a formal arrest being made, for a person to be in the custody if a restraint has been placed upon his movement by the Police. [A.I.R. 1954 All. 633, Rel. on]: 1957 Cr.L.J. 1086: A.I.R. 1957 Andh. Pra. 729.

The custody of a Police Officer for purposes of S. 26 is not mere physical custody. A person may be in the custody of a Police Officer, though the latter may not be physically in possession of the person of the accused making the confession. Once an accused person is arrested by a Police Officer and is in his custody, the mere fact that for some purpose or other the Police Officer happens to be temporarily absent and during such absence leaves the accused in charge of a private individual does not terminate the custody of the Police Officer. The accused must be deemed to be still in the custody of the Police Officer: I.L.R. 17 Pat. 369: 19 Pat.L.T. 268: A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 308; A.I.R. 1941 Pesh. 22.

Doubtless the Chowkidar is a Police Officer for purposes of S. 26. Where the Chowkidar convened the meeting of the Panch, he himself was present in the meeting and questioned the accused persons about the occurrence and the extra-judicial confessions are made by way of replies to his questions, it is advisable to exclude the extra-judicial confession. S. 26 does not contemplate a formal custody; it may as well include a case where the accused were under some sort of surveillance or restriction when the village Chowkidar was himself present and questioned them about their guilt: I.L.R. (1962) Cut. 366: (1964) 2 Cr.L.J. 487.

A statement made by the accused at the dock before the Magistrate, if it amounts to a clear confession, is certainly admissible in evidence against the accused; its value is not discounted by the fact that the accused was at that time in the custody of the Police: 1930 Mad.W.N. 1249.

Where the handcuffed accused brought at the out-post made a statement to the Police that he had killed the deceased, held, being a confession made while in Police custody, it is not admissible: 1981 Cr.L.J. 1734 (Gau.).

The accused who was in the lock-up of the Magistrate was sent up by the Magistrate to a hospital for treatment with two Policemen in charge. The latter waited outside in the verandah. During his examination inside the dispensary by the Doctor, the accused made a confession within the hearing of the Doctor. Held, that it was excluded by S. 26: I.L.R. 42 Bom. 1: (1908) 10 Bom.L.R. 683. See also 1939 All.L.J. 732: 91 I.C. 806; A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 557; A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 209: (1937) 1 M.L.J. 154; I.L.R. (1940) Nag. 679: 1940 Nag.L.J. 623; A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 380; A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 200. See also A.I.R. 1941 Pesh. 22 (Confession to Doctor while in Police custody, but not in presence of Police Officer, is admissible).

Accused examined by Doctor on requisition from Police and actually brought to Doctor by Police—Confession to Doctor—Confession cannot be acted upon as accused must be presumed to be in Police custody: (1964) 2 M.L.J. 204.

An admission of a fact however incriminating, but not by itself establishing the guilt of the maker of such admission, would not amount to confession within the meaning of Ss. 24 to 26. Thus, statement made by the accused to the Doctor where he was taken by the Police after arrest that it was the deceased who had caused the injury to him, held, it was an admission of a fact, no doubt of an incriminating fact, and which established the accused's presence in the deceased's room but which clearly was not barred under S. 26.

Statements made by the accused to the Daroga showing the place in the jungle where the occurrence in question, viz., taking away a female and having sexual intercourse with her took place, cannot be admitted in evidence, they being in the nature of a confession made to a Police Officer while in custody, S. 27 has no application and would make the statements admissible: 143 I.C. 797: A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 146. As to meaning of 'in custody', see 77 I.C. 429: A.I.R. 1924 Rang. 173.

Where the accused in judicial lock-up made a confession to fellow prisoners, the Policeman whose duty was to guard the lock-up was present, held, that his presence did not make the confession inadmissible as accused was in magisterial custody as opposed to Police custody: 151 I.C. 894: A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 75.

Where 30 minutes after recording his confession, the Police formally arrested the accused, held, the accused was in constructive Police custody when his statement was recorded; his confession was hit by S. 27. [1960 Cr.L.J. 1504 (S.C.) and (1947) 48 Cr.L.J. 939 (All.) and 1966 Cr.L.J. 100 (S.C.), Foll.]: 1976 Cr.L.J. 1652: 1976 Raj.L.W. 251 (D.B.).

Where the accused came to his in-laws house and informed his father-in-law, a Police Patel, that he had committed the alleged crime and he was immediately taken in custody by father-in-law, held, the alleged judicial confession made to his wife thereafter would clearly be treated to have been made while in Police custody: 1980 Cr.L.R. 154 (Guj.).

Where the prosecution version was that the Investigation Officer and the Village Pradhan had apprehended the accused from his village, got him identified by other prosecution witnesses as the person last seen with the deceased, whereafter, the Investigating Officer went away for further investigation, leaving the accused with the Pradhan before whom the accused made the confession; and it was then that the accused made an extra-judicial confession to the Pradhan, held, it is incredible that the Investigating Officer would leave the accused without taking him into custody; obviously, the Investigating Officer had manipulated this artificial scenario to procure the extra-judicial confession; he could have very well taken the accused to a Judicial Magistrate and get the confession recorded under S. 164 of the Code of Criminal Procedure; that would have greater probative value and an unerring assurance of its truth to the Court. The 'extra-judicial' confession was hit by S. 26 as the accused was in Police custody: A.I.R. 1990 S.C. 2140: 1990 Cr.L.J. 2289: (1991) 1 S.C.C. 286.

A person arrested by an Officer of the Railway Protection Force under S. 6 of the Railway Property (Unlawful Possession) Act, 1966 for the alleged commission of an offence under S. 3 of that Act, is not a "person accused of an offence" within the meaning of Art. 20(3) of the Constitution: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 379: 1980 Cr.L.J. 1424: (1980) 4 S.C.C. 600: (1981) 1 S.C.R. 175.

4. 'Police Officer'—Who is.—[See also S. 25, Note 4, supra].Police Officers referred to in S. 26 need not be Investigating Police Officers: I.L.R. 42 Bom. 1: (1917) 19 Bom.L.R. 683. S. 26 has always been taken to apply to confessions made to some person other than a Police Officer: I.L.R. (1940) Lah. 242: 188 I.C. 498: A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 129 (F.B.).

Confessional statement to dafadar after arrest not admissible. See 21 Pat.L.T. 171: A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 110. A confession to a Police Patel is inadmissible: 31 I.C. 340 (2): (1915) 17 Bom.L.R. 898.

Police Officers in Native States are Police Officers under section: I.L.R. 22 Bom. 235. See also I.L.R. 20 Bom. 795 and other cases cited under S. 25.

Jailor is not Police Officer: I.L.R. 20 Bom. 795. 'Police Officer' includes a Chowkidar: A.I.R. 1943 Cal. 612. Where the accused was in the custody of the village chaukidar when he admitted his guilt before certain villagers, held, that the confession was not admissible in evidence: I.L.R. 8 Luck. 410: A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 192; 11 O.W.N. 119: A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 19.

The Customs Officers who are empowered under S. 53 of the Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985 to be

Police Station Officers are not Police Officers and any confessions made before them are admissible in evidence under S. 17 and the same is not hit by Ss. 25 and 26: 1993 Cr.L.J. 1310 (Pat.).

A person against whom an enquiry under S. 107 or S. 108 of the Customs Act, 1962 is held is not an accused nor is the Officer holding the enquiry a Police Officer; a confession made by such a person before the Customs Officer is admissible and not hit either by S. 25 or S. 26. But if such confession is shown to have been obtained by inducement, threat, coercion or duress or extracted during his illegal and prolonged custody or obtained by using third degree methods, held, such confession being involuntary cannot be accepted or relied upon: (1984) 15 E.L.T. 289: 1984 Cr.L.J. 134: 1983 Mad.L.W. (Cr.) 289 (F.B.).

5. Magistrate.—The term 'Magistrate' is not restricted to a Magistrate exercising jurisdiction under the Code of Criminal Procedure; thus, a Judge d'instruction in French India who has the power to commit or discharge but not to convict a prisoner is a Magistrate within the meaning of S. 26; statements made to him by accused in Police custody are admissible: A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 487: I.L.R. 52 Mad. 529: 56 M.L.J. 628 (D.B.).

Confession to Honorary Magistrate—Admissibility of: 152 I.C. 998: I.L.R. 15 Lah. 856: A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 417.

Confession made before Magistrate of Native State is within the section: 144 I.C. 157: A.I.R. 1933 All. 286; 151 I.C. 311: A.I.R. 1934 Sind 103.

Though the confession before the Village Munsif is admissible, it is a very weak piece of evidence and the weight to be attached to it would depend upon the facts of each and every case: (1987) 3 Crimes 689 (Mad.).

Confession recorded by Magistrate not empowered by State Government—Oral evidence to prove such confessions—Not admissible—S. 533 of no avail: 1965 M.L.J. (Cr.) 72: I.L.R. (1964) 1 All. 340: (1964) 1 Cr.L.J. 263 (2): A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 358; 1965 All.L.J. 77; 1967 Cr.L.J. 1104 (All.); 1967 Cr.L.J. 628: A.I.R. 1967 Del. 14.

6. Time for reflection.—[See also S. 24, Note 15, supra].There is no statutory period of time to which an accused is entitled for making a confession after he is sent to the magisterial custody. All that is required is that he must have sufficient time for reflection; the mere fact that the confession was made one day after the accused was handed over to the magisterial custody would not by itself show that he had no sufficient time for reflection or make the confession bad on that account: (1945) 47 Bom.L.R. 63: A.I.R. 1945 Bom. 292. Where the accused allowed about four hours to think over before the Magistrate recorded his confession, it could not be said that the confession which he made after this time had been allowed to him to think over, was not voluntary: 1952 Raj.L.W. 269: I.L.R. (1952) 2 Raj. 93.

7. Retracted confession.—[See also S. 24, Notes 16 to 21, supra].That a retracted confession cannot be made the basis of a conviction, unless corroborated is not a rule of law but a rule of prudence. General corroboration showing that such confession was voluntary and true is sufficient. It is not necessary that each and every circumstance mentioned in the confession regarding the complicity of the accused must separately and independently be corroborated. Nor it is essential that corroboration must come from facts and circumstances discovered after the confession was made. But an accomplice's evidence should be corroborated in material particulars. The confession of a co-accused person cannot be treated as substantive evidence and can be pressed into service only when the Court is inclined to accept other evidence and feels the necessity of seeking for an assurance in support of its conclusion deducible from the said evidence.

One of the conditions in S. 30 is that the confession of an accomplice must implicate the maker substantially to the same extent as the other accused persons against whom it is sought to be taken into consideration. Where on reading confession, as a whole, it appears that he was really trying to throw the main blame on the other accused and make out that he was an unwilling spectator to the crime committed by the other accused, the utmost that can be stated is that the confession cannot be used at all against the other accused. But because there were differences between his confession and the confessional statement of the other accused, the confessional statements cannot be condemned in limine as untrue where some of the differences are immaterial, some others are due to the desire of the accused to throw the blame

27. How much of information received from accused may be proved.—Provided that when any fact is deposed to as discovered in consequence of information received from a person accused of any offence, in the custody of a police officer, so much of such information, whether it amounts to a confession or not, as relates distinctly to the fact thereby discovered, may be proved.

on the other and the rest stand clearly resolved by other evidence in the case: 32 Cut.L.T. 1140.

When an accused retracts from the judicial confession, held, it should found general corroboration before it could be acted upon: (1986) 1 Crimes 716 (Ori.).

As a matter of caution and prudence some material corroboration which connected the accused with the crime in question is required before a conviction can be based upon a retracted confession.

Held, on facts.—That there was no evidence to connect those accused with the crime and it was not safe to convict them on the basis of the extra-judicial confession which was retracted. The fact that the dacoity had taken place and the further fact that some of the stolen articles specified in the confession were recovered from the house of the other accused in the case named in the confession as having participated in the dacoity was no evidence to substantiate the participation of the accused in question in the dacoity. They were, therefore, entitled to benefit of doubt: 1960 B.L.J.R. 268: I.L.R. 39 Pat. 361.

A confession of a co-accused, which is retracted cannot be used as corroboration of the evidence against the other accused. Similarly, when it appears that the co-accused has made studious attempts in his confession to show that he was an unwilling accomplice in the commission of the crime, his confession cannot be used against the other accused. But, although such confession of the co-accused cannot be used against the other accused for the reasons mentioned above, it can be used to a limited extent against himself as corroborating the evidence of a witness, when the evidence of such witness is the main evidence against him and that portion of the confession which incriminates the maker may be used as corroborative of the evidence of such witness. The rule that a confession should be used as a whole is not applicable to such a case: (1963) 5 Ori.J.D. 372: (1964) 1 Cr.L.J. 680: 31 Cut.L.T. 17: A.I.R. 1964 Ori. 144.

1. Section does not offend against Article 14 of the Constitution.—The law contained in S. 27 deals equally with all those who are placed in the circumstance envisaged by that section. It does not make any distinction between them. The section, therefore, would not be open to the charge of denial of equal protection on the ground that it has no application to other persons.

Further, in view of the scope and applicability of S. 27 of the Evidence Act as declared by the Supreme Court, which is binding on all Courts within the territory of India, it is clear that S. 27 is not ultra vires the Constitution and it does not offend against Art. 14 of the Constitution: 1958 Cr.L.J. 842: A.I.R. 1958 All. 514.

S. 27—Validity—If offends against Art. 14 of the Constitution—Cr.P.Code, S. 162(2).

Per S. K. Das, Kapur, Hidayatullah and Shah, JJ.—S. 27 of the Evidence Act and S. 162, sub-S. (2) of the Code of Criminal Procedure in so far as that section relates to S. 27 of the Evidence Act, are intra vires and do not offend Art. 14 of the Constitution: A.I.R. 1960 All. 1 (F.B.), Reversed. (Hidayatullah, J., approached the question from a different point of view).

Per Subba Rao, J. (Contra).—S. 27 of the Evidence Act is void as violative of Art. 14 of the Constitution.

Per S. K. Das, Kapur and Shah, JJ.—By the combined operation of S. 27 of the Evidence Act and S. 162 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the admissibility in evidence against a person in a Criminal proceeding of a statement made to a Police Officer leading to the discovery of a fact depends for its determination on the question whether he was in custody at the time of making the statement. It is provable if he was in custody at the time when he made it, otherwise it is not.

This distinction between persons in custody and persons not in custody, in the context of admissibility of statements made by them concerning the offence charged cannot be called arbitrary, artificial or evasive; the Legislature has made a real distinction between these two classes, and has enacted distinct rules about admissibility of statements, confessional or otherwise, made by them.

When a person not in custody approaches a Police Officer investigating an offence and offers to give information leading to the discovery of a fact having a bearing on the charge which may be made against him, he may appropriately be deemed to have surrendered himself to the Police and may be deemed to be in the 'custody' of the Police Officer within the meaning of S. 27 of the Evidence Act. In considering whether there has been a denial of the equal protection of the laws, a doctrinaire approach is to be avoided.

The principle of admitting evidence of statements made by a person giving information leading to the discovery of facts which may be used in evidence against him is manifestly reasonable. The fact that the principle is restricted to persons in custody will not by itself be a ground for holding that there is an attempted hostile discrimination because the rule of admissibility of evidence is not extended to a possible, but an uncommon or abnormal class of cases: A.I.R. 1960 S.C. 1125: (1961) 1 S.C.R. 14.

2. Section not repugnant to Article 20(3) of the Constitution.—Art. 20(3) of the Constitution does not contemplate the suppression of truth simply because the information is given by the accused. It only protects him against being compelled to be a witness against himself. It is, therefore, not correct to presume that information given by the accused under S. 27, Evidence Act is compelled testimony. Hence, S. 27, Evidence Act is not repugnant to Art. 20(3) and therefore, does not stand abrogated by Art. 13 of the Constitution: A.I.R. 1955 Raj. 147: 1955 Cr.L.J. 1285.

Under S. 27 of the Evidence Act, the information given to the Police relating distinctly to the fact thereby discovered is allowed to be given in evidence by the Police. The information may be either voluntary or extracted from him by compulsion. In either case, before the Constitution it was admissible in evidence if the conditions laid down in the section are complied with. But after the enactment of the Constitution information obtained by compulsion must be excluded from evidence. Art. 20(3) of the Constitution 'embodies the principle of protection against compulsion of self-incrimination' and the protection afforded under that Article is not confined to giving oral evidence or producing evidence in the Court room but extends to compelled testimony previously obtained from him. S. 27 of the Evidence Act, and Art. 20(3) of the Constitution, however, may be reconciled. Information voluntarily obtained from an accused, relating distinctly to the fact thereby discovered, is not hit by Art. 20(3) and, therefore, is relevant evidence under S. 27 of the Evidence Act: A.I.R. 1957 Andh. Pra. 611: I.L.R. (1956) Andh. 173; (1959) 61 Punj.L.R. 912: A.I.R. 1960 Punj. 294.

The phrase used in Art. 20(3) is 'to be a witness' and not to appear as a witness. It follows that the protection afforded to an accused in so far as it is related to the phrase 'to be a witness' is not merely in respect of testimonial compulsion in the Court room but may well extend to compelled testimony previously obtained from him. Art. 20(3), therefore, applies to discoveries under S. 27, Evidence Act, if these discoveries are the results of compulsion. The scope of S. 27, Evidence Act is thus restricted by Art. 20(3) of the Constitution and the discoveries which follows a confession brought about by compelling an accused person cannot be used against him: 1958 Cr.L.J. 462: A.I.R. 1958 All. 293.

Validity of. See Constitution of India, Art. 20(3): A.I.R. 1958 Mys. 150: 1958 M.L.J. (Cr.) 341: 1958 Cr.L.J. 1489.

It is true that after the coming into force of the Constitution, the evidence which may otherwise be admissible under S. 27 of the Evidence Act may be inadmissible by virtue of Art. 20(3), if it could be established that such evidence was obtained under compulsion. There is, however, nothing on record to show that the accused was compelled to throw the stone at the place from where the knife was recovered. It is true that the accused was then under Police custody, but mere Police custody in the absence of further evidence to show that force or compulsion was used, will not suffice to show that his statement was made under compulsion so as to attract Art. 20(3) of the Constitution: 1959 Cr.L.J. 353: A.I.R. 1959 Ori. 33.

Recovery of stolen property from persons charged under S. 412, Penal Code cannot be ignored: (1961) 2 Cr.L.J. 746: A.I.R. 1961 All. 614.

3. Scope of section.—See I.L.R. 45 Cal. 557: (1917-18) 22 Cal.W.N. 213; A.I.R. 1941 Nag. 86. S. 27 is an exception to the rules enacted in Ss. 25 and 26: A.I.R. 1955 S.C. 104. See also A.I.R. 1960 All. 1 (F.B.); A.I.R. 1960 S.C. 1125.

S. 27 has to be read as a proviso not only to S. 26 but to Ss. 25 and 26 taken together: 1941 P.W.N. 653. S. 27 is an enabling section providing an exception to the previous ones which exclude confessions made to or in presence of the Police. If the conditions of the section are fulfilled, it allows a confession to be proved: A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 200.

S. 27 is in the nature of a proviso relating to the previous sections which lay down the general rules as to the inadmissibility of confessions made in certain circumstances. Whether confession to which S. 27 applies was induced by promises or not is immaterial. The general ground for not admitting confessions made either to a Police Officer, or made under any inducement or made by persons while in custody is clearly the danger of admitting false confessions; but the necessity for this precaution disappears when the truth of the confession is guaranteed by the discovery of facts in consequence of the information given: I.L.R. (1937) Nag. 268: 168 I.C. 962: A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 220.

S. 27 is enacted as a rider and an exception to the general rule that statements containing the information received by the Police Officer from a person during investigation, whether inculpatory or not, are not admissible against such person. Being in the nature of a proviso and an exception to the general rule, it follows that before S. 27 is applied, all its conditions must be fully satisfied. Any element wanting would bring in the prohibition rendering the statements as tried to be proved to be entirely inadmissible. Under this provision, only that statement containing the information leading to discovery coming from the accused while in Police custody is rendered admissible. Two things are necessary to satisfy the requirements of the provision. Firstly, there must be a statement containing an information from a person in the Police custody accused of an offence and secondly, as the direct consequence thereof, a distinct discovery of fact should eventually be shown to have followed: 1979 Bom.C.R. 680 (D.B.).

S. 27 is in the nature of an exception to the prohibition imposed by the preceding sections. The wording of the section clearly indicates that the information given by the accused has got to be split up. The irrelevant portion must be excluded and only that portion of the information which leads distinctly to the discovery of facts is admissible under S. 27. The section is based on the view that if a fact is actually discovered in consequence of information given by the accused, some guarantee is afforded thereby that the information is true and accordingly can be safely allowed to be given in evidence: (1981) 52 Cut.L.T. 126: 1981 Cr.L.J. 1452.

The rigor of the ban against confession under Ss. 25 and 26 is lifted under the provisions of S. 27 which now makes so much even of a confession of a person in Police custody admissible, provided that "so much" relates distinctly to the facts discovered "in consequence" of the said information. By the fact discovered in consequence of the information, the information acquires the hall-mark of truth which is what the Court administering justice always seeks to reach: A.I.R. 1972 Gau. 7: 1972 Cr.L.J. 779; (1986) 1 Crimes 25 (Ori.); 1993 M.P.L.J. 197.

S. 27 qualifies not only Ss. 25 and 26 but also S. 24 all three of which lay down general rules excluding confessions and the same broad grounds underlie all the three: I.L.R. 45 Cal. 557. See also I.L.R. 6 All. 509; 11 B.H.C.R. 242; I.L.R. 9 Lah. 671: A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 476; I.L.R. 15 Lah. 856: A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 417; 1958 M.P.L.J. 745: A.I.R. 1959 Madh. Pra. 17; A.I.R. 1959 Pat. 54.

The broad ground for not admitting confessions made under inducement or to a Police Officer is the danger of admitting false confessions, but the necessity for the exclusion disappears in a case provided by S. 27 when the truth of the confession is guaranteed by the discovery of facts in consequence of the information given: A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 476. See also I.L.R. 63 Cal. 1053: 63 Cal.L.J. 232: A.I.R. 1936 Cal. 316; (1942) 1 M.L.J. 503: A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 450.

S. 27 has nothing to do with the question whether the fact discovered is or is not relevant: I.L.R. 10 Lah. 283: A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 344 (F.B.). S. 27 being a proviso to the two preceding sections must be strictly construed and any relaxation must be sparingly allowed, care being exercised to see that the purpose and object of Ss. 25 and 26 and the safeguard provided in S. 27 are not rendered nugatory by any lax interpretation: I.L.R. 57 Cal. 1062: (1929-30) 34 Cal.W.N. 106: A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 291. See also 18 Pat.L.T. 964: A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 60.

S. 27, although an independent section, opens in the manner of a proviso. The object of the section which has been expressed in the nature of a proviso was to provide for the admission of evidence which, but for the existence of the section, could not, in consequence of the preceding sections be admitted in evidence: 1958 Cr.L.J. 842: A.I.R. 1958 All. 514.

S. 27 controls the prior Ss. 24, 25 and 26. If, therefore, a confession comes within the purview of S. 27, it is admissible in evidence, even if it is hit by S. 24 of the Act. S. 27 is not merely a proviso to S. 26, but also to Ss. 24 and 25. S. 27, however, only refers to the statement of a person accused of any offence and in the custody of a Police Officer: A.I.R. 1946 Pat. 210: I.L.R. 24 Pat. 671.

Under S. 27, Evidence Act, so much of the information as strictly relates to the discovery of fact is admissible. This section is an exception to the prohibition imposed by Ss. 25 and 26, Evidence Act. It is always permissible to admit that portion of the evidence in the statement under S. 27, Evidence Act, which merely leads to the discovery of any fact. Any other incriminating statement combined with that should be ignored. The fact that both these statements are part of one statement given by the accused would not make that portion relating to the discovery inadmissible in evidence: I.L.R. (1956) Hyd. 205: A.I.R. 1956 Hyd. 99.

S. 27 itself is a proviso to Ss. 25 and 26, and must be construed strictly and in accordance with the limitations which the language of the proviso imposes upon the proof of certain statements made by an accused person. The fact discovered must be connected with the accused so as in itself to be a relevant fact against him. Only such particular part of the confession as set the person to whom it was made in motion, and led to his ascertaining the fact or facts of which he gives evidence can be proved: I.L.R. (1946) Kar. 194. The only portions given by the accused which can be admitted under S. 27 are those which relate distinctly to the facts discovered thereby. But statements made by one accused involving another accused, cannot be admitted when they do not in any way relate to those facts: 1940 Mad.W.N. 764: (1939) 52 Mad.L.W. 284.

S. 27 renders admissible in evidence so much of a statement which would otherwise be excluded by S. 25 as leads to the discovery of a fact. The object of S. 27 is to admit evidence which is relevant to the matter under inquiry, viz., the guilt of the accused. The discovery of a material object is of no relevancy to the question whether the accused is guilty of the offence charged against him, unless it is connected with the offence. Hence, it is the connection of the thing discovered with the crime that renders its discovery a relevant fact. Though the connection between the offence and the thing discovered may be established by evidence other than the statement leading to the discovery that is no reason for excluding proof of the connection by the statement itself. S. 27 should be read so as to make it effective, if it can be so read and not in any restricted sense: I.L.R. 25 Pat. 279: A.I.R. 1947 Pat. 162.

S. 27 is an exception to Ss. 25 and 26, which prohibit the proof of a confession made to a Police Officer or a confession made while a person is in Police custody, unless it is made in immediate presence of a Magistrate. S. 27 allows that part of the statement made by the accused to the Police 'whether it amounts to a confession or not' which relates distinctly to the fact thereby discovered to be proved. Thus, even a confessional statement before the Police which distinctly relates to the discovery of a fact may be proved under S. 27 and is admissible as a whole.

Held, on facts, that the whole of the statement relates distinctly to the discovery of ornaments and is admissible under S. 27. The words 'where he had hidden them' have nothing to do with the past history of the crime and are distinctly related to the actual discovery that took place by virtue of that statement and would, therefore, not be inadmissible: (1963) 3 S.C.R. 412: A.I.R. 1962 S.C. 1788.

Generally speaking, the discoveries of material objects, the mode of discovery and its place permitted to be proved under S. 27 consist of (i) articles connected with the commission of the offence, like weapons, arms, mechanical or other devices, or (ii) the subject of the offence, like dead bodies or stolen property, or (iii) objects or materials otherwise having evidentiary value and provide a connecting link between the offence and the offender like blood-stained clothes. Once the information leading to discovery of articles is established or proved, inferences primarily arising from the informatory statements against the giver of information, depending upon the case can be: (a) the informant accused is connected with the incriminatory fact discovered; (b) the fact discovered was within the exclusive knowledge of the informant; (c) the fact is referable to the informant's culpable possession; (d) the informant had secreted away the fact with culpable motive and (e) the informant was a person responsible for the culpable act. These inferences are not by themselves informatory statements containing an admission of guilt by the accused; they may be merely circumstantial taking the accused nearer the offence; they may not even be enough to inculpate the accused conclusively in the offence charged and, would not be confessional: 1979 Bom.C.R. 680 (D.B.).

S. 27 is apparently lifted from an English authority; but unlike in England, the Indian law (1) does not permit proof at the trial of any statement made by any person or accused to the Police and (2) does not require cautioning the person making such statement that it might be used against him; otherwise both the English and the Indian law evince greater solicitude for the person making such statement if he is unaware of the danger of his involvement in the offence that for the person who is so aware; in England it is caution and in India it is Police custody which warns him of the danger. S. 27 extends to the entire statement, not merely those portions which relate to the discovery of relevant facts: A.I.R. 1967 J.&K. 22: 1967 Kash.L.J. 162: 1967 Cr.L.J. 484 (D.B.).

The provisions of S. 27 of the Evidence Act are applicable where information is received from a person accused of an offence who is in the custody of a Police Officer and that information leads to the discovery of a relevant fact. The section does not insist on the information being in the custody of the Police Officer investigating the offence to which the information relates. Whoever may be the Police Officer who has custody of the accused, if the information leads to the discovery of a relevant fact, that information is clearly admissible under S. 27: 1966 M.L.J. (Cr.) 4: (1965) 2 Mys.L.J. 158: 1966 Cr.L.J. 848.

It is only proper for prosecution if they want to adduce evidence under S. 27 of the Evidence Act, which is an exception to the bar enjoined by S. 25 of that Act, to prove by production of written record only so much of the statement as led to the discovery of the article. The oral statement of witnesses without corroboration by any written record of any such statement contemporaneously made, even if admissible is unsafe to rely on, because of the very nature of the evidence: 1968 Cr.L.J. 40: A.I.R. 1968 Cal. 38.

The expression "Provided that" together with the phrase "whether it amounts to a confession or not" in S. 27 shows that the section provides for an exception to the preceding Ss. 25 and 26. The conditions necessary for attracting S. 27 are: (1) the discovery of the relevant fact in consequence of information received from the accused; (2) the discovery must be deposed to; (3) at the time of the receipt of information, the accused must be in Police custody; and the last, and the most important (4) only "so much of the information" as relates distinctly to the fact thereby discovered is admissible. The rest of information has to be excluded. [Cr. App. No. 1954 of 1969-D/4-3-1971 (Bom.), Reversed]: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 483: (1976) 1 S.C.C. 828: 1976 Cr.L.J. 481: (1976) 1 S.C.R. 715; (1971) 1 Cut.W.R. 351 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1972 S.C. 3; (1972) 1 Cut.W.R. 1023 (D.B.); (1983) 2 Karn.L.J. 1: A.I.R. 1983 S.C. 446; (1985) 60 Cut.L.T. 423; 1990 Rajdhani L.R. 154: 1990 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 118 (Del.) (D.B.); A.I.R. 1990 S.C. 2140: (1991) 1 S.C.C. 286: 1990 Cr.L.J. 2289; 1994 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 59 (Madh. Pra.) (D.B.); 1995 Cr.L.J. 625 (Raj.).

There are two conditions for attracting S. 27: (i) the information must have caused discovery of the fact; (ii) the information must relate distinctly to the fact discovered. Only so much of such information, whether it amounts to confession or relate distinctly to the fact thereby discovered, may be proved. It also assumed that there should be a statement first and it would be followed by the discovery and if there was first discovery followed by the statement, such statement would be admissible. It is also settled proposition of law that the statement of the accused must be volunteered. It should not be given by prompt or threat with any pointed question. Thus, where specific questions were put to the accused by the Investigating Officer before alleged statements by the accused were made, held, statements of the accused were inadmissible in evidence: 1993 Cr.L.J. 730: (1992-2) 12 Guj.L.H. 330: 1992 Cr.L.R. 519.

S. 27, an exception to Ss. 24 to 26, lays down that only such information received from the accused can be used against him (i) which caused discovery of the fact, and (ii) which was distinctly related to the fact discovered; and both these conditions have to be satisfied. It is of no relevance that the information received from the accused was voluntary or otherwise; Art. 20(3) of the Constitution is not attracted either: (1973) 39 Cut.L.T. 291 (D.B.).

Broadly speaking, there are four conditions, before S. 27 is applied; first, that the accused must be in the custody of a Police Officer, secondly, the accused must give an information to the Police, thirdly, there must be discovery of an instrument, and fourthly, the information must relate distinctly to the fact discovered. Thus, where the accused made a statement about pointing out the weapon and it was only thereafter that he was arrested, held, the recovery made at the time when he was not in the custody of the Police Officer could not be relevant under S. 27: 1992 All.L.J. 1182: 1992 Cr.L.J. 3972 (D.B.); 1993 M.P.L.J. 197.

The condition necessary to bring S. 27 into operation is that discovery of a fact in consequence of information received from an accused in Police custody must be deposed to, and thereupon so much of the information as relates distinctly to the fact thereby discovered may be proved. The words 'as relates distinctly to the fact' are very significant and must not be lost sight of. S. 27 is based on the view that if a fact is actually discovered in consequence of information given, some guarantee is afforded thereby that the information was true, and accordingly can be safely allowed to be given in evidence. The extent of the information admissible must, however, depend on the exact nature of the fact discovered to which such information is required to relate distinctly. Generally S. 27 is brought into operation when a person in Police custody produces from some place of concealment some object, such as a dead body, a weapon, or ornaments, said to be connected with the crime of which the informant is accused. It is fallacious to treat the 'fact discovered' within the section equivalent to the object produced; the fact discovered embraces the place from which the object is produced and the knowledge of the accused as to this and the information given must relate distinctly to this fact. Information as to past user or the past history of the object produced is not related to its discovery in the setting in which it is discovered.

A was charged with murder and robbery. On information received from him, while in Police custody certain gold ear-rings, silver bangles, blood-stained napkin and tangia were seized by the Police. A after confessing to have pledged with one H the gold ear-rings belonging to the deceased B, led the Police Officer to the house of H who produced the ear-rings. Later, A also confessed to have removed silver bangles from the person of B and kept them in his house and produced the bangles. A also produced a blood-stained napkin saying that he had used it at the time of commission of the offence. A also confessed to have assaulted B with a tangia. He got it from his brother and produced it before the Police Officer. The question was how much of such information received from A was admissible in evidence.

Held, that the portions of the information that A had pledged the gold ear-rings with H which he got after murdering B, that he removed silver bangles from the person of B and kept them in his house, that he had used blood-stained napkin during commission of crime, that he assaulted B with tangia and any other information not relating 'distinctly to the fact thereby discovered' were all inadmissible. All that information related to the past history or user of the object produced: I.L.R. (1962) Cut. 955: (1963) 1 Cr.L.J. 788: A.I.R. 1963 Ori. 93.

In order to bring the evidence of discovery within the scope of S. 27, it is necessary that the party making statement should be both an accused person and he must be in the custody of the Police at the time of making statement. S. 27 does not apply to information from a person who is not in Police custody: 1953 M.P.C. 521: 1958 M.P.L.J. 732.

Before the provisions of S. 27 are attracted, two essential requirements should be satisfied, namely, that the person making the statement is accused of any offence and is also in the custody of a Police Officer. It is only then that the information leading to the discovery could be received in evidence. If either of the two conditions is not complied with, the statement would fall outside the purview of this section: 1956 Cr.L.J. 201: A.I.R. 1956 Andh. Pra. 56; (1957) 2 An.W.R. 63: A.I.R. 1958 Andh. Pra. 37. When a person not in custody approaches a Police Officer investigating an offence and offers to give information leading to the discovery of fact having a bearing on the charge which may be made against him, he may appropriately be deemed to have surrendered himself to the Police. S. 46 of the Code of Criminal Procedure does not contemplate any formality before a person can be said to be taken in custody; submission to the custody by word or action by a person is sufficient. The expression 'accused of any offence' is descriptive of the person against whom evidence relating to information alleged to be given by him is made provable by S. 27. It does not predicate a formal accusation against him at the time of making the statement sought to be proved, as a condition of its applicability: I.L.R. (1961) Andh. Pra. 123: (1963) 1 Cr.L.J. 142: A.I.R. 1963 Andh. Pra. 87.

S. 27 which provides an exception to the general rule that confessions made to a Police Officer are inadmissible in evidence, is based on the view that if a fact is actually discovered in consequence of information given, some guarantee is afforded thereby that the information was true and accordingly can be safely allowed to be given in evidence. For the application of the section, it is necessary that the person giving information must be accused of an offence, that he must also be in Police custody and the information must be such as has caused discovery of the fact, i.e., the fact must be the consequence, and the information the cause of its discovery. In other words the information must relate distinctly to the fact discovered. It is, therefore, obvious that where the information relating to the discovery of the fact is already in possession of the Police, S. 27 will not be applicable and any evidence relating to such information will not be admissible: 1967 All.L.J. 473.

Before S. 27, can come into play, there must be a fact discovered and the fact must be discovered in consequence of some information received from an accused person. The section lays down a further qualification, namely, that only so much of the statement as relates distinctly to the fact discovered is admissible and not the whole thereof. Where, therefore, a relevant fact is discovered by reason of a statement made by the accused to the Police Officer, the Court must scrutinise the statement in order to find out which portion of that statement bears a distinct relationship to the discovery of the fact. The relationship contemplated is not any relationship; it must be unmistakable and it must be unequivocal: I.L.R. (1952) Bom. 652: 54 Bom.L.R. 316: A.I.R. 1952 Bom. 299 (F.B.).

It is only that portion of the confession made to a Police Officer or of information given to him by an accused person which might reasonably be held to relate distinctly and positively to the fact discovered and which is necessary to be proved in order to adequately explain such discovery that would be admissible under S. 27. So where an accused has stated that he had kept the stolen articles with a particular person and they are recovered from that person, the statement of the accused would be admissible in evidence: A.I.R. 1950 All. 615.

The intention of the Legislature in enacting S. 27 was that the minimum portion of a confession made to a Police Officer or of information given to him should be admitted in evidence which might reasonably be held to relate distinctly and positively to the fact discovered and which is necessary to be proved in order to adequately explain such discovery: I.L.R. (1937) All. 710: A.I.R. 1937 All. 497; (1940) 53 Mad.L.W. 567: A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 658.

In order that S. 27 of the Evidence Act may apply the prosecution must establish that the information given by the accused led to the discovery of some fact deposed to by him. The discovery must be of some fact which the Police had not previously learnt from other sources and that the knowledge of the fact was first derived from information given by the accused: (1971) 73 Bom.L.R. 26; A.I.R. 1970 S.C. 1934.

The Legislature has prescribed two limitations in order to define the scope of the information provable against the accused: (1) the information must be such as caused the discovery of the fact, and (2) the information must 'relate distinctly' to the fact discovered. The requirements of both the conditions must be satisfied before an incriminating statement can be received in evidence. Thus, only that portion of the information is provable which was the immediate or proximate cause of the discovery of the fact: I.L.R. 10 Lah. 283: A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 344 (F.B.). See also A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 338; A.I.R. 1929 Sind 175; A.I.R. 1930 Sind 225; (1934) 36 Bom.L.R. 384: A.I.R. 1934 Bom. 233; 30 Nag.L.R. 269: A.I.R. 1934 Nag. 71; 28 Sind L.R. 41: A.I.R. 1934 Sind 159; A.I.R. 1933 Nag. 252.

The Legislature had a purpose in excluding from evidence a confession made to a Police Officer by an accused person and also a confession made while in the custody of the Police except in the immediate presence of the Magistrate. Under S. 27 only that portion of the information which led to the recovery, is made admissible. The practice of introducing wholesale confessions to the Police under the guise of a recovery under S. 27 is to be deprecated. The Court expressed its disapproval of the Police recording a confession by accused running to four or five pages incorporating most incriminating statements against a co-accused and getting it attested by witnesses and then making it invisible by a legal fiction of 'bracketing' as it was bound to seriously prejudice both the accused: 1962 Ker.L.T. 120: A.I.R. 1963 Ker. 54: 1963 M.L.J. (Cr.) 194.

What is admissible under S. 27 is the information relating to the discovery of a concrete or material fact, which could not have been discovered but for the information. After such a recovery, which lends credence to the information, what is really discovered is the concealment of the "fact" and the accused being its author. For this purpose, it cannot be held that the accused apart from saying that he had concealed the object at a particular place, must also say in so many words that he shall point out the place. Of course, if the object is discovered not on being led by the accused but due to pre-knowledge on the part of the Police, S. 27 would not apply. [(1947) 48 Cr.L.J. 533 (P.C.) and 1983 Cr.L.J. 846 (S.C.), Foll.]: 1984 Cr.L.J. 536 (D.B.).

The difficulty, however great, of proving that a fact discovered on information supplied by the accused is a relevant fact, can afford no justification for reading into the section something that is not there and admitting in evidence a confession barred by S. 25: 1990 Rajdhani L.R. 154: 1990 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 118 (Del.) (D.B.).

An accused's statement before the Investigating Officer is admissible only to the extent it relates distinctly to the fact thereby discovered as a direct and proximate consequence of it, provided the Investigating Officer concerned deposes that the discovery was made in consequence of the information and that the information conveyed by the accused was not previously known to the Police: (1989) 1 Ker.L.J. 253: 1990 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 124 (D.B.).

The provisions of S. 27 are based on the view that if a fact is actually discovered in consequence of information given, some guarantee is afforded thereby that the information was true and consequently said information can safely be allowed to be given in evidence because if such an information is further fortified and confirmed by the discovery of article or the instrument of crime and which leads to the belief that the information about the confession made as to the articles of crime cannot be false: A.I.R. 1994 S.C. 2420: 1994 Cr.L.J. 3271.

The exact nature of the discovery has to be taken into consideration in determining the extent of the information admissible. Consequently, the whole statements of the accused in this case stating that they gave property to R through some persons are admissible in evidence: 1966 Cr.L.J. 1332: A.I.R. 1966 Raj. 241.

Where there is practically no evidence at all against an accused except an incriminating statement under S. 27, the latter should be viewed with great caution and suspicion: 14 Cr.L.J. 190: 19 I.C. 190.

Statement of accused to Police—Not primary evidence—Proof of such statement—Mode of—Practice indicated: A.I.R. 1966 Raj. 74.

The discovery under S. 27 is not of guns and daggers used in the offence; it is, mostly and really, as regards the authorship of their concealment; his conduct and concealment being incriminating circumstances, the discovery becomes relevant and admissible under S. 27: A.I.R. 1983 S.C. 349: 1983 Cr.L.J. 686: (1983) 2 S.C.C. 305. See also 1981 Cr.L.J. 1060 (Ori.).

Where discovery of articles is accompanied by a statement made by the accused that he had buried them there and would produce them and if the discovery is made in consequence of the information received from the accused, the statement is admissible in evidence under S. 27 of the Evidence Act: A.I.R. 1955 Sau. 93: 8 Sau.L.R. 339; 1957 Jab. L.J. 460.

The prosecution has to establish that the accused while in custody gave the information as to the place of concealment of the weapon of offence and thereafter led the Police and the witnesses to the place of such concealment and gave recovery of the same from that place: 1992 Cr.L.J. 762 (Ori.) (D.B.). A recovery under S. 27 has to satisfy the condition that the discovery is made by virtue and exclusively as a result of the information given by the accused: (1988) 1 Crimes 843 (Bom.).

A statement made by the accused to the Police that the articles recovered in his house were articles of loot is not admissible in evidence in view of the provisions of Ss. 24, 25 and 26 of the Evidence Act. S. 27 of the Evidence Act is virtually a proviso to Ss. 24, 25 and 26 and a statement made to Police would be admissible in evidence if it comes within the four corners of S. 27. The Legislature has prescribed two limitations in order to define the scope of the information provable against the accused. The information must be such as has caused the discovery of the fact and the information must relate distinctly to the fact discovered. The requirements of both the conditions must be satisfied before an incriminating statement can be received in evidence. Thus, only that portion of the information is provable under S. 27 which was the immediate or proximate cause of the discovery of the fact. The language of the section and its place in the Act make it clear that discovery therein referred to is discovery to or by Police Officers: A.I.R. 1957 All. 459: 1957 Cr.L.J. 803.

Before a confessional statement made by a person accused of an offence who is in the custody of a Police Officer may be proved against him, two conditions must be observed, firstly, that some incriminating thing must be proved to have been found as the direct result of the information supplied by the accused and, secondly, it must be confined to that portion which refers exclusively to the thing found; in other words, when any incriminating object is proved to have been found as the direct result of information given by a person accused of an offence in the custody of a Police Officer that portion of the information which has led to the object being found may be proved—Provided it refers clearly to that object, even though the information provable is self incriminating. The fact deposed to and the fact discovered obviously must be relevant and the fact or thing discovered can only be relevant if it is connected with the offence of which the accused is charged; and the confession in S. 27 is a confession of the offence charged and not of anything else: I.L.R. (1937) Mad. 695: A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 618: (1937) 2 M.L.J. 60 (F.B.). See also 14 Mad.L.W. 418: 69 I.C. 377; 11 Mad.L.W. 8.

The section does not apply when the person making the confession is not in the custody of a Police Officer at the time when the confession is made: I.L.R. 24 Pat. 671: A.I.R. 1946 Pat. 210.

S. 27 has no application to a confessional statement made to a Police Officer before the deponent has come into the custody of that Police Officer: I.L.R. (1942) Mad. 77: A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 765: (1941) 2 M.L.J. 209.

The statement must be made by a person already in the custody of the Police Officer, and the probable part of information, whether amounting to confession or not, must relate distinctly to the fact thereby discovered: (1956-57) 61 Cal.W.N. 483: A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 372. But see infra. It would be the better way of reading the provisions of S. 27, which of course is permissible in order to make the meaning of the section sensible, if the words 'even if' are read before the words 'in the custody of Police'. So read, for the statement to be made admissible under S. 27, the person making the statement need not be in Police custody: A.I.R. 1959 Bom. 534: (1959) 61 Bom.L.R. 715.

If an accused makes a statement which is admissible under S. 27, the whole of the statement which leads to the discovery of the stolen property is admissible and sentences should not be cut up so as to reduce the statements only to the actual words which the accused may use to express the fact that he has hidden the properties: I.L.R. (1936) Nag. 78: A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 200. See also 17 Mys.L.J. 158; I.L.R. (1940) Mad. 254: A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 710; 1941 All.L.J. 86.

The exact information received from the accused must be established before S. 27 can be resorted to: I.L.R. (1942) 1 Cal. 436: A.I.R. 1942 Cal. 593.

The extent of the statement admissible under S. 27 does not depend upon whether the extent serves to corroborate or not the other evidence in the case. The only limitation is that the extent must relate distinctly to the facts discovered, subject to its relevancy being proved by other evidence. Case-law discussed: (1949) 62 Mad.L.W. 768: (1949) 2 M.L.J. 451.

Even a confessional statement would be admissible if the existence of the fact disclosed by the statement was first known from the accused, and the fact was relevant to his complicity. Thus, the statement of the accused that he had concealed the prosecutrix in a house from which she was recovered pursuant to that information would be admissible in evidence: I.L.R. (1953) Patiala 328: A.I.R. 1954 Pepsu 72.

S. 27 provides an exception to the prohibition imposed by the preceding section, and enables certain statements made by a person in Police custody to be proved. The condition necessary to bring the section into operation is that the discovery of a fact in consequence of information received from a person accused of an offence in the custody of a Police Officer must be deposed to, and thereupon so much of the information as relates distinctly to the fact thereby discovered may be proved. The extent of the information admissible must depend on the exact nature of the fact discovered to which such information is required to relate. It is fallacious to treat the "fact discovered" within S. 27 as equivalent to the object produced; the fact discovered embraces the place from which the object is produced and the knowledge of the accused as to this, and the information given must relate distinctly to this fact. Information as to past user or the past history, of the object produced is not related to its discovery in the setting in which it is discovered and so would not be admissible in evidence: 74 I.A. 65: I.L.R. (1948) Mad. 1: A.I.R. 1947 P.C. 67: (1947) 1 M.L.J. 219 (P.C.); 1952 Ker.L.T. 216: A.I.R. 1952 Trav.-Co. 300; (1960) 62 Bom.L.R. 80: A.I.R. 1960 Bom. 263.

The section seems to be based on the view that if a fact is actually discovered in consequence of information given, some guarantee is afforded thereby that the information was true and accordingly can be safely allowed to be given in evidence. But clearly the extent of the information admissible must depend on the exact nature of the fact discovered to which such information is required to relate. Under S. 27, Evidence Act what is allowed to be proved is the information or such part thereof as relates distinctly to the fact thereby discovered. Court would have to consider whether it relates distinctly to the fact thereby discovered and allow the proof thereof only if that condition was satisfied. If, however, the Police Officer does not want to prove the information or any part thereof, S. 27 does not come into operation at all: Per Jagannadhadas, J.:—It may be that when a Police Officer speaks to a recovery being 'on the information of' or 'at the instance of' an accused, S. 27 of the Evidence Act is not in terms attracted. But when a Police Officer speaks to a recovery of this kind as having been 'at the instance of an accused' or 'in consequence of information given by an accused' he is being allowed to place on record not merely the fact of his having received some information but also the implication thereof, viz., that the information is of a character which directly connects the accused with the objects recovered. The prosecution cannot be permitted to rely on such evidence without placing the admissible portion of the information on the record: (1955) 1 S.C.R. 903: A.I.R. 1955 S.C. 104.

The whole of the statement of an accused which occasions the discovery can be proved. Thus, the statement of the accused that he had thrown a pistol in such and such a ditch can be proved and not only the statement that the pistol was in the ditch: 1954 All.L.J. 93: A.I.R. 1954 All. 687.

The principle that portions of statement of confession may be admitted and others excluded is recognised in the Evidence Act itself and also in judicial decisions. But the conditions mentioned in S. 27 have to be strictly fulfilled, before a portion of the statement can possibly be allowed in evidence under that section.

Where, there is nothing on the record to indicate that any discovery was made in consequence of the information which is said to have been given by the accused to the Police and that the accused person was not in Police custody at the time he made the statement, held, S. 27 does not apply and hence it cannot be taken into consideration at the trial: (1956-57) 61 Cal.W.N. 483: A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 332: 1957 Cr.L.J. 630.

4. Applicability of section.—S. 27 is a proviso to Ss. 24, 25 and 26. Statement made to the Police is admissible though the accused himself makes the discovery about which the statement is made: 12 Cr.L.J. 119: 9 I.C. 718; A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 291. See also (1939) 1 M.L.J. 756 (P.C.); I.L.R. 24 Pat. 671: A.I.R. 1946 Pat. 210.

Where facts are discovered by the accused himself who also gave a statement, held, his statement is not admissible under S. 27. The Court must distinguish between a discovery made in consequence of information given and disclosure made by the accused and a discovery by the accused himself. It is the accused's statement leading to the discovery which alone is admissible: 1940 Mad.W.N. 1238: (1939) 52 Mad.L.W. 898: A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 306; 1941 Mad.W.N. 956: A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 237.

The information given by the accused person to the Police is admissible in evidence if it leads to the discovery of a relevant fact even if the actual recovery is made by the accused himself in pursuance of the information: A.I.R. 1954 Punj. 97: I.L.R. (1954) Punj. 876 (F.B.).

S. 27 does not deal with the accused's conduct or acts; they are admissible under S. 8. The accused's conduct, in response to a Police Officer's question even if it is not 'information supplied by the accused which relates distinctly to the fact thereby discovered' as contemplated by S. 27 is admissible as the 'effect of a relevant fact' under S. 7, and 'as conduct' with reference to a relevant fact under S. 3 or even as part of a set of facts necessary to explain a relevant fact or tending to establish the identity of anything under S. 9; it is not a confession which necessarily must be a statement; the modern tendency is to admit, and not to exclude, pieces of evidence if reasonably and legally possible: (1971) 1 Cut.W.R. 351.

Where the accused's statement was not recorded but he led the Police to a tank and brought out stolen articles from it, held, it amounts to the accused's conduct relevant under S. 8, though as his statement, it is not admissible under S. 27; the evidence of recovery not being contradicted, it could not be contended that the accused merely knew about the articles being there in the tank. [1979 Cr.L.J. 329 (S.C.), Foll.]: 1984 Cr.L.J. 518 (Cal.).

A statement not partaking the character of a confession envisaged by S. 27 would not be admissible because of S. 162 of the Code of Criminal Procedure; however, the accused's going to a place and getting recovered some clothes, etc. is admissible as his conduct under S. 8: 1992 All.L.J. 588: 1992 Cr.L.J. 1755 (D.B.). See also 1994 Cr.L.J. 162 (Ker.) (D.B.).

There is a clear distinction between the conduct of an accused admissible under S. 8 and his statement to a Police Officer during investigations which is hit by S. 162 of the Code of Criminal Procedure; S. 162 excludes the accused's statement to a Police Officer during investigation but not his conduct when confronted or questioned by a Police Officer during the investigation. Thus, evidence of the circumstances, simpliciter, that the accused had led a Police Officer, and pointed out the place where stolen articles or weapons were found hidden is admissible as his conduct under S. 8 whether or not any statement made by the accused contemporaneously with or antecedent to such conduct falls under S. 27: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 400; 1972 Mys.L.J. (S.N.) 377.

An information or a portion thereof which is not distinctly connected with the fact discovered but merely explains the thing discovered, being not admissible under S. 27, cannot be proved; if the thing concealed not known to the Police is discovered by such information, it would lend assurance that the information was true. No witness with whom some material fact like a weapon or stolen property or other incriminating article is not hidden or sold or kept, unknown to the Police, can be said to be discovered as a consequence of the information furnished by the accused. These examples are only illustrative, not exhaustive. What makes the information leading to the discovery of the witness admissible is the discovery from him of the thing sold to or hidden or kept with him which the Police otherwise did not know; the information which merely disclosed the witness's identity is not admissible under S. 27; besides, the evidence of the Investigating Officer and the panchas that the accused had taken them to a shopkeeper who sells daggers and pointed him out, as corroborated by the shopkeeper himself, would be admissible under S. 8 of the Evidence Act as conduct of the accused: A.I.R. 1972 S.C. 975: 1972 Cr.L.J. 606. See also (1987) 3 Karn.L.J. 407: I.L.R. (1988) Karn. 1129 (D.B.).

Where certain statements made by accused while in Police custody are recorded in the panchanama that the articles in question were hidden in a particular place it would be admissible in evidence if it leads to the discovery of the articles. Further, it is also admissible under S. 8 of the Evidence Act as it is indicative of the conduct of the accused: A.I.R. 1950 Madh.Bh. 104.

S. 27 assumes that recovery of incriminating articles is effected on the basis of a prior information given by the accused; thus, where the prosecution did not establish that any such information was given by the accused which led to the recovery, held, S. 27 was not attracted; however, the factum of the articles having been produced by the accused is admissible in evidence: (1972) 38 Cut.L.T. 754 (D.B).

It is the statement giving information leading to the discovery which is admissible in evidence. The mere discovery by the accused cannot be said to be of any legal consequence, if it is not preceded by the informative statement on the part of the accused. It is the informative statement which is evidence. The discovery by the accused in the absence of such informative statement is for all practical purposes barred and Court would hardly be able to draw any inference from the mere discovery. [1979 Cr.L.J. 908 (S.C.), Foll.]: 1982 Cr.L.J. 2189 (Bom.).

Where the accused had given the information that the stolen property was sold to a named shopkeeper from whose shop the property was recovered, held, the statement clearly fell within the four corners of S. 27; it could not be contended that since the accused had not mentioned the place of recovery, S. 27 was not complied with; such a narrow construction of the section is impermissible. [1971 M.P.L.J. 324, Rel. on; 1961 M.P.L.J. 353 and A.I.R. 1934 Nag. 71, Dist.]: 1973 M.P.L.J. 707: 1973 Jab.L.J. 706: 1973 Cr.L.J. 1559 (D.B.).

Where the F.I.R. itself stated that the dead body was buried in a field specified therein but the dead body was recovered in pursuance of the accused's disclosure statement, held, such recovery was not under S. 27; it was, however, a very valuable piece of circumstantial evidence against the accused: 1985 Cr.L.J. 1416 (Raj.).

Accused telling Inspector of Police about place where articles were hidden—Statement recorded later on—Held, that the statement cannot be admitted in evidence under S. 27: 1976 Kash.L.J. 253: 1976 Cr.L.J. 1310 (D.B.).

Where apart from the memo of recovery / discovery of the dead body prepared under S. 27, there was no other independent or documentary evidence of the arrest of the accused and the witness on the memo had seen the accused already under the Police control when he came at the spot, held, may be, the place of recovery had already been shown and made known to the accused much before his so-called arrest; the recovery does not fall within the ambit of S. 27 and is rendered inadmissible; it may once again be stressed that in cases of recovery / discovery at the instance of the accused, investigation should not be entrusted to the arresting officer; a discovery by the arresting officer himself would go to discredit investigation: 1994 Cr.L.J. 3446 (All.) (D.B.).

Where discovery of the deceased's slippers and remnants of wearing apparels was made at the accused's showing but without any statement having been made by him, held, S. 27 was not attracted: 1988 Cr.L.J. 1293 (Cal.) (D.B.).

Where alleged weapon of offence was discovered on information of the accused but there was no disclosure statement preceding the discovery relied on by the prosecution, held, discovery of weapon of offence was meaningless. [A.I.R. 1993 S.C. 1469, Rel. on]: 1994 Cr.L.J. 3372: (1994) 3 Karn.L.J. 187 (D.B.).

Police is empowered to conduct search and make recoveries even without recording statement under S. 27: (1985) 2 W.L.N. 523 (Raj.).

The language of the section and its place in the Act make it clear that discovery therein referred to is discovery to or by Police Officers: I.L.R. 49 Cal. 167: (1920-21) 25 Cal.W.N. 788: A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 342.

Information furnished to the Police by the accused leading to discovery of a fact, held, is admissible: 1977 M.P.L.J. 620: 1977 Jab.L.J. 583 (D.B.).

A portion of the information, given in custody, which merely explains the material thing discovered, held, is not admissible under S. 27: (1992) 1 Crimes 423: 1992 Cr.L.R. 1 (Raj.).

Where the information contained in the disclosure statement does not disclose the exact place where the weapon was kept concealed by the accused and all that he stated was that the weapon had been thrown by him but he was unable to give exact details and the Police recovered it in the absence of the accused, held, it could not be said to have been recovered in pursuance of the information furnished by the accused so as to make it an admissible piece of evidence under S. 27: 1990 Cr.L.J. 1491 (Mad.) (D.B.).

Where in a prosecution for robbing a pair of silver paijans, there was no evidence that the accused gave any information to the Police about any paijans or that he was present at the time the jeweller, to whom allegedly paijans were sold and who melted them along with other ornaments into a silver silli, gave a piece of said silver silli to the Police, held, the discovery of said silli could not be used against the accused under S. 27: 1990 M.P.L.J. 99.

The statement of the accused that he had concealed a rifle in a manure heap is admissible under S. 27 whether the accused thereafter produced the rifle from the manure heap himself or the Police did so on the basis of the information: (1953) 55 Punj.L.R. 112: A.I.R. 1953 Punj. 101.

It must be strictly construed: A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 291: I.L.R. 57 Cal. 1062; 10 O.W.N. 937: A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 404.

As it is found that the Police is making indiscriminate use of S. 27 for discovery of incriminating articles, the Courts must insist upon a very strong proof of highest standard for finding that an accused did suffer disclosure statement and incriminating article was discovered in consequence thereof: (1983) 2 Crimes 497: (1983) 1 Rec.Cr.R. 409 (P.&H.).

Information given by accused while in Police custody — Discovery of a fact — Admissibility — Information given by an accused while in Police custody leading distinctly to the discovery of a fact, can be admitted in evidence—Section has to be strictly construed as it is an exception to Ss. 25 and 26—Accused charged under Ss. 302, 97 and 201, Penal Code—After arrest while in Police custody accused gave information about currency notes taken by him from the deceased—Accused, alongwith Police, went to the place where he had kept the money in a trunk and himself produced it—Held, that the requirements of S. 27 were satisfied and information leading to the recovery of money was admissible in evidence: 1967 Cr.L.J. 357: A.I.R. 1967 Goa 21 (F.B.).

Confession to person in authority who holds out inducements to confess is not admissible even so far as it relates to the discovery of articles: I.L.R. 4 Rang. 72: 96 I.C. 145.

Confessions caused by inducement, threat or promise are inadmissible under S. 24. But though they are inadmissible, they may lead to discovery of facts or of things in consequence of the information received from the accused in custody. When the statements made by accused persons in Police custody are confirmed by the finding of the property or facts, those portions of the confessions that lead to the discovery cannot be held to be false. S. 27 is based on the theory of confirmation by subsequent facts. The theory is that where, in consequence of a confession otherwise inadmissible, search is made and facts are discovered which confirm it in material particulars, the possible influence which through caution had been attributed to the improper inducement is seen to be nil, and the confession may be accepted without hesitation: 1958 M.P.C. 648: 1958 M.P.L.J. 745: 1959 Cr.L.J. 48: A.I.R. 1959 Madh. Pra. 17.

There is no reason why the general rule that a confession should be voluntary should not apply to a confessional statement under S. 27. If it has been induced, it is of no evidential value, and the Court would exclude it from consideration: (1937) 50 Mad.L.W. 435: 1939 Mad.W.N. 873: A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 13. See also A.I.R. 1957 All. 197; A.I.R. 1958 All. 293, cited below.

Portion of the statement made by accused to the Police is rendered admissible by the law, purely because of the discovery of a relevant fact to which it led and, not because it inherently amounts to any confession of a crime. Consequently, the question whether it was voluntarily made after arrest, or whether accused was earlier under Police influence for some time, is really not material: 1960 Cr.L.J. 1344: A.I.R. 1960 Mad. 462.

Where there is immediate connection between discovery and statement made to a Police Officer, the latter is admissible in evidence: 20 Cr.L.J. 305: 50 I.C. 481.

If the discoveries were made in consequence of the information supplied by the accused, the statements made by them are admissible: A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 434. A statement is admissible in evidence under S. 27 if as a consequence of it, there is discovery incriminating the person making the statement: 72 P.L.R. 1916: 33 I.C. 823. See also 16 Cr.L.J. 545: 11 P.R. 1915 (Cr.); 47 P.L.R. 254.

Where in consequence of the information supplied by the accused, some fire-arms were recovered from a place shown by the accused, the discovery of the fire-arms at the instance of the accused was genuine and in no respect in contravention of the provisions of S. 27: 1958 Cr.L.J. 1084: A.I.R. 1958 Punj. 294.

Where before recording the confession, the Magistrate gave all due caution to the indigent accused that if he made a confessional statement that might be used against him and thereafter he recorded the confession in his chamber and further there was a general corroboration to the confessional statement, held, as such the confession was not only voluntary but it was trust-worthy and non-engagement of a defence counsel at the State expenses at the stage of recording confession did not cause any miscarriage of justice: 1992 Cr.L.J. 367 (Cal.) (D.B.).

Information received from accused leading to discovery of weapon of murder—There is no presumption that the information was the result of Police compulsion—Case of accused that the whole thing was false and not that information was the result of compulsion—Information is not violative of Art. 20 (3) and is admissible under S. 27, Evidence Act: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1362 (Ker.).

Where (i) the total period of interrogation was only about two hours, (ii) the interrogation was made in the presence of many persons, and (iii) the interrogation was regarding the discovery of the handle of the knife of which the blade was found lying near the dead body, held, the statement was not only voluntary but it fell within the purview of S. 27 in as much as the "fact discovered" was the place from which the various articles were produced by the accused and his knowledge of it. As the information given by him related to that important fact, it was clearly admissible under S. 27: A.I.R. 1978 S.C. 1183: 1978 Cr.L.J. 1107: (1978) 3 S.C.C. 279.

Voluntary confessions leading to discovery of facts alone are admissible; where the accused, in the Police custody, was persistently questioned before he furnished the information, held, his statement could not be deemed to be voluntary: (1975) 1 An.W.R. 304 (D.B).

Where disclosure, leading to discovery was made while the accused was handcuffed, held, disclosure was made under duress, pressure or threats and, therefore, it was not admissible in law in terms of Art. 20, Part. III of the Constitution: 1992 Cr.L.J. 3034 (Bom.) (D.B.).

Recovery made after the accused has remained in Police custody for a long period is generally viewed with suspicion and is attributed to use of third degree methods or even planting by the Police: (1967) 5 Del.L.T. 68; (1990) 42 Del.L.T. 1 (D.B.).

Where facts disclosed point to the accused having been subjected to third degree methods prior to the discovery of a dead body, the genuineness of the discovery is rendered doubtful and the discovery becomes worthless as a piece of evidence. The reason is that although discovery by itself is a guarantee of the genuineness of the discovery, there may be cases where the circumstances are such that the fact that the discovery was induced by a promise would raise a doubt as to genuineness of the discovery and render the evidence almost worthless: 1957 Cr.L.J. 431: 1957 All.L.J. 330: 1957 All.W.R. (H.C.) 114: A.I.R. 1957 All. 197.

One of the purposes of remanding the accused to Police custody is to enable the Police to effectively investigate the case and for that purpose, if need be, to question the accused from time to time. Merely because the Investigating Officer might have interrogated or questioned the accused, a number of times, during the course of the investigation, that would not render the statement made by the accused before the Investigating Officer involuntary or a statement extracted from the accused by mentally torturing him: 1992 Cr.L.J. 3298 (Guj.) (D.B.).

'Fact discovered'—Statement of accused that the articles were kept by him in one of the rooms in P.W. 32's house—Articles not found on search—Subsequently articles were recovered on the basis of a statement given by P.W. 31—Recovery could not be treated as a recovery in pursuance of the information supplied by the accused—Recovery not one under S. 27: 1970 M.L.J. (Cr.) 123.

S. 27 often times has been mis-used by the investigating agency and the Courts should be vigilant about the circumvention of its provisions. The condition necessary to bring the section into operation is that discovery of a fact in consequence of the information given by a person accused of an offence in the custody of a Police Officer must be deposed to and thereupon so much of the information as relates distinctly to the fact thereby discovered must be proved. If a fact is actually discovered in consequence of information given, some guarantee is afforded thereby that the information was true, and accordingly can be safely allowed to be given in evidence. There is no doubt that the portions of the confessional statement relating to the removal of the chains from the two ladies would be clearly inadmissible. The learned Magistrate was not justified in relying upon the whole of the statement contained in Exhibit P-3. But the other portion is admissible in evidence under S. 27: 1969 M.L.J. (Cr.) 374: 17 Law Rep. 803 (Mys.).

Murder case—Accused informing Police about their having concealed pieces of rope—Evidence disclosing that the dead body was tied with ropes—Discovery of ropes given—Statement admissible under S. 27. 1969 Cr.L.J. 1255: A.I.R. 1969 Ori. 245.

A confessional statement made by the accused and recorded by the Police Officer to whom it is made is not taken out of statements admissible under S. 27 merely because it is attested by witnesses present at the time: (1943) 56 Mad.L.W. 479 (1): (1943) 2 M.L.J. 293. See also 20 Mys.L.J. 367.

It does not follow that a statement falling under S. 27 by an accused person is inadmissible, because it is made by him to a Sub-Inspector of Police at an interview in violation of the Jail Rules and Police Standing Orders: 1943 Mad.W.N. 11: A.I.R. 1943 Mad. 315. See also (1950) 1 M.L.J. 467.

5. Information by accused—Evidentiary value of.—Whatever statement is attributed to an accused person in Police custody giving information leading to the discovery must be proved by witnesses like any other fact. S. 27 is enacted as a qualifying rule of evidence and the Courts should be jealous in safeguarding the purpose and object of the provisions embodied in Ss. 25 and 26. It is the duty of the Courts to ascertain from the witnesses the exact words of the accused in which information was conveyed to the Police Officer which led to any discovery and to find out if the Investigating Officer had written the statement of the accused in the words of the accused or in his own words. In case there is any doubt on the point, the accused person will be entitled to its benefit. But the whole evidence relating to discovery will be rendered doubtful, if there is evidence of accused persons having been subjected to third degree methods prior to the discovery; and if the stolen property is recovered from a place not inside the house of an accused person but from some place outside it, the possibility that the Police had planted it there and compelled the accused person under threat to point out that place will have to be excluded before any reliance can be placed upon it: 1958 M.P.C. 648: 1958 M.P.L.J. 745: 1958 Jab.L.J. 900: 1959 Cr.L.J. 48: A.I.R. 1959 Madh. Pra. 17.

Statement made by accused in presence of village Gountia about concealment of weapons used for murder—Statement is admissible in evidence under S. 27 of Evidence Act: (1965) 1 Cr.L.J. 744: A.I.R. 1965 Ori. 99.

S. 27 of the Evidence Act is an exception to Ss. 25 and 26 of the Act which prohibit proof of confession made to a Police Officer while in Police custody, unless it is made in the immediate presence of a Magistrate. S. 27, however, allows that part of a statement made by the accused to the Police which 'relates distinctly to the fact thereby discovered' to be proved even though it may amount to confession. In other words, a confessional statement made before the Police, if it relates distinctly to fact thereby discovered, may be proved under S. 27 of the Evidence Act. The emphasis is not on the actual statement made by the accused, but on the information connected with the knowledge of the accused as to the place from which the object is produced. All that is necessary for the purpose of S. 27 is that the accused in custody shall give some information which shall relate to the fact thereby discovered. The law does not require anything more than that. The 'discovery' under the section not only embraces the knowledge of the accused as to the place, but also the place from which the articles are produced. Hence, where the accused are charged under S. 411 of the Penal Code, the evidence regarding the discovery of the stolen articles at the instance of the accused, is admissible under S. 27 of the Evidence Act: (1964) 6 Ori.J.D. 284.

There are four possibilities which have to be guarded against in the case of any recovery: (1) the complainant might have been persuaded by the Police to state in the first information report that property which in fact was not stolen had been stolen and to hand over such property to the Police to be used in fabricating recoveries from the accused persons; (2) the Police might have obtained property similar to the stolen property from the complainant or some one else and used it for the purpose of fabricating the recoveries. In considering this hypothesis regard must necessarily be had to the nature and value of the property recovered; (3) the Police might have suppressed some of the stolen property recovered from an accused person and utilized it in inventing a recovery from another accused person; (4) the property might have been recovered from a third party and used by the Police in one of the impugned recoveries: 1956 Cr.L.J. 1134: A.I.R. 1956 Ajmer 57.

Recovery of incriminating articles pursuant to the information given by the accused is an important piece of evidence against him. The nature of the recovered articles, the manner of the acquisition by the accused, on the basis of whose information they were recovered, length of the intervening period between the disappearance of the articles from the owner and its recovery are some of the crucial aspects to be adverted to by the Court: (1995) 1 Ker.L.J. 265: 1995 Cr.L.J. 1880 (D.B.).

The word 'information' cannot be used as synonymous with the word 'statement'. The word 'information' as distinct from the word 'statement' connotes two things, namely, a statement or means employed for imparting knowledge possessed by one person to another, and the knowledge so derived by other person: 115 I.C. 1: A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 338.

There is nothing is S. 27 that only that disclosure shall be admissible which is made at the instance (pointing) of the accused. It is just possible that the accused may give some information and the Police Officer thereafter may discover that object of which he has no previous knowledge, then though there has been no pointing out by the accused, yet it can be said that the disclosure took place in consequence of the information given by the accused: I.L.R. (1976) 26 Raj. 719: 1976 Raj.L.W. 290: 1976 Cr.L.R. 386.

For establishing possession, the statement under S. 27 would have been "I have concealed a key or I have placed a key which I am willing to produce". Unless it is an admitted fact that it is he who has placed it or concealed it, possession cannot be imputed to him. Production can impute knowledge. If a person has a knowledge that a particular thing is lying at a particular place, that will only establish that he knew that at a particular place a particular thing is lying. This would impute knowledge and not possession: (1984) 25 Guj.L.R. 118: (1983) 3 Guj.L.H. 1053.

Where there was no information being given by the accused regarding the silver pajeb being given by him to any particular person or being concealed by him at any particular place from where he could get the same recovered, held, such a disclosure statement was not admissible in evidence: (1992) 47 Del.L.T. 239.

The mere knowledge of the place of concealment does not show that the person having such knowledge actually received the stolen articles or participated in the act of concealment: A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 238 (2). Where on a proper view of S. 27 the only portion of the statement made to the Police by an accused charged with murder was 'I have buried in the margin of the eastern ridge of my sugarcane garden the knife. If you come with me I shall take and give it' and there was no other evidence connecting the knife or the accused with the murder and the chemical analysis of the knife did not disclose stains of human blood. Held, that the statement did not connect the accused with the murder and in the circumstances the charge of murder cannot be held to have been proved: A.I.R. 1948 Mad. 242: (1947) 2 M.L.J. 427.

To make the discovery incriminating it has to be shown that the concealment was made within knowledge or consent of the accused and he disclosed the fact to the Investigating Officer on interrogation: (1990-2) 38 B.L.J.R. 1242 (D.B.).

Where the statement accompanying the discovery is woefully vague to identify the authorship of concealment, held, the pointing out of the weapon may at best prove the accused's knowledge as to where the weapon was kept and not that he used it in the offence: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 911: (1981) 2 S.C.C. 166.

Mere recovery of a weapon on information furnished by the accused does not attract S. 27 unless it is also established that the incriminating article was also concealed by him; if no such information is furnished by the accused, no criminal nexus between him and offence is established: (1984) 25 Guj.L.R. 78.

A single circumstance of recovery of a pistol from one of the accused will not be enough to act upon for convicting but one out of eleven accused: A.I.R. 1983 S.C. 349: (1983) 2 S.C.C. 305.

The recovery of weapon is incriminating not because it was effected at the accused's instance but because it tends to connect him with the authorship of concealment, namely, that the information leading to its discovery was of the person who had concealed it. Thus, in case of two accused, it is possible that the one at whose instance the weapon is recovered may have only the knowledge of the place of concealment; to incriminate the accused in crime it must be shown that the accused himself had concealed the weapon; thus, when two constructions are possible, viz., (i) that he himself had concealed it, or (ii) he only had the knowledge of its being hidden there, held, the benefit of doubt should be given to the accused. [Cr. A. No. 1329 of 1971 (Bom.), Reversed]: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 1949.

Where at the bank of the river where the dead body was thrown, broken teeth and parts of the human body were lying, held, when only incriminating circumstance against the accused was his pointing out the place where the dead body had been thrown, same was of no consequence as anyone who saw those parts of the body could have inferred that the dead body must have been thrown into the river near about that place: A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 2016.

Mere recovery of dead body at the instance of the accused, held, would not necessarily lead to the conclusion of commission of murder by him: (1987) 2 Crimes 376 (Ori.). Recovery of a dead body from the spot pointed out by the accused to the Police, held, is capable of three hypotheses: (i) he had seen some one placing the body there; (ii) someone had told him that the dead body was lying there; or (iii) the accused himself had placed it there. In order to determine as to which of the three is reasonable and probable, the Court must consider the site where the body was placed or buried: (1978) 80 Punj.L.R. 106. See also 1983 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 167 (All.).

Where the dead body is discovered pursuant to the accused's disclosure statement, held, it only proves the dead body's recovery at the accused's instance, nothing more; the accused cannot be convicted of murder on such evidence alone. [1966 S.C.D. 243, Foll.]: (1985) 59 Cut.L.T. 93.

Discovery of dead body and confession—Evidentiary value: A.I.R. 1957 All. 197: 1957 Cr.L.J. 431.

The information acting as the 'cause' and the discovery of 'fact' operating as the immediate and proximate 'effect' of the information, when put together, should only lead to a legitimate inference; information about the whereabouts of the dead body (subject to identification in case of dispute) and its consequent discovery may, in the absence of cogent exculpatory explanation, in some cases may lead to the inference of concealment by the informant and his involvement in the crime; but if information only leads to the inference of the informant's knowledge about the presence of the dead body without his involvement in the crime, it is not by itself sufficient to fix criminality; the remaining links will have to be supplied by the prosecution because the informant's knowledge may be that somebody else had placed the dead body there; but if authorship of the concealment is also part of the information given by the accused that is an additional circumstance to fix criminality on him: (1989) 1 Ker.L.J. 253: 1990 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 124 (D.B.).

Where the statement of an accused before Police is clean as to his commission of crime with assurance to produce or point out the dead body or articles concerned in the crime and the same is discovered being led by the accused, and such statement with his act of discovery being proved by reliable witnesses, the discovery of dead body or article becomes a strong circumstance towards his guilt. [1986 Cr.L.J. 1057 (Gau.), Foll.]: 1989 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 200 (Gau.) (D.B.).

Discovery of dead body at the instance of the accused under S. 27 is an important factor which would support the prosecution case regarding corpus delicti: 1993 Cr.L.J. 3151 (Ker.) (D.B.).

Where Police Officer failed to testify that recovery of the dead body was effected on the basis of information given by the accused, held, it could not be contended that the recovery was as per S. 27; there was no information which could be said to be distinctly related to the dead body's discovery: 1981 Cr.L.J. 430 (D.B.).

Murder charge—Statements by accused while in Police custody as to where the dead bodies were and where valuables robbed from murdered persons were hidden—Discovery of dead bodies and valuables by accused themselves after the statements—Statements held admissible under S. 27: (1963) 2 S.C.R. 890: (1963) 2 S.C.J. 422: 1963 M.L.J. (Cr.) 509.

The accused's statement to the Police that he could point out the places where arms and ammunition relating to the offence were kept, held, is admissible: 1977 Cr.L.J. 1508 (Cal.) (D.B.).

Where the accused, after having confessed to the Police that he had committed the murder, was leading the Police to the murder site but the deceased's son had meanwhile found the dead body before arrival of the Police party, held, the dead body's discovery could not be attributed to the accused's disclosure statement: 1981 Cr.L.J. 1734 (Gau.) (D.B).

Where an accused charged with murder had given information to the Police that he had concealed the stick, the weapon of murder, in his cow-shed about 13 meters from his house, when in fact he had thrown the stick in the cow-shed and not concealed it there, held, since the Police was not aware about the place where the stick was lying, its recovery by the accused was admissible under S. 27, which is based on the confirmation by subsequent facts; the production of the stick by the accused is also admissible as res gestae, that is, a closely connected subsequent fact: 1969 Cr.L.J. 1393: A.I.R. 1969 Goa 116.

Weapons discovered from place of concealment on being pointed out by accused—They must be considered to be in exclusive possession of accused—Discovery can be made as a relevant factor to be used against accused under S. 27: 6 Sau.L.R. 421: A.I.R. 1954 Sau. 115.

Accused who had admitted having killed the deceased told the Police that he threw away the knife with which he inflicted stab wounds near a certain tank. When Police went near the tank, while they were searching for the knife they got information from a girl there, that she had found a knife which she gave to another person. Upon her information the Police went to this person and recovered the knife from him who admitted that what the girl said was true. Held, that what is made admissible in evidence by S. 27 is so much of the information received from an accused person by a Police Officer as relates distinctly to any fact discovered in consequence of the said information. The relevancy of the said information and of the fact discovered is governed by other provisions of the Evidence Act, in this case, the fact discovered was the knife and if it was discovered consequent on any information received from the accused, so much of the information which distinctly related to its discovery was admissible in evidence. Whether it was discovered consequent on the said information was mainly a question of fact. Here it was the information which the accused gave to the Police to the effect that he had thrown away the knife by the side of the tank, which caused them to search the premises of the tank. It was during the course of that search that the Police got the further information that the knife had been picked up from that place by the girl, and handed over to another. Thus, the information received from the accused led to the discovery of the knife: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1362: I.L.R. (1968) 2 Ker. 303: 1969 M.L.J. (Cr.) 553.

Information is actually the content or substance of a statement and may be the same in several statements which may substantially be repetitions. The discovery for the purposes of S. 27 need not be the direct consequence of this or that statement, but should be the direct consequence of this or that information. So, where the information is the same, it is immaterial if the statement is repeated: 1961 M.P.C. 178: 1961 M.P.L.J. 353: (1961) 2 Cr.L.J. 238.

Information supplied by accused leading to discovery: 1967 Cr.L.J. 1332: A.I.R. 1967 Ker. 197.

Where an accused person does some act such as pointing out in criminating articles and taking them out from the places where they were hidden, and accompanies his act by certain statements, evidence of the act itself is no doubt admissible; but whether the statements are admissible or not would depend on whether they distinctly relate to the discovery. Even when they are directly explanatory of the act, they cannot be admitted, because the explanation, however, closely connected with the fact, does not relate to the discovery itself, and hence the statements have to be ignored: 1952 Cr.L.J. 986: A.I.R. 1952 Vindh. Pra. 42.

Certain articles stolen in a dacoity were found in the house of D. At the time of recovery of the articles, the accused who was D's brother, made a statement that it was he who had handed over these articles to D.

Held, that the fact that the accused gave the property to his brother D, might represent the history of the matter but could not be a circumstance admissible under S. 27, Evidence Act: 1960 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 197.

Statement of the accused that he had concealed the ornaments in a one foot high grass near a particular tree, held, is admissible in evidence under S. 27: 1985 Cr.L.R. 579 (Raj.). See also 1991 Cr.L.J. 2941 (Ker.) (D.B.); 1991 Cr.L.J. 570 (Ker.) (D.B.).

The mere fact that the ornaments, which the deceased was wearing, were recovered at the instance of the accused, held, is not enough for inferring that it was accused who murdered him: (1986) 3 Crimes 350 (Madh. Pra.).

When premises were virtually taken charge of by the Police even before any information by the accused was given, held, theory of discovery consequent upon the information given by the accused stands shattered: (1985) 2 Bom.C.R. 518 (D.B.). See also 1991 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 25 (Ker.) (D.B.).

The statement of accused that he would show the place where he had thrown the arrow is admissible under S. 27: (1983) 55 Cut.L.T. 254 (D.B.).

Statement of accused—Admissibility of in evidence: I.L.R. (1961) 1 Andh. Pra. 123: (1963) 1 Cr.L.J. 142: A.I.R. 1963 Andh. Pra. 87.

Testimonial compulsion—Statement by accused in Police custody admitted in evidence under S. 27—Fact of prolonged interrogation by Police not enough to attract Art. 20(3): (1963) 4 Guj.L.R. 543: (1963) 2 Cr.L.J. 16: A.I.R. 1963 Guj. 159.

Police Officer asking accused whether he knew of certain dacoity—Accused taking Officer to grain bin and producing ornaments—Conduct of accused even if not covered by S. 27 is covered by Ss. 7, 8 and 9: 1965 All.L.J. 344.

Proof of accused holding deceased by neck—Deceased missing thereafter—Accused in Police custody stating that he had thrown dead body into cave—Discovery of dead body from cave—Held, that deceased died as result of homicide of which accused was author: (1965) 7 Ori.J.D. 170: 1965 All.Cr.R. 258: 1965 All.W.R. (Supp.) 11: 31 Cut.L.T. 229.

The disclosure statement made by accused upon interrogation by an Investigating Police Officer in the presence of a disinterested witness is admissible in evidence against the accused, even if the Interrogating Officer, for some reason or the other cannot be examined, when the person in whose presence the statement was made is examined, S. 27 which is an exception to Ss. 25 and 26 nowhere lays down that to prove a disclosure statement it is obligatory to examine the Investigating Officer who interrogated the accused. The requirement of this section is that the person when he makes the disclosure statement should be accused of an offence and should be in custody of a Police Officer. Even then only so much of the information, whether it amounts to a confession or not, as relates distinctly to the fact thereby discovered, can be proved: (1965) 67 Punj.L.R. 497: I.L.R. (1965) 2 Punj. 224: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 699.

The condition necessary to bring S. 27 into operation is the discovery of a fact in consequence of an information received from a person, accused of an offence in the custody of a Police Officer—Thus, only that part of the information is admissible which leads to the discovery of a certain fact in consequence of the information received from the accused but no more. The admissibility of the information depends entirely on the exact nature of the fact discovered in pursuance of such information.

Where the accused produced the murder weapon and cut leg of the deceased in the Police Station but the prosecution did not prove that the murder weapon belonged to the accused, production of those articles cannot lead to the only conclusion that he committed the murder: 1969 Pat.L.J.R. 364: 1969 B.L.J.R. 578.

Though a person points out a place not his own where stolen property is concealed, the Court should not conclude that the person had received or retained it: 39 I.C. 330: 1 P.R. (1917) (Cr.).

Where a woman in Police custody though not formally arrested, disclosed during the night that she had concealed the murder weapon under grass at a certain place; the matter was not then pursued; on her formal arrest next morning, her formal disclosure statement was recorded; thereafter accompanied by the Panchas and the Police Officer, she went to the place and took out the weapon from under the grass, held, as the accused had given the same information before and after her formal arrest, the recovery effected in pursuance thereof was not irregular: 1971 M.P.L.J. 829 (D.B.).

Where the accused, while in the Police custody, did not furnish any information leading to recovery rather he just pointed out the weapon with which the alleged murder was committed, held, the recovery of the weapon was not admissible in evidence under S. 27: 1993 Cr.L.J. 551 (All.) (D.B.).

Where the statement made by the accused before the Police that he had hidden the pistol in the roof resulted in the discovery of it, held, that it was admissible under S. 27: A.I.R. 1956 Bom. 217: 1956 Cr.L.J. 487.

Attention of jury drawn only to portion of statement of accused which led to discovery of skeleton and knife, etc.—Extracts from decisions in A.I.R. 1947 P.C. 67 and A.I.R. 1960 S.C. 1125, indicating scope of S. 27 quoted to the jury—Held, no misdirection: 1964 M.L.J. (Cr.) 19: 1963 (Supp.) 2 S.C.R. 852: A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 1074.

Accused making certain statement before discovery of dead body — Statement recorded by Police constable—Constable stating that he had already recorded statement wherein accused had disclosed everything—Such statement not on record—Subsequent statement held could not be said to be statement which led to discovery of dead body and was, therefore, inadmissible. According to witness accused stating that he could discover dead body of deceased since he alongwith four others had buried it—Latter portion of statement is inadmissible under S. 27: 1953 Cr.L.J. 708: A.I.R. 1953 Bilaspur 3.

Where the appellant made a statement in the presence of the panchas that he and his brothers had buried the dead body and that he would point it out and the dead body was discovered from his field, the appellant himself joining in the digging, the statement so far as he involved himself, would be clearly admissible, though so far as the appellant involved his brothers, the statement would not be admissible: 1956 Cr.L.J. 715: A.I.R. 1956 Bom. 393.

The accused was produced before the Sub-Inspector of Police in connection with the murder of a woman. He then made a statement that he has buried the ear-rings of the deceased near a pipul tree and they were recovered from the place pointed out by him. However, in the confession made by him to the Magistrate he did not say that he retained possession of the ear-rings. The husband of the deceased who went to another village a fortnight before her death gave evidence that he saw the deceased wearing those ear-rings three or four days before his departure. The goldsmith who made them for her also gave evidence. Still the Sessions Judge did not accept the evidence of recovery as showing the connection of accused with the crime on the ground that there was no evidence to show that the deceased was wearing them at the time when the crime was committed. He drew a distinction between possession and knowledge and held that the accused merely knew where the ear-rings were concealed but did not possess them. Held, that the distinction drawn by the Sessions Judge was not justified by the evidence in the record and the reasons given by him for not accepting the evidence of recovery were fantastic. The statement of the accused that he had buried the ear-rings was admissible in evidence under S. 27 and the High Court was right in holding that the recovery was a circumstance which connected the accused with the crime: 1957 Cr.L.J. 481: A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 216.

Where, in a murder charge, the appellant (accused) had stated to the Police that he would give the clothes of the deceased, which he had placed in a pit above a brick-kiln, and thereafter, the appellant, in the presence of witnesses, dug the pit in the brick kiln and took out the clothes, which were identified as the clothes of the deceased, the statement of the appellant to the Police is admissible: 1957 Cr.L.J. 328: A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 211.

Where the accused had stated that "Revolver is concealed at Dadar.....I will point out the place and revolver", held, that statement is capable of an interpretation that the accused had the knowledge about the concealment of the revolver at the particular place from where it was got recovered and not that he had concealed the same; the accused could not be said to be in conscious possession of the revolver and the cartridge: 1995 Cr.L.J. 2632 (S.C.).

Where on information received that the accused was indulging in illicit distillation activities, the Sub-Inspector of Police proceeded to the village of the accused who after being arrested took him to a place in front of his house and pointed out a spot, from where a pot with fermented wash kept buried was dug out, the discovery made was as a consequence of the information given by the accused and such information may be proved under S. 27: 1957 M.L.J. (Cr.) 829: 1958 Cr.L.J. 1196: A.I.R. 1958 Mad. 451.

Conviction of the accused under S. 411, I.P.Code was based on the basis of an alleged discovery of a gun from a well in a field on the outskirts of a village in pursuance of a confessional statement made by him, which the prosecution sought to introduce under S. 27 of the Indian Evidence Act. The gun was brought out alongwith other guns and a sword by N, a prosecution witness, from the well which was accessible to all. The gun had been satisfactorily identified. The only question was whether its recovery could be said to be at the instance of the accused.

Held, that in order to permit an inference that the accused was in possession of the incriminating gun, the prosecution had to prove that part of the confessional statement (as far as possible in the words of the appellant) which related to the fact thereby discovered. But instead of proving that, it had only sought to prove the memorandum itself as if by itself that was substantive evidence. When the memorandum alone was thus sought to be proved, there was no guarantee whether the accused had really made any statement which led to the discovery. From the material on record it had not been proved that the accused was in possession of the gun to warrant his conviction under S. 411, I.P. Code: 1962 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 43.

Where the instrument was an instrument of the kind possessed ordinarily by persons in the village, situation and condition of the hut were such as to afford easy access and entry to any one and the accused persons were living together and both were accused of the murder, held, that the production of the instrument by one of the accused was not by itself sufficient to incriminate him though it might raise suspicion. It only implied that he was aware of the instrument being kept or left in the hut. As means of connecting the accused with the offence its value depended on the other evidence: I.L.R. (1953) Mys. 625: A.I.R. 1954 Mys. 81.

6. Statements admissible under section 27—Against whom can be used.—Statements admissible under S. 27 are not admissible against the persons other than maker of the statements: 1992 Cr.L.J. 2190: (1992) 2 Crimes 735 (Pat.); (1984) 26 Del.L.T. 109; (1983) 23 Del.L.T. 487.

Statements which are admissible under S. 27 can be proved only against the person who made them. The section does not sanction the letting in of the statement of one person as evidence against another person: I.L.R. (1944) 2 Cal. 76. See also A.I.R. 1945 Oudh 235; 49 Mys.H.C.R. 444.

Discovery statement made by one accused cannot be used against the non-maker accused persons but can be used only against the maker thereof and he only can be fastened with the knowledge of the concealment of the dead bodies: (1990-2) 38 B.L.J.R. 1242: 1991 Cr.L.J. 1030 (D.B.); (1992-2) 12 Guj.L.H. 330: 1993 Cr.L.J. 730: 1992 Cr.L.R. 519.

What is permitted to be proved having the information received from the accused pursuant to which discovery is made, is intended to be proved against such accused and not against non-informant co-accused: 1979 Bom.C.R. 680 (D.B.).

Where an accused who had retracted his confession was acquitted from the charge under S. 302 read with S. 120-B of the Indian Penal Code in appeal by the Supreme Court, held, his confession cannot be used against another co-accused convicted by the lower Court for the offence under S. 302 read with S. 34 of the Code; the two accused were not charged for the same offence: A.I.R. 1984 S.C. 1793.

The statement of a co-accused person in the course of investigation is not and cannot be treated as evidence being hit by the provision contained in S. 162 of the Code to the effect that no statement made by any person to a Police Officer in the course of investigation shall be used for any purpose save as provided therein. The statement of a co-accused person is, therefore, inadmissible in evidence against other accused: (1983) 56 Cut.L.T. 405.

Extent of information admissible—Statement of person, in custody of Police, made to Police Officer, is not admissible against another person: I.L.R. (1965) 1 Punj. 677: (1965) 67 Punj.L.R. 359.

Recovery of dagger in pursuance of confession of accused 2—Confession not admissible against accused 1 even if first accused's ownership of dagger is taken to be established: 1962 Ker.L.T. 120: A.I.R. 1963 Ker. 54: 1963 M.L.J. (Cr.) 194.

Statement of accused in Police custody cannot be admissible unless covered by exception provided for by section—Only fact of discovery assures correctness of confession—Information by co-accused regarding place of stolen property, lying with accused—Held, recovery was not result of any statement made by accused within the meaning of S. 27: 1968 All.W.R. (H.C.) 100: 1968 All.Cr.R. 91.

7. How much of statement is admissible.—When a statement made to a Police Officer by a person in Police custody, leads to the discovery of the material objects in pursuance of the said statement that will alone be admissible under S. 27. The further statements of the accused to the effect that they attacked and killed the deceased with certain weapons could not be admitted: 1977 Cr.L.J. 1309 (Gau.) (D.B).

The use of the words 'so much of such information' in S. 27 clearly postulate that long and detailed statements unconnected with any fact thereby discovered are not to be proved. That information alone is provable which advances the investigation of the Police in any way. It should be information of a relevant fact and there must be some fact discovered as a result of the information. It is for the Investigating Officer to record the words of the accused persons and it is for the Court to see what portion or portions should be allowed to be proved. It is not for the Investigating Officer to make a selection. He must record the information given by the accused. It is for the Court to consider the admissibility of the information. In doing so the Court must not allow extensive statements unconnected with any fact discovered thereby to be tendered in evidence: I.L.R. (1948) Nag. 57: A.I.R. 1948 Nag. 78.

A statement by the accused that he had committed the offence does not fall within S. 27 because such a statement is not at all required to lead up to the production of property. If, however, the accused states that he would show the property belonging to the victim and leads to the recovery of such property, then that statement would be admissible: (1981) 52 Cut.L.T. 126: 1981 Cr.L.J. 1452.

That much portion of the statement of the accused which leads to the discovery of weapon with which he is alleged to have killed the deceased is admissible in evidence: 1967 Cr.L.J. 1654: A.I.R. 1967 Manipur 41.

The statement of the accused that he could point out a spot and the blood stains would be found there is admissible, but not that it was at that spot that he committed the crime: 14 Cr.L.J. 190: 19 I.C. 190.

Where the accused stated that he had made the victim stand on the brink of the pit and pushed him therein, that he had picked up that very brick and hit it on the victim's head twice and that he could point out the pit, held, only the last statement is admissible; the earlier two statements, being pure and simple confession of the offence, and not related distinctly to the discovery of the pit, are inadmissible. It must be kept in mind that the 'fact discovered' includes the physical object produced and the accused having knowledge of the same prior to its recovery: (1979) 6 Cr.L.T. 43: (1978) 80 Punj.L.R. 56 (Del.) (D.B.).

Where a weapon was recovered from the accused under a seizure memo. in which it was recited that accused made the statement that he would show the weapon with which he assaulted the deceased, held, the first part in the seizure memo. would be inadmissible because the fact that accused assaulted the deceased is not discovered in pursuance of the information given by accused; it would be a confessional statement to Police Officer hit by S. 25: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 1042. See also 1971 Raj.L.W. 266; (1984) 26 Del.L.T. 109.

Where the accused stated that he had thrown the murder weapon in the well near his shop and when the weapon was recovered he was stated to have admitted further that it was the same one which he had thrown in the well and a part of it was cut by him, on the question of admissibility of the statement in evidence against the accused:

Held, no clear inference as to the guilt of the accused could be drawn from the facts of the recovery of the weapon, as the latter part of accused's statement as to identity of weapon and that he had cut part of that weapon was clearly inadmissible in evidence as no statement subsequent to the recovery was covered by S. 27 of the Evidence Act and the same had, therefore, to be ignored. In order that a statement may be admissible under S. 27 of the Evidence Act it must relate to such information as relates distinctly to the fact thereby discovered. The part of the statement of the accused to the effect that he had himself cut away a part of the handle of the weapon was not a statement of that description and it was, therefore, inadmissible: 1966 Cr.L.J. 369: A.I.R. 1966 All. 142.

Where in an F.I.R. lodged by the accused himself he stated that he had murdered his wife because of her bad character and that her dead body and the khurpi with which he killed her were later on recovered, held, only that part which led to recovery of the dead body and the khurpi was admissible under S. 27: 1977 Cr.L.J. 358: 1977 All.Cr.R. 29; 1973 All.W.R. 142: 1973 All.L.J. 251: 1973 Cr.L.J. 1478; 1979 W.L.N. (U.C.) 252 (Raj.) (D.B.).

The statement that accused had killed his brother with an axe would be clearly inadmissible. The words 'I removed and buried the dead body of the deceased in the Kuvewala field' and the fact of the discovery, which was the distinct result of this information, could be proved under S. 27 as accused could be deemed to be in the Police custody at the time when he made the statement in question. He was no longer a free man when he made the statement and led the persons including the Police patel and the panch witness to the Kuvewala field and discovered the dead body which was identified to be the deceased. The portion of the confessional statement, viz., 'I killed the deceased with the axe' must be excluded. But the rest of the statement, viz., that 'I had removed and buried the dead body in the Kuvewala field' alongwith the fact of the discovery must be held to have been duly proved by the prosecution: I.L.R. (1964) Guj. 954: (1965) 1 Cr.L.J. 30: (1965) 6 Guj.L.R. 129: A.I.R. 1965 Guj. 5.

Statement of accused leading to discovery of shirt — Statement that shirt belonged to murdered person is not admissible in evidence under S. 27 as it did not relate distinctly to discovery of shirt: 1967 Cr.L.J. 62: A.I.R. 1967 Him. Pra. 10.

Extent of information admissible—Theft case—Disclosure statement by accused that he had stolen ornaments from temple and after extracting gold from them had buried their copper linings in forest—Accused leading Police party to forest and digging out copper linings—Held, that part of the statement that he had stolen the ornaments was not admissible but the words that he had extracted gold from ornaments and had hidden copper linings were admissible under S. 27, as they related to the discovery of stolen articles and to the knowledge of the accused about them: (1964) 2 Cr.L.J. 293: A.I.R. 1964 Him. Pra. 27.

Where the accused stated "I will tell the place of deposit of articles which I took from ....", held, only the first part of the said statement, viz., 'I will tell the place of deposit' was the immediate and direct cause of the fact discovered and, therefore, only this portion was admissible under S. 27. The rest of the statement constituted only the past history of the articles or their theft by the accused; it was not the distinct and proximate cause of the discovery and had to be ruled out of evidence altogether: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 483: (1976) 1 S.C.C. 828: 1976 Cr.L.J. 481: (1976) 1 S.C.R. 715.

Where during investigation, the Investigating Officer recorded the statement of the accused in the form of a memorandum in which the accused gave out the details of the occurrence and also promised to point out the stone with which he had struck the deceased and on the strength of this information the stone was discovered at the scene of occurrence and was seized by the Police, held, that what was admissible was that the accused promised to point out the stone actually discovered on the spot. Anything which the accused stated to show the relevancy of the stone to the crime was ruled out and was not admissible in evidence: 1953 Cr.L.J. 217; A.I.R. 1953 Bhopal 1.

In the limited class of cases where the gist of the offence is possession, words such as 'I hid', 'I pledged', 'I sold', 'I gave', or 'I have kept' are admissible on the ground that words are distinctly related to the fact discovered though in the circumstances of the case they may amount to a confession. 'Hiding' and 'pledging' have been construed as showing possession because by doing either the hider or pledger shows that he has both animus and corpus and selling, giving or keeping have been construed as showing possession because no one who has no possession can sell or give or keep: 55 Cr.L.J. 583: A.I.R. 1954 Mad. 433; 1958 M.P.L.J. 745: A.I.R. 1959 Madh. Pra. 17; (1960) 62 Bom.L.R. 80: A.I.R. 1960 Bom. 263.

Where one of the accused in his confessional statement implicated himself as the person who decoyed the deceased to the rickyard and assisted in his murder by holding the legs and that after the murder he and others carried the dead body and buried it in the burial ground practically the entire statement will have to be excluded from the evidence except the portion in which it was stated that the body was buried at a particular place, which by itself will not in any manner incriminate any of the accused: (1947) 2 M.L.J. 295.

During the Police investigation following a dacoity, the accused made a statement to the Police Officer and the panchas which was recorded in the panchnama: "About three months ago I had gone alongwith some others and after breaking open the A Bank had stolen the amount therefrom and I will produce the amount that is with me now at my house at M of the A Bank Dacoity"... "So saying he took the panchas and the Police to M in a bus—and there at his house he produced Rs. 40 in currency notes". Held, that out of the statement made the only part admissible was "I will produce the money", and the rest was inadmissible under S. 27: (1946) 48 Bom.L.R. 542: A.I.R. 1947 Bom. 90. The charges against accused 1 were in the alternative: (1) that he broke into the house of P.W. 1, and committed theft of a bicycle; and (2) that he dishonestly possessed a dynamo and light which formed part of the bicycle alleged to have been stolen. The bicycle was stolen on 6th December, 1946. The bicycle itself was abandoned. Only the light and dynamo were removed. On the day of his arrest on 27th June, 1947, accused 1 made a statement to the Sub-Inspector of Police saying inter alia "I gave the dynamo and the light to V (accused 2). I got back from V the dynamo light and the dynamo stolen from my next house and sold them to X". The light was recovered from the possession of accused 2 but there was no independent evidence to show that accused 1 gave the light to accused 2. The dynamo was recovered from X who also gave evidence that he purchased it from accused 1. In the circumstances, held (1) the portion of the statement "I sold the dynamo to X", is admissible in evidence as the statement led to the discovery of the sale by accused 1 to X and the conviction of accused 1 for possession of the dynamo was justified on the admissible portion of the statement and the subsequent evidence of X that he purchased the dynamo from accused 1. (2) All that was discovered on the basis of the statement was possession of the light with accused 2 and not original possession with accused 1 and subsequent transfer of that possession from accused 1 to accused 2. So the portion of the statement, "I gave the dynamo and light to V" is not admissible in evidence, since the requirements of S. 27 were not satisfied: (1950) 1 M.L.J. 467: A.I.R. 1950 Mad. 613.

A person accused of murder had made the first information report himself. It consisted of three parts. In the first part the accused described the events that led to the murder. The second part dealt with the murder proper. The third part dealt with the subsequent events and in the end of the report the accused stated that he had put blood-stained axe in a fence. On a question as to the portions of the first information report that are admissible—Held, that the third portion of the report which led to the discovery of the axe would be admissible: A.I.R. 1950 Ajmer 75.

Where the fact discovered was that the grave in which the corpse of the deceased was interred dug up with a spade produced by the accused, the only part of the information given by him which can be admitted is that relating strictly to the discovery of the spade with which the grave was dug. It is not only possible to admit any statement by him that he murdered the deceased: 1937

Mad.W.N. 881. See also 1939 All.L.J. 732: A.I.R. 1939 All. 685.

It is legitimate to record evidence that an accused person said: 'I will point out certain property' if such statements lead to a discovery, but it is not legitimate to record as evidence that an accused said 'I will point out certain property which I obtained as my share of the booty in the dacoity': 44 I.C. 967: 19 Cr.L.J. 459.

An accused gave information to the Police in these words: 'I shall produce the lathi with which I killed Ismail'. It had been admitted as evidence under S. 27. The lathi which the accused handed over had no marks of blood whatsoever. Held, that if the mere fact of the lathi having been handed over to the Police might be relied upon, for the purpose of introducing an alleged confession made by the accused to the Police, the provisions of S. 26 would become nugatory: A.I.R. 1929 Sind 175. Where the accused surrendered himself to the Police Station and gave the first information in which he confessed to have murdered the deceased and also made a reference to the strong motive he had, produced an axe with which he murdered the deceased and also surrendered the blood-stained clothes he was wearing, held, that the statement relating to the surrender of the axe and of the blood-stained clothes would be admissible under S. 27: 6 Sau.L.R. 519: A.I.R. 1955 Sau. 25.

Per Siadat Ali Khan, J. (Reddy , J., dubitante)—Where the words used by the accused, according to certain P.Ws. panchas about the discovery of the body of the deceased in a well were that 'he will show where the child is', and, according to the Investigating Officer, were that 'he will point out the well where he threw the child', and it was contended that the entire statements were inadmissible and that as the information regarding the corpse being in the well was given in the first place to the Investigating Officer and then to the panchas, it could not be said that the discovery of the dead body by the panchas was done in pursuance of the information of it given by the accused. Held, that the statement deposed to by the P.Ws. was admissible in full and in the statement deposed to by the Investigating Officer the portion that 'he drew the child' was not admissible and the rest was admissible; (2) that investigation meant furnishing of evidence and if for that purpose the Investigating Officer called the panchas and the panchas heard the statement for the first time and then discovered the fact, it could not be said that the fact was not discovered in pursuance of information given by the accused: I.L.R. (1954) Hyd. 256: A.I.R. 1955 Hyd. 200.

Where a person accused of murder makes a statement in the presence of the Police and the panch that he had committed the murder and had removed the ornaments of the deceased, which he afterwards produces, the statement that the accused had committed the murder does not fall within S. 27, because it is not a statement required to lead up to the production of the property. It is quite enough to say that he would show the property which belonged to the deceased: (1943) 45 Bom.L.R. 884. See also A.I.R. 1943 Mad. 418: (1943) 1 M.L.J. 192; A.I.R. 1943 Mad. 661: (1943) 2 M.L.J. 283.

A statement made by the accused after he brought out certain clothes from a pond to the effect that he had removed them from the person of the deceased after he had killed him and thrown them into the pond, does not come under the purview of S. 27, Evidence Act, and is not admissible in evidence: A.I.R. 1952 Pepsu 23.

Recovery of blood-stained payjama and banyan of accused kept concealed by accused, at instance of accused—Statement of accused that 'I have kept concealed' my 'payjama and banyan'—Held, that statement that these articles belonged to accused was not admissible in evidence: (1965) 67 Punj. L.R. 1010: 1966 All.Cr.R. 41: 1966 All.W.R. (Supp.) 9.

Before pointing out the pile of stones under which the dead body lay buried, the accused stated to the Police Officer that the dead body had been buried by him, held, that the statement was admissible under S. 27: (1945) 47 Punj.L.R. 254.

8. "Accused of any offence".—[See also S. 24, Note 4; S. 25, Note 6, supra]. A husband assaulted his wife and his wife died as a result of it. The husband immediately went to the Police Station and reported that he went to the west facing room and finding his wife sitting, wounded her and she became senseless. On receipt of this information the Police went to the house and found the corpse. Held, that the statement to the Police was not admissible under S. 27 as the husband was not, at the time making the statement, a 'person accused of an offence' not having been charged with any offence then: I.L.R. 7 Pat. 411: A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 491. But see infra. The words information received from "a person accused of any offence" in S. 27 cannot be read to mean that he must be an accused when he gives the information but would include a person if he became subsequently an accused person, at the time when that statement is sought to be received in evidence against him: (1959) 61 Bom.L.R. 715: I.L.R. (1959) Bom. 1244: A.I.R. 1959 Bom. 534.

The expression 'accused of any offence' used in S. 27 is merely descriptive of the person against whom the information furnished could be used as evidence; it is not necessary that a formal accusation must have existed against him when he furnished the information; it would even include a person who subsequently became, and was, an accused when the information was sought to be proved against him in the trial. Thus, where a person directly furnished oral information to a Police Officer to be used as evidence against him, held, the person must be deemed to have submitted himself to Police custody. [1960 Cr.L.J. 1504 (S.C.) and 1959 Cr.L.J. 1419 (Bom.), Rel. on]: 1975 Cr.L.J. 354 (Gau.) (D.B.).

The term 'accused' for the purposes of S. 27, Evidence Act, cannot be narrowly interpreted. The expression 'accused of any offence' does postulate firstly an offence committed or alleged to have been committed and, secondly accusation of the person or persons therefor. The accusation may come even from the offender himself. It is a mistake to believe that a person cannot be the accused unless his name appears in the F.I.R. All that is required for purpose of S. 154, Cr.P.Code, is that there should be clear definite information about the commission of a cognizable offence to set the investigation machinery in motion. Investigation shall be taken up under the provision of S. 157, Cr.P.Code, even if there is reason for the Police Officer in charge of the station to suspect the commission of a cognizable offence, whether on the basis of such information or otherwise. Further the information required under S. 154, Cr.P.Code, need not contain the circumstances of the commission of the offence nor the names of the offenders or the witnesses, for, the main purpose of investigation is to ascertain these matters. Thus, from the time of the commission of offence whoever are shown or have come to the knowledge of the Police as offenders or suspected offenders are indeed the accused persons in law though it may be that these persons after arrest are released on security bonds during investigations under the provisions of S. 169 or S. 170, Cr.P.Code. In order to attract the provisions of S. 27, Evidence Act, the facts must beyond controversy satisfy all the conditions, one of which is that the person must at the time be a person accused of an offence; but it is not necessary that his name must be found in the F.I.R. Hence, a person whose name is not mentioned in the F.I.R. as the culprit but who is arrested by the Police during the investigation after ascertaining his complicity is an accused person within the meaning of Ss. 167 and 169, Cr.P.Code, whether he be forwarded to the Magistrate or not. A statement made by him leading to discovery while he was in custody would be admissible under S. 27, Evidence Act: (1957) 2 An.W.R. 63: 1957 M.L.J. (Cr.) 368: A.I.R. 1958 Andh. Pra. 37.

9. Use of First Information Report for purposes of section 27.—The contention that the first information report is inadmissible in evidence for purposes of S. 27, Evidence Act, is not correct. If the first information report contains information which satisfies the requirements of S. 27, it can be used for that purpose: 1963 Jab.L.J. 137: 1962 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 317: (1964) 1 Cr.L.J. 596.

First information by accused followed by discovery—Information admissible under S. 27, Evidence Act—(Obiter): 1960 All.L.J. 721.

First Information Report by accused—Only that part of report which is covered by S. 27 is admissible in evidence: 1968 Cr.L.J. 15: A.I.R. 1968 All. 37. See also 1981 M.P.W.N. 106; 1977 All.Cr.R. 29.

First Information Report—Value and use of—First information by accused containing confession—How far admissible in evidence: 1966 M.L.J. (Cr.) 134: 1966 Cr.L.J. 100: A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 119. See also S. 21, Note 6; S. 24, Note 1; S. 25, Note 3, supra.

10. "Leading to discovery".—Statement leading to discovery not immediately but ultimately admissible: 1940 Mad.W.N. 163: A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 290.

Statement leading to discovery—What constitutes—Fact discovered not because of statement made but due to act of another—Statement not admissible: A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 744: (1940) 1 M.L.J. 758. See also 1941 Mad.W.N. 956: A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 237; 50 Mys.H.C.R. 106; 49 Mys.H.C.R. 444.

Statement leading to discovery—Prisoner tutored—Whole force of recovery artificial—Discovery cannot be said to be made in consequence of statement: I.L.R. (1954) Patiala 316: A.I.R. 1955 Pepsu 33.

11. "Discovered"—Meaning of.—The recovery of the articles cannot be described as a discovery under S. 27, where they are recovered from any hidden place and if in the normal course of investigation the investigating agency is bound to see them and take them in possession without the accused making any statement of pointing them out. It has become the normal device of the investigating agency to turn an ordinary recovery into a discovery in order to utilise the provisions of S. 27 against an accused person: 1958 Cr.L.J. 462: A.I.R. 1958 All. 293.

The incriminating statements made by accused before the Police Officer are hit by Ss. 25 and 26 of the Evidence Act. The statements made by him such as relating to the weapon used by him in the commission of the offence and clothes put on by him at that time are incriminating statements suggestive of his showing the weapon which he used in committing the offence and also relating to the clothes put on by him at the time of commission of the offence. The statements in the case were made before the panchas in the presence of Police Officer at the Police Station and were not statements leading to discovery of the articles so as to come within the purview of S. 27. 'Discovery' implies finding out a thing from being concealed or secreted which cannot be easily seen or discovered on making a search of the house or so. It should lead to the discovery of such articles only on the basis of the information given by the accused persons. It is then that it can be called as discovered in consequence of that information. Where the articles were easily seen lying and an effort was necessary to find out the same except going to the house of the accused, no question of discovery of those articles would arise: (1966) 7 Guj.L.R. 306: I.L.R. (1966) Guj. 134.

The word 'thereby' in 'fact thereby discovered' in S. 27 refers to that portion of the information only which may be held to be the proximate cause of the discovery. In order that this may be admissible against the accused, (1) the information must be the one given by the accused—The statement conveying the information must be his own statement in his own language, and then (2) only so much of the information as is necessary and sufficient to cause the discovery will be admissible: (1941-42) 46 Cal.W.N. 180: A.I.R. 1942 Cal. 593; A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 444: (1942) 1 M.L.J. 517. See also 49 Mys.H.C.R. 444; 50 Mys.H.C.R. 106.

S. 27 mentions abouts disclosure of fact and not of any object: (1983) 23 Del.L.T. 41.

It is fallacious to treat the 'fact discovered' within S. 27 as equivalent to the object produced; the fact discovered embraces the place from which the object is discovered and the knowledge of the accused as to this, and the information given must relate distinctly to this fact: I.L.R. (1948) Nag. 147: A.I.R. 1948 Nag. 344: 1948 Nag.L.J. 489; A.I.R. 1950 All. 615; A.I.R. 1953 Bhopal 1; I.L.R. (1952) Trav.-Co. 261: A.I.R. 1952 Trav.-Co. 300.

The words 'so much of such information' and 'distinctly' in S. 27 of the Evidence Act, which is an exception to Ss. 24, 25 and 26, limit what may be proved against the accused. Only that portion of the accused's statement can be admitted which was the direct or immediate cause of the discovery of the fact deposed to. Anything which is not directly or clearly connected with or which is not the immediate cause of the discovery is not admissible. Information as to the past history of the fact or object discovered is not related to its discovery and is, therefore, not inadmissible: I.L.R. (1952) Bom. 201: (1951) 53 Bom.L.R. 834: A.I.R. 1952 Bom. 72.

What has to be explained by evidence is unexplained possession of an incriminating article by the accused soon after commission of the crime, so that from such unexplained possession a reasonable inference that he was the criminal can be drawn. The fact of possession can be proved by discovery of an article at the instance of the accused because if the evidence shows that he had in any way dealt with the article prior to its discovery by him, he can reasonably be credited with its possession sometime before such an event. It is in this context that so much of the confessional statement made by him as leads to the facts thereby discovered becomes admissible under S. 27 of the Evidence Act. But this confessional statement must be proved by persons to whom or before whom it was made and as the Courts want to know the exact words used by the accused when making the statement, the Investigating Officer is required by the Police Regulations to record it in the form of a memorandum in the presence of witnesses so that its authenticity may be beyond doubt and the witnesses may refresh their memory when deposing about it in Courts. The memorandum itself cannot be used as substantive evidence: 1962 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 251.

Statements by accused leading to discovery — Prior statement vague — Subsequent statement which led to discovery is admissible: 1960 Raj.L.W. 4: I.L.R. (1959) 9 Raj. 762.

Information as to past user, or the past history, of the object produced is not related to its discovery in the setting in which it is discovered: A.I.R. 1948 Nag. 344: I.L.R. (1948) Nag. 147: 1948 Na.L.J. 489. See also (1952) 54 Punj.L.R. 408: A.I.R. 1953 Punj. 81.

Section makes relevant and admissible only such portion of an accused's statement, as 'relates distinctly to the fact thereby discovered'. The rest of the information relating to the past history or user of the physical object has to be rejected as mere dross: (1989) 1 Bom.C.R. 135 (D.B.).

The words 'fact discovered' used in S. 27 have been held to mean not only the object produced but also to embrace the place from which the object was produced and the knowledge of the accused about its location: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 483: (1976) 1 S.C.C. 828: 1976 Cr.L.J. 481: (1976) 1 S.C.R. 715. The information relating distinctly to this fact understood in the aforesaid larger perspective, is admissible in evidence. Only information as to past user or the past history of the object produced is not admissible in evidence as it does not relate to the discovery of the object produced. [1960 All.L.J. 733 (S.C.), Foll.]: 1981 All.L.J. 991 (D.B.).

In order that a 'discovery' may come under the provisions of S. 27 of the Evidence Act, the place from which the incriminating article was recovered must be a place of concealment which it would be difficult or impossible for the Police to discover without some assistance from the accused: 1966 Cur.L.J. 37: I.L.R. (1966) 1 Punj. 765: 1967 Cr.L.J. 118: A.I.R. 1967 Punj. 14.

In the recovery memo. the full information as to how the gold chain was recovered had not been given. The information given by the accused leading to that discovery had not been produced. The Investigating Officer stated in his deposition during the murder trial that the accused stated that he had killed the deceased (R) and thrown him down from the bridge and had kept concealed the necklace after snatching it.

Held, that in that statement except this much portion that he had concealed the necklace, rest was inadmissible in evidence: 1967 Cr.L.J. 125: A.I.R. 1967 Tripura 1.

Accused making statement that he had kept gun in his village—Statement admissible even though place of discovery not specifically mentioned: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 520: A.I.R. 1965 Ori. 175.

Where one of the circumstances relied on by the prosecution against the accused was the recovery of article of the offence on the information and at the instance of the accused, held, the article in question was found lying in the house when the house was opened by the Police and, therefore, it had already been recovered by the Police. Thus, it could not be said to be a discovery made under S. 27 of the Indian Evidence Act: 1995 Cr.L.J. 1853 (Raj.) (D.B.).

Under S. 27, the fact of admission by the accused that she committed theft in the house of P.W. 1 will not be admissible in evidence, but the fact that she informed that she had kept concealed the articles at a certain place is clearly admissible under the above section. Where the accused stated that she had concealed the articles and also led the party and the Investigating Officer to the place of concealment and gave recovery of the articles from the place, where they were actually hidden the statement would be admissible in evidence under S. 27. 'Discovery' in S. 27 embraces not only the knowledge of the accused as to the place, but also the place from which it was produced: (1964) 6 Ori.J.D. 12: I.L.R. (1964) Cut. 323: (1964) 1 Cr.L.J. 602.

Statement of one accused person leading to discovery — Statement is admissible against him: (1962) 4 Ori.J.D. 156: I.L.R. (1962) Cut. 366: (1964) 2 Cr.L.J. 487.

S. 27 does not envisage that the stolen articles must be kept concealed or that there must be some sort of concealment before a discovery is made. Information leading to discovery may be made in relation to a thing which was not kept under any concealment:

1964) 6 Ori.J.D. 12: I.L.R. (1964) Cut. 323: 1964) 1 Cr.L.J. 602.

A confessional statement made by a person, which leads to the discovery of some resh material, at a time when he was neither n accused person nor in the Police custody, annot be proved against him when he is ubsequently accused of an offence. The confessional statement which is being considered in S. 27, is a statement which is made by person in Police custody. It is also made by person 'accused of an offence'. If these two hrases are considered together, it follows nevitably that the person when he made the tatement, was an accused person and he vas also in Police custody. Only those confessional statements are being considered nder S. 27 which are made by accused persons while they are in Police custody. Such onfessional statements are admissible in vidence provided they have led to the discovery of a fresh fact. If the statement is nade by a person who is a stranger or is a rosecution witness, then such statement is ot admissible in evidence despite the fact nat it amounts to a confession and does lead o the discovery of a new fact: I.L.R. (1961) 1 unj. 33: (1962) 1 Cr.L.J. 186: A.I.R. 1962 Punj. 0.

The discovery should be of a palpable hysical fact: secondly, it should be the finding of something which had been partly or holly concealed and which might have not een found out, except as a consequence of ne statement. If it is merely a statement that ne accused went to this or that place and got is or that article, then the statement would ot be evidence unless made to a Magistrate: 961 M.P.C. 178: 1961 M.P.L.J. 353: (1961) 2 r.L.J. 238.

Where in a case under S. 201, Penal Code, ne first intimation that the Police got regarding where the missing person was, was the eport made by accused that report would ot be substantive evidence. Only that part f that report, which would be covered by 27, would be read as evidence. But, before nat can be done, it has to be established that ne statement containing the information overed by S. 27, was actually given.

The documents, or the memoranda of hat accused said and covered by S. 27 are ot by themselves substantive evidence. It is hat the witness deposes in Court as having een said by an accused, when giving information leading to discovery of a fact, that is vidence. The memorandum of a statement repared is only for refreshing memory of the witness who has drawn it at that time, or of the attesting witness in whose presence that information was given: 1961 Jab.L.J. 1250: 1961 M.P.L.J. 1291: (1962) 2 Cr.L.J. 680.

Where the accused had made a statement to the Police that he knew where the stolen articles were and would lead them to the person (accused No. 3) who had them, it can be said that the discovery of the articles with the third accused was a fact deposed to by the accused and admissible in evidence under S. 27, if the Police had no information about the complicity of the third accused with the crime. If an accused charged with a theft of articles states to the Police. 'I will show you the articles at the place where I have kept them' and the articles are actually found there, there can be no doubt that the information given by him led to the discovery of a fact, i.e., keeping of the articles by the accused at the place mentioned. The discovery of the fact deposed to in such a case is not the discovery of the articles but the discovery of the fact that the articles were kept by the accused at a particular place. In principle there is no difference between the above statement and that made by the accused which in effect is that 'I will show you the person to whom I have given the articles'. The only difference between the two statements is that a named person is substituted for the place where the articles are kept. In neither case are the articles, the fact discovered.

However, if it be shown that the Police already knew that accused No. 3 had got the articles but did not know where the said accused was to be found, the discovery in pursuance of the information given by the accused that accused No. 3 had the articles and could be pointed out in a large crowd at the waiting hall merely relates to the whereabouts of accused No. 3. There is no discovery of any fact deposed to by the accused within the meaning of S. 27.

Although such a statement might otherwise have been admissible in evidence, there is no discovery of a fact connecting the accused with the receipt of the articles which were stolen within the meaning of S. 27 of the Evidence Act because the Police already knew that the third accused had the articles: 1970 Mad.L.W. (Cr.) 128: (1970) 2 S.C.R. 332: A.I.R. 1970 S.C. 1934.

'Any fact'—If includes discovery of witness.

Per Krishna Rao, J., Umamaheswaram, J., dubitante.—Discovery of witnesses is a discovery of fact within the meaning of S. 27: 1956 An.W.R. 360: 1957 Cr.L.J. 930: A.I.R. 1957 Andh. Pra. 456.

S. 27 refers to a fact being discovered; a fact means and includes, according to the definition in S. 3, 'anything, state of things or relations of things capable of being perceived by the senses': 1940 Mad.W.N. 163.

The discovery of a witness is discovery of a fact within the meaning of S. 27. On accused being arrested he gave information that he sold one gold belt with one side short, four silver golusus, one silver plate, one pair of solid silver Kadivalu Golichuttu and one silver waist string of one row to one B at Ongole for Rs. 1,227-0-0 and produced from a secret place Rs. 1,223-12-6 which had been seized by the Police. Held, that both those pieces of information were admissible and were not affected by the limits placed upon the admission of evidence under S. 27: A.I.R. 1954 Mad. 433: 55 Cr.L.J. 583.

The discovery of a person who is afterwards proved to be a dacoit is not the discovery of a fact within S. 27: 43 I.C. 111: 14 Nag.L.R. 192.

The expression 'fact' as defined in S. 3 includes not only the physical fact but also the psychological fact or mental condition of which any person is conscious. It is in the former sense that the word is used in S. 27: I.L.R. 10 Lah. 283: A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 344 (F.B.).

The accused in the presence of the Investigating Officer and two witnesses, offered to hand over the gandasa which he said he had thrown into a tank, and thereafter he led the officer and the witnesses to the tank and in their presence waded into the tank and fetched the gandasa out of the water. This gandasa was found by the Chemical Examiner and Serologist to be stained with human blood.

Held (per S. K. Das, Kapur and Shah, JJ.), that the information given by the accused was provable in so far as it distinctly related to the fact thereby discovered and his statement that he had thrown the gandasa in the tank was information which distinctly related to the discovery of the gandasa: A.I.R. 1960 S.C. 1125: 1960 All.W.R. (S.C.) 568: (1960) 2 S.C.A. 371.

12. "Distinctly"—Meaning of.—The word in S. 27 means 'directly' 'indubitably', 'strictly', 'unmistakably': A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 483: (1976) 1 S.C.C. 828: 1976 Cr.L.J. 481: (1976) 1 S.C.R. 715.

Under S. 27, the information to be proved must relate distinctly to the fact thereby discovered. The word 'distinctly' in S. 27 is used in some sense other than the word 'directly'. It is meant to exclude certain things and to limit and confine the information which may be proved within definite limits and not necessarily to include everything which may relate to that information. Even more important is the word 'discovered'. It is used in a peculiar sense. The test is that the fact discovered must be discovered in the sense, that the proof of the existence of that fact, no longer rests on the credibility of the statement of accused, but rests on the credibility of the witnesses who depose to the existence of that fact. The rest of the information is not admissible: A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 338: 115 I.C. 1.

S. 27, which is in the nature of an exception to the previous Ss. 24, 25 and 26, has to be narrowly interpreted; 'facts discovered' in the section mean the physical perception of a material fact and not merely learning of a mental fact or the contracting of a witness. The word 'distinctly' in the section excludes the admission of a statement if there is any other conscious will or agency intervening between the information and the discovery. Where there has had to be further inquiry of an independent nature before the discovery is made, it cannot be held that it is 'distinctly' related to the information or confession: 1952 Cr.L.J. 986: A.I.R. 1952 Vindh. Pra. 42.

Statement of accused to Police—Leading to discovery—Admissibility of—Scope of S. 27—'Distinctly' in S. 27—Meaning of—Compound statement—Duty of Court: A.I.R. 1966 Raj. 74.

13. "Whether amounts to confession or not".—The statements containing information leading to discoveries under S. 27 may or may not, depending upon the facts and circumstances, be confessional; those may simply be incriminating: 1979 Bom.C.R. 680 (D.B.).

In construing S. 27, the word 'confession' does not necessarily mean a complete confession of guilt but means and includes any incriminating statement: 115 I.C. 1 A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 338. See also A.I.R. 1941 Nag 86.

Statements made during the investigation whether inculpatory or exculpatory, whether confessional or not, cannot be excluded from consideration by the Investigating agency, while submitting a charge-sheet; the bar of Ss. 25 and 27 applies to a stage when the case is being tried by a Court before whom evidence is recorded: 1983 All.W.C. 289: 1983 All.Cr.R. 154: 1983 All.L.J. 309.

The preamble in a confessional statement which has no relation to the discovery of the facts is not admissible under S. 27: (1939) 2 M.L.J. 487: A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 593.

Discovery of fact—Accused producing articles alleged to be stolen and making confession—Subsequent claim to articles as own—Admissibility of confession. See 46 Cr.L.J. 613: A.I.R. 1945 Pat. 161.

Information received from the accused in Police custody is admissible if it leads to discovery of a fact and it is immaterial whether such information amounts to confession or not: 1990 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 6 (Ker.) (D.B.).

Confession need not relate to offence in respect of which accused was in custody: 1960 Ori.J.D. 317: 27 Cut.L.T. 159.

14. Custody of Police Officer.—[See also S. 26, Note 3, supra]. 'Custody' meaning of. See I.L.R. 18 Lah. 106: A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 620; I.L.R. (1936) Nag. 78: A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 200. Per Bhide and Din Mahommed, JJ.—'Police custody' does not necessarily mean custody after formal arrest and it also includes 'some form of Police surveillance and restriction on the movements of the person concerned by the Police'. It is open to an accused person to prove in every case that arises that he was actually in the custody of a Police Officer, although in the Police diaries he was not shown to have been formally arrested: I.L.R. (1940) Lah. 242: A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 129 (F.B.).

The word 'custody' in S. 27 does not mean formal custody. An accused is in Police custody within the meaning of the section when he is under surveillance of the Police and cannot break away from the company of the Police Officer and get away: 1954 All.L.J. 93: A.I.R. 1954 All. 667.

S. 27 speaks of custody; 'custody' is not equivalent to arrest and, thus, the word 'custody' in S. 27 does not necessarily mean detention or confinement, if the accused is under surveillance, it amounts to custody. Thus, where the accused who was arrested in connection with some other case, was taken by the Station House Officer in custody in the instant case for investigation, held, it could not be said that he was not in custody when he gave the information leading to the discoveries of the stolen articles: 1984 Raj.L.W. 225; (1993) 1 Ker.L.J. 437.

There is a distinction between custody and arrest. 'Custody' is not always formal and includes any sort of surveillance or restraint by Police. A person, called to the Police Station to be interrogated as an accused in investigation of a crime, must be deemed to be in Police custody as his formal arrest is not then necessary. Thus, if the accused, after interrogation, is allowed to go home and formally arrested thereafter, his statements during interrogation leading to discovery are admissible under S. 27; obviously after he made such statements, he must have been under Police-eye throughout. [A.I.R. 1954 All. 687; A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 620; A.I.R. 1948 All. 7; 1968 C.L.R. 268 (S.C.), Foll.]: 1974 M.P.L.J. 429 (D.B.). See also 1978 M.P.L.J. 706: 1978 Jab.L.J. 347 [No requirement that the accused be first arrested, before the information received from him is accepted in evidence as admissible].

Where the accused himself lodged first information report at Police Station and produced the axe which he carried to Police Station, held, statements leading to discovery of weapon and body were statements made while under Police custody but were admissible under S. 27: 1978 M.P.L.J. 742: 1978 Jab.L.J. 616.

In the case of mere suspects who have not been formally charged with any offence or arrested under any section of the Cr.P.Code, their presence with the Police under some restraint amounts to the 'custody' which is contemplated by the section. If a statement made by a person in the above circumstances leads to the discovery of any matter, it is admissible: I.L.R. 18 Lah. 106: A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 620. The spirit of the language employed in S. 27 of the Evidence Act, appears to imply that where a person submits himself to the custody of a Police Officer with the consciousness that temporarily at least he is in such custody or under such control whether formally authorised or not, the information given by him to such officer leading to the discovery of a relevant fact may be proved within the scope of the section: I.L.R. (1960) Mad. 224: (1960) 1 M.L.J. 112: 1960 M.L.J. (Cr.) 127.

S. 27 of the Evidence Act does not create an unjustifiable discrimination between accused persons in custody and accused persons out of custody and in that way does not offend Art. 14 of the Constitution.

If the two clauses occurring in S. 27 of the Act, 'persons accused of any offence' and 'in the custody of a Police Officer' separated by a comma, are read distributively as referring respectively to persons referred to in Ss. 25 and 26 there can be no question of the admissibilities being restricted only to the confession of a person in the custody of a Police Officer. Thus viewed the law embodied in S. 27 cannot be stated to make a discrimination in favour of persons who are not in Police custody as against persons in Police custody. The term 'custody' in S. 27 should be interpreted in wide terms and should not be restricted only to a custody after formal arrest: I.L.R. (1960) Mad. 1082: (1961) 1 M.L.J. 307.

It is now too well settled that the portion of the statement regarding the place which was pointed out and ultimately led to the discovery of the stolen articles would clearly be admissible in law. The word custody in S. 27 of the Evidence Act does not mean physical custody by arrest. When a person states that he has done certain acts which amount to an offence he accuses himself of committing the offence, and if he makes the statement to a Police Officer, as such, he submits to the custody of the officer within the meaning of S. 46(1) of the Code of Criminal Procedure and is then in the custody of a Police Officer within the meaning of S. 27 of the Evidence Act. There can, therefore, be no doubt that on the facts of this case, the three accused persons who made the statement to the Police Officer were in custody within the meaning of S. 46(1) of the Code of Criminal Procedure and S. 27 of the Evidence Act: 1966 B.L.J.R. 133.

For the purpose of S. 27 the word 'custody' does not necessarily mean detention or confinement. Submission to custody by any action or by words is also custody within the meaning of the section. Where the appellant, after committing homicide went to the Police station and made a confessional first information report in which he gave the details of his act and the circumstances which led to the same, his intention to submit to the Police was evident from his conduct and, therefore, he must be deemed to be in the custody of the Police Officer the moment he mentioned his having caused the death. The information contained in that first information report is, therefore, admissible under S. 27: 1959 Cr.L.J. 850: A.I.R. 1959 Madh. Pra. 267.

When a person stated that he has done certain acts which amount to an offence he accuses himself of committing the offence; and if he makes the statement to a Police Officer as such, he submits to the custody of the officer within the meaning of S. 46(1), Cr.P.Code and is then in the custody of a Police Officer within the meaning of S. 27: I.L.R. 12 Pat. 241: A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 149 (S.B.); I.L.R. (1959) Bom. 1244: (1959) 61 Bom.L.R. 715: A.I.R. 1959 Bom. 534.

Where a person had been suspected from the beginning itself and was treated as accused person and was not kept under such restraint as he could hardly have absconded, Held, that he was in custody of Police and statements leading to discovery of things were admissible: I.L.R. 15 Lah. 310: A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 150 (2); (1932) 34 Punj.L.R. 637: A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 516.

Even if an accused is not formally arrested when he gives information leading to discovery, if it is proved that he was arrested before he went to the spot from which the articles are recovered, the accused shall be deemed for all practical purposes as in Police custody when giving such information: I.L.R. (1936) Nag. 78: A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 200.

Where a Police Officer, although he arrested a person charged with being in possession of cocaine after the finding of the cocaine with him, interviewed the accused and was with him for a considerable time and walked with him to the place where the accused pointed out the spot where the cocaine might be found; held, that the accused was in Police custody at the time when he made the statement as to the spot where the cocaine could be found and his statement was admissible under S. 27: 144 I.C. 74: A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 148, followed in (1960) 62 Bom.L.R. 80: A.I.R. 1960 Bom. 263.

Where a confession is made by the accused while in Police custody after he was arrested by the Chaukidar and was being escorted under his control, its admissibility is not affected by the possibility of its having been made during the temporary absence of the Chaukidar. Where a place is pointed out by the accused to a Police Officer as the place of occurrence and nothing is found there, the pointing out of the place is really evidence of a confession of his guilty and is, therefore, inadmissible under S. 26: 1941 O.W.N. 953: A.I.R. 1941 Oudh 563.

Where 30 minutes after recording his confession, the Police formally arrested the accused, held, the accused was in constructive Police custody when his statement was recorded; his confession was hit by S. 27. [1960 Cr.L.J. 1504 (S.C.) and (1947) 48 Cr.L.J. 939 (All.) and 1966 Cr.L.J. 100 (S.C.), Foll.]: 1976 Cr.L.J. 1652: 1976 Raj.L.W. 251: 1976 W.L.N. 160: I.L.R. (1976) 26 Raj. 648 (D.B.).

Where the Magistrate while passing the order of Police remand ignored the provisions of S. 167, Cr.P.Code and remanded the accused to Police custody for a period exceeding 15 days, held, the statement made by the accused leading to discovery while in such custody could not be said to be tainted because of illegality or irregularity of custody as he did not cease to be in physical custody of the Police while he made the said statement: 1992 Cr.L.J. 3298 (Guj.) (D.B.).

No importance can be attached to recovery made on basis of statement made while in illegal custody, i.e., Police custody obtained after expiry of 15 days: 1989 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 217 (Mad.) (D.B.).

15. "Police Officer"—Who is.—[See also S. 25, Note 4; S. 26, Note 4, supra]. An Excise Officer, exercising powers of entry, search, seizure, arrest and investigation of offences under the Assam Opium Prohibition Act 1947, is a 'Police Officer' for the purpose of S. 27: A.I.R. 1972 Gau. 7: 1972 Cr.L.J. 779.

16. Statement of Police—Recording of—Duty of Police.—It is not the duty of the Police to decide what evidence is admissible and what is not, and a statement made by the accused person should not be mutilated. The duty of the Police, if they desire to record a statement, is to record it as given and leave it to the Court to decide what evidence is admissible. The practice of Police Officers giving statements not made to them in the first instance in evidence but statements made obviously for the second time before panchayatdars, must be condemned. Such a second statement is inadmissible in evidence. It is the first statement of the accused, to whomsoever made, that leads to the discovery of a fact, if a fact is discovered: I.L.R. (1940) Mad. 254: A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 710.

The correct procedure for recording and proving a confessional statement, admissible under S. 27 of the Evidence Act, is for the Police Officer to record in the first person the statement of the accused, and when he gives evidence, to say that the accused made a confessional statement, that he took it down, and then, for the purpose of refreshing his memory, to refer to the actual statement, which is in the Police diary and prove before the Court by that method what the accused had said: A.I.R. 1945 Mad. 202: (1945) 1 M.L.J. 223.

They should be recorded in the first person, that is to say, as far as possible in the actual words of the accused. They should not be paraphrased. It will be for the trial Judge who has such a record before him to decide how much of it is admissible under the section: I.L.R. (1937) Mad. 695: A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 618: (1937) 2 M.L.J. 60 (F.B.). See also 171 I.C. 225: (1937) 2 M.L.J. 32; A.I.R. 1957 All. 459: 1957 Cr.L.J. 803 [Practice of not recording the actual words used by the accused persons by the investigating agency disapproved]; 1958 Cr.L.J. 821: A.I.R. 1958 All. 467.

Whenever a Police Officer is intimated that the accused proposes to give information leading to discovery, he should proceed to record it as far as possible in the language spoken by the accused and in the first person, otherwise, doubts are likely to be entertained as to the accuracy and correctness of the information: I.L.R. (1964) 14 Raj. 715: 1964 Raj.L.W. 171.

Recording of information said to have been voluntary given by the accused not in the first person form but in the third person form, held, is not improper; it cannot be discarded on that count: I.L.R. (1976) 26 Raj. 719: 1976 Raj.L.W. 290.

S. 27 of the Evidence Act is in the nature of an exception to the prohibition imposed by the two preceding sections of the Evidence Act, and a statement which is sought to be made admissible under that provision must be construed strictly and with exactitude. Even a slight variation in the language of the statement may substantially change its meaning and import and have a far-reaching effect on the inference to be drawn from it. While, therefore, a verbatim reproduction of the words used by the accused may not be expected in the recovery memo. prepared by the Police Officer or in the deposition of the witnesses of recovery, precision is a matter of utmost importance in the interpretation of the statement of the accused as incorporated in the recovery memo. and as proved in Court. Only such information should be deemed to have been given by the accused as the words used by him expressly conveyed and the scope of the information cannot be extended by reading possible implications in it or by judging its meaning with reference to all the facts that were discovered. The facts discovered may quite frequently exceed and go beyond the information given by the accused and the information cannot, therefore, be regarded as having contained all the discovered facts: 1970 Cr.L.J. 603 (All.).

Where a Police witness alleges that the accused made a certain statement to him, which led to discovery of articles stolen, it is not for him to say whether it is confessional or not. The witness should state the very words of the accused, and it is for the Court to decide what part of it would be admissible under S. 27 of the Evidence Act, and whether it is confessional or not.

Similarly where it was alleged by the Police Officer that the recoveries were made in consequence of the confessional statement of the accused, the alleged statement must be proved by independent witness: A.I.R. 1958 Tripura 40: 1958 Cr.L.J. 1549.

The statement which is admissible under S. 27 is the one which is the information leading to discovery. Thus, what is admissible being the information, the information itself has to be proved and not the opinion formed on the information by the Police Officer. In other words, the exact information given by the accused while in custody which led to recovery of the articles has to be proved. A mere statement that the accused led the Police and the witnesses to the place where he had concealed the articles is not indicative of the information given: 1992 Cr.L.J. 2059 (Ori.).

Where the information by the accused to the Investigating Officer which led to the seizure was not recorded and as such the exact information given by them was not available for scrutiny, held, in the absence of recording of the exact words and any corroboration available from the independent sources as regard the information given, the solitary statement of Investigating Officer under S. 27 cannot be relied upon to exclusively form the basis of conviction: 1992 Cr.L.J. 2271 (Ori.). See also 1976 Mah.L.J. 195.

If evidence otherwise confessional in character is to be admissible under S. 27, it is obligatory upon the Investigating Officer to state and record who gave the information; when he is dealing with more than one accused, what words were used by him so that a recovery pursuant to the information received may be connected with the person giving the information so as to provide incriminating facts against that person: A.I.R. 1983 S.C. 367: (1983) 1 S.C.C. 143: 1983 U.J. (S.C.) 145.

It has become the practice in Madras State for Police Officers, when they expect the accused to make a confession either on information received or from deduction from surrounding circumstances or their own intuition born of experience—a professional sixth sense—to take with them or procure respectable mediators and a Panchayatnama is then prepared reducing into writing the information given by the accused and it is then attested by the Police Officer and mediators present. The practice is safe and in no way irregular. But the Panchayatnama is not substantive evidence and can be used for corroborating or contradicting or refreshing the memories of the persons who participated in it: 55 Cr.L.J. 583: A.I.R. 1954 Mad. 433.

Statements made by an accused person which are or may be provable under S. 27 should be clearly and carefully recorded by the Police Officers concerned. The law expects a good deal of precision in regard to statements brought on record under S. 27: 1953 All.L.J. 115: A.I.R. 1953 All. 526. Statement of the accused leading to the discovery of incriminating articles, is not legally required to be attested: A.I.R. 1959 Him. Pra. 3.

Verbatim statement and not paraphrased statement can alone be proved: (1966) 7 Guj. L.R. 119: 1966 Cr.L.J. 1541 (1).

Information leading to discovery of weapon with which death was caused—Actual words used by accused not proved—No reliance can be placed on such information and discovery: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1237 (Manipur).

17. Police remand for effecting recovery.—Merely because the accused states that he does not intend to point out to the Police any article used in the offence, the Magistrate is not automatically stripped off his powers expressly vested in S. 167(2) of the Code of Criminal Procedure to grant Police remand to detain the accused for not exceeding 15 days. Each case has to be decided on its own merits. If the accused volunteers to help recovering incriminating articles and such statements exist in the case diary, the Magistrate can take note of them for granting Police remand; of course the Magistrate may make the remand subject to certain safeguards so that the power of investigation is not misused by the Police and no third degree methods are resorted to against the accused: 1989 Cr.L.J. 2552 (All.) (D.B.).

Merely because the accused surrenders before the Court and states that he has no disclosure to be made is no ground to deny to the investigating agency the opportunity to question him during investigations; he is certainly 'any person' envisaged under Ss. 161 and 162 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and can, thus, be remanded to the Police custody for purposes of effecting recovery from him of the weapon used in the offence. [1979 Ker.L.T. 652; 1980 Ker.L.T. 829, Dissent.]: 1985 Ker.L.T. 1156. See infra.

Where the accused had categorically asserted before the Court that they had no knowledge about the existence of material objects sought to be recovered or the place where they were concealed, held, it is unlikely that they would give any information to the Police unless they were subjected to unlawful mode of interrogation; therefore, no useful purpose would be served if the accused on bail were given in Police custody for recording their disclosure statements: 1980 Ker.L.T. 829: 1981 Cr.L.J. 119.

18. Information not leading to discovery.—Statements leading immediately to the discovery of property are properly admissible. Other statements connected with the one thus made and immediately, but not necessarily or directly, connected with the fact discovered are not admissible: 32 I.C. 136: 13 All.L.J. 1077; A.I.R. 1930 Bom. 244. See also 53 Mad.L.W. 567: A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 658; 1937 A.M.L.J. 18; 31 Sind L.R. 494: A.I.R. 1937 Sind 251; I.L.R. (1942) 1 Cal. 436: A.I.R. 1942 Cal. 593; A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 444: (1942) 1 M.L.J. 517.

Where in pursuance of disclosure made by the accused, no incriminating article was recovered, held, such a statement would be inadmissible: 1985 Cr.L.J. 1700 (Del.); A.I.R. 1971 Tripura 16; (1975) 16 Guj.L.R. 782; 1979 Chand.Cr.C. 170 (Punj.) (D.B.); (1986) 3 Crimes 454 (M.P.); (1989) 1 Ker.L.J. 253: 1990 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 124 (D.B.); 1992 Cr.L.J. 3674 (Del.) (D.B.); (1993) 50 Del.L.T. 631.

Where the accused in his statement merely pointed out the scene of occurrence which led to no discovery of any fact as envisaged under S. 27, held, it is inadmissible in evidence: (1994) 1 Ker.L.J. 136 (D.B).

Any portion of the information conveyed by the accused which does not relate distinctly to the discovery will not fall within S. 27 of the Evidence Act and will, therefore, be barred under S. 25 of the Evidence Act or S. 162, Cr.P.Code. If a statement does not come within the exception of S. 27, Evidence Act, it cannot be admitted in evidence by circumventing the provisions of S. 162, Cr.P.Code, on the ground that it is relevant under some other section of the Evidence Act: A.I.R. 1951 Him. Pra. 28: 53 Cr.L.J. 267.

Witness deposing to what accused purported to have stated before Police—Accused's statement not leading to any discovery within S. 27—Witness's deposition is inadmissible: 1953 Cr.L.J. 1900: A.I.R. 1954 Him. Pra. 11. See also (1956-57) 61 Cal.W.N. 483: A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 332.

Discovery not as a result of interrogation of accused but as a result of search made by Customs Officers—Memo. signed by accused not admissible: (1959) 61 Punj.L.R. 235: A.I.R. 1959 Punj. 287.

19. Information from two persons—Only that leading to discovery is admissible.—Once property has been discovered in consequence of information received from a suspected person, it cannot be rediscovered in consequence of information received from another suspected person: 64 I.C. 502: A.I.R. 1922 Lah. 315; A.I.R. 1949 Ori. 67. See also 1939 A.M.L.J. 56; 1938 Mad.W.N. 1272: A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 266.

It is only the information that was given by the first person and which led to the actual discovery which may be proved under the terms of S. 27: A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 266.

Where more than one accused person give information regarding discovery of a fact and thereafter the discovery is made by only one of those accused persons or the discovery takes place without any pointing by any of the accused persons, the individual information given by the several accused preceding such discovery can be proved against the author thereof: 1976 Raj.L.W. 290: I.L.R. (1976) 26 Raj. 719: 1976 Cr.L.R. 386.

In case of an information given by several accused leading to discovery of a fact, held, the information which was given first is only admissible: (1989) 3 Crimes 721 (Madh. Pra.).

Statements to the Police made by a second accused about the place of burial of the murdered person is not admissible in evidence when the Police already know about it from the first accused: A.I.R. 1959 Ker. 46.

Where two or more persons are alleged to have given certain information to the Police which led to the arrest of the accused, it is only the information given first which is admissible under Ss. 27 and 29: 17 Cr.L.J. 273: 34 I.C. 993; A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 739. See also 1981 Jab.L.J. 344.

Information by two persons which leads to the discovery of a fact is relevant and so much of the statement of each which relates to the fact discovered is admissible against both; statements of co-accused after the discovery are irrelevant: 17 Cr.L.J. 506: 36 I.C. 474; A.I.R. 1930 Bom. 244.

After one accused has made a discovery the other should not be asked to do the same: 36 I.C. 474: 10 Sind L.R. 7.

The word 'person' is used in S. 27 in the singular designedly. The section ought to be construed strictly. In cases where one accused has agreed to point a place where a fact will be discovered in pursuance of his statement, that section would not cover similar statements of other accused persons in Police custody: 1945 O.W.N. 44: 1945 All.W.R. (C.C.) 23: 1945 O.A. (C.C.) 23: A.I.R. 1945 Oudh 235; A.I.R. 1945 Cal. 137. See also I.L.R. (1944) 2 Cal. 76.

Where in consequence of a joint information given by the accused persons a dead body is discovered and the evidence is too vague as to who gave the information first and who next, the joint statement is not admissible in evidence to establish the guilt of the accused person: I.L.R. (1949) Cut. 207: A.I.R. 1949 Ori. 67.

Each of the two accused making separate statements and pointing out the same place where stolen property was concealed—Subsequent discovery in pursuance of such information must be taken to have been made only in pursuance of the information given by the accused who made the first statement—Statements of the second accused who gave the information later is inadmissible in evidence under S. 162, Cr.P.Code, as it did not fall within the purview of S. 27: 1954 Cr.L.J. 801: A.I.R. 1954 Kutch 22.

Statement connecting fact discovered with offence charged is not admissible—Fact discovered in consequence of information given by several accused—Only the information which is first given by one of the accused is admissible if it leads to discovery: I.L.R. (1953) Hyd. 32: A.I.R. 1953 Hyd. 161.

It is possible to prove the statement of that accused only who comes first on the scene and whose statement leads to the discovery first of all. Where it is not possible to prove who made the statement first, the evidence is to be discarded: 1953 All.L.J. 115: A.I.R. 1953 All. 526.

Where the statements leading to discovery have been made by several accused the mere fact of the statement of any particular accused appearing in the case-diary before others is no guarantee that the statements were made in that order. The fact is to be made out independently of it: 1958 Cr.L.J. 821: A.I.R. 1958 All. 467. The question as to what should be the rule as to admissibility when there is clear and unimpeachable evidence as to independent and authentic statements of the nature referred to in S. 27 of the Evidence Act, having been made by several accused persons either simultaneously or otherwise left open: 1952 S.C.R. 839: A.I.R. 1952 S.C. 167: (1952) 2 M.L.J. 100.

Under S. 27, simultaneous statements made by accused persons are not 'per se' inadmissible in evidence and are liable to be considered if the discovery made in consequence thereof affords a guarantee about the truth of the statements. The words "a person" in S. 27, do not in any way exclude admission of information from more than one person simultaneously received provided it fulfils the requirements of S. 27. S. 13 (2), General Clauses Act, provides that words in the singular shall include the plural and 'vice versa' provided there is nothing repugnant in the subject or context. There is nothing repugnant in the provisions of S. 27 of the Evidence Act, for acceptance of statements jointly made by more than one person provided that facts discovered in consequence thereof afford some guarantee about truthfulness of their statements. It will depend on the facts of each case: I.L.R. (1955) Nag. 169: A.I.R. 1955 Nag. 71; A.I.R. 1958 All. 467: 1958 Cr.L.J. 821.

Where a relevant fact is discovered in consequence of statements made by one or more accused in custody so much of those statements as relates distinctly to the discovery of that fact is admissible under S. 27. Information received from more than one person accused of an offence, whether it amounts to a confession or not, may relate distinctly to the fact thereby discovered and may be proved under S. 27 of the Act. What should be insisted upon by the Courts is that the statements should be recorded as precisely as possible attributing the respective words to each accused, whether they made the statements simultaneously or immediately one after the other before the discovery of the fact was made. There is no sufficient reason to hold that a fact cannot be said to be discovered in consequence of the information of more than one person accused of any offence. No principle in support can be found for the view, that the statements of two or more accused leading to the discovery of a relevant fact will be admissible only if they are simultaneously made: 1958 Pat.L.R. 387: 1959 Cr.L.J. 219: A.I.R. 1959 Pat. 54.

What guarantees the truthfulness of the information is not the fact whether the information was given by one accused person or by several accused persons either simultaneously or otherwise but it is the actual discovery in consequence of the information that affords some guarantee about the truth of the information. Even in the case of simultaneous information given by several accused persons, the information given by one of the accused would be admissible if he followed it up by conducting the Police to the actual spot where the 'fact' was actually discovered: I.L.R. (1956) Madh. Bh. 104: A.I.R. 1956 Madh. Bh. 262.

Where a joint statement of the two accused led to the discovery of certain facts but it was not clear as to which fact was distinctly related to the information furnished by a particular accused, held, it could not be inferred that the accused themselves were involved in the offence; it only meant that they had knowledge about the place where the weapon was and no more. [A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 297; A.I.R. 1949 Ori. 67; A.I.R. 1958 All. 467; A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 297; A.I.R. 1955 S.C. 104, Foll.]: 1971 Ker.L.T. 244 (D.B.).

Where both the recovery memo. as well as the Investigating Officer's statement were silent as to which one of the two accused had pointed out the gunny bag containing the stolen property, held, the stolen property could not be said to have been recovered in pursuance of the accused's information; S. 27 was not attracted: 1978 All.Cr.R. 29.

Though individual statements had been recorded from each of the accused they were all of the same pattern, and referred to the same articles, and all of them declared that if the Inspector accompanied them, they would point out the place at which the articles were hidden.

Held, that these statements but constituted one composite statement about the same articles, which did not serve to fasten the individual guilt, as there was no knowing on whose information the material fact was discovered: 1960 M.L.J. (Cr.) 284: 1960 Cr.L.J. 912: A.I.R. 1960 Ker. 238.

Successive information about possession of crime weapons given to Police by several persons—Weapons recovered from last person—Information on each occasion not covered by S. 27—Earlier information are only clues for investigation: 1961 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 156.

20. Joint discovery.—Where more than one accused person in custody of the Police point out this or produce that jointly such an evidence of joint discovery is not sufficient for a conviction: 24 I.C. 587: 63 P.L.R. 1914. See also 1981 Jab.L.J. 344.

There can be no joint discovery of facts and no joint statement of accused. A statement can be made only by one person at a time. Similarly, discovery can be made only by one person at a time: I.L.R. (1963) Guj. 955.

Joint discoveries are not admissible at all against any of the accused unless it can be shown who first made the discovery: 116 I.C. 619: A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 665.

The very language of S. 27 contemplates statement by an individual accused, and the discovery which may follow such statement. A joint statement of several accused or joint recovery of articles by several accused persons is not contemplated. A joint statement followed by a joint recovery is not admissible against either of the accused: 1957 Raj.L.W. 401. But see infra. Where it is alleged that two of the accused persons made statements leading to the discovery of some fact, evidence must be led to indicate which of them first made the statement which led to the discovery, and only the statement made by the first individual and only so much of it as related distinctly to the fact discovered can be admitted in evidence against him under S. 27. The statement of the other accused cannot be used in evidence. If, however, the prosecution is in a position to establish that the statements or the action which led to the discovery were actually made, or took place, simultaneously—a state of affairs which though not perhaps entirely impossible is certainly distinctly improbable—evidence in regard to the simultaneous statements or the simultaneous action would not be entirely shut out by the section, but there must be clear and satisfactory evidence on this point as will enable the Court to decide and to give a specific direction to the jury whether the evidence is admissible against both of the accused or against either and if so, against which: (1945-46) 50 Cal.W.N. 88: A.I.R. 1946 Cal. 452. See also A.I.R. 1955 Nag. 71, noted above.

In view of S. 13 of the General Clauses Act, the words 'a person' used in S. 27 of the Evidence Act in singular number must be held to include the plural: 1958 Pat.L.R. 387: 1959 Cr.L.J. 219: A.I.R. 1959 Pat. 54.

S. 27 must be very strictly construed. The expression "from a person accused of any offence" appearing therein is significant and it seems to have been used designedly because a joint statement of a number of persons cannot be said to be an information received from any particular one of them. As a necessary corollary, facts discovered in consequence of joint information cannot be used as against any one of them. [1955 Cr.L.J. 196 (S.C.); 1972 Cr.L.J. 815 (All.); 1978 Cr.L.J. 945 (Sikkim), Foll.]: 1982 Cr.L.J. 1656 (Del.); (1981-82) 86 Cal.W.N. 479; 1980 Mah.L.J. 72.

A joint statement made by the accused is not per se inadmissible in the evidence but it is very weak piece of evidence on which any reliance can be placed by the prosecution. In case of joint statement by the accused, it would be very difficult to come to the conclusion which of the two accused persons gave any specific and definite information to the Police which related distinctly to the discovery: 1993 Cr.L.J. 730 (Guj.).

Where information is given by "several accused", it is only the information which is first given that is admissible, and once a fact has been discovered in consequence of information received from a person accused of an offence, it cannot be said to be rediscovered in consequence of an information received from another accused person. But where all the three accused were present together and each was interrogated in the presence of the other two and for recoveries also all the three went together, held, as in such a situation of simultaneous statements, it was not possible to specifically give a finding that a particular accused initially pointed out or was the first to point out the actual place of discovery, such an information leading to discovery was not admissible under S. 27: 1989 M.P.L.J. 809 (D.B.). See also (1975) 16 Guj.L.R. 782; 1980 Cr.L.R. 203 (Mah.).

Where evidence against the accused was that he along with other two co-accused gave information to the Investigating Officer that the ring stolen by them was sold to a jeweller, but who gave this information leading to the recovery of the ring was not known and also the evidence of the jeweller did not make any sense, as he stated that all the accused came to him to sell the ring and also that they all came with Police and asked to produce same, because all the accused could not have spoken simultaneously, held, jeweller's evidence did not provide any incriminating fact against the accused; this way of recording evidence was most unsatisfactory: A.I.R. 1983 S.C. 367: (1983) 1 S.C.C. 143: 1983 U.J. (S.C.) 145.

Where only a joint statement of all the accused was recorded and the recoveries were made pursuant thereto by the Police, held, the joint statement is wholly inadmissible; only recoveries based on separate and individual statements of an accused are admissible: (1985) 2 An.W.R. 357: (1985) 1 An.L.T. 325: 1985 Cr.L.J. 1822.

Where weapons were discovered by the Police pursuant to the confessional statement jointly made by the accused, held, the confession could not be used as evidence under S. 27: 1988 Cr.L.J. 1364 (Ker.) (D.B.).

21. Statement after discovery—Pointing out property—Value of.—A statement by accused not leading to discovery of property but made after discovery and production of the property is irrelevant. The production or the pointing out may indicate that the accused was in possession or that he had innocent knowledge that the articles had been left there by some one else: 13 Cr.L.J. 529: 15 I.C. 801; A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 15: 48 Mad.L.W. 780.

In absence of any disclosure statement, the recovery of weapon of offence is meaningless: A.I.R. 1993 S.C. 1469.

When a material fact has already been discovered, the accused's statement while in Police custody relating thereto is not admissible under S. 27: 12 Cr.L.J. 35: 9 I.C. 232; (1934) 36 Punj.L.R. 40: A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 786. See also 48 Mad.L.W. 780: A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 15.

If an accused first made a statement to the Sub-Inspector that he took the corpse to the bed of the dried-up nullah and in consequence of that statement that Sub-Inspector went there and found human blood stains on the sand and the begunia leaves, there may be some justification for the view that the discovery of human blood on the sandy bed of the nullah and the leaves was in consequence of the statement admissible under S. 27 of the Evidence Act. But where the accused first conducted the S.I. to the sandy bed of the nullah and there the S.I. found blood stains on sand, with blood-clots, and also a begunia branch with blood stains and it was then that the accused made a statement to the S.I., to the effect that the body of the deceased was kept there, that statement could not be said to be the cause of the discovery so as to attract S. 27. Such statement is, therefore, inadmissible in evidence: 1957 Cr.L.J. 530: 23 Cut.L.T. 229: A.I.R. 1957 Ori. 102.

The accused after his arrest and recovery of stolen property from him pointed out the place from where the article recovered from him were stolen. Held, that this amounted to a confession without leading to any new discovery and, therefore, was inadmissible in evidence: (1956) 58 Punj.L.R. 320: A.I.R. 1956 Punj. 224. The discovery previously need not be necessarily by the Police Officer: 152 I.C. 565: A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 313.

22. Information already known to Police.—Where the information given by the accused in his confession leading to the discovery of facts is already known to the Police Officer before the confession is made and before the panchayatdars appear on the scene, the confession is inadmissible. But the mere circumstance that the Police Officer sent for the panchayatdars, because the accused was going to give some useful information, cannot lead to the inference that the officer had the information already so as to render the confession inadmissible in evidence under S. 27, Evidence Act. It may be that in some cases the Police Officer concerned has the information and after having that information from the accused, he sends for the panchayatdars to witness the discovery. In such cases, the confession is inadmissible. But the Police Officer might learn from some source that the accused was giving information about the articles connected with an offence, and may consequently send for panchayatdars to witness the discovery. From that it cannot be inferred that the Police Officer had information furnished to him already by the accused, and the information leading to the discovery cannot be excluded or shut out: 27 Mys.L.J. 42.

Where the evidence on record shows that the discovery of the articles was not the result of the information furnished by the accused and that the Police knew before hand what the accused was going to say that would be hit by S. 27. But that section will not apply where the discovery is made after the accused have pointed out the articles before the panchas and the panchanamas were completed at the places where the articles were recovered: 1959 Cr.L.J. 947: A.I.R. 1959 Andh. Pra. 387.

A fact previously discovered by the Police from other source cannot be regarded as discovery, when the same information is received again from the accused with the object of making his statement admissible; to make such a statement admissible, it is necessary that the statement is made before the discovery and not thereafter: 1993 M.P.L.J. 197: 1994 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 263; 1990 Cr.L.J. 77 (All.) (D.B.); 1994 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 69 (Raj.) (D.B.); I.L.R. (1972) 22 Raj. 25; A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 1871: 1971 Cr.L.J. 1314: (1971) 1 S.C.R. 215.

The underlying principle seems to be that the information is such information as cannot be said to be already in the possession of the Police and that the discovery is made in consequence of that information and further that the discovery is not rediscovery of something already discovered: 1958 Cr.L.J. 821: A.I.R. 1958 All. 467.

It is the first statement of the accused to whomsoever made, that leads to the discovery of the fact, if a fact is discovered. Thereafter, if the accused repeats his statement to another Police Officer and points out the place of burial of the person murdered it cannot be said that there is a 'discovery' of the place pursuant to the information the accused gave to that officer. Hence, such a statement is not admissible in evidence: 1958 M.L.J. (Cr.) 869: A.I.R. 1959 Ker. 46.

Mere existence of other information by which discovery was facilitated does not make information under S. 27, inadmissible. It depends upon the circumstances of each case whether the discovery was really made in consequence of the information given by the accused: 55 Cr.L.J. 583: A.I.R. 1954 Mad. 433.

Information given by an accused, leading to discovery of facts under S. 27, is not inadmissible on the ground that the officer recording the information knows before so recording what information the accused is going to give: 1943 Mad.W.N. 11: A.I.R. 1943 Mad. 315.

Discovery of incriminating articles alleged to have been recovered by the accused is inadmissible in evidence if the Police already knew where they were hidden: (S.) A.I.R. 1956 S.C. 217: (1955) 2 S.C.R. 1285.
